"Oh. I saw Bernard himself and he's so cranky about the looks of people. He said I was too big to play Nerrissa. It makes me sick the way they run this type business into the ground. I'd like to know why Nerrissa couldn't weigh a hundred and forty-five pounds as well as a hundred and thirty."

"Well, it's too bad. The crazy old idiot. I hope he don't get anybody at all."

Lillian waited to hear no more. She sped up the street as fast as her tired feet would carry her, toward the theatre where she knew James Bernard always rehearsed Hope leaped high in her heart. She had once played Nerrissa in a repertoire company and she even remembered the lines.

The doorkeeper stopped the girl with a gruff question as to her business.

"I want to see Mr. Bernard," she answered.

"Well, you can't see him, he's rehearsing."

"But I must see him. It means everything to me and I must see him," pleaded the girl.

Still the doorkeeper blocked her way.

It happened that the Shakespearian star was off the stage at that moment and heard the earnest, distressed tones of the young actress.

"What is it?" he asked kindly as he came to the door.

"This young woman insists upon seeing you, sir," the doorkeeper began in explanation "I tried to keep her back but she refuses to leave"

"Never mind," said the star. "Come here and tell me what you want."

He drew her aside out of the hearing of other actors awaiting their cues.

"I want work," began the girl. "I heard that you needed someone to play Nerrissa. I have played the part, sir, and I want you to please give it to me"

"Well, my dear child, how do I know that you can act?" asked the man.

"Oh, you don't know, of course," answered the girl in distress, "but I have played the part and if you will only give me a chance I will show you that I can do it."

Bernard hesitated a moment.

"I must have work," pleaded Lillian. "I simply must have work to-day. You'll give me a try-out won't you, Mr Bernard?"

The man looked down into Lillian's warm, childlike face and hesitated no longer. "Yes," he said, "I'll try you and see what you can do."

Lillian had had enough experience in the theatrical world to know that her position was not necessarily secure because it had been given to her. So she worked extra hard and at the end of the first week felt sure that Mr. Bernard was pleased with her work.

Lillian Loraine had no special ability as an actress, but she was sincere and painstaking in her work and could always be relied upon to give a creditable performance.

In a few weeks the first performance came and with it the first salary. Lillian began to live once more. She never lost for one moment the great gratitude she felt toward James Bernard. It seemed to her that he had almost saved her life. Always in her mind was the wish that some day she would have the opportunity to return the favor.

But there were many things to come into her life before that day should come.

One night, after the performance, some one knocked on Lillian's dressing-room door. Before the girl had time to answer there burst into the room one of the women of the company.

"Say, Miss Loraine," she exclaimed at once, "there's a man I know who's just dying to meet you. He was in the audience to-night and wants me to give him an introduction. Do you mind? He's a nice fellow and has lots of money."

Lillian thought a moment before saying, "Well, I don't mind meeting him if he's a nice fellow,"

So the struggling young actress met George Bonner, a many-times millionaire. They became friends at once—so much so, that a month after the meeting he was calling for her every night.

It was not long before Bonner spoke to Lillian of marriage, but the girl remembered the kindness of Bernard and would not put him to the inconvenience of getting someone else for her part. So they were married in June, when the season was over.

Unlike many actresses who marry millionaires, Lillian was happy. Her life was mostly uneventful, but with her mind free from worry she had a chance of doing many things that she had never had before.

Shortly after the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bonner went on an extended trip around the world.

During this time many things happened and many changes took place in the theatrical world. On her return Lillian was busy meeting old friends and learning the news about the people who had once made her world.

"Do tell me of Bernard," she said to an old actor one day. "I have asked about him every time I've seen any one who ought to know, but they seem to know so little."

"I haven't seen him for about a year," replied the old actor, "but I'm afraid he's pretty well down and out."

"Why, what do you mean?" exclaimed Lillian in astonishment!

"Well, you see, he won't play anything but Shakespeare and there's no Shakespeare to play."

"But you used to play Shakespeare too and you are all right."

"Yes, but you see I am willing to play modern roles and Bernard isn't. In fact, I don't know that he is fitted to play anything else. Then he is getting old, you know."

Lillian sighed "Poor old fellow. He was such an artist. Do you know where he is?"

"Well, I—I—you see he ——"

"Please give me his address. I shall not tell him where I got it."

With great reluctance the actor gave her the address. "I promised him I would not tell anybody," he said, but Lillian did not hear him. She had hastily said good-bye and was walking rapidly down the street.

She found her old employer in a house on a street with a very small number, and very near the roaring of the elevated. The landlady, with much-soiled apron and frowsy head, led her to the top of the house.

The room was practically a garret, and in one corner, at a rickety table, sat the once successful actor.

"Why, Mr. Bernard, I am so glad to see you again. It does me good," exclaimed Lillian, and so well did she bring her old art into play that Bernard thought the tears in her eyes were tears of joy at seeing him.

"I thank you, thank you, my child. Please excuse this room. It is a trifle below par, but you know how we foolish actors are, we spend our money as we make it." The poor old man tried to attempt a laugh.

"Oh, yes," said Lillian. "I understand. You'll be working again soon and then you'll be all right. Fortunately our poverty never has to last long," she laughed.

As she was leaving Lillian said, "Let me lend you something for a short time. Just until you are settled again."

"Oh, no, my dear Miss Lillian. My manager is taking care of me. You see I prefer to live here than to go into debt, that is all."

The lie was very lame but Lillian took it with apparent faith. But her heart was breaking. How could she assist the old actor without his knowledge?

She crossed over to Washington Square and walked home so that she might have time to think.

"I have a plan," she said to her husband after she had told him of Bernard's condition. "If he had not given me work when he did you and I should never have met. Therefore we owe our happiness to him, don't we?"

The husband agreed that they did and the plan was laid before him.

That afternoon the Bonners and a well-known theatrical manager were closeted at the former's home. The result was that Bernard was to be sent out to play the leads in a Shakespearian company backed by George Bonner.

It was agreed that a trial performance should be given on the grounds of the Country Club just outside the city, and "The Taming of the Shrew" was chosen as the play.

In all the world there was never such a happy little man as the threadbare actor. With the usual conceit of actors he believed he was at last appreciated—that the public really couldn't do without him.

After the performance at the club, which had been a great success, Lillian and her husband stood together watching the old actor as he walked away, giving directions to his manager.

Bonner laughed. "By Jove, fi he doesn't think he did it all by his great art," he said.

"Never mind," said Lillian gently, "remember how he helped me and what I owe him."

In a moment George was serious. "Yes, and what I owe him. As long as that memory stays with me my purse is open to that old man. Come, let's go congratulate him."

THE REFUGEE'S CASKET

(Gaumont, Hand Colored, September 3)

The story of the above was written by Russell E. Smith, and produced in genuine Gaumont style. All who have seen the hand-colored films of Gaumont know their charm; each film is a series of living paintings. Among the finest of these ranks "The Refugee's Casket" in two reels. It is truly a wonderfully artistic production, full of tense dramatic situations.

The story is of the Marquis de Saint Hillaire, who during the period of the reign of terror in France, was obliged to flee the country in order to save himself and his wife and daughter from prison and death by the guillotine. He had no sooner left the castle, in which were numerous priceless works of art, bric-a-brac, paintings and jewels, than the citizens of the town of Saint Hillaire burst into the grounds of the castle. Headed by two officers of the army, they searched it from cellar to garret. Not finding its master, they decided to sack the place and take what they could find.

They had not, however, reckoned with the brave little laundress, Marie Jeanne, who had been left there.

While the mob were at the very doors she had gathered together the jewels of the family and, packing them into a small chest, she lowered them into a sort of cell which had been cut out of the rock and which lay beneath the fireplace in the great reception room at the east end of the castle.

Two of the officers seeing the crack in the hearthstone, suspect that the jewels are hidden beneath, and conniving together to find them and divide the spoils between themselves, hurriedly leave the room as Marie's step is heard approaching down the hall. Taking the casket in which the jewels are encased from their hiding place, and running out under cover of the now gathering dusk, Marie made her way to the shadow of a tall linden tree some distance from the house.

Digging a deep hole, she put the casket therein and covered it over carefully with dirt, with the knowledge that soon the falling leaves would remove all traces of the late disturbance of earth.

On her return to the house she was questioned concerning the whereabouts of the jewels, and bound tightly hand and foot in a straight-backed chair in the reception room, promising to release her should she make up her mind to tell.

The men set themselves down, drank heavily, and soon fell asleep. This opportunity was grasped by Marie, who tumbled herself over, dragged herself to the fireplace where a fire was burning, and in spite of terrible burns inflicted on her arms and hands thereby, allowed the flame to burn through the cords, thus freeing herself.

She had almost reached the door and was congratulating herself on the escape she had made, when one of the men awoke from a somewhat troubled sleep and saw her as she was about to open the door leading into the hall.

Jumping to his feet, he shouted to the other that the girl they had left as they thought safely bound was escaping, and the other officer was quickly on his feet and after her.

Turning quickly, as she saw that they were after her, Marie pointed the revolver at the leading officer, and as he still came on, she fired and the man fell to the floor mortally wounded.

His companion, seeing his brother officer lying in his blood upon the floor, made discretion the best part of valor, and, turning tail, he made his escape with much haste.

The Revolution ran its course at last, as do all evil things, and at last the famous and hated Robespierre found his way to the Bastile himself in company with Danton and Marat; and among the many exiled families who found their faw back to France was the Marquis de Saint Hillaire and his family.

The first thought of the Marquis was to find Marie, whom he had left in charge of the estate while he was in involuntary exile, but she was not to be found.

While the family of the Marquis sat, sick at heart, the brave little laundry woman was coming slowly up the road from the little town of Saint Hillaire. Every day since the Revolution had ended she had wended her way from her work in the village to the old chateau in the hope that one day her master and mistress might return from their exile and make their home once more among the linden trees.

The windows of the chateau were broken and the steps even had been pushed aside in the furious hunt for the treasure of the Saint Hillaires, but they never found it.

On one of these missions, passing by the shores of the tiny lake, she was surprised to see, in the gathering gloom, the figures of a man and two women seated on the greensward by the lake. Rushing up to them, she saw that it was her beloved master and his family ,returned at last to his land and estate. Falling to her knees, the faithful servant kissed the hands of the Marquis and his wife and daughter, and welcomed them back to their own.

After the first surprise and joy at finding one another, Marie led them to the shadow of the tall linden and there she dug and uncovered the small casket and the Marquis opened it.

There they lay! The jewels worth a king's ransom, sparkling and glistening in the rays of the yellow moon, which hung high in the heavens.

The faithful Marie was thanked again and again by the grateful nobleman and his family, and was ever more assured of a home and the confidence of the Marquis, who owed all he had, almost his life, to the bravery of the little laundry woman.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Freakish Talent

Talent, sometimes, is freakish. Many a man can write a good short story of Photoplay if he is supplied with a plot. Others can evolve plots galore but they cannot clothe them in suitable dress. We know one of these latter. He can and does turn out plots dealing with almost every conceivable subject—love, money, hate, revenge, tragedy, domestic drama, in fact, almost anything. But although he has disposed of at least one hundred picture plots, he has never yet sold a properly developed script. He writes to the department:

"Once I aspired to be an author of picture stories. I wrote several and sent them to the editors. They came back with unfailing regularity. I couldn't understand it, so I showed one to an editorial friend. He said it was a good plot but wrongly treated, improperly developed, unsuitably clothed. He wanted to buy the plot. I sold it to him and since then I have supplied him and other concerns with plots regularly. My work yields me as high as $15 weekly and often I have finished a plot in a very few minutes. My two principal clients are satisfied. I write them out pretty fully and the editorial departments do the rest. For these plots I receive on an average of $5 each. If a plot does not suit one of my clients it will probably appeal strongly to another who makes a good script of it. So that my plots are seldom, if ever, wasted. What is more, it is possible to get at least four different plots out of one central idea. It can be twisted and turned about, given a different ending or development, and new names bestowed on the characters, and the trick is done. I relate my experience for the benefit of those who are lame on detailed action and technical construction but who have the plot talent. There are undoubtedly others like myself who can never hope to write a complete working photoplay, but who, nevertheless, have a wealth of plot invention."

Attractive Titles

"Attractive titles are a matter of interest, not only to the editor but to the audience," writes A. W. Thomas. And an attractive title that will immediately catch the editor's eye is worth something. Titles should be short and 'tell the story.' Take up any city newspaper of prominence and note how fully the few thirty-six point heads tell the story. Apply the same methods to photoplay titles."

We have touched on the terse and comprehensive title and subtitle subject previously but reprint Mr. Thomas' statement. The art of brevity and embracing condensation is devoutly to be desired, not only among photoplaywrights but in some studios as well.

No, We Are Not ——

No, the editor of this department is not engaged in reading scripts for one dollar or for two dollars per script. This in answer to numerous personal inquiries received. The editor is grateful to many writers for the confidence they seem to repose in his ability but he has no time to conduct a script-reading bureau. He will cheerfully answer legitimate questions presented by script writers either in the department or by personal letter, providing a stamped and self-addressed envelope is enclosed to him. Many inquiries of a personal nature remain unanswered each week because the return postage is not included. This department is for script writers and the editor is pleased to receive communications at any time.

A Publisher's Statement

The first issue of a new monthly supposed to be devoted to the interests of the pictureplaywright has been received by the editor. It is published in Cleveland, Ohio. The editor editorially says:

"It may be well to state at the outset that we have no axes to grind. This is not an office or school organ. Our advertising pages are open to everyone and can stand investigation. Should any questionable stuff creep in we want to know it, for only through the co-operation of readers can a publication hope to keep its pages clean."

Inside the title page we read an advertisement for a text-book written by J. Arthur Nelson. Next page bears Mr. Nelson's name as editor of the new monthly. The publishing name of the periodical is The Photoplay Publishing Company." Mr. Nelson is the company. Under "Publishers' Statement" we read the following:

"When the publication of the Photoplay Dramatist was decided upon we combed the country for an editor whose pen could speak authoritatively, comprehensively and progressively. To conduct such a publication he must first be a man who can write; secondly, he must know what to write about and, third, his knowledge must be born of actual experience. He must be an experienced editor; a practical producer; a successful dramatist and thinker, and a writer whose pen would have a teaching power. Moreover, he must needs be familiar with scenic and electrical construction, the camera, the studio, and to have established his fitness as a writer, teacher and thinker by past achievements."

Under "Classified Ads" department we find five different advertisements issued by concerns in one Cleveland building. Also an announcement of Mr. Nelson's theatrical productions, among them being such sterling attractions as "The Rajah of Bhong," "Over the Ocean," "The Telephone Girls," etc. On the back page of the publication is an advertisement for the Motion Picture College, Cleveland, said to be conducted by Mr. Nelson.

They Wish Scripts

Universal and Bison 101 Western studios are in need of good stirring military and Western drama and comedy. Best prices are paid. Richard V. Spencer, of Bison 101, gives promising writers the cause of rejection and sometimes tells the author what other concern is most likely to purchase the story.

Lack Originality

Editor Brewster, of the Motion Picture Story Magazine rightly believes that the reason so many plays are returned to the writers is because of want of novelty or originality. Mr. Brewster writes:

"It is extremely difficult to think out a plot that has not been done before. You may not have seen it before; you may have invented the whole thing out of your brain, but the probabilities are that the manufacturers have done the same thing, with slight variations, time and time again, and that the same idea has been submitted to them dozens of times. You may think you have worked out something entirely new, but you should remember that the regular writers employed by the manufacturers have been reading and thinking for years in an effort to devise something new, and that they have been trained to do this very thing.

"I know one man who has twenty leather books each containing one hundred index cards, on which are written brief plots, properly classified, which he has collected from the newspapers and from his own experiences. Even with these he has great difficulty in working out something that has not been done before. Don't be discouraged. First learn the technique of pictureplaywriting; next try to think out something original; next have the play neatly typewritten, and then send it out till all the manufacturers have passed unfavorably on it. Then put it away on the shelf and try another."

Good advice. And we would add this: Do not keep it forever on the shelf. After due time, take it off the shelf; go over the rejected script carefully, and try if you cannot discover some new twist or turn to the plot that will improve and make the rejected story salable.

Many Thanks

We got an invitation to Epes Winthrop Sargent's party. He is going to give one around September 7th at Coney Island to all pictureplaywrights who can get there. There is going to be a talkfest with ice-cream, cake and watermelon. It's a good idea and conducive to fraternal spirit. Mr. Van Buren Powell, president of the Order of Optimists, will be present to represent that thriving order and here's a secret: Mr. Sargent has been down in the cellar dressing out a bed slat. In one end thereof he has driven a wire nail. He will apply the slat with force to the gentleman who dares to mention "Protective Organization" at that spread. More power to him!

Naming Characters

A correspondent writes in that he had discovered a dearth of appropriate names for his casts of characters. Why? If doping a rural drama, sit down and think of acquaintances in your home town who would exactly fit the character you have in mind. "Josh Perkins" and "Si Stebbins" have been sadly overworked, and if you just use your brains a moment you can find somebody in your range of knowledge whose name will just fit in with a little changing. The same rule applies to other forms of pictureplay. Bet you there are people you know, or have heard of, that will match up for any cast of characters you may name. Also, it brings naturalness to your work. But be keerful! When you once utilize a character you know in a plot, change the name around. The writer overworked this plan during his earlier experiences as a pictureplaywright. He wrote a comedy and had friends and acquaintances cutting up high jinks in the plot. Never changed the names one bit. Somebody got a copy of a trade journal containing the story of the release and the author had to go on a visit when the picture was shown in his home city. It's all right to characterize people you know and to use names which they will suggest to you. But for heaven's sake, don't characterize too faithfully.

Now She's an Optimist

There is a lady living down in Tennessee who wrote a bully, good pictureplay. She sent it in to an editor. Two months passed by and it was released. She knew it was her play for the plot had not been changed at all. However, the check was not forthcoming. She wrote to the manufacturer but there had been editorial changes and no immediate reply was received. She had visions of plot-stealing and wrote to this department. We discovered that the lady's letters had been misdirected and when her complaint reached the right editor a check for $25 and a letter of apology was immediately forthcoming to her. The lady has now enrolled in the Order of Optimists. Instead of rushing into court, she had judgment enough to know that mistakes will be made in the best regulated concerns. It is not often that such errors are made, but when they occur be patient and do not jump to the conclusion that editors are thieves. They are not.

Editorial Changes

George W. Terwilliger has retired as pictureplay editor of the Reliance Company. After a deserved vacation he will accept another position. He has courteously contributed valuable information from time to time to our readers, and the high standard of Reliance stories can be directly traced to his work.

"Spectator," of the Dramatic Mirror, has gone to Kinemacolor. Frank E. Woods virtually made pictureplay department of the Mirror, and we consider him one of the most versatile writers in the business. Good luck and best wishes to both these gentlemen.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

E. MANDELBAUM RETIRES FROM THE ATLAS AMUSEMENT CO.

A deal involving three high-class moving picture theatres in this city, valued at considerably over $100,000, was completed to-day, whereby E. Mandelbaum, president of the Atlas Amusement Company, retires from the concern.

Mr. Mandelbaum has sold his holdings in this company to Messrs. Newman and A. L. Freedman, treasurer and secretary, respectively, of the Atlas.

The New Knickerbocker Playhouse, on Euclid avenue, at East Eighty-third street; the Lakewood, in Lakewood, and the Market Square, in Newburgh, are the theatres which are affected.

Messrs. Newman and Freedman will continue the present policy of the theatres which has made them quite successful.

Mr. Mandelbaum leaves the concern to devote all of his attention to the interests of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Company, and the Feature & Educational Film Company, of Cleveland, of both of which concerns he is manager. He has controlled ten theatres in Cleveland, and is gradually relinquishing his connections with them in order to devote all his time to the film enterprises.

OUR "LADY IN THE BATHS" IN ACCIDENT

We are indeed sorry to learn that not so very long ago our "Lady of the Baths" met with a very painful accident while out riding in company with her husband. She was riding a very spirited horse, and to prevent running into a little girl who was driving on the wrong side of the street, she crossed the car-tracks in front of a car. As the youngster also cut across in front of the car, the "Lady of the Baths" sent her horse toward the pavement to prevent coming in contact with the little one. As a result, her head struck the low-hanging limb of a tree, knocking her from the saddle to the ground and rendering her unconscious.

She is now, however, so far recovered that only slight ill effects are felt by her.

NEW INVENTIONS

Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by H. B. Willson & Co., Patent Attorneys, 715 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.—A Complete Copy of Any of These Patents Will Be Forwarded to Any Person by Messrs. Willson & Co., on Receipt of Ten Cents—Persons Ordering Copies Must Give Number of Patent.

1,036,557. Knockdown Enlarging Camera. Henry Burke and W. A. Peters, Chicago, Ill.

1,036,730. Method of Cutting out Contour Bands used in Coloring Kinematograph Films. Carlo Sciamengo, Turin, Italy.

1,037,035. Photographic Instrument. F. B. Millard, Palisade, N. J.

1,037,112. Moving Picture Machine. G. W. Bingham, New York, N. Y., assignor to The Bingham Mfg. Co.

Nice Weather?
OH-H.
?
Scenario writer
U.S.M.
Mss script
Things to worry about.
Clipping from a scenario writer's dictionary
Editor—A cruel beast that has no heart—mean—heartless.
John Ivenaufullitch, who intends going into the field.
Our Course—simple—even a child can write them. Slip us $500 and WE WILL SEND The course FREE!
CURSES!
Scenario Writer's Dream.
(never mind fellows; better times are coming)

SCENARIO WRITER'S DREAM
By G. Lambert.

MISS TAKAGI, THANHOUSER PLAYER, THINKS PICTURE WORK FUN.

(From the New York World, Aug. 25).

Japanese Actress Hates to Die in "Movies" Like American Girl—Miss Toku Takagi Thinks She Knows How Her Countrywomen Behave.

The patronizers of moving picture shows have recently seen a pretty little Japanese girl acting in many Japanese pictures and wondered whether she is a real Japanese girl or not. Hundreds of moving pictures had been made with Japanese girls in the picture, but none of them were real Japanese girls. All the parts of Japanese girls had been played by American actresses imitating the Japanese.

But the pretty little Japanese girl who is seen on the moving picture screen lately is a real Japanese girl. She is Miss Toku Takagi, the first Japanese actress who had ever posed for moving pictures.

She has played O Cho in "The Birth of Lotus Flowers," O San in a play called the "Mikado" and in several other Japanese parts. But she does not like the acting for moving picture shows, but she is doing it because there are lots of fun.

"Acting for moving pictures is such a fun, but it isn't so easy as it looks. The hardest part is they want me to play an Americanized Japanese. They want me to play just like a Japanese girl the American imagines. Lots of actresses who never saw Japan played the Japanese girl parts, and they want me to act just like those American actresses did.

"When I am trying to act naturally, then somebody says, 'Cut it out, you don't look like a Japanese.' But I don't know how the Americans want a Japanese girl to act. I am a Japanese and am trying to act naturally as I did in Japan. But they don't want that.

SCENE FROM BIRTH OF THE LOTUS BLOSSOM
Thanhouser release.

"In 'Mikado' I have to die. I am supposed to be the wife of the Japanese spy who is sent to Russia by Mikado to get the plan of the Russian fortification. He makes all arrangements with an army officer of Russia, but when the time to get the plan comes the Japanese spy is so happy that he drinks too much liquor and is asleep. I dress myself in my husband clothes and get the plan from the Russian officer. I get it, but I am shot in my heart. My husband go back to Japan with the plan and I die in the hotel.

"In the rehearsal I die just as naturally as I can do. Then they don't want me to die that way. They want me to die like an American heroine. So I asked the stage director to let me know how people die when they are shot. He tells me that they just die. But I can not just die, as they say. If you see the picture you will see that I was a Japanese girl all through, but when I die I become an American."

When she was asked whether she wishes to be a moving picture actress all the time, she said:

"Oh, no! It's fun and I like it. But I don't want to keep it up. I want to act on stage. But not yet; I am now studying the American dancing and singing. I want to be a comedian. I don't like to become a tragedian, although people think I ought to be tragic heroine. I hate the scene with lots of people dying.

"The other hard thing to make a good Japanese picture in this country is that it is very hard to get the suitable costumes and sceneries."

She was asked which she liked better, the Japanese way of acting or the American way of acting.

"I think the American way is better, because it is so natural. The old acting of Japan is so formal, though there are many things that are beautiful and good. In tragic dramas Japan is pretty good. But in modern, common, everyday life play, this country is much advanced.

"But I like the American dress. They are not so comfortable as the Japanese ones, but they are beautiful and they are not so hard to wear like the Japanese dresses. The American women do not know how hard it is to dress in the Japanese dresses and that it takes years and years of practice to walk naturally and gracefully in those Japanese kimonos. But the American dresses are so easy to put on and walk in.

"But when at home I think the Japanese dress is better, because they are so comfortable and don't hurt me so much as the American clothes."

ITALA TWO-REEL FEATURE RELEASED BY MUTUAL CO.

Begins Issuing Regular Releases on Sundays Starting With Long Length Subjects.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces the release of Itala Films, beginning Sunday, September 8th, beginning with a two-reel subject entitled "The Solemn Hour."

Benton, the warden of a prison, learns that a man named Lawrence has purchased the residence next to his. Twenty years before Benton had made a proposal of marriage to Lawrence's cousin, and the interference of Lawrence had caused the young lady to reject him. Benton, a revengeful man, had treasured a grudge against Lawrence all these years, but conceals his real feelings under a mask of friendship and geniality.

The new neighbor has an idolized daughter named Lucile. A young convict seeing her pass the prison becomes wildly enamored of her, and in the solitude of his cell composes verses to her beauty.

Benton looks up the man's record and finds he is Louis Benton, No. 250, sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment, parents unknown. A wild idea of revenge seizes him and he determines to make the young man the instrument of his revenge.

He enters Louis' cell and in a cleverly acted scene convinces the young man that he is his father, and that he will help him escape. The warden arranges everything and Louis easily gets away and remains in a nearby town until he receives word from Benton to come back.

Benton provides Louis with a fine wardrobe and introduces him to the Lawrence family as his son who has been abroad. He does all in his power to throw the young people together, and Louis presses his suit so ardently that Lucile finally promises to marry him.

The wedding night arrives. Louis is madly in love with Lucile and is filled with remorse for having concealed his past from her. Before the ceremony he goes to Benton and asks his permission to tell her everything. Thoroughly angry, Benton throws aside his mask, and a sensational scene takes place in which Benton tells the young man to choose between obedience and re-imprisonment. Louis promises silence and the wedding takes place.

The guests depart. The bride goes upstairs to her room. Benton and Lawrence are in the library and Louis bids them good-night and goes to join his bride. As he beholds the trusting girl he is overwhelmed with his duplicity and confesses. The girl recoils from him in horror. Maddened with the turn of events, Louis leaps over the balustrade and comes crashing to the floor below.

Benton has waited like a cat with a mouse to deal his revengeful thrust to Lawrence. He has just told Lucile's father that his daughter is married to an assassin when a crash is heard which brings the entire household to Louis' crushed form. His head is raised from the tiles, and with his dying breath Louis denounces the warden, who slinks away.

FILIAL LOVE

Eclair Two-Reel Feature, September 19, 1912

The foreman of the Ironton Steel Co. department has been found murdered and near him lay a knife which belonged to one of his underworkmen. So upon this circumstantial evidence Harvey Davis, the workman, was arrested and indicted for murder.

On the night of the murder, Davis' little son, Harvey, Jr., had come to the saloon where both his father and the foreman were together drinking, and begged his daddy to come home to supper. While there, the youngster had noticed a peculiarly visaged man borrow his papa's knife and not return it. The little tot tried to tell this detail to the coroner and the lawyers, but they somehow refused to listen, as the stranger could not be found. The youngster's story was taken as just a bit of childish romancing.

The little codger listens as the lawyer tells his mother that there is practically no hope of securing an acquittal, that while the evidence is purely circumstantial, it is sufficient to convict. Again Harvey, Jr., intercedes with the story of the strange man with the awful face and the lawyer laughs and his mother tells him to keep quiet. What? Keep quiet and have his daddy taken away from him. Not much would he have his papa sent away. There must be justice somewhere, he reasoned. And then he remembered hearing his "daddy" speak of Mr. President Taft and of justice. Well, if there was justice to be had from Mr. Taft he Harvey Davis, Jr., would see to having it. So he sneaked off to his little room and gathered those things together which he anticipated needing in his trip to Washington, D. C. On the kitchen table he left a note, ill spelt, it is true, but it told that he was off to see Mr. Taft and get justice.

He managed to get aboard the train and when discovered by the conductor he told such an ingenuous story that he was allowed to continue on to Washington, the place of his highest hopes.

He arrives in the Capitol and goes to the fountain which stands before the Congressional Library, and washes up preparatory to his reception by "Mr. Taft." He makes quite the natural mistake of going to the Capitol building, but he is soon set aright and directed to follow on down Pennsylvania avenue to the White House, where he may see Mr. Taft. So down the avenue he trudges till the White House grounds are reached.

He tells the doorman his desires and is laughingly told to return next day. Being refused an audience he decides to wait about till "Mr. Taft" may chance to come forth. All day long he waits without reward. Night comes and he goes to sleep on a bench.

It is now next morning and a guard had discovered our little hero. A crowd collects around him and among them he sees the man who borrowed his father's knife and who he knows committed the murder for which his father is held and is about to pay the penalty. Jumping on the bench he accuses him and commands the policeman to arrest the man. Something in the child's dominant sincerity compels the officer to believe his accusation and he takes the accused man in charge and to the station house.

At the jail the man is questioned. Little discrepancies in his answers cause them to credit the youngster's story and they ply him unrelentingly with a rapid fire of questions till the man breaks down under their inquisition and confesses.

The jury is just returning from the jury room prepared to render a verdict in the case of the State vs. Harvey Davis, charged with murder. The verdict they are about to render is that of guilty in the first degree. A message arrives, the judge hears it and orders their verdict withheld because of new and admittable evidence. The child has secured justice, not through Mr. Taft, but through his own efforts. He has saved his "daddy" and is happy.

CALEB WEST (2 Reels)
Reliance release Sept. 18th.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By James Girvan

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' INDEPENDENT UNION NO. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Corresponding Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

The Moving Picture Operators' Association will be known in the future as the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Independent Union No. 1, office 133 Third avenue (top floor), telephone Stuyvesant 572. Meeting rooms at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, N. Y. City.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1 of Greater New York and vicinity, held their first regular meeting Monday night, September 2, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex Street. The meeting was called to order by President Goldblatt at 12:45 a. m. In spite of the weather and holiday there was a good attendance. I must say it is a great pleasure to attend these meetings now as all members pay strict attention to business. Our meetings are now conducted in an orderly way and the entire business never takes longer than three hours at the most. We are glad to say that there is a great demand for our members. Our business representative reports that he has been forced to go out and hire non-union men to work on Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, as all our members were working. Fifty-two men have been enrolled within the last ten days. The meeting was adjourned at 3:05 a. m.

Amateur Entertainment and Smoker
given by the
Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1,
of Greater New York and Vicinity,
At Volk's Lyceum 218-20 Second St., near Ave. B,
Monday Evening, Sept. 16, 1912.
Tickets Including Refreshments, 50c.
Doors Open 9 P. M.

The above entertainment will be a hummer according to the reports of the committee in charge of same. There is to be three or four bouts for the lovers of the manly art of boxing and fifteen acts of vaudeville from the well-known studio of Mr. Frank Forrester, 124 West Twenty-third Street. Mr. Forrester assures us that we will have the best acts it is possible for him to secure, and when he says so, it can be accepted as truth. Mr. Forrester knows a good act when he sees it—just look over the names of some of the stars from Mr. Forresters' studio—Lillian Shaw, Billee Taylor and several others who are favorites on Broadway, and see the proof for yourself. There will also be some of the latest and best photoplays shown and I am sure it will do your little heart good to see them because the projection will be in the hands of experts, who pride themselves in the good work they turn out. Anyone wishing to buy tickets can get them at the office, 133 Third Avenue.

Glad to hear that Bro. Jack Cohen is improving in health so rapidly. The boys all send their regards to you Bro. Jack and wish to say that we want you back here with us as soon as possible to join in the fray.

We wish to thank all the out of town operators who have written us such cheerful letters of encouragement, and we want to assure them that we are making great progress and success is crowning our every effort, and we hope to be (in the near future, again in the ranks of the I. A. T. S. E.

White Plains, N. Y., August 17th, 1912.

To the Members of the I. A. T. S. E. of the United States and Canada:

Dear Sirs and Brothers:—The Moving Picture Operators of Greater New York formed an organization in the year of 1908 under the name of Moving Picture Operators' Union. The New York operators were not, at the time, aware of the fact that the I. A. T. S. E. were represented in Greater New York by an organization of spotlight operators, who had jurisdiction over the moving picture operators. Our organization made great progress until finally, members of the Executive Board of Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., requested the privilege of addressing one of our meetings, which was granted. This was our first knowledge of the fact that an organization holding jurisdiction over the moving picture operators held a charter in New York City. The object of the visit, as set forth by the speaker, was to secure our affiliation with Local Union No. 35 until we became stronger in number. They promised to do many things for us if we joined with them. Their proposition was accepted with the understanding that in the near future the operators would be given a direct charter by the I. A. T. S. E.

During our first year of existence, we had the pleasure, as well as the honor, of your presence along with the former organizer of the A. F. of L., Bro. H. Robinson, also W. D. Lang of Local No. 35. On both occasions you spoke on the lines of organized labor, explaining to the infant organization the value of same. During the first year of our existence we had the president of Local No. 35 preside at our meetings. Before the Springfield convention of I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and C., he came to us and said that he was elected by Local No. 35 as delegate to the convention to represent the operators and that his mission was to try and get a direct charter for us. We all appreciated the fact that Local No. 35 had kept their promise. But, much to our surprise, at his return he reported to us that it was impossible to obtain a direct charter, his excuse being that he had all he could do to hold his own charter (which Local No. 35 is holding at present). Not knowing the truth of the matter, we appreciated the efforts he claimed to have made and in return for his work, we presented him with a gold watch and cabin costing $50; also a $25 ring to the secretary-treasurer of Local No. 35, who acted as our treasurer. Besides he claimed $2.50 for each meeting that he presided at (two meetings a month for about a year and a half) and we paid the bill.

A year after the affiliation, we reached a membership of 200, at which time two of the international officers appeared at one of our meetings and presented us with a charter as auxiliary to No. 35. In the course of their address they used the following words: "We hope that very soon we will be here again with a full, direct I. A. T. S. E. charter." Three years have passed since then and we are still waiting for that which was practically promised us at that time. The auxiliary sent delegates to the Washington convention in 1910 with a view of securing the right, through a direct charter, to govern itself. In this we failed and it was then we discovered the fact that the former delegate of Local No. 35 never mentioned that there was even such an auxiliary in existence, let alone asking for a charter. We, however, like loyal men, took our medicine and, though we made a wry face, remained true to the I. A. T. S. E., hoping that the next convention would be more just.

Again we sent two delegates to the Niagara Falls convention. We were in doubt about one of the delegates as to his carrying out the instructions he received from the auxiliary, and all during that convention he did nothing. He failed to assist his co-delegate and instead of returning with a charter he returned with a membership card of Local No. 35. At that convention, we represented a body of about 500 men, that being the membership of the auxiliary at that time. Again we failed to secure what we consider as being no more than our just right and it may be remarked that this failure has caused (we make this statement only after a carefully, painstaking investigation of the cause of decrease in membership) a considerable falling off in the membership of the auxiliary. We have asked that the auxiliary and No. 35 be merged into one and even that has been refused us, but we have not noticed any refusal of our per capita tax in return for which, up to date, we have received, practically, no benefit whatever. It might be said that the greatest opposition to the auxiliary becoming an independent body is its mother, Local No. 35.

Again we sent a delegate to the Peoria convention with the following instructions: (a) Amalgamation on an equitable financial basis with Local No. 35. (b) Or a direct I. A. T. S. E. charter. The meetings previous to the convention, the representative of Local No. 35 presented a bill to the auxiliary for $100, which they claimed we owed to them. We then learned that the funds of the auxiliary were practically exhausted. The auxiliary ordered $25 to be paid at once and the balance to be the first bill to be paid after the convention. The representative was asked if that was satisfactory to him and his answer was yes. Our reason for doing this was to enable us to send a delegate to the Peoria convention. We finally succeeded in scraping together $47 and the auxiliary ordered the treasurer of No. 35, who has the handling of our moneys, to give the full amount to the delegate elected to the convention. He was voted $150 for expenses and of the $47, all that No. 35 would give him was $30, holding the balance of $17 out. Nevertheless, that did not keep him from attending the convention. He borrowed the amount from his employer.

The first day of the convention morning session the credentials committee was appointed, on which a delegate of No. 35 was appointed. After the morning session was adjourned, a delegate of No. 35 informed our delegate that he did not think there was any credential for him. Before we go any further, we want to say that the auxiliary never had the handling of the credentials, therefore took it for granted that Local No. 35 did this convention as in the previous years. The delegate appeared before the credential committee to find the cause and the aforesaid delegate of No. 35 claimed that we owed him a bill. The bill he was referring to was the bill for the money just referred to. The delegate called his attention to the fact that his representative agreed to wait for same until after the convention and that he attended that paricular meeting and asked if he remembered the action taken as regards the bill. He replied that he did not remember. The auxiliary delegate then asked the credential committee to bring his case before the convention and they did so. He was given the privilege of explaining his side of the story; also Local No. 35 was heard and in the course of the debate, it could be plainly shown that No. 35 was trying to railroad the delegate of the auxiliary. It was therefore ordered that a special committe be appointed to take this matter up immediately. And the report of the committee was that he be seated, which report was concurred in. In the reading of the report of International President, he recommend that the convention shall instruct that the auxiliary to New York Local No. 35 shall immediately be re-organized and a competent committee be delegated to this work. The reason for such recommendation is as follows:

New York, N. Y.—Auxiliary Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local:

At the meeting of your General Executive Board, held in Chicago, March 19-22, your International President was instructed by the board to investigate and report as to the conditions existing in the auxiliary local of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 35.

Your International President duly visited the meeting of this auxiliary local while in session, in company with Bro. Harold Williams, business representative of Local No. 35, as well as several officers of Local No. 35 and a visiting brother member from out of town.

The meeting was largely attended and the manner in which members of this auxiliary conducted themselves was really the most disgraceful that I have ever witnessed. Your International President was compelled to interrupt the meeting in order to establish order and impress upon the members the responsibilities of their positions. Your International President left the meeting room at 4:30 a. m. in the morning and the order of new business had not as yet been called.

Your International President advised these brothers that if they did not show an improvement in their conduct and live up more closely to the law and order principles of the I. A., that he would recommend that their charter be taken from them and the organization be reorganized.

Your International President has carefully watched the proceedings of this auxiliary through reports received since his visit, and in justice to all members of the International Alliance, your International President strongly recommends that this convention shall instruct that auxiliary local of New York Local No. 35 shall immediately be reorganized and a competent committee be delegated to this work.

It is to be regretted that this action must be taken, but if the International Alliance wishes to retain its good name the reorganization cannot be accomplished too quickly.

Admitting such to be the truth, but we must ask what caused such action. About nine months ago the auxiliary voted a new wage schedule. In the new contracts it said that the operators shall not carry the reels to and from the film exchanges. With great difficulties, we succeeded in getting several of the managers to sign our contracts, but, it was later discovered that some members of the mother local carried the reels and caused a few of our men to lose their positions. This, of course, caused some loud talking at that particular meeting of which the International President is referring to. Yet, we will not deny that there are a handful of members in the auxiliary who are inclined to be disturbers and cause much commotion, but we still contend had the auxiliary been given an honest deal during their affiliation with their mother local this sad state of affairs would have never come about. But since the recommendation of the President was concurred in and the delegate of the auxiliary raising no objection to same, but had faith that the President would appoint a committee that would give justice to all as he said he would in answer to a question whether the committee would be comprised of members of Local No. 35. He said he would appoint an impartial committee, two from Brooklyn, two from New York and two from New Jersey, but, such was not the case. Upon the return of the Executive Board of the I. A. T. S. E. to New York after the convention, the International President appointed the Executive Board of the I. A. T. S. E. with himself as the committee to act on the question of the auxiliary and No. 35. Before their committee, they called the Executive Board of Local No. 35 and heard their side of the story, but, did not hear the aggrieved party, viz, the auxiliary. It was at that meeting of the Executive Board of I. A. and the Executive Board of Local No. 35 decided that instead of the auxiliary to No. 35, it shall be hereafter called the Moving Picture Operators' Branch to No. 35, which means the same thing with a different name, but this is not the worst. The branch is to have only a recording secretary and two of its members to act as the Executive Board in conjunction with the Executive Board of Local No. 35. A fine chance the branch would have for redress. We are also to have three trustees, but we must not handle any of our money, their secretary will act as our secretary to handle the same. Just think of it, a body of good honest men, about three hundred in number, are told that they cannot handle their treasury.

Now, as to the work, the members of the branch are to confine themselves to. Before we go any further, we want to point out to you the charter rights of Local No. 35. Their charter reads as follows: Calcium and Electro-Calcium Lamp and Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union. As you can see that they have the right to operate both the moving picture machines and spot-light machines in all theatres, but they say to us, "If you want to do likewise, you must pay an initiation fee of $75." That's rather inconsistent after being members of the auxiliary for almost five years, that we should have to pay that amount in order to get what we should have as members of the branch. Therefore, the members of the said branch would have to work in the poorest paid houses.

To such condition proposed to us by the Executive Board of I. A. T. S. E. and Local No. 35 we, believing ourselves to be fair and honest workingmen and such we have proven ourselves toward organized laboring men, by going on several sympathy strikes of the A. F. of L., as in the Fox Theatre strike for Local No. 1, I. A. T. S. E. We could not submit to such. We, therefore, organized an independent body. It is not our desire to remain independent of the A. F. of L. or the I. A. T. S. E.

We, therefore, appeal to you to grant an early hearing to our committee, who will make the case very clear to you, as it is impossible to do so on paper.

We wishing to be good and loyal union men and to help elevate the conditions of ourselves and brothers, cannot consistently accept the above condition. It would mean another revolution between the branch and Local No. 35 as with the former auxiliary and No. 35.

We wish for yourself, Brother Gompers, good health and happiness and success to the A. F. of L.

Fraternally yours.

ROBERT GOLDBLATT, President.

DUBLIN DAN

The Three-reel Solax Masterpiece

This story of Dublin Dan, besides being convincingly told on the screen, is played by an excellent cast headed by Barney Gilmore. Mr. Gilmore's work is well known to the public. As the star in "Kelly from the Emerald Isle" and "The Rocky Road to Dublin" he won his way to fame. His personality makes him very attractive in the role of "Dublin Dan, the Irish Detective." Although this is his first appearance in moving pictures, Mr. Gilmore's pantomime acting is really a revelation.

John Forsythe, every day of the three years he had been in the Federal Penitentiary, watched for a chance to escape. One day the chance came and he took advantage of it. Forsythe owed his conviction and sentence of ten years to the inexorable Daniel Delaney or "Dublin Dan," one of the most resourceful members of the Government Secret Service. When Dan hears of Forsythe's escape he immediately begins to spread his net for the counterfeiter's recapture.

GETTING A DISGUISE

After his escape, Forsythe makes his way to the country home of his wealthy brother, Richard. On his arrival John is not very cordially received. He demands some money and gets it, but the little he gets does not satisfy him. He dickers for more and when his brother finally softens and opens his private safe, it flashes through John's mind to place himself in his brother's boots and thus, perhaps, forever hide behind his brother's reputation for respectability. After shooting Richard, John proceeds to cover up his tracks by making up to look like Richard. He then telephones the police and tells them he has killed a burglar.

"Dublin Dan" is hot on the trail of the escaped convict. He knew of the existence of John's wealthy brother and so watches the railroad station in the town where Richard lives. From one of the trains alights Rosalie Clarke, the daughter of a friend of Richard Forsythe's. Her father died and designated Forsythe a trustee of his estate and his child's guardian. Rosalie is bewildered at the station and "Dublin Dan" walks up and tries to assist her. He is keenly interested when he learns in an unexpected way the girl's destination. He politely volunteers to be her escort. His pleasing manners win her and set at rest her natural fears.

Almost simultaneously with "Dublin Dan's" arrival at the Forsythe home, the police come on the scene. "Dublin Dan" does not disclose his identity. He quietly moves about the room in which John killed Richard and makes some mental notes. The detective watches John closely while the convict explains how he killed the burglar. He also watches John when he receives Rosalie. John betrays his discomfort. John's entire behavior is not very convincing. The detective leaves after a secret investigation, determined to follow up several clues.

Later John Forsythe goes back to his old crowd and soon more counterfeits are placed in circulation and come to the notice of the Secret Service. Of course Forsythe is at the bottom of it all. He and his confederates, Bill Steele, Black Matt and Juno Savage work day and night with feverish heat on the spurious money. Juno Savage is in love with Forsythe but he spurns her. Forsythe is in love with Rosalie Clark and this results in many complicating situations.

"Dublin Dan" having met Rosalie Clarke, is also much attracted by her simplicity. With the double purpose of seeing her and getting more evidence, he motors to Forsythe's home and with the excuse that he is out of gasoline, stops at the gate. Rosalie greets him cordially but Forsythe and his confederates naturally regard him with suspicion. The detective in sending the gardener for gasoline purposely flashes a hundred-dollar bill and asks Forsythe to make the change. Forsythe, against the advice of his pals, sees a chance to dispose of more counterfeit and makes the change for the detective. Dan sends the gardener for gasoline. As he expected, the gardener comes back saying the gasoline was refused him, as the bill he had was a counterfeit. "Dublin Dan" cleverly complicates this situation and then bids the confused counterfeiters a farewell.

Following this scene, Forsythe proposes to Rosalie. She refuses him, and fearing her new guardian's actions and distrustful of his friends, she leaves his home and seeks the advice of "Dublin Dan." She finds him and he takes her to his home and asks his mother to take care of her. In the meantime Forsythe learns of Rosalie's hasty departure and plans to get her back. He makes one attempt to kidnap her but this attempt is frustrated cleverly by Dan. Later another plan succeeds and Rosalie finds herself in the toils of the gang in their den, where she is kept a prisoner. She is exposed to the cruelties of Juno Savage, a vicious adventuress, who regards Rosalie as her rival. But she is a brave girl and patiently waits and hopes.

Dan works on his case tirelessly. He does not know of Rosalie's kidnapping, consequently when he gains entrance to the counterfeiter's den in the disguise of a drunken sailor with plenty of cash, he is astonished to see her there. It is through the cupidity of "Black Matt" that he is able to get into the guarded den.

Anticipating trouble, Dan, who is supposed to be snoring in a drunken sleep, while the counterfeiters are playing cards, quietly writes a note to the police and attaches it to the feet of a dove which he carried under his coat. He is about to send the dove up the chimney when "Black Matt" turns to get some whiskey standing on a nearby table and discovers him. The detective succeeds in sending the dove up the chimney during the struggle which ensues but Dan is overpowered later by superior numbers, bound, gagged and placed in a cellar. In the cellar he struggles to free his bonds. With the aid of the cellar rats, which gnaw at the ropes that bind him, he frees himself, comes up through the trap door, and takes the gang by surprise by blinding some with whiskey and others with snuff. He then grabs up a brace of guns and then has the whole savage lot at bay. He orders Rosalie's immediate release and then forces them all into the prison in which they kept his sweetheart. After fastening the gate of the gang's prison, Dan sits down and enjoys a quiet smoke while Rosalie tells her story. When the police, who have received the message sent by way of the dove arrive and break into the den, they are astounded to see "Dublin Dan" quietly enjoying a smoke. He answers their questions by pointing to the caged prisoners.

PASSING COUNTERFEIT

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

THANHOUSER

ORATOR, KNIGHT AND COW CHARMER (Sept. 15).—It was the most important of political campaigns (to Congressman Casey) because he was running for re-election. It was also interesting to his enemies, owing to the fact that they hoped to defeat him. One of these enemies was the editor of the opposition paper, and when he heard that the distinguished statesman was to deliver a noonday address in a nearby town, he decided to "stir him up." To accomplish this, he enlisted the aid of his star cartoonist, in appearance a modest, neat little girl, but one who was gifted with fiendish ability with the pencil.

The cartoonist went to the village and on her way to the meeting-place made two acquaintances, one a cow, the other Congressman Casey. The cow galloped across lots to meet her, and she was thoroughly convinced that "he" meant to bite her. Then the gallant congressman appeared, rescued her from the ferocious beast and escorted her to the scene of his oratorical triumph.

Then the girl, having a sense of humor, drew a funny picture of herself, the cow and the congressman, and had it printed in her paper. The girl thoroughly enjoyed it; the cow didn't even say "moo," but the congressman was as mad as a contesting delegation at the national convention. He had no idea of the identity of the artist, but determined to be revenged. He took a large horsewhip and went to the newspaper office, intending to get satisfaction.

It took him some time to get into the art room, as he was obliged to thrash several inoffensive reporters en route. Then he found the artist, a trembling, frightened little girl. It was ridiculous to expect that he could horsewhip her. He didn't have the heart even to scold her. For the first time in his life the dignified statesman had a sense of humor, and, shaking his finger at the girl, he said: "Young woman, the next time I find a cow chasing you I'll let you stay up the tree for the rest of your life."

THE MAIL CLERK'S TEMPTATION (Sept. 17).—When a certain U. S. mail clerk was asked why he made his home in a shabby little hotel in a railroad junction, when he could live so much more comfortably elsewhere, he would flush and tell the inquisitive ones to mind their own business. The fact was that he was violently in love with the daughter of the hotel proprietor, and hoped some day to make her his bride.

The clerk was highly indignant one day when he found that a well-to-do traveling man was paying his sweetheart attentions. He remonstrated with the girl, but she was flattered because of her new catch and laughed at him. There was a quarrel, and the girl, in pique, agreed to marry the drummer, and accepted a diamond ring he offered her. To cause the mail clerk as much sorrow as possible, the girl wrote him a formal note, telling of her engagement, and asking him not to annoy her in the future.

In this letter the girl spoke of her new fiance as a "rich man" and the clerk reread the note while out on his run one day, and brooded over this particular line. Bitterly he decided that honesty did not pay, and determined to take the registered letters in his care and use the money to show the girl that there was more than one rich man in the world.

He looked over the letters and packages, picked out several that seemed especially valuable, when suddenly he came across one package addressed to the other man in a familiar handwriting. The bundle was from the girl, and it added to the clerk's rage. Recklessly he opened it, and found it contained the engagement ring. The girl was sending it back to the drummer because, as she simply explained, the mail clerk "is a good honest boy, and I have loved him all my life."

The clerk repeated the words "Good, Honest." He realized for the first time how low he was about to fall. He tied up the package again, replaced the others he had selected in the bag, and determined that he would not destroy her faith in him.

He determined to make full confession to the girl when they next met, but was ashamed. He feared that her faith would change to loathing, and determined to die. The girl found him in time to save his life and revived him. He had written a farewell note to her and he motioned her to read it. She saw it was addressed to her, tore it up and held out her arms to him.

"The past, whatsoever it may have been, is wiped out," she cried. "I have been foolish, but you will forgive my folly as I freely forgive any faults of yours."

And thus the romance of the shabby little hotel came to a happy conclusion.

TWO SOULS (Sept. 20).—The bookmaker was a goodhearted chap, but cursed with a violent temper. He had a quarrel one day with a patron who imagined he had won on a certain race. The bookmaker was in the right, but lost his temper during the argument that ensued. He struck but one blow, and a moment later found, with a thrill of horror, that he was a murderer. Then he fled, escaped his pursuers, and sought refuge in an obscure boarding house, where he was not known.

The girl was an unfortunate. She was hard working, but feeble, and found it difficult to obtain employment. At last all her money was gone, and the future held out no promise, so she decided to end it all in the dark waters of the river.

The bookmaker happened to be taking a stroll at the time—he never went out in the daytime, being afraid of being captured. He saw the girl make her despairing leap, plunged in after her, and saved her life. She told him her sad story and he pitied her. Leading her to his boarding house he placed her in the care of the kindly landlady, and made himself responsible for her. The two friendless ones soon fell in love, were married, took a tiny cottage in a suburban town, and for a time were very happy. Then one day a stranger called and the husband told his wife that he had been called away out of town on business, but would return as speedily as possible.

The wife wondered, but made no comment. She did not notice the handcuffs that united her husband and the stranger. At intervals letters came from the husband, she had no worry over financial matters, but she longed to see the man she loved. Finally she could bear the strain no longer, and wrote to her husband in care of his old landlady. She told him how much she missed him, and confided that her health was much worse and her doctor gave her but a short time to live.

The letter was delivered to the husband at a penitentiary where he was a convict serving a long sentence. It maddened him to make his escape. It was successful, but when he reached his cottage his wife was dying. The man managed to elude her until he had a chance to change his convict stripes for the garb of a freeman. Then he went to her and told her he was back from his business trip, and would never leave her again.

The man was kneeling by his wife's side when the door was pushed open softly, and two prison guards entered. They were prepared for fight, but there was no fight in the convict. He turned to the bed, raised his hand warningly, pointed to his wife, and whispered, "Dying, Wait."

The rough guards stood back respectfully. The woman gasped and expired. Her husband kissed her hands, folded them reverently over her breast, then turned to the waiting guards, and held out his arms for handcuffs. He did not care what became of him on this earth, for the soul of the only person he loved had gone to plead for him before the great white throne.

ECLAIR

"MY WIFE'S AWAY! HURRAH!" (Sept. 17).—Pompous Mr. Bailey was a type known the world over. Plenty would he spend down town, but not a cent would he leave at home. Mrs. Bailey wants a dress. Mr. Bailey says no.

Many are the schemes women can concoct when they want a dress. She makes Bailey believe she has gone home to her mother after engaging an old colored mammy to care for the home. But the colored mammy is none other than Mrs. Bailey herself. With the aid of a cousin, who is an actress, she blackens up and pretends to be both deaf and dumb.

Bailey plans great sport now that she's away. He has a poker party. The colored mammy beckons him aside and writes a note which tersely says, "I'll tell your wife." Bailey slips a bill in her hand. So follows many little blackmails of a comical turn until Bailey comes home with a troop of actors and actresses. Jealousy gets the better of her and, with a broom and duster, she routs them all and makes known to Bailey her mistaken whereabouts. The tables now are turned, for her bribes have amounted to the cost of an entire wardrobe. Bailey is reformed.

A FRIVOLOUS HEART (Sept. 22).—Isabel is the bread-winner for her invalid mother and herself. They live in a mountain resort where the sole means of livelihood is to serve as guide to tourists. As no one will accept a girl guide she assumed the guise of a young man.

A young honeymoon couple engaged her and, to provoke her husband, because of a quarrel, the young wife flirts with the handsome young guide. And her husband grows angry. But later he discovers Isabel in her true sex and sets about planning to teach his wife a lesson.

The wife continues to flirt, then comes the unveiling of her folly. In a most ingenious way she is made to suffer the pangs of a threatened tragedy till the sex of the young guide is exposed to her knowledge. Then Isabel is engaged as her maid.

On the same reel:

THROUGH CHINA.—A number of highly instructive and immensely interesting views of a peculiar country and still more singular people. The world's newest republic beautifully pictured by a staff of high-class cinematographic photographers.

GAUMONT

THE HEART OF THE RED MAN (Sept. 24).—The stubborn, warlike Sitting Bear disapproves of his daughter Fire-Fly's match with a young brave, by name Ardent Heart, with whom she is in love. He refuses her the pleasure of the latter's company, until he realizes that her passion is too strong, whereupon he seeks to profit by it. He demands a herd of cattle from Ardent Heart for the hand of his daughter, and the lover starts immediately to procure the necessary dower. To do this he raids a herd of the Massapaws' cattle. This furious tribe resents the theft and captures the plunderer. They desire to torture him in the form of running the gauntlet, and he is to be granted his liberty if he succeeds in escaping their bullets. While being forced through their line-up, the valiant red man plunges through their column amidst the continuous fire of their guns. He is wounded but succeeds in making his escape across a broad lake.

Fire-Fly has heard the discharge of the weapons and, fearful for her lover, has hurried to the shore. Here she meets the valiant warrior and takes him to her father, grim Sitting Bear. The latter is pleased at the courage of his warrior and therefore consents to his union with the pretty Fire-Fly.

THE STOLEN CUB (Sept. 26).—Jimmie Logan, a Canadian Government official, while hunting in the forest one day comes upon an unguarded cub, during the absence of the mother bear, and brings the little animal home to make a pet out of it. Needless to say Jimmie's family is delighted with the animate toy that has been brought to their midst and give it every consideration they possibly can. This, however, is no balm to the torn heart of the mother bear, who seeks her young one high and low, until she finally tracks it to the cottage of the Canadian pioneer. Here she paws and scratches at the door in hope that the fury of her outcry will intimidate the Canadian Government agent into restoring her offspring. However, the noise of wild animals is so common around this forest hut that the poor bear attracts no attention.

The next day Jimmie is summoned by the sheriff of the locality to call for the wages of his assistants. On his way back he imprudently displays the contents of his pocket-book at one of the roadway saloons. Two robbers eye the amount thus exhibited, with serious intent, and hurry on and conceal themselves in the underbrush so as to ambush Logan on his way back. This they do and beat him to an almost unrecognizable pulp, make away with his money and leave him prone on the ground for dead. Jimmie's prolonged and unusual absence is a source of great worry to his wife, who passes the night in the utmost disquietude. One of her children hears a knock at the door and asks his mother to open it to let the father in. The gladdened mother turns the knob but takes the precaution to he sure that the party outside is her husband, when, to her horror, she discovers that it is a huge cinnamon hear, probably the mother of the cuh that they have adopted as a pet. She is almost too terrorized to move and never sleeps a wink the live long night.

At daybreak Jimmie regains consciousness and drags himself with the most painful agony toward his humble cottage, harely able to keep his gun with him. He finally pulls himself to the rear door of his house, where he discovers a large female hear pawing at the door knob. In his anxiety he fails to think of the agony the hear is undergoing, deprived as she is of her cub, takes careful aim and kills her. His wife is attracted by the shot and rushes out, only to apprehend the situation. Needless to say, Jimmie and his whole family are sorely grieved at the death of the faithful bear. They can only make reparation hy trying to tame the cub and seeing that it does not meet the cruel fate that befell its fond mother.

AMERICAN

THE MARKED GUN (Sept. 4).—The outlaw's daughter warned her father of the coming of the sheriff just a moment too late. The result was that two handits were slain, although the father escaped. The sheriff, returning home, celebrated bis son's birthday by giving him a revolver taken from a dead bandit—a revolver bearing a peculiar mark about the butt. The son, Dave, went out for a ride the following day and was shot hy the robber chief and his men. They took the marked revolver, and when the sheriff finally captured them, be found the odd revolver on the dead man. Meanwhile, Dave had heen rescued by the outlaw's daughter, who, when her father failed to return, carried a letter from Dave to his father. What followed makes the out-of-the-ordinary in Western pictures. A subject charged with power, bristling with adventure and backed by superb photography.

THE STRANGER AT COYOTE (Sept. 5). Bill Buckley ran things his own way at Coyote. He induced Jim Williams, sweetheart of pretty Mabel Hoyer, to get drunk and commit some outrages not worthy of Jim in his better moments. Then a stranger came and promptly fell in love with Jessie Williams, sister of Jim. How the stranger brought order out of chaos, and what he did to tbe bully makes an interesting subject. Bill Buckley tried to kill the stranger and met his own end in trying to do so. A stirring Western of the thoroughly enjoyable kind.

A CRIPPLE'S FOLLY (Sept. 6).—Having foolishly disobeyed the doctor's instructions, Jim Crowther becomes crippled for life. The pain and misery cause him to imagine that it is all the doctor's fault, and he becomes insane with hatred of the man who used all his skill to save him. Sitting in his chair, which he now seldom leaves, he broods over his misfortune, and finally conceives a malicious plot wbich he proceeds to put in action.

That night the doctor is hurrying off to attend a little child, who has been taken seriously ill. He is stopped by Crowther's daughter, who tells him that she has discovered that her father intends to set his house on fire that night. The doctor hesitates for a moment, thinks of his little boy whom he left all alone in the house, and then of the little child whose life he can possibly save. Finally, his sense of duty triumphs, and he goes straight on to pursue his professional duties. Whilst he is attending his little patient, the flames of his burning house are fast rising around his little child, but fortunately help arrives, and the little one is saved from the fire. Meanwhile tbe doctor has saved the life of his little patient.

When it becomes known that Crowther is responsible for the fire, he is beset by an angry mob, but the doctor comes to his assistance, and returns good for evil by befriending him in the hour of need.

A BIG FEATURE!
"CALEB WEST"
IN 2 REELS—Released Sept. 18th—IN 2 REELS
From F. Hopkinson Smith's great novel.
Wonderful Submarine and Lighthouse scenes.
Special 3 and 1 sheet posters.

RELIANCE

Advance releases that will pack your house:
"Love Knows No Laws," Wed., Sept. 11.
"For Love of Her," Sat., Sept. 14.
"The Redemption," Sat., Sept. 21.
"The Geranium" and "Bedelia and Her Neighbor," Wed., Sept. 25.
"The Cuckoo Clock," Sat., Sept. 28.

TOMMY'S PLAYMATE (Sept. 13).—Tommy's rich uncle is very devoted to him and, therefore, bequeaths his large fortune to Tommy's parents. Mr. Wilde, the uncle, is addicted to the use of dangerous drugs, and this harmful practice finally leads to his becoming insane. As Tommy's parents are not the direct heirs, they spare no pains in concealing this calamity from the world. When later, in an insane moment, the uncle conceives the fiendish idea of locking Tommy in a deserted hut in the woods and throwing his cap into a pond, thus leading his bewildered parents to believe that Tommy is drowned; they are placed in a very awkward situation. However, Tommy's little playmate, Fido, a sharp little dog, discovers where Tommy is hidden and takes him food and drink. This smart little dog finally carries the message to Tommy's parents, in which Tommy writes telling of his predicament. Tommy is rescued and, when later his uncle finally does pass away, Tommy's little playmate is not forgotten.

COMET

THE ROMANTIC SUICIDE (Sept. 9).—Charles Haywood is a romantic young man of many amours. He is invariably falling in love and out of it, and as a consequence his lot becomes a veritable tempest in the teacup. Charles first gives his heart to Lucy. She repulses him and he meets Edna, a pretty girl. He vows his undying affection for her, but when she fails to respond, he tells her as he did Lucy that he will forthwith shake off this mortal coil. But Haywood changes his mind and makes love to Lilly Benson. Lilly is temperamental and accepts Charles. When the three girls meet there is a clash. The green-eyed monster now plays an important rôle and they all seem to win his favor. The contretemps is too much for Charles and, eluding his three loves, he betakes himself on a flying train to New York, determined to spend the rest of his days as a confirmed bachelor.

On the same reel:

C. COLES PHILLIPS (Educational).—Here we get a fine insight to the methods of C. Coles Phillips, the well-known creator of the latest artistic creation, "The Fadeaway Girl." Mr. Phillips, by his genius, has established a vogue as one of the best artists in his particular field in the country. In this interesting film he gives an excellent idea of how "The Fadeaway Girl" came to be evolved and also demonstrates in an engrossing manner just how he works.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 37 (Sept. 9).

LOVE'S PROGRESS (Sept. 10).—An illustration of Cupid awakening in joy, in sorrow and finally in triumph is the unique method of introducing each chapter employed in this delightful story. A young Marquis falls in love with a lovely country lass, who reciprocates his affection. The Marquis' noble mother, however, plans to marry her son to a girl of his own station and nearly succeeds, but true love disregards the barrier of differing rank and Dan Cupid continues "Monarch of all he surveys."

On the same reel:

A LITTLE JOURNEY IN TUNIS.—A portrait of the Arabian tribesmen at home, at work and at play.

BLACK BEAUTY (Sept. 11).—A remarkably intelligent horse plays the principal part of this film. Discovering a fire in his stable, Black Beauty breaks loose and awakens the family. He then races to the fire bell and rings it until the firemen are summoned. He further endears himself to his master by winning the County Stake in a race which makes the blood tingle. Things go against his owner later on and he is forced to sell the animal to a tradesman. Beauty's new lot is a hard one, hut he struggles faithfully to earn his oats until his old owner is able to buy him back and allow him to end his days on the quiet farm.

ANGUISHED HOURS (Sept. 12).—John Parsons is of such a nervous temperament that the playing of his two little children drives him almost to distraction. He leaves the house in anger and goes to his club. He participates in a game of cards there and indulges in an excessive amount of liquor. Returning home with a heavy head he falls into a deep sleep in which he dreams that his little daughter, playing "hide and seek," locks herself in a heavy chest. All his efforts fail to open the chest and he summons a locksmith who opens the box, but the child is dead. The horror of it all awakens him and he rushes to the children's room to find them safe and sound asleep. Then and there he realizes how much he would miss their noise and resolves to join in their play hereafter.

FOR HER LORD (Sept. 13).—A peasant girl is entrusted with the passport which will enable the Marquis de St. Gilles, accused of conspiring against the French republic, to escape to England. She delivers the passport to the Marquis, but the soldiers, with a warrant for his arrest, arrive immediately after her. Nothing daunted, the girl disguises herself as the Marquis and St. Gilles thus escapes. When the trouble is over the Marquis returns and makes the brave girl his bride.

On the same reel:

THE LATE HARRIET QUIMBY'S FLIGHT ACROSS THE ENGLISH CHANNEL.—The world's greatest aviatrix is shown accomplishing her most notahle flight, and as she appeared before she met her tragic death a short time ago.

SAVED AT THE ALTAR (Sept. 14).—Grace, the daughter of Colonel Wesley, is hetrothed to a young army lieutenant, Jack Dunbar. She is also loved by William Burton, an attache of the War Department, whom she refuses to marry. Through Burton's influence the aged Colonel is transferred to the Philippine Islands. Burton offers to have him returned if Grace will consent to marry him. Dunbar withdraws as a suitor and the girl agrees to make the sacrifice, in order to save her father from the harsh climate. As the marriage is about to be solemnized, Dunbar rushes into the church with the information that Colonel Wesley has been killed in battle. This ends the ceremony and, as the true lovers are married later on, Colonel Wesley does not die in vain.

ESSANAY

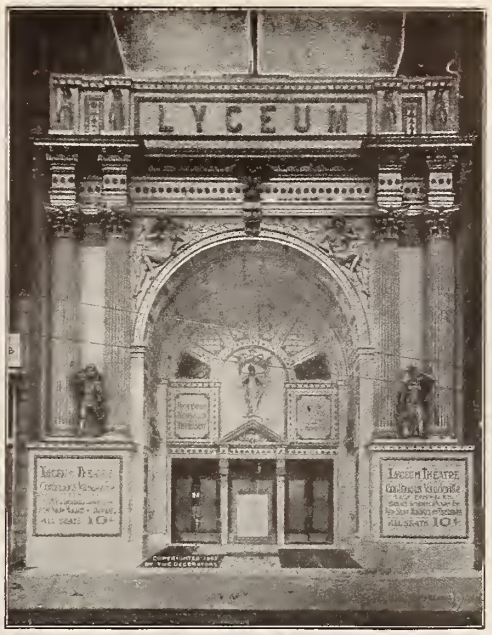
BACK TO THE OLD FARM (Sept. 3).—Frank Clayton, a young city chap, plans a vacation on his uncle's farm. Going to his friend, George Randall, Clayton shows him old Barnes' letter, asking that George he brought along as he has always been like a son to him, and that someone will be glad to see him. George agrees to go and that night has a dream of the old days on Barnes' farm, where he worked as a young fellow and loved pretty Mollie. Toiling on the old-fashioned place becomes irksome to him and he determines to seek his fortune in the city. Packing up his few things he leaves a note for Barnes, then steals away in the moonlight and comes upon Mollie in the garden. Telling her of his discontent and his plans for the future he kisses her tenderly, receives her blessing and leaves. With a start George now awakes to find Clayton urging him to hurry and make the train. But what a change greets their eyes on arriving at the old place. Time and money have worked miracles and Barnes' farm is now equipped with the latest and most modern machinery and conveniences. With pretty Mollie by his side, George rides over the vast acres in wonderment, and the two plan a moonlight elopement that night. Proudly old Barnes shows them a new auto-wagon he has just bought and tells George it is good for anything. Next morning the young couple are missed and Barnes finds a note from George declaring the auto-wagon has been just the right medium for their elopement and that the farm and Mollie are good enough for him for they are coming back soon. So with a smile the old man prepares to kill the fatted calf.

THE WILD MAN (Sept. 5).—Old John Barnahee has a charming daughter, Mildred, who is loved by Billy, an arrant coward, and Charles, an artist. Barnabee objects to Charles, and forbids Mildred to receive his attentions. On the other hand Billy is liked by the old man, who urges Mildred to accept his proposal of marriage. She refuses and accompanies Charles while he is sketching in the woods one morning. Billy sees them and immediately informs old Barnahee, who rushes into the forest in his shirt sleeves to bring his daughter back. Meanwhile, Billy finds Charles' deserted sketching outfit and, thinking to trick him, pours a bottle of glue over the log on which the artist has been sitting. But the trick proves a boomerang in that old Barnabee, exhausted from tramping through the woods, flops down on the log to rest and sticks fast in the glue. Endeavoring to extricate himself, Barnahee loses an embarrassing portion of his trousers and is forced to decorate his exposed person with tree branches and odds and ends of everything that is handy. Consequently he is taken for a "wildman" by some girls, who spread the alarm in town, and the constable, with a posse, starts out on the hunt. Billy joins the pursuit and proves himself an arrant coward when asked to capture the strange apparition. After a frantic search Charles suddenly comes upon Barnahee and the mystery is solved. Billy is forced to confess he worked the glue incident and Barnahee orders him out of sight while Charles takes Mildred in his arms, much to the old constable's bucolic amusement.

LUBIN

THE SMUGGLER (Sept. 5.)—Jean Dupont, a captain of the coast guards, is in love with Marie, the daughter of the smuggler. Jean thinks her father is a respectable fisherman. One day while Marie and Jean are taking a stroll near the coast he receives an order to the effect that the smugglers are quite active in his district and cautions him to double his guard and be on the lookout. This order is seen by Marie. She at once thinks of her poor father and makes an excuse to get away from Jean. She returns home, gets her signal lantern, hurries to the spot where her father waits for the usual signal of safety. Marie meets her father, who is returning with the smuggled goods. She informs her father that the guards are after him, and pleads with him to allow her to take his coat and hat that she might lead the guards a wild goose chase so that he can reach home in safety. Marie is mistaken for a smuggler by Jean and his guards. He orders his guards to shoot. Instead of finding a smuggler at the bottom of the cliff Jean finds the supposedly dead form of his sweetheart. She is removed to the hospital, and while on the road to recovery grief overtakes her father and he repents and surrenders himself to the guard.

ROMANCE OF THE COAST (Sept. 6).—Seeking local color for stories, Harry Myers leaves his home at Becket Castle to live among the fisher folks near Pond Cove. At the start of his stay he falls in love with Ethel, daughter of Dick Drayton, a lobster fisherman, whose craving for drink causes him to mistreat his daughters Ethel and Beatrice. In his love-making with Ethel, Myers incurs the emnity of Charles Cogan, who has forced unwelcome attentions upon Ethel. When Ethel's father learns of Myers' infatuation for Ethel, he orders him away from the cabin. Likewise he discourages a love affair between Beatrice and a fisherman. Due to their father's indolence, Ethel and Beatrice are forced to go out alone in their fishing punt and set the lobster pots. One day Ethel goes forth in the punt without Beatrice. She moors the boat on a rock, half a mile off shore, where pots have been set. While she is pulling in a pot the boat becomes dislodged and drifts away. It is flood tide and Ethel is left alone on the rock, absolutely helpless. Slowly the incoming tide covers the rock, while Ethel screams wildly for assistance. Myers, from the window of his room in Pete Wright's cabin, catches sight of the figure on the rock. Hurriedly he ascends the elevation on the promonotory at Two Lights, climbs the upright ladder-pole there, and with the aid of the telescope definitely makes out the figure of the woman. He runs to Ethel's home and from Beatrice learns that Ethel has gone alone. Down to the beach rushes Myers. Here Cogan's punt is moored. Myers starts to leap in the boat to go to Ethel's assistance, but Cogan refuses to let him. While the two men fight for the possession of the punt the water climbs higher and higher around the half-submerged rock where Ethel has been marooned. Myers knocks out Cogan, leaps into the boat and frantically rows to Ethel's assistance. He reaches her just as the waves have climbed to her chin. Numbed with cold, terrified by the shadow of death that has hovered over her, Ethel is dragged safely into the boat, while the assembled villagers, on shore, applaud his bravery. When Ethel has recovered Myers asks her hand in marriage and discloses his identity. Ethel's father, completely transformed by the horrible danger to which the girl has been exposed, approves the match. Myers then takes Ethel to his castle by the seashore and shows her their future home.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

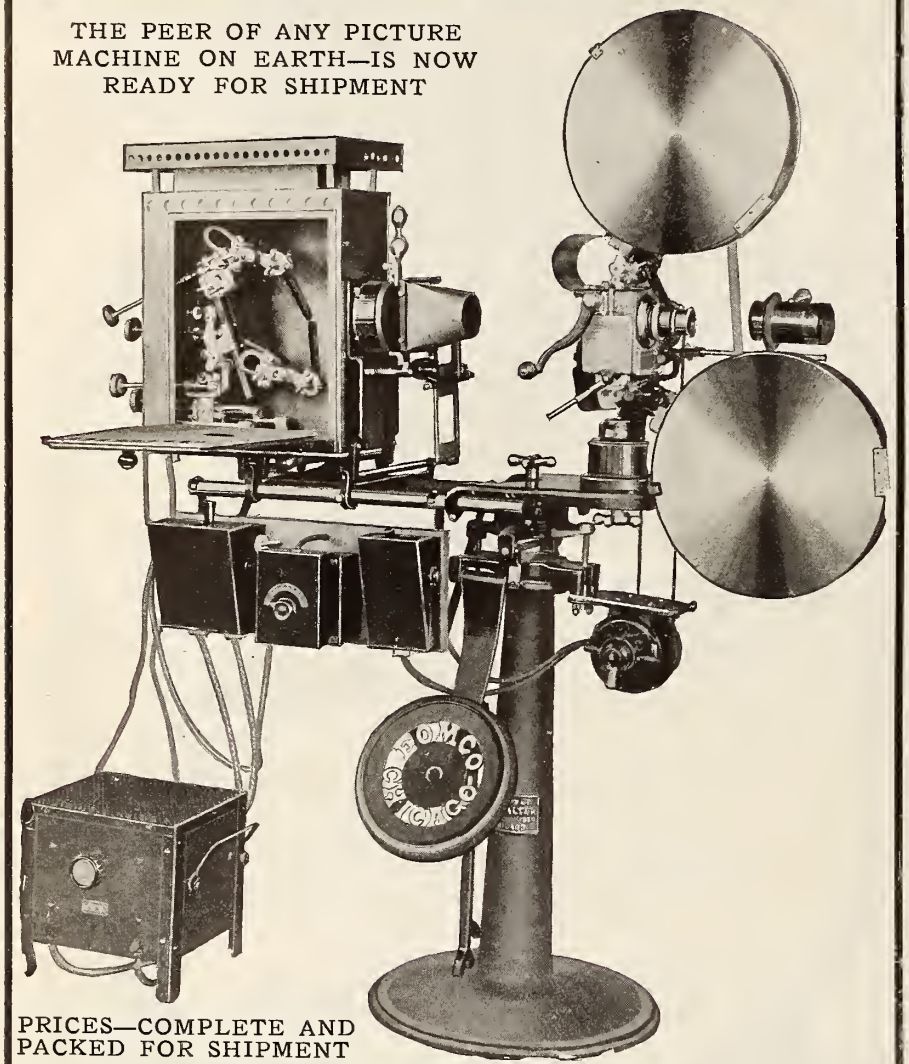
Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

THE PEER OF ANY PICTURE MACHINE ON EARTH—IS NOW READY FOR SHIPMENT



PRICES—COMPLETE AND PACKED FOR SHIPMENT

$250.00 without motor, switchboard or seat.
$285.00 with motor (any voltage), switchboard and seat.
$300.00 special Massachusetts, with motor, switchboard and seat.
THE PRICE HAS GONE UP FOR THREE REASONS:
1st: Because of the advance in Material and Labor Cost.
2nd: Because we furnish a complete metal equipment.
3rd: Because the introduction of the Motiograph is complete.

OUR GUARANTEE

FREE UPKEEP FOR ONE YEAR COVERING PARTS of the 1913 model Motiograph mechanism, THAT MAY BECOME WORN OUT IN SERVICE, or WHICH MAY SHOW DEFECT IN MATERIAL OR WORKMANSHIP, with the understanding that the part be sent to us, charges prepaid, for examination.

Manufactured by THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
564-572 W. Randolph Street CHICAGO, ILL.
For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

CINES—George Kleine

THE SACKING OF ROME (May 5th, 1527), (Sept. 7th).—"To the walls! The enemy is upon us!" is the cry of the citizens of Rome on this eventful day. Renzo of Cari, leader of the defenders, is forced to bid a fond farewell to Julia, his betrothed, and go to assume command of the defenders.

After a number of furious assaults upon the ramparts, which are defended with pitch and heavy stones, the invincible French army under the Duke of Bourbon manages to scale the walls and enter the city. His hired soldiers, clamorous for spoils, immediately put the city to sack

The greatest confusion reigns. Fleeing citizens with their household goods upon their backs, attempt to evade the merciless fury of the soldiers, but no one is spared; even the sacred portals of the churches are entered and eagerly ransacked for treasure.

Seeing that all is lost, and fearing for the safety of Julia, Renzo, with several of his comrades, hurries to find her, with the hope of assisting her to safety. But while trying to escape they encounter a band of the invaders, and although they resist bravely, superior numbers prevail and all perish by the sword.

On the same reel:

PICTURESQUE SARDINIA, ITALY.—Situated one hundred and forty miles west of Italy, this Italian island offers many interesting sights to tourists. After showing a wonderful bird's-eye view of the town of Cogliari, with its beautiful harbor, the film brings before our eyes such picturesque places as the Ramparts of St. Remy, the Piazza of Coperta, the Gate of Christina, and St. Pancrazia's tower.

ECLIPSE—George Kleine

A COUNTRY HOLIDAY (Sept. 18).—Bang! crash! bang! and the boys, Tom, George and Jack, are off for a week's vacation in the country. They arrive at the farm, and immediately start out to enjoy themselves to the best of their ability, at the expense of everybody and everything on the premises.

One day a popular actress appears upon the scene, and it does not take long for all three young fellows to fall head over heels in love with her. With considerable effort they manage to obtain an introduction, and then each plans to outdo his rivals in the competition for her affections.

The actress rather enjoys the sport and tries to divide her favor equally. After allowing each one in turn to believe himself the favorite, she writes a separate note to each, accepting his proffered heart, and requesting him to meet her at a certain place next morning at seven o'clock.

After vigorous preparation the three suitors, flushed with triumph, come by separate ways to claim their reward, and each is astounded to meet his rivals, but no lady.

While they are impatiently waiting, and arguing over the situation, the object of their affections waves exultingly at them from a passing railway carriage bound for London.

On the same reel:

NEW PLYMOUTH.—Located on the west coast of the northern island of New Zealand, the town appears exceptionally picturesque, sloping down to the ocean front, with a background of forest-clad mountains in the distance.

VITAGRAPH

A WASTED SACRIFICE (Sept. 7).—With all his faults, Jack Martin, an Arizona gambler, has one redeeming quality, a deep love for his motherless child. The baby is taken sick. Leaving her with Aunt Jane, the Mexican housekeeper, Jack goes for Doctor Winton, who is also the sheriff. The child dies. Crazed with grief, Jack gets drunk and shoots the town marshal. Leaping astride his horse, he escapes into the desert. Far out on a sandy plain, he comes across the dead body of a young Apache squaw, who has been bitten by a rattlesnake. By the side of the lifeless form he finds a child who has nursed from its mother's breast and imbibed the poison. Jack thinks of his own child and his heart goes out to the little one. Jack has eluded his pursuers and his horse has dropped from exhaustion. He knows that he is free to escape. He hesitates, but determines to save the little papoose by doubling back on his tracks and meeting the posse, of which the doctor-sheriff is the leader. On rounding a curve in the canyon, he comes upon his followers, who cover him with their weapons. Holding out the child to the doctor, he begs him to do something for it. The sheriff examines it and discovers that it is dead. Jack, with tears in his eyes, stands ready for his capture, conscious that inasmuch as he did it for one of God's little ones, he has not done it in vain.

MEMORIES OF PATIO DAYS, or THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY (Sept. 9).—After many years of toil, an exile of necessity, Ygnacio Marquez, now an old man, visits the home of his youth. In the place of the old rancho he finds a new civilization. There is only one landmark left, the home of his dead sweetheart. Wearied by his days of travel and shocked by the disappointment of not seeing the old familiar faces and places he falls exhausted on his sweetheart's grave and dreams of yesterady. His courtship, his serenade to his senorita and the confirmation of her love by the token of a rose. He beholds a vision of the base plot of Pasqual Chavez, who demands the hand of Juanita by threatening to take advantage of a law to dispossess her father, and for his sake, she marries Pasqual. The ceremony has just been completed when the rancho is besieged by hostile Indians. Pasqual, in terror, jumps from a window and is shot by one of the besiegers. The rest of the company give battle. The savage attackers are fast closing in upon the house. Ygnacio, late for the wedding, is just putting in an appearance. He spurs his horse and turns back and notifies a party of cowboys. With them he comes to the rescue of Juanita and her friends, killing and putting the Indians to flight. Pasqual's body is found. Juanita is now free to give her heart and hand to Ygnacio.

As this last vision of the days of long ago fades away, Ygnacio awakens in the land from whence no traveler e'er returns.

BIOGRAPH

IN THE NORTH WOODS (Sept. 2).—A trapper, confident of the safety of his wife and child in the boundless woods while he is away on his trip to the trading post, a day's journey, leaves for that place to dispose of the pelts he has secured. He has just departed when an adventurous Frenchman and his guide saunter through the woods in search of game. From a distance the adventurer sees the trapper's wife place her bag of savings in its hiding place. At once his cupidity is aroused, for his own purse is sadly depleted, and he is determined to get the bag of money, which purpose seems easy to accomplish. He finds, however, that the woman is made of stouter stuff than the ordinary female of the species and he not only fails but suffers for his attempted villainy.

GETTING RID OF TROUBLE (Sept. 5).—The Newlyweds move into their new flat and prepare to entertain their uncle. A cook must be engaged and they go to the employment office to get one. It would spoil the fun to describe her—suffice to say trouble begins. They try to "fire" her, but she refuses. More trouble comes in the person of a persistent bill collector. Uncle devises a great scheme. He asks the cook, who is eager for a fight, to chase the collector from the doorstep and while they are struggling outside he telephones to the police station. It proved a master stroke.

On the same reel:

HE MUST HAVE A WIFE.—Harry expected to come in for a portion of his uncle's estate, but didn't figure that he would get his share before his worthy relative's demise. The uncle, however, being an eccentric individual, decides to divide his estate while he is alive so as to avoid misunderstandings. Harry's share is $25,000, but the condition is that he is happily married, otherwise he doesn't get a penny. He has only a couple of hours in which to comply with the condition. Well, he gets his share, but, oh, what a struggle!

EDISON

THE MANUFACTURE OF PAPER, MAINE (Sept. 10).—Following "Winter Logging in Maine" and "Spring Log Driving" we now take up the manufacture of paper, this completing the series which started in mid-winter in the dense snow-covered forests and ends with the shipment of finished paper ready for use. The present film is not, however, dependent upon its predecessors for its interest in any way. It is complete in itself and is an industrial of real interest from start to finish.

We first see the delivery of the logs to the mill after their journey of eighty miles down the river. They are stacked in enormous piles, a three months' supply looking as though it would furnish paper for years to come. One by one they are taken into the mill, where they start on their trip, an eventful one.

First with huge circular saws they are cut into lengths convenient to handle, then a machine shaves off the bark, after which a beaklike device cuts them into small blocks. Again they are cut up, this time into chips, these traveling into huge "digesters," where they are cooked for eighteen hours under steam pressure and with acid, to separate the fibre and remove the rosin. Thus ths fluid pulp is formed.

This is carried onto cylinders coming off in large sheets. Split into smaller sheets, this is stored in piles and the first part of the operation is completed. The sheets of pulp go into the beater room, where they are beaten up with water until it becomes like mush.

This substance, again thinned with water, is run onto the paper machine, after which it passes through forty-two hot cylinders to dry. Now it is finished paper and is rolled into enormous rolls, some of them weighing 4,000 pounds. The real manufacturing operation being over, we visit the store room, the shipping room, the laboratory where pulp specimens are tested and are finally shown a very beautiful view of the mill itself on the water front.

THE STRANGER AND THE TAXICAB (Sept. 11).—True love never runs smooth as the saying goes, and this is the case with Harry and his sweetheart, Rose. The trouble begins when he declines to take Rose to a ball and she decides to go alone. The night of the ball he fancies she may be dancing with some unknown rival and determines to attend the hall in order to investigate his suspicions. Sure enough, he finds her accompanied by a most attentive young man.

Harry becomes insanely jealous, the supposed rival, however, being only Rose's brother, home on a visit, and unknown to Harry. Rose, noticing Harry's jealousy, tantalizes him by keeping up the deception and concealing her brother's identity. Rose and her brother decide to go home in a taxi and Harry, who has been planning revenge, now sees an opportunity of carrying out his plans by bribing the chauffeur to change places with him and thus enable him to drive to some lonely spot and administer a sound thrashing to his hated rival.

Without turning to look at his passengers Harry drives off at a furious rate of speed, and when at last they Halt Harry is astounded to discovers that his passengers are Rose's parents instead of Rose and his rival. The old folks indignantly refuse to ride any further with him and walk home. Meanwhile Rose and her brother start for home in another automobile, which later breaks down. Harry, by chance, happens to come across them and offers to tow them home where, upon arrival, he recognizes them, but they enter the house before he can administer the intended thrashing. Foiled again!

The following day the matter is cleared up by a note from Rose which reads: "Dear

Harry: I ought never to forgive you, but perhaps I was a little at fault myself. My brother, who was with me last night, says so, anyway. Come quick. Rose." Suffice it to say he loses no time in reaching his sweetheart's house and once more true love runs smooth.

CUPID VS. CIGARETTES (Sept. 15).—Bert Caldwell, a young man about town, is an inveterate smoker of cigarettes. One day on the beach he meets Edith Gardner, a beautiful girl who has just started practising as a physician. Bert falls desperately in love with her, but Edith takes offense at his habit of smoking at all hours and on all possible occasions. In order to see something of her, Bert pretends to fall ill. Not at all deceived by his ruse, Edith allows him to think she has been taken in and carts him off to a private hospital. Soon after arriving Bert sets fire to his bed while stealing a smoke. That afternoon he is informed that his illness is of so serious a nature that it necessitates an immediate operation. Bert, in a panic, tries to escape, but is caught and brought back. He then confesses his imposture, promises never to smoke again and is allowed to depart. At the door of the hospital he encounters a friend and is again induced to smoke. Edith catches him breaking his promise and when he calls again he is refused admittance. He hangs around her door and when she comes out he again pleads his love. She takes him into her office and writes her answer on a card. He receives this in transports of joy under the impression that it is her answer to his suit. In the park he opens the envelope and finds a bill for professional services. The last scene shows him making tracks for a tobacconist.

THORNS OF SUCCESS (Sept. 17).—Robert Vale, a young chemist, is working on a high explosive in his laboratory, when his wife brings him a letter from his uncle, who offers to finance Robert if the tests of the explosive are satisfactory.

Later Robert makes the tests and his uncle gives him a large check. Robert and his wife and child are installed in nice apartments in Washington, where he is trying to sell the invention to the government.

He is about to succeed when he meets an adventuress in the pay of the Japanese government. This fascinating woman tries to lure Robert and make him sell his explosive to the Japanese.

On account of this woman he becomes estranged from his family, but an army officer intervenes and gets his wife to appeal to Robert's better nature. So as the sale to Japan is about to be consummated, the wife interferes and succeeds in getting her husband to give the result of his work to his own government, to the discomfiture of the Japanese and the adventuress.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

Increase in Edison Releases

Commencing Monday, September 23d, the Edison Company will issue five reels per week. The Edison days will be Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

* * * *

What Selig Is Doing

On Thursday, September 19th, the Selig Polyscope Company will release what promises to be one of the most interesting subjects of the year, because of its unique qualities. The title of the picture is "Into the Genuine." The great scene of this picture represents the dramatic closing hours in the wheat pit board of trade. In making this mammoth and sensational scene, in the neighborhood of one thousand motion picture exhibitors were used for the parts of brokers. This scene was made on the afternoon of August 14th during the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. Some fifteen hundred convention visitors were guests of the Selig Company on this afternoon and when the visitors were invited to become actors in a Selig production they entered into the spirit of the thing with a vim and the result was most realistic. The story of "Into the Genuine" is exceptionally appealing and dramatic, and the picture will undoubtedly prove very popular.

* * * *

One of the most recent and valuable additions to the Selig Polyscope Company's excellent group of producers is Mr. Hardee Kirkland. Mr. Kirkland, until recently, has been identified with David Belasco and his various productions.

* * * *

Judging from the orders received by the Selig Polyscope Company for copies of their Wednesday release, this date promises to be one of the most popular in the entire Selig program. The first Wednesday subject will be released on September 25th.

* * * *

In one scene of a picture entitled "The Substitute Model" staged during the month of August by Director Hobart Bosworth, of the Selig Los Angeles studio, gowns and hats to the value of $3,500 were worn by the female characters appearing. These were not stage costumes but brand new imported creations in advanced styles.

* * * *

What the American Is Doing

The Starved Rock party of "Flying A" players have just completed a two-reel subject on the interesting theme of Andrew Jackson The pictures are historically accurate and dealing with so commanding a figure as Andrew Jackson are certain of appreciation.

* * * *

In addition to the two-reel subject of the "Story of Starved Rock" completed at Starved Rock, Ill., by the party of American "Flying A" players encamped there, a second two-reel has been made dealing with the early life of Father Marquette.

It is no exaggeration to say that handsomer backgrounds have never been seen in motion pictures, inasmuch as the region in and about Starved Rock has always been noted for its marvelous canyons, rapid streams, and remarkable rock formations.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

Cines

A magnificent piece of work recently turned out from the Cines studio is "The Bride of Lammermoor." The story follows out the lines of the opera of "Lucia de Lammermoor." The power of music as an accompaniment to a moving picture film has been demonstrated to perfection by orchestras equal to the occasion.

Pathe

"The Live Wire" from Pathe is good. It is comedy of rather an unusual sort. The superintendent of a telegraph company in the West is apprised of the fact that certain wires along the line are down. He sends men out to repair the damage. One of the men who is at work on the top of the pole sees the Indians not far away and, quickly descending the pole, he and his companions drive off in a hurry. They have no sooner disappeared from sight, however, when one of the Indians prowling in the vicinity becomes a prey to his curiosity, and he is seen rolling on the ground in all sorts of contortions with the live wire in his hands. He brings a number of other Indians on the scene and they all try it in turn with the same result.

At last the chief proclaims that he who is able to conquer this evil spirit shall have his daughter in marriage. They all refuse except a cripple who has just come on the scene. In the meantime the electricity has been turned off at the switch and the cripple is victorious.

Majestic

"The Pleasures of Camping" and "Willie's Dog" on the same reel are only fair. Both are intended for comedy, but as such are weak.

American

"The Dawn of Passion" represents a wonderful bit of acting. Miss Grace Murphy's interpretation of the part of the uncultivated, half gypsy girl of the mountains, whose sexual nature is suddenly awakened by a passing stranger, is marvelous. In the projecting room where the film was shown you could have heard a pin drop. Neither was there any comment at the finish of the picture, favorable or otherwise. The film spoke so truthfully in nature's own language that there was nothing left to be said.

GET THESE FEATURES } NEW YORK POLICE SCANDAL (ROSENTHAL CASE)
SING SING PRISON (THE ONLY AUTHENTIC VIEWS EVER OFFERED OF THIS FAMOUS PRISON)
Send for literature fully describing these subjects
A. J. CLAPHAM, 130 West 37th St., New York

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING
PHOTO
ENGRAVING CO.
8-10. WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 1617 1618 CHELSEA

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL
A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.
Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST
The Cleveland Leader
Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

NIAGARA SLIDES
Means to you the best on the market. Just now six announcements for $1.00. Now don't think because they're cheap that they're not first-class. They are, and we're bound to please you or refund your money. We buy stock in large quantities, we pay no big city rent; we're in the business to show you what a good slide means. Send for catalog, and let us tell you of our advertising and novelty slides.
NIAGARA SLIDE COMPANY,
Lockport, N. Y.

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD
YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.
J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.
THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

PATENTS
promptly obtained OR NO FEE. Trade-Marks, Caveats, Copyrights and Labels registered. TWENTY YEARS' PRACTICE. Highest references. Send model, sketch or photo. for free report on patentability. All business confidential. HAND-BOOK FREE. Explains everything. Tells How to Obtain and Sell Patents, What Inventions Will Pay, How to Get a Partner, explains best mechanical movements, and contains 300 other subjects of importance to inventors. Address,
H. B. WILLSON & CO. Patent Attorneys
Box 202 Willson Bldg. WASHINGTON, D. C.

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc.,
248 WEST 35TH ST.,
NEW YORK.

BE UP-TO-DATE
Subscribe for the Leading Moving Picture Trade Publication
Moving Picture News

FILM PROJECTORS
FOR SALE
One new Newman & Sinclair latest model; never used; one rotary wheel perforator, in good condition. Can be seen at this office. Apply ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, 30 W. 13th St., New York.

NOTICE
Anyone exhibiting, renting, leasing, or selling the motion pictures entitled "The Round-Up at Pendleton, Oregon," made by the late W. H. Harbeck, in any unsold territory, or sold territory, without a contract for such territory, are liable to, and will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Apply to
STANLEY HARBECK,
733 Michigan Street, Toledo, Ohio.

"Agfa"
Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)
RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 22—The Maniac.....
June 28—The Actor's Test.....
June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum

AMERICAN

Aug. 19—The Land of Death (Dr.).....
Aug. 21—The Wooing of Wathena.....
Aug. 22—The Bandit of Point Loma.....
Aug. 26—The Jealous Rage.....
Aug. 28—Lonesome Trail Pioneers.....
Aug. 29—The Will of James Waldron (Dr.).1000
Sept. 2—The Greaser and the Weakling (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 4—The Masked Gun (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Stranger at Coyote.....
Sept. 9—The Dawn of Passion.....
Sept. 11—Vengeance that Failed.....
Sept. 12—Geronimo's Last Raid (2 reels)..

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Aug. 6—The Reformed Outlaw.....
Aug. 9—The Garrison Triangle.....
Aug. 13—The Bugle Call.....
Aug. 16—The Other Girl.....
Aug. 20—The Buffalo Hunt.....
Aug. 23—The Reckoning .....
Aug. 27—The Bandit's Gratitude.....
Aug. 30—The White Lie .....
Sept. 3—The Honor of the Tribe.....
Sept. 6—An Old Tune.....
Sept. 10—The Fugitive.....
Sept. 13—A Frontier Child (2 reels).....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Aug. 13—The Widow's Claim (Drama)....
Aug. 17—The Shot that Failed (Drama).....
Aug. 20—How He Made Good (Com.).....
Aug. 27—For Love, Life and Riches (Dr.)..
Aug. 31—A Shot in the Dark (Dr.).....
Sept. 10—A White Indian.....
Sept. 17—The Ranch Man's Awakening (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Massacre of the Santa Fe Trail (2 reels; Dr.).....

BRONCHO

Sept. 18—Sundered Ties.....
Sept. 25—His Better Self.....

CHAMPION

Aug. 5—What a Woman Will Do (Rr.)....
Aug. 12—For His Child (Dr.).....
Aug. 19—The Bum and the Bomb (Com.)...
Aug. 26—The Foundling .....
Sept. 2—The Maid and the Rocks.....
Sept. 9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—The Dummy Director (Dr.).....

COMET

Aug. 24—The Deputy's Duty (W. Dr.).....
Aug. 26—A Divided House.....
Aug. 31—The Moonshiner's Task (Dr.)....
Sept. 2—The Dentist's Dilemma.....
Sept. 7—A Waif of the Mountains.....
Sept. 9—The Romantic Suicide.....
Sept. 14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune.....
Sept. 16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.).1000
Sept. 30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.)1000
Oct. 5—The Mystery of Mule Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000

ECLAIR

Aug. 18—A Child to the Rescue (Dr.).....
Aug. 18—Egyptian Ruins .....
Aug. 20—Wanted: A Wife in a Hurry (Com.)
Aug. 22—Robin Hood (Dr.).....
Aug. 25—The Will (Dr.).....
Aug. 25—A Moslem Lady's Day.....
Aug. 27—Dolls .....
Aug. 29—The Passing Parade.....
Sept. 1—Two Brave Little Hearts.....
Sept. 3—The Actress Pulls the Strings..
Sept. 5—The Guest at the Parsonage....
Sept. 8—The Kind Old Man.....
Sept. 10—The Marshal's Honeymoon (Com.)
Sept. 10—The Haunted Bachelor (Com.)....
Sept. 12—The Rancher's Lottery (Com. Dr.).
Sept. 16—A Marriage of Convenience (Com.)
Sept. 16—Around Constantinople (Travel)...
Sept. 17—My Wife's Away. Hurrah (Com.)
Sept. 19—Filial Love (2 reels; Dr.).....
Sept. 22—A Frivolous Heart .....
Sept. 22—Through China .....

GREAT NORTHERN

Feet

July 20—Uncle Reuben Goes to Town (Com.) 332
July 27—Don't Go on the Spree (Com.).... 876
Aug. 3—The King's Power (2 reels) (Dr.).2000
Aug. 10—Thou Shalt Not Kill (Dr.).....
Aug. 10—When the Cat's Away (Com.).....
Aug. 17—The Prodigal's Return (Dr.).....
Aug. 24—For Her Sister's Sake (Dr.)..... 944
Aug. 31—Love is Blind (Dr.)..... 943
Sept. 7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.)... 496
Sept. 7—The Spring Lock (Com.)..... 457
Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)...1000

GAUMONT

Aug. 20—Her Supreme Sacrifice.....
Aug. 22—Androclus and the Lion.....
Aug. 27—The Story of Chopin.....
Aug. 29—Marriage on the Run.....
Sept. 3—Refugee's Casket (2 reels).....
Sept. 5—A Midnight Encounter and The Launching of the Imperator.....
Sept. 10—Love's Serenade .....
Sept. 12—The Plague-Stricken City .....
Sept. 17—Queen Elizabeth's Token.....
Sept. 19—Kings in Exile (2 Reels).....
Sept. 24—The Heart of a Redman.....
Sept. 26—The Stolen Cub.....
Sept. 28—Life in Caucasia .....
Oct. 1—The Convict's Band.....
Oct. 3—Nigoto to the Rescue .....

GEM

July 30—Back to Her Own.....
Aug. 6—'Neath the Homespun.....
Aug. 13—Babette (Dr.).....
Aug. 20—White Dove's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—Baby Fingers .....
Sept. 3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)...
Sept. 10—A Turn of Fate.....
Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)

IMP

Aug. 24—Chappie, the Chaperon.....
Aug. 24—The Great Geysers of Yellowstone Park .....
Aug. 26—Making Good .....
Aug. 29—A Happy Family.....
Aug. 31—A Case of Smallpox.....
Aug. 31—Her Burglar .....
Sept. 2—The Love Test.....
Sept. 5—Tears of the Weak.....
Sept. 7—Lem's Hot Chocolate.....
Sept. 7—Queenie and the Cannibal.....
Sept. 9—The Intrigue (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—Human Hearts (Dr.) (2 reels)....
Sept. 14—Dalby the Tomboy and Dick's Predicament .....
Sept. 16—The Millionaire Cop (Com.-Dr.)..
Sept. 19—Sweet Alice Ben Bolt (Dr.).....
Sept. 21—The Blind Musician (Dr.).....
Sept. 21—The Exchange of Labels (Com.)..

ITALA

Feb. 17—Making a Cinematograph Scene....
June 29—The Great Bank Failure (2 reels)
July 6—A Woman's Duplicity (Dr.).....
July 20—Magical Hat .....
July 20—An Eventful Day.....

KEYSTONE

Sept. 23—Cohen Collects a Debt.....
Sept. 23—The Water Nymph.....
Sept. 30—Riley and Schultze.....
Sept. 30—The New Neighbor.....

LUX

By Prieur.

ess (Dr.) 967
Aug. 2—The Mysterious Flowers (Dr.)..... 983
Aug. 9—A Race for Liberty (W. Dr.)..... 580
Aug. 9—The Postman's Escapade (Com.)... 272
Aug. 16—Tommy Saves His Little Sister (Dr.)
Aug. 23—Uncle's Favorite Pudding (Com.).. 744
Aug. 23—Views of the Livran (Sc.)..... 239
Aug. 30—The Modern Child (Dr.)..... 990
Sept. 6—A Cripple's Folly (Dr.)..... 990
Sept. 13—Tommy's Playmate (Dr.)..... 980

MAJESTIC

Sept. 1—The Chaperon.....
Sept. 3—Mabel's Beau.....
Sept. 8—Willie's Dog and The Pleasures of Camping .....
Sept. 10—Lola's Sacrifice .....
Sept. 15—Cupid vs. Cigarettes .....
Sept. 17—Thorns of Success .....
Sept. 22—Mary's Chauffeur .....
Sept. 24—The Butterfly .....
Sept. 29—A Garrison Joke .....
Sept. 29—Belligerent Benjamin .....
Oct. 1—The Call of the Blood .....
Oct. 6—The Little Music Teacher .....
Oct. 8—The Winner of the Spoils .....

MILANO

Feet

Aug. 24—The Courage of Fear.....
Aug. 31—A Circus Romance.....
Sept. 7—Victims of Ingratitude (2 Reel)..
Sept. 14—The Wedding Gift.....
Sept. 21—The Two Overcoats .....
Sept. 21—Bonifacio in Society .....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Aug. 9—A Mexican Mix-up (Dr.).....
Aug. 12—A Tale of the Foothills (Dr.).....
Aug. 14—How Steve Made Good (Com. Dr.)
Aug. 16—The Miner's Widow (Dr.).....
Aug. 19—When the Heart Calls (Dr.).....
Aug. 21—The Alibi (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—A Stubborn Cupid.....
Aug. 26—The Story of a Wallet.....
Aug. 28—Uncle Bill .....
Aug. 30—The Girls and the Chaperon.....
Sept. 2—On the Border Line.....
Sept. 4—The Evidence.....
Sept. 6—The Girls and the Chaperon.....
Sept. 9—In the San Fernando Valley (Dr.)
Sept. 11—The Men Within (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Those Lovesick Cowboys.....
Sept. 16—The Horse Thief's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept. 18—A Western Vacation (Com.).....
Sept. 20—Won by a Call (Com.).....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Aug. 21—Her Diary (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—Life's Lesson (Dr.).....
Aug. 28—An Exciting Outing.....
Sept. 4—Love Will Find a Way.....
Sept. 6—His Weakness.....
Sept. 11—His First and Last Appearance (Com.) .....
Sept. 13—The Supreme Power.....
Sept. 18—All on Account of a Widow (Com.)
Sept. 20—Fate's Way (Dr.) .....

RELIANCE

Aug. 21—One Against One.....
Aug. 24—North of 53.....
Aug. 28—Secret Service Man.....
Aug. 31—Thelma (2 reels).....
Sept 4—The Heart of a Cossack.....
Sept. 7—The Bully and the Shrimp.....
Sept. 11—Love Knows No Laws.....
Sept. 14—For Love of Her.....
Sept. 18—Caleb West (Dr.) (2 reels).....
Sept. 21—The Redemption .....

REPUBLIC

Aug. 5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice.....
Aug. 12—The Borrowing Simp.....
Aug. 19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.).....
Aug. 26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons .....

REX

Aug. 22—An Old Fashioned Girl (Dr.).....
Aug. 25—The Leader of the Band (Dr.).....
Aug. 29—A Japanese Idyl.....
Sept. 1—In Honor Bound.....
Sept. 5—From the Wilds.....
Sept. 8—The Ghost of a Bargain.....
Sept. 12—The Squatter's Rights (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—Lost, a Husband (Com.).....
Sept. 19—Far-Away Fields (Dr.) .....
Sept. 22—The Conflict's End (Dr.).....

SOLAX

Aug. 21—His Double .....
Aug. 23—The Equine Spy (2 reels).....
Aug. 28—Phantom Paradise .....
Aug. 30—Playing Trumps .....
Sept. 4—The Fight in the Dark.....
Sept. 6—Open to Proposals.....
Sept. 11—Treasures on the Wing.....
Sept. 12—Fra Diavolo (3 reels), States Rights Feature .....
Sept. 13—The Soul of the Violin.....
Sept. 25—Dublin Dan (3 reels).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Aug. 25—When a Count Counted.....
Aug. 27—Lucile (Part 1 and 2).....
Aug. 30—Lucile (Part 3).....
Sept. 1—The Capture of New York.....
Sept. 3—The Voice of Conscience.....
Sept. 6—His Father's Son.....
Sept. 8—Don't Pinch My Pup.....
Sept. 10—A Star Reborn.....
Sept. 13—The Birth of the Lotus Blossom..
Sept. 15—Orator, Knight and Cow Charmer
Sept. 17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation.....
Sept. 20—Two Souls .....

VICTOR

Aug. 30—The Winning Punch.....
Sept. 6—After All.....
Sept. 13—All for Love.....
Sept. 20—Flo's Discipline (Com.).....

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

You Get Perfect Publicity with "Undine"

EVERY Thanhouser two-reeler is a "Perfect Publicity Feature." Every method that means perfection in motion picture advertising—the use of one and three sheet lithos, of illustrated heralds and illustrated slides, of lobby displays and of half-tone cuts—is brought to your easy reach for these features. "Undine," a marvel-picture adapted from the famous Riverside Classic of that name, is in two reels. It is, therefore, in the "Perfect Publicity" class. Two one-sheets and a three-sheet from your exchange. Illustrated Heralds from Hennegan & Co., Cincinnati, O. Cuts for Newspaper and circular advertising (2-column) 50 cents apiece from Standard Engraving Company, 560 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Slides 30 cents apiece from Novelty Slide Company, 20 E. 14th Street, New York City.

(RELEASED TUESDAY, SEPT 24)

"For the Mikado" Next in the Japanese Series

THIS is the second of the one-reel features produced by our special Japanese Stock Company, headed by Miss Taku Takagi. All are real depictions of real Japanese life by real Japanese Photo-players, and about the finest novelty ever offered the Photofan. Remember: Japanese plays will be the rage on Broadway this fall! Here you have a really "exclusive" proposition—no other film maker has a Japanese producing company.

(RELEASED TUESDAY, OCT. 8)

After "Undine" is "Put Yourself In His Place"

AFTER you have exhibited "Undine" and played a return date with "Lucile" get ready to feature "Put Yourself in His Place," to be released in two reels in October. It was filmatized from the popular story by Charles Reade and has been read by countless thousands. It is a "perfect publicity" feature, of course. Watch for the exact release date.

Sunday, Sept. 15—"ORATOR, KNIGHT and COW CHARMER."
Tuesday, Sept. 17—"THE MAIL CLERK'S TEMPTATION."
Friday, Sept. 20—"TWO SOULS."

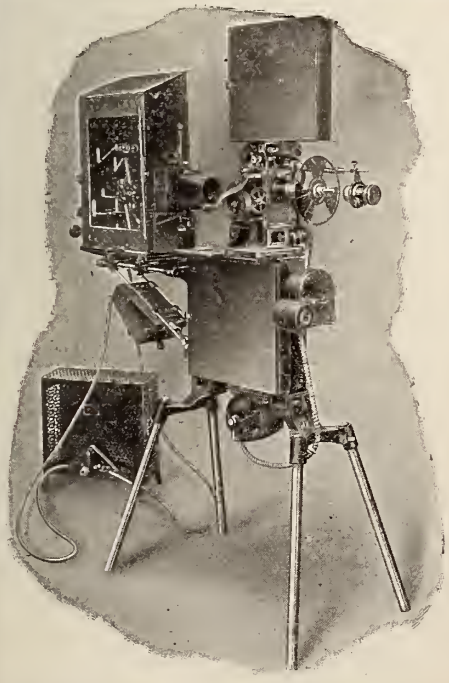
THANHOUSER CO., New Rochelle, N. Y.
Film Supply Company Agents for U. S. and Canada

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS
FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



ACCURACY
THE KEYNOTE OF SUCCESS OF
POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A

THE PERFECT MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

The most vital point in moving picture machine manufacture is ACCURACY. The various parts in a machine must be accurately adjusted to the finest point of scientific possibility, or poor projection results.

Speaking of accuracy, we have a letter from a large manufacturer of imitation parts, soliciting the repair part business of a dealer, and boasting that their machines "Are capable of working within one-half a thousandth of an inch."

We make and guarantee all our parts, and practically all of them are made to within ONE-TENTH OF A THOUSANDTH OF AN INCH, or five times more accurate than claimed by the imitator. Greater variation would make them unsatisfactory.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6A is made in the largest factory of its kind in the world, and is characterized by extreme accuracy of workmanship and careful selection of the best materials.

ACCURACY is only one of POWER'S many good points. It explains, in a measure, why our output exceeds that of all other moving picture macbine manufacturing concerns combined.

We purpose further descriptions of the various superior qualities of POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A. Catalog D will give you full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
90 Gold Street, New York City

For fifteen years the leading makers of Motion Picture Machines.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Aug. 5—The Tourist (Com.).....
Aug. 5—What the Doctor Ordered (Com.)..
Aug. 8—A Child's Remorse (Dr.).....
Aug. 12—Rameses, King of Egypt (2 reels) (Dr.) .....
Aug. 12—The Inner Circle (Dr.).....
Aug. 15—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.)
Aug. 15—The Tragedy of a Dress Suit (Com.)
Aug. 19—With the Enemy's Help (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 22—A Change of Spirit (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 26—Mr. Grouch at the Seashore (Com.)
Aug. 26—Through Dumb Luck (Com.).....
Aug. 29—A Pueblo Legend.....
Sept. 2—In the North Woods (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—Getting Rid of Trouble (Com.)..
Sept. 5—He Must Have a Wife (Com.).....
Sept. 9—An Unseen Enemy (Dr.) .....
Sept. 12—Blind Love (Dr.) .....

CINES

C. Kleine

Aug. 17—A Convict's Gratitude (Dr.).....1025
Aug. 20—A Matter of Pride (Dr.)..... 963
Aug. 24—Jenkins, the Watchman (Com.)... 235
Aug. 24—Modern Naples (Sc.)..... 290
Aug. 24—A Picture C. O. D. (Com.)..... 450
Aug. 27—The Bridge of Lammermoor (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 3—A Tragedy of Long Ago (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 7—The Sacking of Rome (Dr.)..... 770
Sept. 7—Picturesque Sardinia, Italy (Sc.).. 230
Sept. 10—Scenes Along Salerno Coast, Italy (Sc.) 140
Sept. 10—The Conspiracy of Catiline (Dr.).. 885
Sept. 14—Honors Divided (Dr.).....1075
Sept. 17—Amalfi, Italy (Scenic); and A Gun Factory (Ind.); and Traditional Customs in Southern Italy (Top.) 1005
Sept. 21—Betrayed for Love (Hist.-Dr.)....1000
Sept. 24—Castrovillari, So., Italy (Sc.).... 335
Sept. 24—A Cavalier's Romance (Dr.)..... 665
Sept. 28—Quaint Sights in Sardinia (Sc.).. 205
Sept. 28—Reuben and the Boys (Com.)....

EDISON

July 17—Revenge is Sweet (Com.)..... 600
July 17—The Maple Sugar Industry at Thompson, Pa. (Ind.) 400
July 19—The Necklace of Crushed Rose Leaves 1000
July 20—The Little Artist of the Market (Dr.) 1000
July 23—The Sketch with the Thumb Print (Dr.) 1000
July 24—The Grouch (Com. Dr.) 985
July 26—The Escape from Bondage (Dr.)....1000
July 27—The Relief of Lucknow (Hist. Dr.).1000
July 30—More Precious Than Gold (Dr.)....1000
July 31—When She Was About Sixteen (Com.) 1000
Aug. 2—The Lord and the Peasant (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 3—Ninth International Red Cross Conference, Washington, D. C., May 17, 1912 700
Aug. 3—Mary Had a Little Lamb (Com.)... 300
Aug. 7—Marjorie's Diamond Ring (Com.)..1000
Aug. 9—The Librarian (Dr.)..... 980
Aug. 14—Holding the Fort (Com.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Harbinger of Peace (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 17—Spring Log Driving, Maine.....1000
Aug. 20—The Street Beautiful (Edu.).....1000
Aug. 21—Mr. Pickwick's Predicament (Com.) 1000
Aug. 23—The Cub Reporter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 24—The War on the Mosquito (Edu.) 1000
Aug. 27—Alone in New York (Dr.)..... 1000
Aug. 28—Helping John (Com. Dr.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Simla (Sc.) 1000
Sept. 3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Sept. 4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)..1000
Sept. 7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912.. 400
Sept. 10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.) 1000
Sept. 11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.) 1000
Sept. 13—The Dam Builder (Dr.) 100
Sept. 14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies 1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

July 27—A Moonshiner's Heart.....
July 30—Broncho Billy's Pal (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 1—Her Hour of Triumph (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 2—The Browns Have Visitors (Com.).1000
Aug. 3—The Loafer's Mother (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 6—The New Church Organ (Dr.).....
Aug. 8—The Old Wedding Dress.....
Aug. 9—The Tale of a Cat (Com.).....
Aug. 10—The Little Sheriff.....
Aug. 13—Broncho Billy's Last Hold-up (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 15—An Adamless Eden (Com.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Magic Wand (Juvenile).....1000
Aug. 23—Work in a U. S. Arsenal (Edu.)..
Aug. 23—A Water Fight (Com.).....
Aug. 24—The Government Test (Dr.).....
Aug. 17—On the Moonlight Trail (Dr.)....1000
Aug. 20—The Return of Becky (Dr.).....
Aug. 22—A Corner in Whiskers (Com.).....
Aug. 23—Her Adopted Father (Dr.).....
Aug. 24—Broncho Billy's Escapade (Dr.)....
Aug. 27—Alkali Ike Plays the Devil (W. Com.) 1000
Aug. 29—Three to One (Com.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Hermit (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Broncho Billy for Sheriff (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Wildman (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Twilight (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.) ....

LUBIN

Aug. 28—The Burnt Cork (Com.).....
Aug. 29—For the Love of a Girl (Dr.).....
Aug. 30—Pinned (Com.).....
Aug. 30—The Overworked Bookkeeper (Com.)
Aug. 31—The Sheriff's Prisoner (Dr.).....
Aug. 28—The Caretaker (Com.).....
Sept. 2—A Substitution (Com.).....
Sept. 4—The Bank Cashier (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—The Smuggler (Com.).....
Sept. 6—A Romance of the Coast (Dr.)..
Sept. 7—Little Family Affair (Com. Dr.)..
Sept. 9—The Halfbreed's Sacrifice (Dr.)...
Sept. 11—A Redhot Courtship (Com.).....
Sept. 12—Betty and the Roses (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Never Again (Com.).....
Sept. 13—Buster and the Pirates.....
Sept. 14—A Trustee of the Law.....
Sept. 16—The Sleeper .....
Sept. 18—When Father Had His Way.....
Sept. 20—Turpentine Industry.....
Sept. 20—No Trespasssing.....
Sept. 21—His Pair of Pants.....
Sept. 23—A Gay Time in Quebec.....
Sept. 25—The Renegades .....
Sept. 26—Swimming and Life Saving.....
Sept. 26—Buster and the Gypsies.....
Sept. 27—Glued .....
Sept. 27—The Water Wagon.....
Sept. 28—The Doctor's Debt.....

G. MELIES

July 25—A String of Beads (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 1—The Will of Destiny.....
Aug. 8—The Ranger's Girls.....
Aug. 15—Romance at Catalina.....
Aug. 22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 29—His Partner's Share (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Obsession (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.) 1000

PATHE FRERES

Aug. 14—Silver Wing's Two Suitors (Dr.)
Aug. 15—Cupid's Stolen Arrows (Com.)....
Aug. 15—Some Inhabitants of Stagnant Water
Aug. 16—A Love Story of Old Japan (Dr.)
Aug. 17—The Cactus County Lawyer (W. Dr.)
Aug. 19—Pathe's Weekly No. 34.....
Aug. 20—His Windmill (Dr.).....
Aug. 20—The Sedge Warbler and the Cuckoo (Edu.) .....
Aug. 21—Jealousy on the Ranch (W. Dr.)...
Aug. 22—The Hand of Destiny (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—The Queen's Pity (Hist. Dr.).....
Aug. 24—The $2,500 Bride (Com.).....
Aug. 26—Patbe's Weekly No. 35.....
Aug. 26—Fire at Sea (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—A Prince of Israel (Bib.).....
Aug. 28—The Live Wire (Dr.).....
Aug. 29—The Detective's Desperate Chance (W. Dr.) .....
Aug. 29—The Armless Wonder.....
Aug. 30—The Musketeer's Love (Hist. Dr.).
Aug. 31—An Aeroplane Love Affair (Com.).
Sept. 2—Pathe's Weekly No. 36.....
Sept. 3—Beat rix d'Este (Dr.).....
Sept. 4—Locked Out of Wedlock (Com.)
Sept. 5—The Penalty Paid (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—Whiffles and the Magic Wand (Com.); and The Bud, the Leaf and the Flower (Sci.).....
Sept. 7—Gee! My Pants! (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Pathe's Weekly No. 37.....
Sept. 9—The Blighted Son (Dr.).....
Sept. 10—Love's Progress (Dr. Com.).....
Sept. 10—A Little Journey in Tunis (Custom)
Sept. 11—Black Beauty (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—Anguished Hours (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Ford Her Lord (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Late Harriet Quimby's Flight Across the English Channel.....
Sept. 14—Saved at the Altar (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—Pathe's Weekly No. 38.....
Sept. 17—The Elopement (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Gerone—the Venice of Spain (Tr.)
Sept. 18—The Bandit's Spur (W. Dr.)....
Sept. 19—The Desperado (W. Dr.) .....
Sept. 20—Max's Tragedy (Com.).....
Sept. 20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept. 21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.).....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Aug. 23—The Beauty Parlor of Stone Gulch (Com.) 1000
Aug. 24—Rube Marquard Wins (Dr.).....1323
Aug. 26—The Little Wanderer (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 28—The Woman Hater (Com.).....
Aug. 28—Palestine (Ed.) .....
Aug. 30—Jim Bludso (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Saved from Courtmartial (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 2—The Hoodo Hat (Com.).....
Sept. 2—From Jerusalem to Dead Sea (Sc.)
Sept. 4—Down Through the Ages (Dr.)...1000
Sept. 6—The Loneliness of the Hills (Dr.).1000
Sept. 7—The Darling of the C. S. A.....1000
Sept. 9—The Girl Reporter's Big Scoop (Dr.)1000
Sept. 11—Dr. Skinnem's Wonderful Invention (Com.) .....
Sept. 11—The Ancient Port of Jaffa (Sc.)
Sept. 13—The Street Singer (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 14—A Railroad Lochinvar (Com.-Dr.)..1000

SELIG

Aug. 13—The Wayfarer (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 15—In the Tents of the Asra (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 16—Two Gay Dogs (Com.).....1000
Aug. 19—The Box Car Baby (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 20—The Cowboy's Mother (Dr.).....
Aug. 22—Betty Fools Dear Old Dad (Com.).1000
Aug. 23—Land Sharks vs. Sea Dogs (Com. Dr.) .....
Aug. 23—From Forest to Mills (Edu.).....
Aug. 26—The Laird's Daughter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 27—The Whiskey Runners (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 29—The Little Indian Martyr (Dr.) ..1000
Aug. 30—Just His Luck (Farce-Comedy)....
Aug. 30—Frenzied Finance (W. Com.).....
Sept. 2—As the Fates Decree (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 3—An Equine Hero (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—Serg. Byrne of the N. W. M. P. (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 6—Circumstantial Evidence (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 9—The House of His Master (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 10—The Fighting Instinct (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Indelible Stain (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 13—The Trade Gun Bullet (Dr.).....1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Aug. 14—The Rivals (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 21—Microscopical Curiosities 300
Aug. 21—Pulp Mills in the Province of Quebec (Ind.) 275
Aug. 21—A Day in the German Navy (Top.). 400
Aug. 28—The Golden Curl (Dr.).....1020
Sept. 4—An Eccentric Sportsman (Com.).. 455
Sept. 4—Small Game at the Zoo (Sc.)..... 165
Sept. 4—From Lauterbrunnen to Murren, Switzerland (Sc.) 380
Sept. 11—Glimpses of St. Petersburg (Sc.) 360
Sept. 11—And Chemical Action (Ed.)..... 180
Sept. 11—And Winter Sports in Moritz.... (Topical) 485
Sept. 18—New Plymouth (Scenic); and A Country Holiday (Com.)..... 980
Sept. 25—The Sacrifice (Dr.).....1000

VITAGRAPH

Aug. 12—Ingenuity 700
Aug. 13—The Heart of Esmeralda.....1000
Aug. 14—Vultures and Doves.....1000
Aug. 16—A Bogus Napoleon.....1000
Aug. 17—Two Battles 1000
Aug. 19—Her Grandchild 1050
Aug. 20—Lovesick Maidens of Cuddleton....1000
Aug. 21—The Ancient Bow.....1000
Aug. 23—Saving an Audience.....1000
Aug. 24—On Board Kaiser Wilhelm II..... 388
Aug. 24—The Party Dress 614
Aug. 27—Flirt or Heroine.....1000
Aug. 28—Two Cinders 555
Aug. 28—Bumps 477
Aug. 30—Written in the Sand.....1000
Aug. 31—The Bond of Music.....1000
Aug. 26—A Double Danger.....
Sept. 2—Tommy's Sister .....
Sept. 3—Coronets and Hearts.....
Sept. 4—Capt. Barnacle's Legacy.....
Sept. 6—Bunny's Suicide .....
Sept. 6—She Wanted a Boarder.....
Sept. 7—A Wasted Sacrifice .....
Sept. 9—Patio Days .....
Sept. 10—The Higher Mercy.....
Sept. 11—The Hindoo Curse.....
Sept. 13—The Loyalty of Sylvia.....
Sept. 14—Popular Betty.....
Sept. 14—Fortunes in a Teacup.....
Sept. 16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif.....
Sept. 17—The Troubled Trail.....
Sept. 18—A Vitagraph Romance.....
Sept. 20—The Indian Mutiny .....
Sept. 21—Adventure of the Italian Model..
Sept. 23—Bobby's Father .....
Sept. 24—His Lordship, the Valet .....
Sept. 25—Bill Wilson's Gal.....
Sept. 26—The Signal Fires.....
Sept. 27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville.....
Sept. 28—Irony of Fate .....
Sept. 30—Her Choice .....

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17th

"MY WIFE'S AWAY; HURRAH!"

At least "hubby" thought she was. She wasn't. That's why the play was made. Now that it's made it will make everyone laugh.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19th

"FILIAL LOVE"

In TWO REELS from the REALMS OF REALITY

Woven with the heart-strings of Americanhood. A mere youngster saves his "Daddy" from the death chair even though President Taft's door-man does refuse the little fellow entrance to the White House. Every child will coax the whole family into going to see it.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 22nd

"A FRIVOLOUS HEART"

A splendidly novel situation of strikingly dramatic effect. On the same reel

"THROUGH CHINA"

Showing a peculiar country and still more singular people.

FILMS of QUALITY

ECLAIR FILM CO., 225 W. 42nd St., New York City, N.Y.

EASTMAN

motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Mr. Independent Exhibitor

Why not make 4 cents more on each patron of your theatre? Do you realize the tremendous influence the Photoplay Magazine exerts in the independent field? The Photoplay Magazine contains illustrated stories of the independent films exclusively in advance of release dates. Sixteen beautiful pictures of independent actors and actresses each month. Thousands of houses are now taking advantage of this offer. Are you?

Selling price	$ .10
Cost you	.06
Absolute profit	.04

Credit allowed for all unsold copies. Can you afford to pass up this opportunity of trebling that interest your patrons now display?

Place your order to-day.
Your credit's good.
Write for sample copy.
Slides and cards furnished.

Photoplay Magazine
A. H. McLaughlin, Publisher
608 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago

CRITICS SAY

DUBLIN DAN

The three reel detective play is "A Winner." "Replete with sensational and dramatic incident."

This feature heralds the return of

BARNEY GILMORE

The famous Irish player who appears in pictures for the first time—the late star in the "Rocky Road to Dublin" and "Kelly from the Emerald Isle."

Copyright protected by best legal talent.

STATE RIGHTS SOLD ONLY

Through Film Supply Company of America.

ADVERTISING MATTER INCLUDES two kinds of one sheets, three sheets, half sheet lobby displays with Gilmore in a favorite pose, heralds, cuts, still pictures and "Magnet" write-ups.

OTHER FEATURES COMING

THE SPRY SPINSTERS

Released Wednesday, September 18th, 1912

THE LIFE OF A ROSE

Released Friday, September 20th, 1912

Solax Company

FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

ITALA FILMS

"THE SOLEMN HOUR"

Released Sept. 8

SENSATIONAL DRAMATIC SUBJECT
TWO REELS

A prison warden harbors a grudge against another man for twenty years. He releases a convict and introduces him as his son, bringing about a wedding with the daughter of his enemy. At the last moment the convict confesses to the girl his past life, and when she turns from him in horror he destroys himself. With his last breath the dying man denounces the warden in a sensational scene.

"A WOMAN'S DUPLICITY"

Two Reels. Released Sept. 15

A dramatic masterpiece, superbly acted, showing the dual life of a woman, and the tragic finale to her duplicity.

"TOTO'S TALISMAN"
"A NAUGHTY BOY"

A Split Reel of Comedy. Sunday, Sept. 22

"HIS FIRST LAW SUIT"
"A NAIL IN THE SHOE"

Two Comedies on One Reel. Sunday, Sept. 29

"TOO MANY CHILDREN"

A screaming comedy drama in two parts. Sunday, Oct. 6

AN ITALA SPLIT REEL COMEDY
EVERY SUNDAY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION

60 WALL STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Col. Theodore Roosevelt

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

FOR SEVEN YEARS OUR PRESIDENT

Has made special arrangements with this company to take Motion Pictures of his whirlwind tour through the United States. Showing the noted men of the States, and thousands upon thousands of people greeting him. THE MOST POPULAR AND BELOVED MAN OF THE PEOPLE

THIS IS A REAL BOX OFFICE WINNER

WIRE NOW AND GET YOUR ORDER IN GENERAL FILM PUBLICITY AND SALES COMPANY

H. A. SPANUTH, President J. W. STROUSE, Treasurer

145 WEST 45th STREET NEW YORK

The Simplex PROJECTING MACHINE IN EUROPE

TELEGRAMS: "TWIGSOME, LONDON."

Moss' Empires Ltd.

TELEPHONE NOS.: 1050 GERRARD. 1051

CHAIRMAN AND MANAGING DIRECTOR: SIR EDWARD MOSS. DIRECTOR AND GENERAL MANAGER: MR. FRANK ALLEN.

ASSISTANT TO MANAGING DIRECTOR: MR. ALBERT P. DE COURVILLE.

THE LONDON HIPPODROME.

THE FINSBURY PARK EMPIRE.
THE NEW CROSS EMPIRE, LONDON.
THE STRATFORD EMPIRE, LONDON.
THE LIVERPOOL EMPIRE.
THE LIVERPOOL OLYMPIA.
THE GLASGOW EMPIRE.
THE GLASGOW COLISEUM.
THE GRAND THEATRE, GLASGOW.
THE EDINBURGH EMPIRE.
THE NEWCASTLE EMPIRE.
THE LEEDS EMPIRE.
THE BRADFORD EMPIRE.
THE HULL PALACE.
THE NOTTINGHAM EMPIRE.
THE SHEFFIELD EMPIRE.
THE BIRMINGHAM EMPIRE.
THE GRAND THEATRE, BIRMINGHAM.
THE NEW PALACE, BIRMINGHAM.
THE CARDIFF EMPIRE.
THE PANOPTICON, CARDIFF.
THE OLYMPIA, CARDIFF.
THE SWANSEA EMPIRE.
THE NEWPORT EMPIRE.
THE BROADWAY THEATRE, NEW CROSS.

OTHER THEATRES BOOKED BY—

MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD.:

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE OF VARIETIES, WALSALL (PROPRIETORS: THE WALSALL THEATRES CO. LTD.)
THE GRAND THEATRE, WALSALL. (PROPRIETORS: THE WALSALL THEATRES CO. LTD.)
THE IMPERIAL HALL, WALSALL. (PROPRIETORS: THE WALSALL THEATRES CO., LTD.)
THE SUNDERLAND EMPIRE. (PROPRIETORS: THE SUNDERLAND EMPIRE PALACE, LTD.)
WEST HARTLEPOOL EMPIRE. (PROPRIETORS: THE WEST HARTLEPOOL EMPIRE PALACE LTD.)
THE GRAND THEATRE, NOTTINGHAM. (PROPRIETORS: THE NOTTINGHAM GRAND THEATRE AND ESTATES, LD.)
THE ALEXANDRA THEATRE, STOKE NEWINGTON. (JOINT PROPRIETORS: MOSS' EMPIRES, LTD., AND HACKNEY & SHEPHERD'S BUSH EMPIRE PALACES, LTD.)
THE SOUTH SHIELDS EMPIRE. (PROPRIETORS: THE EMPIRE PALACE, SOUTH SHIELDS, LD.)
THE DUBLIN EMPIRE. (PROPRIETORS: THE STAR THEATRE CO., LD.)
THE BELFAST EMPIRE. (PROPRIETORS: THE EMPIRE THEATRE CO., LD.)

NOTICE.

No order or contract for goods or services must be accepted for any of the above Theatres, except upon receipt of an Official Form issued from the London Office, and signed by either Sir Edward Moss, Mr. Frank Allen, or the Chief Accountant, otherwise the Company will not be responsible for same, and may refuse payment.

In special cases where goods are required at once, suppliers must look to the individual placing the order, who will be personally liable, unless an official confirmatory order, signed as above, is received within 48 hours.

Invoices must be sent to the Theatre, but monthly statements should be sent to the London Office.

The individual Company on whose behalf orders are signed, is solely responsible for payment.

The Management will not hold themselves responsible in the event of loss of or damage to any Mss., Songs, &c., submitted for consideration.

LONDON OFFICE:

In replying please address the Company.
Interviews by appointment only.

CRANBOURN MANSIONS,
CRANBOURN STREET, W.C.

15th. Aug. 1912.

R.G.Hallaman Esq.,

Waldorf Hotel, KINGSWAY.

Dear Sir,

The "Simplex Projector" outfit we have had installed at the London Hippodrome, is, I am pleased to say, giving great satisfaction, both in regard to steadiness and flickerless projection.

The machine contains many distinct improvements over other types - - the entire enclosure of the film and all working parts, rendering it both dust-proof and absolutely fire-proof. The automatic adjustment of the Shutter is unique....It is a machine which will undoubtedly command a big sale in this country.

Yours faithfully,

C. Jetlors for M O S S' E M P I R E S Ltd.

SEP 19 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 11

SEPTEMBER 14
1912

PRICE
TEN CENTS

Scene from
"IN THE LAND OF THE LIONS"
Gaumont release

KEYSTONE FILMS

MABEL NORMAND

FORD STERLING

A SPLIT REEL COMEDY RELEASED EVERY MONDAY

Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling, Mack Sennett and Fred Mace, directed by Mr. Sennett and supported by an all-star cast.

"Cohen Collects a Debt"

"The Water Nymph"

Released Monday, Sept. 23

A humorous character subject and a laughing seaside comedy featuring Mabel Normand in graceful diving feats.

"Riley and Schultze"

"The New Neighbor"

Released Monday, Sept. 30

An uproarious "Cop" picture and a natural comedy with screaming situations caused by a jealous husband.

KEYSTONE FILM CO.

ORDER FROM YOUR EXCHANGE

KEYSTONE FILM CO.

150 E. 14th St., New York City

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION

60 WALL STREET

Sole agent for the U. S. and Canada

KEYSTONE FILM CO.

Broncho Films

PRODUCED UPON THE LARGEST SCALE EVER ATTEMPTED IN MOTION PICTURES. STIRRING THEMES—TREMENDOUS CASTS—PERFECT PHOTOGRAPHY

First Release

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

"Sundered Ties"

The Biggest One-Reel Feature Ever Made

The North against the South—Father against Son—in wonderful and thrilling battles, booming cannon, hand to hand conflicts, sensational cavalry charges. Through it all runs a heart-gripping story, splendidly acted.

A Broncho Every Wednesday

THE BEST FILM IN THE WORLD

Second Release

"His Better Self"

1 REEL Wednesday, Sept. 25 1 REEL

In the hot desert, beneath the blistering rays of the sun, the rivals battle for the canteen of water—and life. As one falls wounded the hand of his conqueror is stayed in a death thrust by the picture of the woman they both love, and he carries his erstwhile opponent to shelter.

EXHIBITORS: PLACE YOUR ORDER WITH YOUR EXCHANGE AT ONCE FOR BOOKING. THE DEMAND WILL BE TREMENDOUS

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., N. Y. City, Sole Agents for U. S. and Canada

Gaumont

"Sights for Well Eyes"

GREAT EVENTS

The Title of the New Film to be issued Weekly by the Gaumont Co. on Saturday.

KEEN IN INTEREST AND DELIGHTFUL IN INSTRUCTIVENESS

A "SOMETHING NEW" OF ASSURED POPULARITY

A SPLIT REEL At one end an Educational; At the other a happening of universal interest such as the Funeral of General Booth or the Olympic Games.

FIRST RELEASE SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

THE FUNERAL OF GENERAL BOOTH

AND

THE ECLIPSE OF THE SUN

Tues.,	Sept. 24	THE HEART OF A RED MAN.
Thurs.,	Sept. 26	THE STOLEN CUB.
Sat.,	Sept. 28	LIFE IN CAUCASIA and SPECIAL.
Tues.,	Oct. 1	THE CONVICT'S BRAND.
Thurs.,	Oct. 3	ZIGOTO TO THE RESCUE.
Sat.,	Oct. 5	ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE.
Tues.,	Oct. 8	LOVE'S TEST.
Thurs.,	Oct. 10	A DOMESTIC TREASURE and THE GORGES OF ALBUQUERQUE (hand-colored).

THE STOLEN CUB

One reel Subject released THURSDAY, SEPT. 26.

The portrayal of the love of a mother bear for her cub, stolen to become the pet of the forest officer's children, is closely interweaved with the vividly pictured story of desperate men and gunplay in the Canadian wilderness. How the wounded woodsman drags himself home after the ambush to find his family besieged by the maddened parent animal.

Copyright protects all our films. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

GAUMONT CO., Flushing, N. Y.

FILM SUPPLY CO. OF AMERICA Sole Distributors.

THE FILM MARVELOUS

IN THE LAND OF THE LIONS

THE STRONGEST LINK IN A CHAIN OF PICTURE STORIES EXTRAORDINARY; A LINK SUPREME IN A CHAIN OF INTEREST EVER ATTRACTING A PLEASED PATRONAGE TO THE BOX OFFICE

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

ON A BASIS OF 15 CENTS PER FOOT

HAND COLORED
1, 3, 4 and 12 SHEET POSTERS

The striking realism of a family's escape from the Jungle Monarch's Claws of Death, will make your audience grasp their chairs in intensity of attention.

Gaumont

Gaumont

COPYRIGHT PROTECTS ALL OUR FILMS
INFRINGEMENTS WILL BE VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED

GAUMONT COMPANY
Flushing, N. Y.

Gaumont

THE GREAT WAR PICTURE

"CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT"

Three Reels Reproducing the Most Sensational and Heroic Incident in Nation's History.
1,000 Indians and 1,000 Soldiers in a Death Struggle in Which No Quarter Was Shown.

RELEASED FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4

GENUINE "101" BISON

PRODUCED BY THE NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

"ON THE FIRING LINE"

1 Reel · Friday, Sept. 27 1 Reel

This sensational war picture is made doubly notable by the remarkable acting of a child. A Southern lieutenant is granted a short furlough and visits his sweetheart. The house is seized by Northern soldiers, and the officer in command receives orders to attack an unprotected wagon train. The child overhears the plans and tells the hidden man. He escapes from the house and in a breakneck ride gathers the Confederate soldiers together and forms an ambush. The Union soldiers fall into the trap and a wonderful battle scene is shown in which the wagon train is saved and the Northern army driven back. Amazing views, in exquisite photography, are shown of the thrilling conflict. The staging is a faithful reproduction of the time, including costumes, houses, etc.

The Hidden Trail

1 Reel Tuesday, Sept. 24 1 Reel

A strong Western subject, well acted and staged. A doctor is called to the bandits' hiding place, and blindfolded is brought via a hidden trail. He finds a girl held for ransom who is feigning serious illness. How he manages to effect her liberation after many difficulties and after terrific combats between the desperadoes and the deputy sheriffs forms an interesting photoplay.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY, 150 E. 14th ST., NEW YORK CITY

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 WALL STREET, NEW YORK CITY Sole agents for the U. S. and Canada

© CLB258532

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI September 14, 1912 Number 11

HARMONY AND ORGANIZATION VS. INHARMONY AND DISORGANIZATION

IT is a trite saying that a house divided against itself cannot stand, and how well some know even in their own households the truthfulness of the above saying goes without comment. In business life the same thing occurs and much loss of valuable time, money and business accrues when people who should be banded together for mutual advantage quarrel and get jealous of the other part of the family. This is seen in the present-day conditions of the film business.

The Cinematograph industry has attained such wonderful proportions beyond the utmost dreams of the most avaricious man who is in it. It has assumed a position in the amusement world at the present time that all matters, conditions and litigation affecting its welfare ought to be handled with very extreme caution, and, as I am in a position to know more of this industry than anyone employed therein, I feel it is my duty to offer a word of warning at the present time, because, to use another simile, the boat has been taken in the swirling rapids of Niagara and is being rapidly rushed to destruction unless the calamity can be averted by those on either shore sending out the salvation apparatus. The lust for power has been so great that, heedless of the good of the industry, individuals and companies have had to be sacrificed as a result. The millions of dollars invested in the industry ought not to be placed in jeopardy by manufacturers or individuals banded together for the purpose of obtaining control of that which they are not capable of handling—namely, the entire industry. To carry out such a policy as some are trying to do is like the dog in the manger which cannot eat the hay and leaves the poor ox to starve.

I, more than any other individual man in the industry, have done more for the advancement of Cinematography in the Moving Picture News, which at one time was absolutely the only medium through which information could be given to the public. I was the only man who had the courage of his convictions and published the true facts, both legal, and otherwise, affecting the industry at large, and in so doing made many friends and also enemies. The friends I keep; the enemies I do not want. I have gone along the even tenor of my way exposing what I thought was wrong and upholding what I thought to be right, and under no circumstances have I had to withdraw a statement I have made in the interests of the advancement of Cinematography. There was a time when I could have made thousands of dollars by perjuring myself in a cause celebre, and because I would not do this I gained the enmity of certain classes of people, and today I am still in the position to send out a warning note of shoals, rocks and pitfalls ahead.

A man remarked to me the other day that it was not what I published in my paper, but that which I suppressed therefrom, was the principal story which, if told to the trade, might cause a pretty heavy upheaval; and so, carrying out this policy of keeping the counsels of my friends, I want to caution the present manufacturers of the conditions of affairs, and, like the lookout in the vessel, I want to cry out, "Rocks ahead," and for the various manufacturers, "Take heed of this warning." They are rushing rapidly to destruction by putting out poor photography, poor plots and still worse acting. A director came into the office the other day and told me that his employer had fired him because he spent $450 in getting out a picture when he was ordered to do it for $400.

The Cinematograph field is large, and the fodder and the grass therein is growing in such unlimited and unstinted quantities that it appals, and I wonder how the whole industry is going to be handled and controlled. The opportunities in this field are so great and the advances offered to the manufacturers who are honest in their endeavor to produce films of quality is a statement without question and cannot be contradicted. The policy I have followed in the Moving Picture News as a high-class, representative journal, in which I have used my influence in every way to the betterment of the industry, is now offered again, and I wish to use my influence in promoting a feeling of fraternalism among the manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors. Nothing is lost by using the best efforts. A manufacturer or exchange man can put forth valuable time and experience to advance the cause, but this valuable time, experience and money is wasted if a system of disorganization is constantly pursued. Why cannot all litigation cease, all money that is being wasted on lawyers' fees be put forth to the interests and the quality of the films? They should eliminate disorganization such as is going on in the ranks of the manufacturers, for it spells R-U-I-N and is a waste of energy that can be ill afforded.

I have often wondered, and friends have asked me the question: "'Cui bono?' why waste all your time and energy in advancing the cause of men who, as soon as they get up to a point, simply reward your efforts with kicks? You have been the only man who has made the Independent industry what it is to-day. But for you there would have been no Independent party, and it was only through the medium of the Moving Picture News that we were enabled to get a living or know the truth of the situation. What do you think of the manufacturers whom you have helped to the positions they now are in turning their backs upon you with such ingratitude?" My reply to them has always been this: Every individual has a perfect right to his own opinion, and if he is thin-skinned enough not to be able to stand the truth I do not want him.

There is another cause than this which is one of those unwritten causes, and our readers must draw their own conclusion; but on the question of organization much can be said. The half has not been written. We want to revert to the Chicago convention, which presented an opportunity to the manufacturer to realize the extent of, perhaps in a limited degree, the field of his operations. The manufacturers there met their customers, and it was an opportunity for them to learn their wants, and if they could only come in closer touch one with the other in a mutual, friendlier manner the conditions would be great. The exhibitor, the exchange men, projecting machine manufacturers, the editor, the manager, the manufacturer, the operator, scenario writer, editor and publicity men brought together at Chicago pondered over the questions that materialized affecting them all and from whichever viewpoint each individual took it. I think it goes without contradiction that the meeting was for the good of everyone present, and if only the spirit of that meeting could be infused into the present condition of affairs it would be much to the advantage of everyone concerned, and I would like to offer a wish that the convention of exhibitors which assembled at Chicago in August might be the means of promoting a deeper feeling of friendliness among the entire industry and that the spirit of that convention should permeate the minds of every one present, and that they might think of the satisfaction they got from that assembly, and begin to try and mend the difficulties that the manufacturers have surrounded themselves with by their quarrelings and bickerings and grasping avariciousness to the detriment of the exhibitor.

The litigation question has practically been swept away as far as the patents are concerned, and now is the time —I believe it is the psychological moment—when the manufacturers—and I mean all manufacturers—should get together and try and solve some of the problems that are now confronting them from the Federal authorities and decide upon some mutual method in which the best shall be banded together for the future advancement of the industry. Am I asking too much? I leave the manufacturers individually and collectively to answer.

BAXTER MORTON

It is with deep regret that I have to announce the demise of an old friend in the industry, Baxter Morton, who has been allied with the Nicholas Power Company almost from its inception. First, as the patent attorney, who looked after the interests of Nicholas Power and who was indefatigable in getting these patents through the patent office at Washington. I well remember my first acquaintance with him in 1907, when patent litigation was rampant.

Many times it was the province of the writer to get into close touch with him from that time until the incorporation of the Nicholas Power Company, when he gave up the practice of law to become an active worker in the management of the Nicholas Power factory, assuming all the office details and the interests of that great and growing industry. During this period my associations with him were mutually pleasant and profitable. I had occasion sometimes to differ with him, but his geniality soon won me over to his side.

Baxter Morton was a man of many parts, a good conversationalist when the right thing was touched, and always ready to receive instruction and information and listen patiently to any subject broached. I well remember the last occasion on which I met him when I took him with me to the Press Club to lunch, and little did I think that his remarks were prophetic when he said, "Oh, Saunders, you do look good and healthy. It is a treat to be with you. I wish I could get some of your magnetism, but I am trying to get better, yet I feel I must go away again." I tried to encourage him and when we shook hands at the door of the Press Club, he to go to his office in Gold street, and I to make my way to Thirteenth street, he said, "Good-by, Saunders, good-by. You have done me good and I will never forget the words you have said. I may not see you again for a long time, but I am glad I met you to-day."

The busy routine of an editor's office and the convention work to some extent took him out of my mind, but when I received notice that he had passed across the great divide, I felt as though I had lost a friend. His manysidedness appealed to all, and both friends and enemies must now bow their heads in silence and forget the past controversial man, leaving him to progress and attain the highest powers for a future re-incarnation. His work here is done but his spirit will always be with the business. He did so much to upbuild the business and the progress of that was more to him than any social powers or progress. His whole life was wrapt up in it, and his hands will be found guiding the wheels of the machinery even as of yore. In closing this we will use the words of those who knew him so intimately and were with him day by day:

Baxter Morton died on Tuesday, September 3, 1912.

Mr. Morton sustained a severe illness last november; since then he has not been active in business. His death occurred at the home of his family at Falls Church, Va.

To those whose daily labors brought them in close contact with this man his passing brings a desolation which only the loss of a friend can cause. Genial and modest in disposition, with a courtesy that Northern environments never blunted, sympathetic to a degree and with a patience which stood all trials, it may indeed be said of him that "His life was gentle, and the elements

So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the World, 'This was a man.'" and there are many, who, like the writer, can speak of the cheery smile, the kindly word and the helping hand which was extended in the hour of need; and for whom the journey of life has been rendered less hard because Baxter Morton lived.

In conclusion after quoting the above, all I can say is "requiescat in pace."

Alfred H. Saunders.

IN THE LAND OF THE LIONS
(Gaumont)

One of the most remarkable of the Gaumont hand-colored films, and of the wild animal series which they have been getting out, is the State's rights proposition, now on the market, entitled "In the Land of the Lions."

The first scene of the picture shows the lion in its lair and following it comes the invasion of the lion into the farmer's sheepfold. Then commences the thrilling story so splendidly and artistically portraited by the Gaumont Company. It is a very simple story, merely that of a quarrel over a long-owed money debt between two neighboring families.

Following the invasion of the sheepfold by the lion, the farmer and his wife and family consult as to a method of trapping the lion, and commence the digging of a trench in which a trap is to be placed, and which is to be placed in such a manner that the lion cannot possibly avoid being caught as he makes his visit to the sheepfold on the next night.

In the meantime the neighbor to whom the money is owed has come asking payment, but is set off with an excuse. The daughter of the neighbor is then sent with a note asking immediate payment of the debt. After a brief consultation on the matter the wife of the farmer goes to beg leniency of the neighbor, but to no avail. Therefore, while the trench is being built the wife of the farmer, in a spirit of revenge for the coarse treatment given her by the neighbor, devises a scheme whereby she plans to destroy the lives of the neighbor and his family. The scheme is to capture the lion alive and set it loose in the grounds adjoining his house. Forthwith a large box is prepared and lowered into the trench in which the trap is placed in such a way that when the weight of the lion is precipitated on the spring of the trap the lids of the box will fall closed.

In the night the king of beasts advances stealthily toward the sheepfold, leaps down the slope toward the trench and is soon a prisoner within the box. In the morning the box is lifted on a pulley and a cage is placed against the box so that as the doors open the lion springs into the cage. It is a fine sight to see this immense specimen of infuriated lionhood roaring forth his rage within the cage, too frail, one would think, to hold the latent strength of the beast, should it burst forth in its fury.

The cage is then taken on a low-wheeled vehicle and wheeled by the farmer and his wife to the home of the neighbor and let loose in the grounds to do its deadly work.

It is a thrilling scene where the lion surprises the family as they are resting outside the house, and where he pursues them within. An absent member of the family returns, however, when they are almost exhausted with striving to hold the doors of an inner room closed against the persistent attempts of the lion to enter, he learns the situation and a pistol is procured, after which a daring feat is performed by opening the door slightly and shooting the lion through the chink of the door.

One of the most remarkable scenes in this film is one which apparently was only a happening; it is where the lion in a rage leaps at the camera man—this is a positive thrill.

The picture closes showing the lioness in her lair awaiting the return of the lion.

This is a wonderful film and should be a good seller.

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Richard McGowan will erect a moving picture theatre here.

Newport, Ind.—The Idle Hour Theatre Company has been incorporated, with a capital of $300. Incorporators, H. C. Sawyer, Elma Sawyer and S. D. Chipps.

THE WORD OF HONOR
Eclair release Sept. 24.

THE OLD CLOCK ON THE STAIRS
Eclair release Sept. 26.

NATIONAL MOVING PICTURE LEAGUE OF AMERICA

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Minnesota—In Convention September 4th and 5th, St. Paul Hotel, St. Paul, Minn.

Officers Elected

President—Otto N. Raths, St. Paul.
Vice-President—Thomas Furniss, Duluth.
Secretary—E. F. Purdee, Minneapolis.
Treasurer—H. A. Sherman, Minneapolis.

National Vice-President
George Osborn, St. Paul, Minn.

Executive Committee
John Wentworth, Spring Valley.
D. A. Robbins, Winona.
C. E. Guthman, St. Cloud.
John Christopherson, Benson.
George Osborn, St. Paul.

Sergeant-at-Arms
C. F. Rose, St. Paul.

Headquarters of League
Vista Theatre, E. F. Purdee, Secretary, Minneapolis.

Ladies' Entertainment Committee

Mrs. H. S. Mitchell	Mrs. George W. Dayton
Mrs. James Gilowski	Mrs. Davis
Mrs. C. F. Rose	Mrs. O. N. Raths

The following firms had displays:
Nicholas Power Machine Co., represented by Mr. Sweet.
Simplex machine, by Mr. Robin.
Motiograph, by Mr. Woodward.
Western Display Co., by W. A. Wilwerscheid.
Geo. H. Webster Booking Exchange, represented by Geo. H. Webster, of Fargo, N. D.
Co-Operative Vaudeville Asso'n, by C. W. Gates.
St. Paul Feature Film Co., by Sam R. Thompson.
Werner Feature Co., of Minneapolis.
Universal Film Co., by Mr. Bryson.
Mutual Film Co., by Mr. Jeudell.
General Film Co., by Mr. Preller.

The convention opened Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, Otto N. Raths acting as temporary chairman. About 100 exhibitors from all parts of the state were represented, and also from adjoining states.

The chairman introduced Mr. Thomas R. Kane, president of the Common Council of St. Paul, Mr. Kane acting as spokesman for Mayor Herbert P. Keller, who was unable to be present on account of a previous engagement with the Game and Fish Commission.

Mr. Kane welcomed the visitors to the City of St. Paul and spoke of the motion picture theatre as a great asset to the many industries of the state.

Governor Eberhart of Minnesota was next introduced; there was great enthusiasm when his name was mentioned and it was several minutes before the Governor could be heard He spoke at great length of the possibilities of the motion picture. He said he was a regular patron of the picture theatre and was always pleased with the educational subjects and received great enjoyment from the dramas and comic pictures. He urged the small towns in Minnesota to encourage the moving picture theatre. He said it would be the means of keeping the boys and girls on the farms and in the small towns instead of coming to the large cities if they could have advantages of education such as the moving picture offers.

William J. Sweeney, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, was next introduced. He told the exhibitors of the great good that would be derived from an organization of this kind in Minnesota, and explained the working of good results in Chicago and all over the State of Illinois. He referred to the national convention held in Chicago last month, where almost every state in the Union was represented, and about the great number of visitors from all corners of the United States, Canada, Germany and Australia, and of the character of men and women at that convention. He said it convinced him more than ever before that the motion picture theatre was here to stay and that its foundation was as solid as the rock of Gibraltar.

C. M. Christenson, national secretary of Cleveland, was the next speaker. Mr. Christenson talked at length on the censor board proposition. He said that one National Censor Board such as they have in New York City, composed of fifty odd members of ministers, society women and business men, should be sufficient judgment whether the pictures are good or bad and after receiving their approval of such pictures, should be sufficient proof of the moral, educational and comic questions; and that there should be no further questioning on the part of any city or municipality in the United States.

Mr. Christenson related the history of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America where it started with eleven members two years ago in Ohio until to-day we have over 6,000 members, and we are growing every day. He spoke of the different conditions that existed in the various parts of the United States, where exhibitors were charged $75 a day in one section of the country and $15 a day in another for the same film exhibited on same day.

Labor has been met with and there is a great deal better understanding between employer and employee. We have been instrumental in helping state and city authorities in correcting evils that existed in the way of building codes and many city ordinances; and to-day in our Eastern states we are one hundred per cent better off in the way of regulations than we were a little over a year ago. We have established an insurance branch of the League for our members covering both fire and casualty insurance at about forty per cent less than we have been paying; and it also covers our films and machines, which no other insurance company has done. The underwriters of this country were bent on charging us exorbitant rates on our insurance, not alone on our chattel property, but insisted on increasing the rate of insurance on the entire building and on all other business in such buildings where our theatres were located. I hope our members will take advantage of this insurance plan, thus assuring our national officers, who worked long and hard, that their efforts have been appreciated.

Captain C. C. Pulis, 2d United States Artillery Instructor of Minnesota:

Mr. Pulis said he was a lover of the motion picture and that he has realized for a long time the great possibilities that were in store for the young man of to-day in the way of education. It is possible for a young man to be taught the lessons of military life in less than thirty minutes by the moving picture, where in the past it has taken days and weeks of actual experience; in fact, we have experienced a great deal of trouble to get the young men to enlist in the army for the reasons of having the wrong impressions of army life. By the motion pictures we can show the young man the actual and beneficial training derived in the army; the result is that we are not having that hesitancy on the part of the young men to join our army, and this has all been accomplished in a short space of time by the projection of army life on the moving picture film.

Mr. Preller, manager of the General Film Company, addressed the convention:

He assured the exhibitors that he was always willing and glad to meet the Committee of the Exhibitors League and to do all within his power to adjust matters that were reasonable; and assured the members that the General Film Company was in hearty accord with the exhibitors' movement in organizing.

Mrs. M. E. Brinkman, of Bemidji, Minn., was a very enthusiastic member. She claimed she was able to get enough information to save all her expenses on her trip.

Resolutions were passed, thanking the motion picture trade journals of the country for their loyalty and support given the League.

Resolution indorsing the League insurance plan.

A resolution offered by Mr. J. F. Cubberley, a traveling exhibitor, to the effect that a board of censorship should be appointed by the president to pass on all special films offered by others than regular film exchanges; and that no member should contract for any such film or films unless the approval of such a board was obtained, and a card by the League issued giving the name of the picture, number of reels and name of its owner. This was carried unanimously.

Mr. John Wentworth, of Spring Valley, Minn., stated that he thought he would run over to St. Paul to see "what was doing." He said he left his good wife in charge of the theatre, realizing that his theatre was educating the 1,700 populace of Spring Valley, where a great many of them are poor, but are being acquainted with the ways of the world just as well, if not better, than their sisters and brothers who are rich and have had the advantage of traveling in the United States and abroad, by the motion pictures.

The convention adjourned to meet in June (date to be decided later) 1913.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Please Take Notice

The state officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will meet in Harrisburg in the near future for the purpose of making arrangements to organize locals throughout the state. We would like to get in communication with the exhibitors in the many cities and towns, and we ask all those who are alive to their best interests to write us for information.

It was gratifying to those of us that attended the national convention at Chicago, when the reports of the many things that our organization had accomplished in the one year of its existence, and the good that is yet possible for us to do if we could only get the exhibitors into the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Now, it is not necessary for me to tell you that you need organization as you know there is no business or profession today that needs organization as do the moving picture exhibitors.

Now let us hear from you before our meeting at Harrisburg, so that when our organizer is sent out into the state, he will have your address and also your assistance in forming a local in your town. Now, get busy and let us hear from you, and always keep in mind that old but true maxim that "United we stand, divided we fall," and how could we expect it to be otherwise, as it is only natural in this progressive age and as a part in the evolution and concentration of power, that where there is an identity of interests, it is natural that those that would preserve their interest should combine their forces, so we appeal to you to get busy, and as the next national convention will be held in New York in July, 1913, let our motto be Organize, Organize, and on to New York, with Pennsylvania carrying away the honors for the best and largest State organization affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

FRED J. HARRINGTON,
National Vice-President M. P. E. L. of America.
233 Fifth ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., or 25 Knox ave., S. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.

CINCINNATI LOCAL No. 2

Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will hold a big outing at the Zoological Garden on October 5, 1912. K. & C. Local No. 2, of Kentucky, will join the Cincinnati local in making the outing a grand success. There will be big doings. Motion pictures will be taken of every department of the zoo and of both Locals and their friends and there will be all kinds of amusements.

The officers of the new locals organized in the State of Ohio this week are:

J. H. Johnson, President, Local Branch No. 6, Troy, Ohio.

J. M. Newman, First Vice-President.

Howard Pearson, Troy, Ohio, Second Vice-President.

Fred Adams, Secretary.

Cyrus Shafer, Treasurer.

J. D. Kessler, President, Local Branch No. 7, Star Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio

F. P. Richert, First Vice-President, Lyon Theatre, Port Clinton, Ohio.

W. E. Higgins, Secretary, Royal Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio.

D. P. Larkins, Treasurer, Gem, Sandusky, Ohio.

WELL-KNOWN VITAGRAPH PLAYERS TO ATTEND NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' BALL

The following well-known vitagraph players have promised, Mr. A. Coleman, chairman of the ball committee, that they will positively attend the Second Annual Entertainment and Ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors, to be held at Palm Garden on Thursday evening, November 14, 1912:

Miss Florence Turner, Edith Storey, Lillian Walker, Flora Finch, Kate Price & Co., Mrs. Mary Maurice, Adele De Garde, John Bunny, Ralph Ince, Leo Delancey, Van Dyke Brooke, Kenneth Casey, Harry Mayo and others of the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. Arthur Johnson and several others of the Lubin Company will appear.

The grand march will be led by Mr. Maurice Costello and Miss Florence Lawrence.

The Exposition Committee of the New York Exhibitors' League held a meeting on September 11th, when several plans were submitted by various men that handle these conventions. Three or four plans are under advisement and within a week the final reports will be published.

EXHIBITORS' MEETING AT SARATOGA.

A meeting of Local No. 2, of the New York State Exhibitors' League will be held in the Lyric Theatre, Saratoga, N. Y., Sunday, September 15, 1912.

This meeting has been called by Mr. George Wright, president, for the purpose of enlarging said local by the numerous exhibitors in the surrounding districts of Saratoga. Mr. Trigger, the president of the State, and Mr. Ascher, the national vice-president, and Mr. H. W. Rosenthal, secretary, will address the members, and matters pertaining to the New York convention of 1913 will be spoken of at the meeting, after which a banquet will be given to the members and their wives and friends.

A company of the Vitagraph players now in Saratoga will attend to enhance the social end of it with their presence.

UNUSUAL PRIVILEGE ACQUIRED BY NEW YORK FIRM

The General Film Publicity & Sales Company have secured the film which has just arrived of Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt with the German Emperor and Empress, taken at Berlin at the University of Berlin. This is an unusual privilege, as such films are only used by the Emperor as historical records.

New York, N. Y.—Santo Domingo Amusement Co. operators moving pictures show, capital $50,000, incorporated; E. E. Noble, E. V. Mann.

Fulton, N. Y.—Dreamland Theatre in South First street has been sold to Earl L. Brown and Ross L. Simons.

THE WORD OF HONOR
Eclair release Sept. 24th.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

THE play's the thing—but so is the idea. One must have a striking idea or situation before the picture-play can be successfully written. The present concensus of opinion among the pictureplay editors is that many have eyes and see not, and have ears that hear not. The elusive idea is here, there and everywhere. The plot-germ for a good picture-play may be at the dooryard, and all the while the ambitious author is pursuing a frantic search elsewhere for his or her inspiration.

"I've got an idea," exclaims the author, and he chortles with glee. Than dismay shadows his countenance for the inspiration has fled.

The elusive idea—the hope that remains in Pandora's Box! The idea is always with us and always fleeting; it is the Tantalus of the pictureplaywright, the actor, and the director.

The simplest idea for a story is the narrative of some queer thing that has happened in the town or neighborhood; a thought germ quickened into life through reading something that appeals; but there is also the world under our feet and above our heads. Uncanny things, extraordinary things, queer things are stirring all around us if we have the eyes to see them or the ears to hear them as unusual or interesting events or complications.

Ideas for pictureplays do not usually come by mere good fortune. They are the result of skill and study, power of observation and an eye to the romantic.

Frankly, the elusive idea is in our elusive selves, and the incident in the book, newspaper or in the dooryard, merely aids us to fix our thought upon something we have been unconsciously carrying about with us for years.

* * * *

If one wishes to narrate the action of sentiment or the secrets of life, that is human interest, he will find, according to Cody, that the most effective ideas for a plot are such as determine the entire course of some human life. An idea is good in proportion as it concerns some event that determines a man or woman's happiness or unhappiness. Such ideas are the basis for each of Maupassant's plots. The incident that Maupassant relates is the one great determining factor in the life of his principal character, and when that has been told there is absolutely nothing more to say of interest about that person. As Cody points out, this is clearly seen in "The Necklace," which is the story of the tragedy of Madam Loisel's life. Her life is completely altered by the event of the loss of the necklace.

The elusive idea is not so elusive to the one who has had varied experience on life's highway. To the worldly wise it is easier to discover the incidents, the situations, out of which to evolve good plots; but if one's life has been narrow, and experience restricted, the search for the elusive idea must necessarily be longer and more disappointing. But the incident and the idea, when discovered, is of little value unless it means something—we must select the ideas as we can make use of to illustrate life's principles.

Cody compares stories and pearls: at the very center of a pearl is a grain of sand about which the pearl material is gathered. At the very center of every short story or pictureplay is the passing idea such as almost anyone might pick up. It may be a common everyday idea, not worth so much in itself, but it is a grain of gold, ofttimes, instead of a grain of sand, and it is the first thing the writer has thought of and it is the foundation upon which his fancy has builded.

* * * *

The central idea—the elusive idea, if you will—is of primary importance. We pass along the street with a friend. Our friend nods coldly to another pedestrian. Our curiosity is aroused because of our friend's coldness.

"Who was that?" we query.

"He used to be in the penitentiary," is our friend's contemptuous answer.

The elusive idea again! Have you the power to delve underneath the things-that-are and discover the passing grain of gold? Fostered and cuddled, the idea can be developed into a pictureplay of merit. Let us seize the idea and build from imagination's storehouse.

> "Here is a gentlemanly appearing individual—but he is a social outcast. He has served a term of years behind prison bars. He has paid his debt to society—and will pay interest thereon until the end of his days. The stigma of prison life will go with him to the uttermost ends of the earth. But was he rightfully incarcerated? No! He paid the penalty for another's crime. Circumstantial evidence was at fault in his case. The real criminal confessed upon his deathbed and the prisoner was pardoned. Nevertheless he "has been in the penitentiary." He has worn the prison garb. He is an "ex-convict." I can see him now going to some strange city and working his way to a position of responsibility. He wins the love of his employer's daughter. They are engaged to be married. A rival appears and recognizes our subject as an "ex-jailbird." He loses his position. Will the girl he loves remain true and stand with him shoulder to shoulder—or will she accept the world's verdict? She repulses the tale-bearing rival in love; tells her intended that his prison suit is a badge of honor, and together they bravely face the world."

Ah, the elusive idea! When discovered and nursed, fancy also fondles it, and by leaps and bounds, imagination can be trained to build the absorbing plot and the story with a lesson to the world.

* * * *

The elusive idea may be the simple idea, but nevertheless an idea teeming with dramatic possibilities. Albert Webster, passing a bank, noticed the bank cashier with great bundles of banknotes close to his hand. He was impressed with the power of a bank cashier and the strain upon his honesty. A simple idea; maybe you have noticed the bank cashier behind his wicket surrounded with banknotes and gold. It is the elusive idea once again—but Albert Webster grasped its import and utilized it in his great short story, "An Operation in Money." So far the idea is commonplace enough but, says Cody, when we think that all a cashier has to do is to put a bundle of banknotes in his pocket when he goes home at night, and that no one will know it until next morning, and then he could choose to serve the maximum ten years in prison and have the money to enjoy the rest of his life, the situation becomes startling. Here were facts that anyone might know, but it remained for one writer to utilize their possibilities. With the original idea as a basis, all that is needed is skill in plot construction to develop the pictureplay situation that may be assumed.

It is much easier to take a ready-made incident, such as a judge condemning his son, a daughter shielding her father, and clothe them with incident, than it is to grasp the elusive idea and use it as a foundation for an original and striking pictureplay. It is the soul given the idea and the richness and taste of fancy's garments that build up the good pictureplay. Simple ideas become inspired when the writer has a wealth of material in his own heart and mind.

* * * *

The higher artistic qualities of the slighter plot, united with the greater significance and impressiveness, should be the goal toward which every writer should ultimately aim. The influence upon the simpler work will give it strength and depth and the monetary reward will be consistent with higher artistic qualities and craftsmanship.

The elusive idea is the soul of the story—that element which makes the pictureplay significant for life, gives it a bearing on the problems of our existence and makes it a powerful creation, and causes the audience to feel rather than discover the moral lesson it must surely teach.

It is the elusive idea, properly developed, that makes the finished production sink into the minds of the observers, gives them a breath of the infinite, and an understanding of the meaning of life which they did not realize before.

Talent, training and temperament are important factors in the search for the elusive idea. Those qualified are becoming more and more successful in their pursuit, and out of the deep wells of their being they are drawing the soul that will give the element to the coming picture-play which means lasting fame.

The elusive idea, O ye pictureplaywrights, is the very soul of inspiration, and both are necessary for true success in a new and novel field of literary endeavor.

THE SCREEN CLUB

One of the most important events in the history of the cinematograph industry took place on September 11th when there gathered together all the brightest intellects of the industry in response to the following invitation:

THE SCREEN CLUB

A social organization of actors, directors, authors, managers and pictureplay journalists and camera men will hold its first official meeting at Bryant Hall, Sixth avenue near 42d street, on Wednesday evening, September 11th at 8:30 o'clock, to which you are cordially invited to become a Charter Member.

The Committee { Dell Henderson, C. A. Willat, Herbert Brenon, Calder Johnstone, King Baggot.

The business of the meeting, presided over by King Baggot, was very quickly gotten at, when upon the report of Mr. Johnstone, of the Morning Telegraph, who acted as secretary pro tem, and who very ably outlined the work that a few choice spirits had been doing at three previous meetings, where as a result of those meetings a little expenditure had been incurred, and requesting the authirization of that meeting for what had been accomplished, on the motion of Alfred H. Saunders, of the Moving Picture News, the report of the committee was duly approved, and all expenses authorized to be paid, the motion embodying a resolution to form The Screen Club of America. One member present remarked that he thought Mr. Saunders was out of order inasmuch as he had not contributed toward the expenses of the committee. Mr. Saunders not taking a dare of this nature immediately went up to the treasurer, Mr. Powers, and deposited his $5.00 as an earnest of active membership in the club. After the resolution had been passed an adjournment was taken so that every person present could follow the lead and deposit the fee of $5.00 towards his initiation, giving his name and address. Some one hundred odd members responded.

After a roll call of all those present had been made the meeting authorized the chairman pro tem, Mr. King Baggot, to appoint committees of Rules and Constitution and Membership. He accordingly appointed on the Rules and Constitution Committee, Mr. J. McGill, Tefft Johnson, Vic Smith, Bob Daly, Oscar Apfel, Mr. Calder Johnstone and Alfred H. Saunders. On the Membership Committee King Baggot appointed Mr. H. Brenon, J. Bunny, Del Henderson and C. A. (Doc) Willat. After this was done an adjournment was made until Saturday evening, the same hall, the same time, 8:30, when reports of the committees will be in order. The committees met at the close of the session and transacted a good amount of business, breaking up in the wee sma' hours in the morning, having the satisfaction of having accomplished some real good work.

Among the speakers of the evening were: Messrs. Saunders, Heddan, H. Raver, Maurice Costello, Prior, Russell, Haddock and others, including our good friend, J. Bunny, of Vitagraph, who made the hit of the evening. Following all the others in their good wishes for the success and prosperity of the club, he remarked that The Lambs Club have their gambols, The Friars Club their frolic, The Players Club their rehearsal, and why, asked he, should not the Screen Club have their reel? The best of good fellowship prevailed, and we predict for this club, which will be national in its ramifications ,one of the best and most successful careers of any organization yet established. It may take a semi-secret turn, but this is for the committee and the members to decide.

UNDINE

(Thanhouser Two-Reel Release)

The story of Undine, the sea nymph, who, enamored of the ways of mortals, begged permission to leave her cavernous home beneath the ocean and become as one of them, lends itself to the pictureplay in a manner most alluring.

Somehow tales of the sea have an unexplainable charm. The pink of its shells, the gleaming whiteness of its pebbles, and even the slimy green seaweed that forms the ceiling of its caverns, or floats ashore in tatters, to the music of the billows, has a fascination that holds one spellbound in a land of dreams—dreams of things that never were, and never will be, and maybe are more alluring to meditate upon on that account.

The production of Undine by the Thanhouser Company is of more than usual merit. The play has been well cast, an essential which means so much to the success of a play. Miss Flo La Badie, as Undine, is quite in her proper place, her delicate personality fits the part of the lithe sea nymph most satisfactorily. Miss Marguerite Snow, as the Lady Bertalda, again shows her power as an actress in strong, emotional characters, and Mr. James Cruge, as Lord Hulbrand, the faithless knight, is all that could be desired in the part. In fact, the entire company have acquitted themselves exceptionally well.

A brief outline of the story is as follows: Undine, the beautiful daughter of the sea, becomes a mortal by request. She finds her way to the hut of a fisherman, and is adopted by the fisherman and his wife.

Then Lady Bertalda, a beautiful young woman of the land, daughter of a Duke of large domains, offers as a prize a bow of ribbon, fashioned by her own hands, to the Knight who will dare to ride at midnight through an enchanted forest, not far from the Duke's domain, to the sea and back again. Lord Huldbrand, who is enamored of the Lady Bertalda, consents to take the ride. On his return from the sea he comes upon the fisherman's hut, where he meets, and falls in love with Undine. He marries her and takes her home to his castle. The Lady Bertalda is not only wrathful at the occurrence, but immediately sets out to again win the love of Lord Huldbrand, in which plan she succeeds. Undine, grieved and unhappy at her fate, returns to her home under the sea, throwing herself overboard from a boat in which she, Bertalda and Huldbrand have been afloat on the ocean, giving to her companion the impression that she is drowned. Bertalda and Huldbrand therefore prepare to marry; but just as the priest is about to pronounce the final words that are to make them man and wife, Undine returns, steps in between them, and clasps the Knight in an embrace—the embrace of death.

The final scene of the picture is very effective, showing Undine alone, resting her cheek against the tomb of Lord Huldbrand.

This film is thoroughly artistic and beautifully done. This is the first of the tremendously popular Riverside classics to be presented in motion pictures by the Thanhouser Company.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The recent flying visit of Alfred H. Saunders, editor of the Moving Picture News, to this city, was scarcely a starter of what we would like to have done for the man who has given so much help and encouragement to the progress of the motion picture industry. Somehow, the local correspondent was called upon to do much of the arrangements with exchange men, managers, etc., and I suddenly found myself actually conducting (that's a little mild) Mr. Saunders to various offices and keeping a tab on the time as to when we had to move to the next place. He saw some of the motion picture men—Arthur Lucus, of the Mutual Film Company; E. F. Dardine, of the Washington Film Exchange; Tom Moore, of many theatre projects, etc., etc.; C. Francis Jenkins, of camera fame; W. H. Crandall, manager of the Feature Film Manufacturing Company, and a few others. Our only regret was that his stay was too short. There are lots more people to talk with and lots more places to see.

He did manage to try two large automobiles (despite the fact that I had heard he did not care for such swift travel). These were Mr. Jenkins' and Mr. Moore's. In the latter's machine with a party of six we made something of a flying trip through a pretty part of the city.

W. H.

ROMANCE OF THE COAST

By VIRGINIA WEST.

(Adapted from Lubin Release)

ON a high bluff above the sea stands a house built many years ago after the fashion of old English castles. It has passed through many hands, through many generations, but has always been owned by some branch of the same family. Becket Castle is the name, and will probably always be the name, though the names of the families who have owned it have been many.

For the last forty years Becket Castle has been owned by a branch of the family named Myers, and it is about Harry Myers that this story is written.

This young man had two qualities not particularly apparent in his branch of the family before—literary ability and very strong individuality. So when the desire came to him to seek local color for some stories he was writing, he did not resitate to go to a little fishing village a few miles away and live among the fisher folks as a boarder at Pete Wright's.

The young man dressed so simply and was so friendly and genial with the people of the little village that while they knew he had refinement and education, that they lacked, they never dreamed that he came from the class he did.

He was soon on very familiar terms with the village people; fishing with the men and listening to the yarns of the older ones; chatting with the women in the cottages, and attending the entertainments given by the young folks from time to time.

One morning when a heavy mist was lifting from the sea, Harry went down with Pete Wright and his son to prepare for a fishing trip. As they walked along the shore a sound of singing came to them through the fog. It was the voice of a young girl, uncultivated, but strong and unafraid.

"You must have sirens along this coast," said young Myers as he stopped to listen.

Pete and his son stopped, too, and looked at Harry. "I don't know whether they're fish er fowl," said the old man, "but I never heerd of 'em."

"They are beautiful women who sit on rocks and sing to lure men to their destructions," Harry said with a twinkle of fun in his eyes.

"Oh, if you mean that singin', it's Dick Drayton's daughter. She ain't singin' fer no man's destruction."

The old fisherman spoke in tones of reassurance, as though to calm Harry's fears.

The young fellow laughed. "Well," he said, "I should rather like to be lured to destruction by a siren with a voice like that."

Pete shook his head as he said: "They ain't no woman goin'ta make a fool outa me."

By this time they had begun to walk forward and in a moment came upon the girl whose song they had heard.

She stood at the edge of the water, her feet and legs bare beneath her gathered-up skirts and her sleeves rolled almost to her shoulders. As the mist lifted it seemed to hang in soft clouds above and behind her, and on her hair it left shining drops like diamonds.

The young man and the girl stood perfectly still looking straight into each other's eyes. They stood so long that Peter's son giggled and Pete said "It's all right, Harry, she ain't no siren. She's Dick Drayton's daughter Ethel Ethel this is Harry Myers who's aboardin' at my house."

Harry put out his hand and the girl put hers shyly into it. Not word was spoken, and the three men went on their way.

When they had walked a few dozen yards in silence Pete said: "Hard time she has, poor girl—and her sister, too."

"Why?" asked Harry. "Are they poor?"

"Yes, but they don't need to be. Pap's a drinkin' man, God help him, and he won't half work."

Harry said nothing, but his thoughts were very busy and his heart beat in a way he had never known before.

The next day he deliberately sought the girl for the purpose of seeing if she produced the same effect upon him as she had at their first meeting. It might be, he thought, that the surroundings and the beautiful picture she made there at the edge of the waves, had had an effect upon him that would not last. At any rate he must see her.

Harry found out from old Pete where Ethel lived, and it was there he went.

She was in front of the cottage mending a net. The man stopped for a moment to watch her before she noticed him. He felt the same feeling of awe at the picture she made, and when she raised her eyes to his, his heart gave a bound of joy so intense that it was pain. In that moment he knew that he had not made a mistake. The fact that they were born into such entirely different stations in life meant nothing to him. All he knew or cared was that he loved her.

"May I stay and talk with you a while?" he asked, as the girl lowered her eyes again to the work she was doing.

She answered shyly that he might, and he threw himself on the sand at her feet.

The moments passed and only the lap of the waves on the sand was heard, and now and then the cry of some sea bird as it flew to its nest on the cliffs behind them. Then Harry spoke very softly:

"I have seen you but twice and you may think I am too hasty, but I must tell you the one thing that is in my heart. I love you."

The girl ceased working but she did not look at him.

"I have never loved a woman before," he continued, "but when I saw you standing in the mist by the waves, and your eyes looked so frankly into mine, I knew that love had come to me at last. Did you—do you return it?"

A shadow fell across the sand near them. Myers looked up and straight into the eyes of Charles Cogan. The intruder's face was black with hatred.

"Is that man your lover?" asked Harry when the other had gone.

"No. He—he—makes love to me," answered the girl.

"Do you love him? Pardon me for asking but I must know."

"No, no, I don't love him—I can never love him."

The vehemence with which the girl spoke sent joy to Harry's heart.

"I must go now," said Ethel rising, "Beatrice is coming and we must see to the lobster pots."

"Can't I help you?" asked the man eagerly.

"No, no, please don't. Father wouldn't like it and it would only make trouble for you."

"But you haven't answered my question. I shall come again and again until you do."

Ethel smiled at him as she turned to run over the sand.

The next day was rainy and Harry went to the cabin where Ethel lived. The door was opened by a rough, half-drunken fisherman.

"What do ye want?" he asked gruffly.

"I want to see your daughter Ethel for a moment," answered Harry, scarcely knowing what was the best thing to do.

"Well, ye can't see her. I'm her father an' I say ye can't. An' more'n that ye better keep away from this here house. It's mine an' I tell ye to keep away."

"Very well," said Harry and turned away.

For a week the young man saw very little of Ethel. He would not go to the cabin for fear he would make things harder for the girl by doing so. Sometimes he saw her on the beach or in the village, but only for a moment and with very little satisfaction.

One day Harry sat by the window of his room at Pete Wright's, looking out over the sea and wondering what was the best thing for him to do regarding Ethel. He believed that she loved him, and therefore he was not willing to go away.

Suddenly Myers caught sight of a figure on a rock about half a mile out. He knew that the tide was coming in and he knew that that very rock was completely covered when the tide was at its height.

In a moment Harry was running to the lighthouse. He climbed the ladder and seized the telescope. He saw that the figure was a woman and his heart sank as he remembered that Ethel and Beatrice often went to that rock to set lobster pots.

As quickly as possible Myers ran to Ethel's home. "Where is Ethel?" he demanded of Beatrice, who came to the door.

"She went to set the pots and hasn't come back. I was beginning to worry a little."

Without a word Myers sped along the sand toward a boat he saw moored. But another man saw him coming and reached the boat first.

"Stand aside!" cried Harry, but the man did not move. "Give me the boat, for God's sake. Ethel will drown."

"I'd rather she would than fer you to hev 'er," answered Cogan sullenly.

"This is no time for quarrels. Stand aside!" And as the man did not move Harry knocked him down and sprang into the boat.

With all his strength he pulled, and his strength seemed super-human. He could see as he drew nearer the girl, that the water was creeping over her. It had reached her waist and he was only halfway. "Oh, God," he prayed, "let me reach her in time. Give me strength." He was within a few yards of her. The water had reached her shoulders. In the distance he saw her boat tossing on the waves. One, two, three—a dozen strokes and he drew the boat beside the terrified girl. As he reached toward her the waves were lapping her chin and her eyes were closing as all her hope left her. She had not seen nor heard him, for her senses were fast becoming numb.

"Ethel," he cried, "have courage, dear, you are safe now."

The girl opened her eyes and looked into the face of her lover.

"Are your hands on the rock?"

"Yes," came in a whisper.

"Then let go quickly and reach toward me when I say 'now.' Have faith in me, dear."

"I am ready," came very faintly.

Harry braced himself and leaned over the boat. "Now!" he demanded.

Without a moment's hesitation Ethel lifted her hands from the water and at the same time threw herself forward. Harry seized her under the arms and drew her into the boat. He never knew how he did it and it almost seemed like a miracle, but he did do it and the girl was beside him in the boat.

Harry put his coat around her as best he could and pulled for shore as fast as his strength would let him.

Then for the first time the young man realized that the villagers had all assembled on the shore and were cheering with all their might.

Ethel was carried unconscious to her home and it was many days before she could see her rescuer.

Harry went to the house every day, happy to sit even in the next room.

During these days Dick Drayton remained sober. When Harry came he would hang his head and leave the room.

At last the day came when the doctor said Ethel might see her lover. He knelt by the bed and kissed her hand, and so pleading was the look in his eyes that Ethel smiled and said: "I love you and I belong to you."

When she was well enough to be up she sent for her father and told him of her love.

"I'm glad now, girl. Ye've got a fine man. Ye don't come from the kind o' folks he does. I kin tell by his talk ef he does wear fishermen's clothes. But I guess it's all right. Air ye sure ye won't be ashamed of her?"

"Yes," said Harry, "I love her truly and she shall have all that I have—even education."

Then he told them who he was and of his home at Becker Castle.

The old man shook his head a little but Ethel put her hand in Harry's and said that she was not afraid.

THE "BULL MOOSE" CAMERA CAMPAIGN—ROOSEVELT SNAPPED DRIVING LOCOMOTIVE

The following telegram received by the General Film Publicity and Sales Company on September 9th from their camera man has a thrill to it which makes us sit up straight and prick up our ears; it makes us feel that we had better be on the "qui vive" and keep track of what that camera man is doing, for it's a sure thing that this chap is onto the tricks of his trade all right. Here are the very words of that hypnotizing telegram: "Took picture of Roosevelt driving locomotive from Helena, to top of Rockies, and across the continental divide."

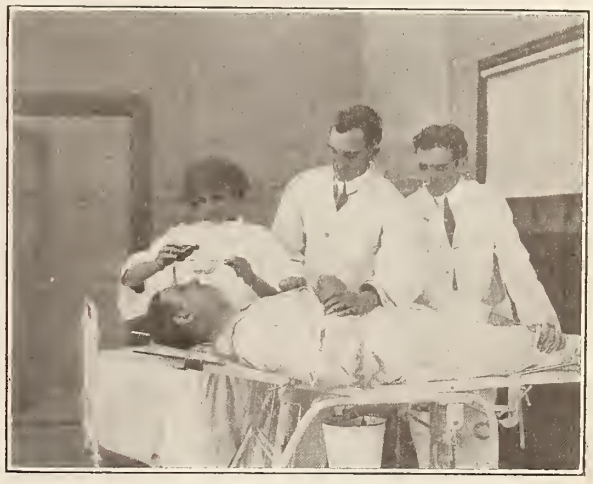
Can't you see the panorama of excited scenes the "Bull Moose" films are going to create? A group of small boys standing before a "Bull Moose" poster; out of breathless excitement, Johnny says to Jimmie, who peers over from the rear and of the group: "Gee, but that must be some picture? Ain't it Jimmie?" "Yep," answers Jimmie from an enthusiastic silence. We pass on then to the old farmer, who in conversation with Sarah Anne on the doorstep, "thinks mebbe he'll hook up and take a run into town to see them pictures of the Colonel, seein' as he ain't got the price to follow him round the country." Further on we see in our mind's eye the interior of a moving picture theatre filled to the guzzle with a motley crowd of admirers and non-admirers of the Colonel in which applause and silence mingle their varied sentiments. Outside a group of opposition men have stopped to vow vengeance on the subject of the poster, but on second thought their hands find their way to their pockets and slap go the nickels into the ticket booth, and soon the angry group are bolstering the back line of "stand-ups." Oh, the sights you'll see, and the—well, words cannot express it, only there'll be some fun when "Teddy" and his speeches appear on the screen.

Grand Rapids, Wis.—H. H. Hoyt sold the Grand Theatre to Peter Mitchell and Chas. Waterman.

R. E. SHERWOOD TO OPEN PICTURE THEATRE ON FULTON STREET

A unique little theatre has been fitted up, on Fulton street between Broadway and Nassau, by Mr. R. E. Sherwood, the well-known bookseller of that district. Mr. Sherwood has announced that all children who have clean hands and face will be admitted free after 6 p. m. and provided they are accompanied by their parents. There are many interesting things to tell about this theatre, and the views of its owner, which will be given in our next issue, with illustrations.

Woodbine, Ia.—Wilkins & Hupp sold their motion picture theatre to Fred Cromie.



CUPID VS. CIGARETTES
Majestic release of Sept. 15th.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Observing Things

THE power of observation is a power greatly to be desired by the pictureplaywright. Unless you are a close observer, how can you expect to have any original action or story with which to entertain others not so observant. The talent for observation is being slowly worn away, and without this talent you can never become a successful author. Few can describe anything correctly these days. Ask a man which way the Indian face is turned on a common cent, and it is a mere guess if he tells right. Ask a friend how 'Steenth street, which he crossed yesterday, was paved, whether brick, stone, macadam or asphalt, and he will only guess at it. Most people are not trained to the habit of observation. At school we have classes in everything but observation. It is a fault not to see things and it is a fault that has been overcome by all successful pictureplaywrights. In order to get fresh, original ideas one must closely observe things. Observation should have a place on every public school curriculum, also in pictureplay "schools." The newspaperman and the novelist are trained observers. They have to be.

Another Market

J. Ashton Reid, script editor for the Great Eastern Film Mfg. Co., 218 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., writes in that he is in need of high-class society dramas and promises prompt consideration and good prices for all acceptable scripts.

Quality of Scripts

A well-known script reader writes as follows:

> "There is a lot of discussion over the improvement or non-improvement of scripts during the past two years. You certainly started an argument not only among the manufacturers but among exhibitors when you instigated the controversy. I want to add my mite to the aggregate. I read a couple of thousand scripts the past two years. The quality of scripts has advanced. The quality of films has also advanced over what it was two years ago, and I contend that it is harder to-day to write a good pictureplay than it was two years ago, because the supply of themes is not so large. And yet pictures are better and are appealing to-day to the highest thinking classes in the country."

The above writer is an authority, probably handles as many scripts as any reader in the profession, and his assertion is very interesting for that reason.

Read the Trade Journals

Leavenworth, Wash., writes a letter which we reprint in part. The paragraph omitted is the one in which the lady wishes our recommendation of one of two "moving picture colleges" which she names. We couldn't recommend either one, and said so. However, the letter:

> "I note that Mr. McCloskey makes the statement that it is a colossal joke the way the correspondence schools for pictureplay writers are making fools of beginners. Undoubtedly many schools for scenario writers have been established. If they are not worthy of the name, how is the confiding public to be protected from them? I have only recently become interested in this subject and have been reading what trade papers I could find. I notice that several writers say there is an immense demand for good scripts. How is one to become a playwright without assistance? Experience cannot be one's only teacher. Naturally the idea is the thing, but does not one stand a better show if the idea is presented with proper technique. Where can one learn the technique?"

Experience can be one's best teacher in pictureplay writing just as in any other profession. Experience, however, must be supplemented with brains and talent. Experience is knowledge of the very best kind. There seems to be no protection for the "confiding public" from so-called "pictureplaywright universities" excepting those trade journals courageous enough to take a firm stand against such "schools." The stand is taken from principle and with pecuniary loss. This journal has turned down many offers of advertisements from "professors" and "schools," and we believe that several other trade journals and magazines have done likewise. A close study of the film release stories, a study of the picture play as it appears on the theatre screen, and the reading of a good text-book or two such as "The Art of Scenario Writing," or Sargent's "Technique of the Photoplay," will give the beginner useful information and instruct in the proper form. There is little more that can be accomplished by any "college." The Lord helps those who help themselves. This rule is applicable to the pictureplaywright.

Finds Little Encouragement

Mr. Matt Mereness, a successful pictureplaywright, weighs in with the following contribution:

> "One of your contributing editors speaks of too much encouragement, and I'm going to say that we haven't had any. Show me a company that encourages script writers? We have had encouragement from trade papers, true. He speaks of the poor quality of submitted scripts and as a remdy a "settling down." Perhaps he means that we take more interest in the work. When the manufacturers take more interest in the outside writer they will receive a better quality of scripts. How many little tips could any editor hand out that would be of great benefit in the script field? The writer at present has little encouragement. If he is a writer who is selling, now and then, a script for the same old price, ten or fifteen dollars, he doesn't try to improve his work because he knows he would receive no more for it. Suppose this writer received $25 or more for a script, with a letter of encouragement. He would have something to look forward to. Suppose, when his scripts come back on the rejection slip was written. Your work shows merit; try again!' That is encouragement. The manufacturers talk of improving the writers. The author writes and writes and his scripts are returned without a word. He reads how Miss So-and-So writes a majority of the plays she appears in, and how a certain editor writes half the plays produced by a certain company. As long as editors, actors, directors, office boys and scene-shifters write ninety-nine per cent of the scripts and no attention is paid to the outside writer, there will be slight improvement in scripts."

Why, Brother Mereness, we are surprised at you! The above is certainly no communication for a Brother Optimist to indite. We are inclined to think that you misunderstood the true meaning of the "Too Much Encouragement" statement of the editor. He meant to imply, in our opinion, and plainly, too, that "Anyone Can Do It," "No Education Necessary," "Make $50 Weekly Writing Moving Picture Plays," etc., were advertising statements of "schools" overly encouraging to a certain class of writers. What you want to do is to get out of the ten-dollar and fifteen-dollar class and climb the ladder to the twenty-five-dollar and fifty-dollar class. If you write a script that is worth ten dollars and fifteen dollars, you cannot expect to be paid more for it, can you? Again: if you write an appealing and original story you can get considerably more than ten dollars for it if you hold out for a decent price.

In our experience, we have found first-class and second-class work from the pen of the same author. You know down in your own heart when you have turned out a crackerjack story, just as you are apprehensive about some of your other scripts. Try and make them all crackerjack scripts. Then you will be ready to command the best prices for your work and get the best prices. If the "outside writer," as you express it, has the goods, he will find the market.

There are different classes of editors. We know some who praise good work in a script, even when that script is not available. We know one editor with exaggerated ego who sometimes writes sarcastic notes on rejection slips and has lost two or three promising writers in consequence. However, you will find that, although overworked, and reading hundreds of manuscripts, that the average editor, if he is worth the title, will take time to drop a word of encouragement now and then. He cannot conscientiously encourage everyone. But the promising writer will not escape the kind word if he keeps at the game long enough. We are inclined to agree with you as to the actor, director, and friend-of-the-family refraining from writing scripts and attending strictly to their own business. However, the editor cannot always be blamed for the condition of affairs in and about a studio. Some of the most successful pictureplaywrights we know today are from the ranks of the "outside," and they won their spurs by keeping everlastingly at it, in the face of heart-breaking discouragement. We repeat, that attention is paid to the "outside writer." If he has the talent for hard work, is studious and original, he will succeed sooner or later.

In speaking of the monotony of some output, office scripts, and the "outside writer," Epes Winthrop Sargent has something to say that is peculiarly appropriate. Here it is:

> "The outside writer may have a better idea and yet be unable to get it on paper clearly, or being able to get it down at all, it may not be the sort of story that will lend itself to filming. Office scripts are not, as a rule, run to save money, though a few editors are supposed to supply one free script a week as part of their work. Generally some player or director is paid for his work on the outside basis. Generally this blinds the director to the work of others and he can see good only in his own story. Other play-directors write all their own scripts because they know just what they want and inevitably they must repeat themselves.
>
> "The real gravity in the situation lies in the fact that there is a fiction in the studios that the producer must like his script or he cannot make a good production, and some producers refuse to "like" any script that entails hard work. In our own experience we have suffered from a director who refused to make anything but Western stuff in the summer time. Given anything else he would persuade his employer that the story was poor and would be directed to make something else. In another studio, but one man out of five directors could be appealed to with a script entailing much outdoor work.
>
> "There are some directors who are earnest students and enthusiastic workers, who regard no labor as too arduous so that a good production is the result, but there are others who hold the average down.
>
> "It cannot be denied that there is vast room for improvement in the average of pictureplay no matter from what maker, and that manufacturers must turn to the outside contributor for ideas. No fiction magazine ever maintains a staff of tame writers and finds success."

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

INTRODUCING BARNEY GILMORE

Featured in Solax Production "Dublin Dan"

As a star in the theatrical firmament, Barney Gilmore has always been conspicuous. His winning personality has made him stand out prominently in the constellation of melodrama. Coupled with his courtly manners and suavity, is his histronic ability. The soft liquid tones of his melodious voice have often gone to the very heart of the matinee girl and made her a worshipper at his Thespian altars. He has enjoyed public adoration ever since he began his career on the stage in 1890, and since he has had a long line of merited successes.

During his career Mr. Gilmore, or Barney, as he is familiarly called by the people who idolize him, has performed before three presidents and always has had their friendship and admiration. Quite an achievement. He knows as many prominent personages as Roosevelt, who, by the way, is one of his admirers.

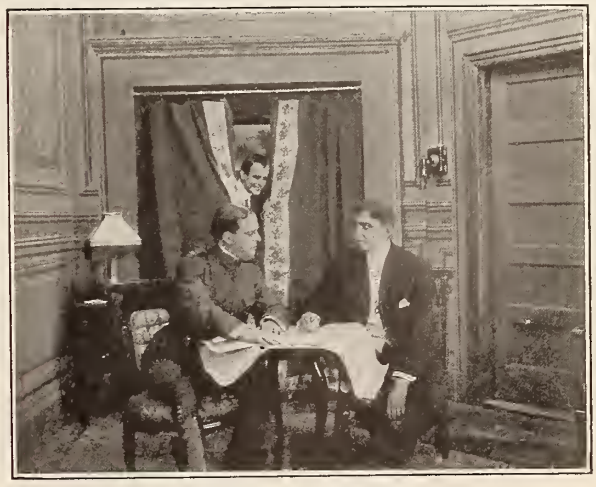
Barney has been in nearly every town in the country, starring in such attractions as "Dublin Dan, the Irish Detective," "Kidnapped in New York," "Rocky Road to Dublin," "Kelly from the Emerald Isle" and other big productions. Early in his career he had wonderful success with a vaudeville skit entitled "Ireland's Kings." At that time he trouped with John T. Leonard. The skit was a headliner for several years. Later Barney, in company with Leonard, produced "Hogan's Alley" and introduced the famous character "Yellow Kid." The play was such a tremendous success that a big demand arose for a second company, which he was compelled to organize and equip. At the present time Barney Gilmore is starring in vaudeville. He is very proud of the picture he worked in and surprised the Solax Company by his fine work as pantomimist.

COMING CINES AND ECLIPSE FILMS

George Klein announces for release Tuesday, September 17th, an unusually interesting three subject reel dealing with topical, industrial and scenic subjects in "Traditional Customs in Southern Italy;" we are given close views of the peculiar religious ceremonials indulged in by the peasantry, which are not only entertaining in their oddity but highly instructive as well. The second subject on this reel treats of a matter we are more or less familiar with, but only at a distance. Few of us have not seen the great cannons and modern engines of destruction, but very few of us have ever enjoyed the privilege of seeing the monster guns in the process of making. In the subject "A Gun Factory," we are taken through the famous Armstrong works at Pozzuoli, near Naples, Italy, and the various operations from the melting pot to the transportation of the finished articles are clearly and interestingly shown. A very beautiful series of views of "Amalfi, Italy and Surroundings" has been added to complete the reel, and a magnificent panorama seldom equaled is spread before our eyes.

An Eclipse comedy and a scenic form the split reel release for Wednesday, Sept. 18th, "A Country Holiday" describes the adventures of three lively young men who fall in love at the same time with an actress who is passing her vacation on a farm and whose sense of humor permits her to have great fun at the expense of her ardent wooers. The scenic subject on the same reel pictures "New Plymouth, New Zealand," in a manner that will be found very pleasing.

As interesting and romantic as the general history of France is to the world at large, there is no period which thrills and fascinates us more than the epoch-making days of the Revolution, and that particular time so fittingly called "The Reign of Terror." Robespierre's brief captaincy of the poor, horror-ridden Ship of State will be remembered through the ages as a dark page in French history. An incident which occurred during those days of plotting, conspiracy, mock-trial and wholesale beheading is interestingly portrayed in the Cines film, "Betrayed for Love," to be released Saturday, September 21st. Amelia Cattaneo and Anthony Novelli are seen in the leading roles, and, ably supported by a large company, they enact in realistic manner an absorbing and thrilling story.



THORNS OF SUCCESS
Majestic release Sept. 17th.

THANHOUSER
UNDINE ARRIVES AT THE CASTLE
THE UNFAITHFUL KNIGHT WEDS BERTALDA
LADY BERTALDA JEALOUS OF UNDINE
UNDINE BECOMES THE BRIDE OF A MORTAL
UNDINE'S HOME BENEATH THE SEA
"UNDINE"

SCENES FROM THANHOUSER'S "UNDINE"

RICH G. HOLLAMAN RETURNED FROM SUCCESSFUL EUROPEAN TRIP

Hale and hearty, and with even more than his usual pungency of business energy, Mr. Rich G. Hollaman returns to us after his trip abroad, during which said trip he transacted some very important business re the Simplex Projecting Machine—business that is of value to the public as well as to the trade, for, a well projected picture is, as we all know, "a thing of beauty and a joy forever" for as long as it lasts.

As before said, Mr. Hollaman's trip abroad was taken chiefly in the interests of the Simplex projecting machine, and he reports a most successful sojourn. That he has arranged with the Charles Urban, Kineto, Ltd., for the agency of the Simplex in Great Britain, has in itself a large significance, for Chas. Urban, of Kinemacolor, so well known as the partial inventor of this wonderful method of photography, is known among his fellows as a man of keen business instincts, and one who lends his energies only to the best; and the Chas. Urban Kineto, Ltd., are to use all their energies for the future establishment of the Simplex projecting machine in the British Isles.

It is a remarkable fact, and one of which Americans may well feel proud, that in comparative tests which have been made with the Simplex machine and the best projecting machines which Europe has to offer, the Simplex has shown its superiority, and has again proved itself to be the peer of all moving picture projecting machines.

The first public demonstration of the Simplex in London was given at the Hippodrome. An idea of the satisfactory result of the demonstration can be gleaned from the following quotation from a letter from the management to the Precision Machine Company: "It has given us the greatest satisfaction both in regard to steadiness and flickerless projection. It contains many distinct improvements over other types, being both dust-proof and absolutely fireproof. It is a machine which will undoubtedly command a big sale in this country."

Mr. Hollaman took six machines with him on his trip, all of which were sold during his stay abroad. The unusual qualities of the Simplex projector have caught the operators, who are becoming most enthusiastic over it, and there is not a doubt that with the influence and push of the Kineto Company behind it, it will become the premier projector of Great Britain.

Mr. Hollaman, while in London also closed for the Australian patents to Spencers, Ltd., of Melbourne. The new lamp recently constructed by Mr. Frank Cannock was much admired by Mr. Spencer, so much so that in addition to his order for machines, he placed an additional order for these new lamps, not alone for the new machines, but for all the machines which he has in operation throughout Australasia.

A number of inquiries have been received also from France and Germany with regard to the Simplex projector for these countries. Orders are arriving so thick and fast for the shipment of Simplex machines all over the world that the capacity of the manufactory is already taxed to its limit.

It is apparent that the foundation of the "Simplex" has passed the embryo stage, and that its establishment is an assured thing—its existence is absolute.

THANHOUSER FORCE AND FRIENDS ENJOY FIRST ANNUAL OUTING

Two hundred members and friends of the Thanhouser Company's force went to the Bay View Hotel, City Island, on Saturday, for the first annual outing. Athletic events took place and the winners follow:

Men's Bowling—Won by John Wallace; ladies' bowling, won by Anna Drew.

Men's 20-Yard Dash—Won by Carl LeViness; ladies' 20-yard dash, won by Blanche Bugle.

Men's Potato Race—Won by John Gleason; ladies' potato race, won by Edith Houser.

Dancing Prize—Won by Mrs. Hattie McCroskery and Theodore Heise.

Fat Ladies' Race—Won by Mrs. Harry Benham, with Tilly Specht, second.

The committee in charge was composed of Bertram Adler, Charles Gercke and Charles Van Houten.

The judges of the events were Frank Zimmerman and John Andrew.

One thing the party did not appreciate. The large motor "bus," used to convey them home, was heavily loaded, necessitating unloading at the foot of every hill. Many of the men who were compelled to walk had to help the progress of the "bus" by pushing it, and their remarks were not printed.

Others who went include:

Jessie B. Bishop, Teresa Burke, Adele Jordan, Francis Lyons, Frank Capparelli, Mrs. G. J. Badgely and daughter Helen, Mrs. Mike McCurran, James Booker, Mrs. Theodore Heise, Andrew Harte, Mrs. Charles Gercke and J. Chesterman.

Walter Foy, Leon Allen, John Burke, John Desmond, Frank Stroh, George Kraft, Cyril Connelly, Ernest Marx, Mrs. F. L. Zimmerman, John Jackowitz, Ernest Haller, Lawrence Fowler, Irene Christie, Lawrence Williams, Mrs. C. J. Van Houten, Nora Riley, Nettie Stamp, Elizabeth Edwards, Mabel Zimmerman, Francis Newburg, Mrs. L. J. Henderson, Frank Grimmer, William Garwood, Harry Benham, Marie Eline and mother, Mignon Anderson and mother and A. A. Cadwell.

C. L. Gregory, William Zollinger, Fanny Gregory, Harry A. Spear, C. Dull, Robert Newman, Elizabeth Webber, H. A. Markes, C. Carey, F. Champury, Lewis Thomas, John Miller, James Wallace, Frank Urson, Perry Horton, Phil Brady, Dave Thompson, Jeanette Henry, Anna Drew, Rose Scott, Lila Chester and Mrs. John Henderson.

RAY C. SMALLWOOD FALLS AT LAST

"I would not marry the best woman living," said Ray C. Smallwood, camera man of the "101 Bison" Company, something over a year ago to a bosom friend. It must have been over a year ago, because we will have to allow time for the courtship developments, in the case of such a confirmed woman hater as Smallwood surely was, and we learn that although the news has only just leaked out, Ray C. Smallwood fell some few months ago to the charms of Miss Ethel Grandon, leading woman of the "101 Bison" Company, and—they were married!

Congratulations, Ray. It's all right—we'll forgive you.

DIRECT CURRENT ARC CONTROL

In line with the general trend for better picture projection, Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports the installation of a Hallberg A.C. to D.C. 60-ampere Economizer at the Park Theatre, Bensonhurst, L. I., N. Y.; also a 220-volt D.C. to D.C. Economizer for Goldstein & Perkins, Punta Gorda, Fla.; also a 30-ampere Rectifier, for family theatre, A. J. Bayer, prop., St. Mary's, Pa.

LALA'S SACRIFICE
Majestic release of Sept. 10th.

A FEW WORDS ON FILM MERITS

Pathe.

"Locked Out of Wedlock" is a farce-comedy that is funny. The night before his wedding day the young man is disturbed by youngsters playing with his dog, which is chained to its kennel. He goes out to investigate, falls asleep after letting the dog go to play with the children. They return, however, and fasten the dog collar on his neck as he sits asleep in a chair by the kennel, run off with the keys. When at the hour for the marriage to take place he is discovered still asleep and in this condition, it is easy to imagine the fun that follows.

Selig

"An Equine Hero," from Selig, is interesting, although remarkable only so far as pertains to the wisdom of the horse.

"The House of His Master" is a drama which shows up the treachery and ill effects of the alcohol habit. It is a good film well played.

Kalem

"The Girl Reporter's Big Scoop" gives a good idea of the vicissitudes of the newspaper reporter in connection with the obtaining of big data and photographs. The story may be somewhat farfetched and exaggerated, but is at the same time none the less interesting.

Bison 101

(Released Through Film Supply Co.)

"An Old Tune" is one of the most effectively produced Bisons that has been on the market recently. Apart from the story, which is of a wayward boy, the light effect produced in the picture, along with its beautiful settings, make it thoroughly artistic.

American

"Wun Lung's Strategy" is only fair. There are some comic situations in the picture, but the impression of the picture on the whole does not sink very deep.

Comet

"A Waif of the Mountains" is the story of an orphan boy who is adopted by a couple who have no regard for children. The boy, unable to stand the ill-treatment which he receives, runs away and is taken in by a school teacher who, taking pity on the boy, rides with him across the State border, thereby thwarting his pursuers. His proper identity is afterward established.

Reliance

"The Bully and the Shrimp" is a Western love story, in which the quality of true manhood is made to shine forth. The players have made well of their parts.

"Love Knows No Laws" is also a Reliance of fair quality.

Majestic

"Thorns of Success" is a cleverly acted drama centering around the work of a young chemist, who has successfully produced a high explosive, which he is about to sell to the government when an adventuress in the employ of the Japanese government lures him by her fascination among the representatives of the Japanese government. The sale is about to be made to the Japanese when his wife interferes and persuades him to dispose of it to the government of his own country.

Biograph

"An Unseen Enemy" is a thrilling burglar story, remarkable for its continuation of a series of exciting events. It has no elevating quality, and was doubtless constructed with the object of thrilling the masses.

Thanhouser

"A Star Reborn" is the story of an old actor, who through the sweet offices of a young woman whom he once befriended, again comes into his own. The story is well produced and is filled throughout with a beautiful sentiment of helpfulness.

Edison

"Alladin Up-to-Date" is a film with an excellent moral to it for those who have good mental sight. The old story of the "Lamp of Alladin" will be remembered by those who have read it—the story of the lamp through which the fortunate owner could call to his aid the slaves Alladin by merely rubbing the side of the lamp. Alladin Up-to-Date" follows out the lines of the story on an up-to-date basis, and teaches an excellent lesson on the abuse of one's privileges.

Cine's

"A Tragedy of Long Ago," after the same high-class order as "The Bride of Lammermoor"— a wonderfully artistic production, splendidly produced.

Gaumont

"Queen Elizabeth's Token" though very beautiful in some respects, gives one the impression that the production as a whole has fallen somewhat below the usual Gaumont standard.

Essanay

"The Woman of Arizona" is a story which throws out in bold relief the despicable trait of ingratitude. The woman in the story is just a sweet, womanly woman who unwittingly shields her husband's betrayer, who attempts to take his life after being treated by him to the hospitality of his home.

Lux

"Tommy's Playmate" is a very cleverly acted picture, which without being harmful, is at the same time sensational. Tommy's playmate is a lunatic. The film shows the character of the lunatic without the weird gruesomeness so often forced upon us in films.

Vitagraph

"The Higher Mercy" is one which portraits not the inhumanity of man, but the reverse, and is entirely commendable.

"A Wasted Sacrifice" is a most remarkable picture, not so particularly as regards the story but as regards the filming of the rattlesnake in his native haunts.

Lubin

"Little Family Affairs" is the kind of comedy that makes the people laugh. It is a love story with a deal of comedy in it, which centers largely around the prudish, hard-shelled conservatism of the mother of the young man into whose home an orphan girl is adopted. There are a myriad of funny situations.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES.

Mr. J. A. Ross of the British-American Film Company has been spending the past few days in New York City.

* * * *

Selig's Doings

Mr. Lem Parker, of the Selig Polyscope Company's producing staff has left the Chicago studio for Los Angeles, where he will be connected with the Selig Edendale studios in the capacity of director.

* * * *

Miss Myrtle Stedman, the popular and versatile leading woman of the Selig Colorado Company, now located at Canon City, was presented with a beautiful hand-carved, inlaid table by one of the convicts in the Colorado State Penitentiary last week. Miss Stedman is gifted with an exceptionally beautiful voice and has sung at the penitentiary at the request of Warden Tynen upon several occasions. The prisoners are very fond of Miss Stedman, and one of the prisoners started work on a table over six months ago, when Miss Stedman was there last summer. He finished it last week and requested permission from the warden to meet Miss Stedman in order that he might present the table in person. Miss Stedman is very proud of her present and will ship it to her home in Chicago.

* * * *

Selig's latest and by far the greatest wild animal picture, entitled "Kings of the Forest," will be released in the near future, sometime, if the plans of the release department are not changed. Finishing touches are now being added to the film and it will be even more interesting when finally released than it was when shown at the exhibition of licensed pictures at Orchestra Hall during the recent national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. It was undoubtedly the hit of the entire program on that evening and will prove to be one of the greatest sensations of the film world when released.

OUR WESTERN CORRESPONDENT

Hot Springs, Ark., September 3.

A few minutes ago "The Man in the Baths" informed me that he had given his solemn promise to Mr. Saunders to send in a long, newsy letter this week, and then he said:

"It has been many, many moons since you batted out one of those weekly raves, my dear, so I have decided to let you have the honor of sending the Moving Picture News the first correspondence in this glorious month of September. You should regard it as a 'consummation devoutly to be wished,' and while you are pecking away at the typewriter, your better half will recline near you and peruse the papers. Please get busy."

Verily, 'twas ever thus, so here goes.

As a starter, I want to cite an instance of what motion pictures are doing for Whittington Park. Heretofore the management there used Licensed reels, but a few weeks ago decided to take on Independent material. Manager "Doc" Owens, it should be stated, realized that good product should be thrown on the screen with all the latest facilities, so there was purchased for the park the last issue of the Powers No. 6, and the machine is a marvel, too. Then came first-run material, lots of good, "classy" advertising, and here's the result: The Park Theatre won't hold the people. Notwithstanding that the New Central is packing 'em in each night, the park has more than it can entertain. The Gaumont weekly is a worthy rival of the Pathe feature of this kind, and the Park has also been featuring the two and three-reel specials. I was informed that next season there would be a new theatre erected in the park and motion pictures did it. Also qualify that with the further assurance that the product was Independent material.

(I read what I had thus far written to my better half. "Hurrah!" said he. "Let the good work proceed, and joy be unconfined!")

I would also like to ask the American company if they really took a look over "The Battleground" before they turned it loose and threw it open for the inspection of visitors? The Princess featured this production this week. The billing drew good business. We have a state-wide Prohibition fight on in old Arkansas at present, and I venture the assertion that had the "drys" been aware of this material that they would have used it as an argument in their favor. I hope American hasn't any more themes like that one. To begin with, it wasn't a pleasant subject to throw before children, this spectacle of a woman drunk and drinking all the time. There was also a recollection of "ladies of easy virtue" who did not need any sub-title to tell who or what they were. The main thought in the film was coarse as sandpaper, and when the "gell" informed her husband that the young man who had entered the priesthood and not himself, who furnished the meal ticket, was the father of her child, it came as a shock, for we were willing, up to that point, to believe she was a very model young lady. But after the confession we understood the reluctance exhibited by the young man to entering the priesthood and realized that, after all, there must be some truth in the old adage that one should "never leave the vineyard until all the grapes are picked!" One view showed the young couple married; the next with a "ch-ee-ild" at least six years of age. Speed laws were evidently broken. I might remark that the more "mommer" imbibed had no effect on the child's dress; and that it was a most wonderful child, as well as patient, for it wore the same dress all through its parent's downfall without getting it soiled or wrinkled. When "hubby" was flattened out by the automobile and we found him in the hospital, notwithstanding the fact that he was creased worse than the "steam roller" marked the political beauty of one Theodore, his face was clean as a doll's, not a scratch on it, and his hair had the cutest part.

I take issue with that part of the film that shows the priest conducting the child to a non-sectarian home for children. That youngster would have gone to a Catholic institution. And when the girl informed the good young father that he had something coming to him; that he had neglected to figure on the result of their pre-romantic friendship and broke the truth that he was "daddy" as well as priest—well, I didn't blame him much for being surprised. That scene reminded me of the speech I once heard a blackface comedian interpolate to his wife on the stage. The comedian had been away and returned to find a new arrival. His absence was of a year's duration. He was surprised. He denied the allegation and indignantly exclaimed:

"Woman, you-all must sure be some mistaken, fo' all dat you-all ebber got from dis nigger was one lone picture post-card!"

We have heard of metal telepathy and various spiritualistic transmissions, but from the look of astonishment on the face of the aforementioned good young father, we were quite willing to wager that he yelled "Not guilty, your Honor!" thereby opening up a wide field, considering the girl's most positive admission, for scientists to ascertain just exactly how it did happen. The real husband died by the way of the compressed tire route; the priest "kicked in," it was assumed, "for the good of the cause." It was well. What a pity that the man who read the scenario did not illustrate justifiable homicide on the author!

Oh, American, your Western reels are excellent! Stick to the West and wander not from the land of the sagebrush and snow-crowned mountain peaks! There you are in your element. Let the East and its social questions be solved in the future by the "Ladies' Aid Society" or the "Little Sunshine Workers."

The Cinese company sent here "The Little Orphan," which was silly. We are hoping Cinese will improve in "The Martyrs," which is due this week. There was one excellent comedy here the past week, "Holding the Fort," and it was rewarded with shouts of laughter and applause. It was, taken all in all, one of the merriest reels that the New Central has shown in weeks. We also liked "Benares, the Sacred City," by Ambrosio, and "The Reformed Outlaw" was quite a pleasant substitute for the real thing. But, then, the Bison "101" pictures are always good.

The Trust pictures that were well received here the past week include "A Child's Remorse" and "With the Enemy's Help," although in the former, when the boat had "drifted far out to sea," I noticed that there was a pleasure yacht anchored within a few feet of the aforementioned boat, which had somehow got within range of the camera for a moment. However, even little errors will slip in on Biograph. "The Grouch," by Edison, was a happy study in the human sunshine class. We have never met the counterpart in actual life here, possibly because the wonderful world-famous waters succeed in getting all such ugliness out of our system. "The War on the Mosquito" was a worthy rival to the now famous Fly reel of last season. "Twins," by Essanay, was well received, as was also their "New Church Organ," but we knew all the time that the representative of the harmonic factory would wed the "deah gell," honest we did. "The Two-Gun Sermon," by Lubin, was beautifully brave—in pictures, but I'd hate to see the parson try that stunt out here. In fact, it wouldn't be necessary, in the first place, but if it came to a "showdown"—God help the parson. Kalem sent us a most interesting study in "The Little Keeper of the Light," and we liked it immensely. Come to think of it, too, Kalem is the prime favorite in these parts. We are looking forward with pleasant anticipations to another one of their thrilling Egyptian features. Selig sent us a breeze from the Orient in "The Tents of the Asra," which was well acted and staged in superb fashion. Vitagraph, too, was not lacking in good pictures and "The Heart of Esmeralda" gave the sisterhood a fine chance to become real sympathetic. Miss Story, as usual, was very clever.

"Hubby" has asked me if I am going to give an impersonation of the babbling brook and go on forever, so I'll take that as his signal of distress and conclude. I wonder if Mr. Saunders will permit me to do so with a reiteration of the invitation to get out of "Little Old New York" and come out here for a trip? This also goes for any of the other boys who help make the Moving Picture News famous. Au revoir.

THE LADY IN THE BATHS.

Brookhaven, Miss.—George Barney, of Gloster, will open up shortly a moving picture show on the first floor of the Masonic Temple.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By James Girvan

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION NO. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Corresponding Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

The Moving Picture Operators' Association will be known in the future as the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 1, office 133 Third avenue (top floor), telephone Stuyvesant 572. Meeting rooms at Teutonic Hall, 66 Essex street, N. Y. City.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of G. Y. N. and vicinity, held their regular meeting Monday night, September 9, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street. The meeting was called to order by President Robert Goldblatt.

It is very gratifying to know that such great progress is being made in spite of the fact that we have been holding meetings every Monday night for the past six week, and the big Mardi Gras attraction at Coney Island had no effect upon the attendance, 158 members present.

We wish to state that we are meeting with a greater success than we ever dreamed of.

The membership has increased so rapidly and the money has been coming in so well that we have been enabled to increase the salary of our Business Representative and also pay some of the debts of the former auxiliary. Fifteen new members were obligated. The following wage schedule was unanimously agreed upon:

	Per Week.
Matinee and evenings (one hour for supper)	$22.00
Evenings only	18.00
Evenings and Sat. and Sun. mat	19.50
Double shifts, 12 noon to 11 p. m., each man	18.00
Double shift, 1 p. m. to 11 p. m., each man	18.00
Double shift, 9 a. m. to 12 a. m., each man	21.00
One shift, 2 men (12 noon to 11 p. m., (one hour for supper), each man	25.00
Relief work (one day)	3.15
Relief for supper, per hour	.75

Amateur Entertainment and Smoker
given by the
Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1,
of Greater New York and Vicinity
At Volk's Lyceum, 218-20 Second St., near Ave. B,
Monday Evening, Sept. 16, 1912.
Tickets Including Refreshments, 50c.
Doors Open at 9 P. M.

The following talent will appear: Miss Irene Turner, female contortionist; Miss Mabel Girard, genuine Spanish dancer; Gentry and Baird, acrobatic marvels; Miss Julia Woods, popular rag-time singer; Mr. Casey, unusual feats; Miss Effie Fay, Houdin outdone; Mickey Finn, physical evolutions; Miss Meyers, soprano vocalist; Mr. Charles Hastings, star baritone; Jerry Callahan, eccentric dancer; Mr. Gibson, the Noblest Roman of Them All; Charles Richards, the Terrible Turk; Miss Nellie Cannon, some dancer; Brother Jack Garlick, better known as Ed. Gavin, the man with the iron neck; Brother Ralph Knaster, lecturer. Motion pictures will be shown, machine to be operated by Brother Mike Berkowitz.

The above acts come from the well-known studio of Mr. Frank Forrester, 14 West Twenty-third street.

We were greatly shocked to hear that Brother Sam Talofsky, better known as Barney Shear, had met with a serious accident on Monday night, September 9, 1912, while riding on a motorcycle with a friend, Pete Millet, formerly pianist at the Waco Theatre, on Rivington street. The accident, which occurred on Avenue A at Eleventh street, caused the death of Millet and left Brother Talofsky with probably fatal injuries. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to his family with the sincere hope that he may recover. We can ill afford to lose Brother Shear as he is one of our best members.

New York, Aug. 26, 1912.

James Girvan, Editor Chat Column,

Dear Sir and Brother:—At the last convention of the I. A. T. S. E. of the United States and Canada at Peoria, Ills., a delegate representing a local of stage-hands got up on his hind legs and wanted to know if the convention was going to be "run" by M. P. operators.

For the benefit of that brother and others so poorly informed, I desire to state: That the I. A. is in a position somewhat similar to that of the man who had the bear by the tail.

They would like to let go but cannot gracefully do so. The I. A., the I. B. E. W. as also the Actors' Union, all fought for jurisdiction over the operators for quite some time and the A. F. of L. finally decided we were subject to ruling and jurisdiction of the I. A. At that time there were approximately 10,000 members of the I. A. and not over 5,000 operators in the Western Hemisphere. To-day things have changed somewhat. The I. A. has a membership of under 13,000, while there are between 15,000 and 20,000 M. P. operators in the United States alone, and that is a very conservative estimate. Now that the child has outgrown the parent, it is about time that it became self-governing and self-supporting.

We now arrive at the kernel of the matter at hand. If our appeal to the A. F. of L. for national autonomy is successful we would, in the natural course of events, pull something like 35 locals of M. P. operators out of the I. A., which would make quite a hole in their annual per capita tax. Of course they don't like that.

Yet if the A. F. of L. decide against us, and we are still compelled to struggle along under the jurisdiction of the I. A., why in the course of the next five years the operators will outnumber the stage-hands by a large majority, and the I. A. conventions will ultimately be ruled or "run" by operators' representatives.

However, I feel that men who have the required amount of brains to rise to a position of leadership in a great organization such as the A. F. of L. will see the situation in its true light, and in due fairness to all parties concerned, grant our request for national autonomy, or a separate organization.

The I. A. naturally does not want to lose benefits and emoluments accruing to them as having the jurisdiction over the M. P. operator. But I fail to see where we derive any benefit from our present position.

In a time of stress or strike we have the moral support of the I. A. How paternal! "It is to laugh."

As a national organization affiliated with the A. F. of L. and all Central Labor bodies we would be entitled to that and very likely their financial support as well.

When a child your parents very probably supported you until you were able to support yourself and then sent you out into the world to scratch for yourself. You either had to keep working or stop eating.

Possibly some were more fortunate than others, but speaking as a whole this is very nearly correct.

Now a labor union is most emphatically not a paternal organization, but is supposed to be formed for the express purpose of bettering the condition of the majority. Therefore it stands to reason that a body composed of stage-hands are going to work for the betterment of said stage-hands and are not going to put themselves to any inconvenience to assist the M. P. operator. It is a peculiar state of affairs, no doubt, but an established fact nevertheless, that since 1776 A. D., the inhabitants of these United States have become imbued (singly and collectively) with the idea that they have brains and gumption enough to govern themselves without any outside interference. Speaking personally, I am rather inclined to think the same way in regard to the present situation as it affects the moving picture operators.

After all is said and done a labor organization is only a form of government to better the condition of a certain trade or craft. As you are not a stage employee you cannot expect much from the I. A. if you look at it from their point of view.

To slightly misquote: We want an organization of the operators for the operators by the operators. Don't forget to communicate with me in regard to this matterr as I am very anxious to obtain the views of all in favor or opposed as the case may be.

Yours fraternally, W. D. CHANEY,

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

ECLAIR

THE WORD OF HONOR (Sept. 24).—Four young men are playing cards. One of them, Henry Blackwood, has absent-mindedly laid his wallet on the table. They are called out of the room and all but Jim Ainslee leave at once. Ainslee is the sort who is traveling far beyond his means. He notices the wallet and then opens it and discovers it contains quite a sum. He extracts the money just before Blackwood returns in search of it. He finds it lying on the table, but upon opening it discovers the theft. He then compels all to undergo a search of their clothes, whereupon the money is found in Ainslee's possession. Jim pleads hard that he be not arrested nor informed upon. They all give their word of honor not to betray his temptation and act and a paper to that effect is written and signed that as long as they live they will not disclose Ainslee's guilt.

Later Ainslee is left an inheritance and he woos the girl Blackwood had hoped to marry. His fortune and his seeming gentlemanliness cause the girl to promise her hand. Blackwood learns and is about to expose Ainslee's true character to save the girl from the man so actually unworthy of her when Ainslee reminds Blackwood of his word of honor.

Blackwood re-reads the note at his home and the simple line "as long as I live" strikes his eye and suggests. He writes a letter telling all and prepares to do away with himself. But the girl's father chances to stop in, learns the truth and through much adroit manœuvring brings the girl and Blackwood into each other's arms, then orders Ainslee begone.

THE CLOCK ON THE STAIRS (Sept. 26).—We all revere the poetry of Longfellow. It enthralls with its tender sublimity. It lifts the lids of our own imaginative eyes that we may view with him the beauty of all things. His was a wizardous imagination to sing in words so simple, a presentment of thought so rare.

It is with pleasurable pride that Eclair announces a picture interpretation of Longfellow's exquisitely luring poem, "The Clock on the Stairs."

LOVE AND SCIENCE (Sept. 29).—Max Pledge, a young savant, is trying to perfect his invention which will enable a person to see the other person with whom he is talking over the telephone. He becomes so absorbed in his work that he will not see anyone.

His sweetheart, Daisy, calls, and he tells her he is too busy at the time, but if she will go home he will telephone her and she can see him then, as he expects to have the invention ready for the first successful test.

Daisy is very much vexed at his inattention and determines to teach him a lesson by way of a practical joke. She asks her chum to join in her prank of dressing the chum up as a man with a mustache so when Max calls up he shall see his sweetheart apparently kissing another man. Evening comes. Max telephones and his first test is a perfect success. He first sees his Daisy, then he sees the supposed man kiss her. His jealousy and anger is ungovernable and through the hard work perfecting his invention his mind gives way. He forgets everything, cannot recognize anyone.

The doctors say the only way to restore his reason is to reproduce the same scene, but to give it an explanatory ending. The moving picture camera is called into service. The scene is re-enacted with the same tragic gestures as before. The supposed man with the mustache kisses Daisy as before. Max watches intently—suddenly the artificial mustache falls off and he at once recognizes Daisy's girl chum. Slowly his reason returns. The joke of it dawns upon him and he folds Daisy in his arms, never to doubt again.

RELIANCE

THE GERANIUM (Sept. 25).—A little girl is left an orphan by the death of her widowed mother and has but one thing left to brighten her life—a geranium plant. Dan Bossworth, a young lawyer, in passing her poverty-stricken home, saves the geranium when it is blown from the window sill and, discovering the emblem of death on the door bell, learns of the child's condition and arranges to adopt her. He takes her to his boarding house and makes her happiness his life's ambition. Later when she becomes a beautiful young woman he reaches the pinnacle of success in his profession and, going home to her, tells her they will change their social sphere to fit his new duties. She, however, tells him she is going to work and will no longer be dependent upon him. Realizing he loves her, he pleads with her to become his wife. She laughs it off and afterward when the attentions of a gilded youth are showered upon her he warns her of her danger and they quarrel. Brokenhearted he goes to his lonely office while she goes out with the other man. Compelled to resist his unworthy advances she realizes the character of the gilded youth and the worth of her former protector. Rushing away from him she goes to Dan's office and, kneeling down beside him, begs his forgiveness and sobs out her love for him.

On the same reel:

BEDELIA AND HER NEIGHBOR.—A Bedelia farce that depicts the troubles of an Irishwoman with her colored neighbor across the way. Another one of these Bedelia screams.

THE CUCKOO CLOCK (Sept. 28).—An old fisherman and his wife have been saving up their pennies for a long time to buy a cuckoo clock. The day the savings reached the needed amount the old man does not go to work, but with his wife makes the occasion a gala one. He goes to town, secures the clock, and tenderly and gently carries it home, telling his friends on the way what a wonderful addition it will be to his cottage.

Arriving home he finds that his wife has spent a great deal of time arranging a place for the clock in the living room. Very carefully it is dusted, wound and secured in place and they are as happy as two children when the cuckoo calls the hour. Later, while he is on the beach and she is in the village, a young sailor, hearing the cuckoo as he is passing, climbs in and examines the clock. He breaks it and runs away. She returns to find the clock a wreck and tries to mend it, but fails. The old fisherman accuses her of breaking it and her denial brings about a quarrel, he thinking her untruthful after all the years they have spent together as man and wife. The boy returns from a cruise and, overhearing her endeavors to get him away from the grog shop, learns the cause and rights the wrong. The old folks become reconciled and the family discord is forever thrown out of the cotage along with the family clock.

AMERICAN

GERONIMO'S LAST RAID (Two reels) (Sept. 12).—Lieutenant Parker reports for duty to Major Wilkins, commanding Fort Sill, where Geronimo is a prisoner. Parker quickly wins the love of Pauline, the Major's daughter, and the undying hatred of Captain Gray. The Captain plans to release Geronimo in the dead of the night, throwing the blame on Parker. This he successfully does by obtaining, through an accident in the billiard room, possession of a letter from an Eastern friend to Lieutenant Parker. By tearing out a portion of this letter reading "of course Geronimo's escape would mean an advantage to you," he successfully deceives everyone. But meantime Parker has been hurriedly detailed to find Geronimo; so Gray is sent out with a second detachment to overtake both Geronimo and Parker and make them both prisoners.

Through a friendly orderly, Pauline learns of the trick. She hastens after Parker to warn him but falls into Geronimo's clutches. The Lieutenant is himself captured by Geronimo and, with Pauline, makes his escape.

Later, he rescues Captain Gray and his command from certain death, and is rewarded by being made prisoner by Captain Gray. But all is explained at the formal court-martial, when Pauline rushes in with the other portion of the letter. That paragraph completed reads —"of course Geronimo's escape would mean an advantage to you young fellows fresh from West Point, by giving you a chance to recapture Geronimo and show your mettle. Good luck, old boy. From your old friend, Jim Random."

In "Geronimo's Last Raid" you have the decidedly unusual in Indian pictures. Aside from some remarkably splendid battles, involving more than 200 people, you are also shown many interesting customs of the savages never before made a part of Indian pictures. For instance, the Indians had a language of their own—a sort of wireless—a way of conveying messages by smoke signals. This is one of the many distinguishing touches given this subject that will make it delightful. By firing through the bunghole of a barrel, Pauline saves her lover from being burned at the stake —another decidedly new and novel touch that will please.

THE STORY OF STARVED ROCK.—A mighty effort is the "Story of Starved Rock" —an elaborate costume motion picture drama staged at historic Starved Rock by special permission of the state of Illinois.

No period in American history had more to do with the shaping of this continent than those stirring, bloody days of adventure when such intrepid explorers as Father Marquette, La Salle and Tonty waded through the trackless forests and malarial swamps of an unbroken wilderness.

This subject covers the adventurous journey of Father Marquette and Joliet into the Indian village of Kaskaskia, just opposite Starved Rock. It follows the subsequent journey of La Salle and Tonty, the building of a stockade, their treaties with the Indians and the love of Uhla, daughter of Chief Big Bear, for the handsome Tonty. Throughout runs a tale of adventure; and love of the beautiful Barbe Cavalier and the Explorer Tonty and the jealousy and subsequent death of Uhla. Bad Snake, lover of Uhla, his rejection by her and his journey to the Iroquois nation, bringing back a horde of savages, who all but massacred every living soul in the Starved Rock stockade, makes a subject that for genuine thrills has never been surpassed.

Just one more word. You have never before seen such superb backgrounds. Starved Rock and its environs have ever been the Mecca for sightseers because of the wonderful canyons, great cliffs and remarkable rock formations. The great Illinois rolls its waters through its most picturesque spot at Starved Rock, Illinois, and shows its splendors daily to thousands of vistors. Such are the backgrounds of "The Story of Starved Rock" with photography that cannot be excelled for soft tints, brilliance, and lack of those many technical faults which often mar the best of backgrounds.

"The Story of Starved Rock" will delight you. It cannot fail of that if you are hypercritical and hard to please. Money has been lavishly spent in maintaining an expensive camp at Starved Rock for the express purpose of turning out a master negative. This, we think, we have done. We believe you will agree with us.

SOLAX

THE LOVE OF THE FLAG (Sept. 25).—A very efficient draughtsman in the employ of the government quarrels with the head draughtsman in his department. The head draughtsman makes it very unpleasant for his subordinate. Their relations become so strained that it becomes necessary for the government to discharge the younger of the two men. The young draughtsman is very much incensed against the government. He is out of work for a long time—and his family becomes destitute. His wife is forced to take in work she is not accustomed to, and many a day their child is put to bed with very little to eat.

Because of their close proximity to the barracks, the child is very much interested in soldiers and is naturally very patriotic. George Washington is a god to the child and the country he built represents paradise to him. The father in his wanderings looking for work meets an agent for a foreign government who offers him a hig sum for duplicates of the plans of certain fortifications on the Pacific coast. The draughtsman tells his wife about it and she advises him to go to the government and try to get a hearing. He is discouraged in his attempts by repeated repulses and temporizing methods of certain authorities.

Finally the draughtsman grows desperate and decides to accept the proposition made him by the foreign spy. The patriotic son of the draughtsman saves his father from treason and disgrace by unique and timely interference.

THE FUGITIVE (Sept. 27).—During a struggle with desperadoes, Helen's mother is killed by a stray bullet. The ground upon which her mother fell Helen consecrates and makes holy by planting a flower bed. One day while caring for this sanctified place a stranger comes on the scene, exhausted and solicitous. Helen offers him a temporary shelter. So long had she spent her time alone that she is thankful for the companionship of someone her age. Immediately after she had sheltered the stranger her father, who is the sheriff of the county, rides in and asks Helen if she had seen anyone come by—that a prisoner had escaped from the jail.

Helen does not tell her father about the stranger she is harboring. When her father leaves she takes the fugitive to a shack near the house and rigs up comfortable quarters for him. For several days Helen spends many delightful hours with her "hero." She brings him food and clothes every day. One day the suspicions of her father are aroused when he sees his daughter carrying a basket of food out of the house. He follows and learns of the existence of the fugitive. The fugitive tries to make his escape. The sheriff fires and the fugitive drops on the consecrated grave of the sheriff's wife.

Helen, seeing again a tragedy similar to the one enacted some years ago when her mother was killed on the same spot, is crazed by the coincidence. The fugitive, however, is only wounded and is taken back to the prison. Helen, however, is of the opinion that he had been killed.

Her reason lost, she makes regular trips to the shack, as had been her custom—and always she carries with her a basket of food. The father is heartbroken. Helen walks about as if in a dream. She broods and imagines that "her fugitive" is about and that she sees him and that he talks to her.

In desperation the father calls in a doctor. The doctor, after a close observation of his patient, recommends a very extraordinary cure and the girl is brought back to reason.

THANHOUSER

AT THE FOOT OF THE LADDER (Sept. 22).—She was a sweet, charming girl, and always obeyed her dear papa and her mamma. But finally a crisis arose, and what could the poor girl do?

Here is the problem she had to solve:

Dear papa told her that he wanted her to marry his junior partner, a "perfectly delightful" lawyer. Mamma at the same time trotted out a candidate who was a member of one of our first families, and could lead a cotillion beautifully. Mamma said papa's candidate was "an old fogy." Pa called the society man "a dude with one-half the brains of a mud hen." If she married either one she was sure to mortally offend one of her parents, so she went out on the front steps and wept bitterly. For, as was said before, she loved her pa and her ma.

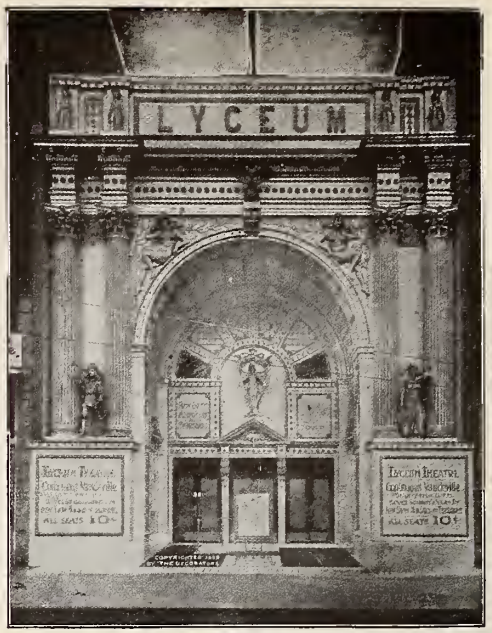
In the midst of her grief a young newspaper man she knew happened along, and being a good newspaper man, inquired the particulars. She confided in him, and he told her how to solve the problem.

"Don't marry either of them," he said; "marry me. Then each of your parents will be so pleased that the other was fooled that they will forgive you."

The girl, in the meantime, had agreed to elope with both of the other men, "to oblige pa," in one case; to "make ma happy" in the other. The reporter convinced her that his suggestion was the best, but she did not know how to get rid of her other suitors, who were due to help her down a ladder that night.

The reporter solved the puzzle. He called in a policeman pal and had the suitors arrested as burglar suspects. Then he eloped with the girl quietly, visited the parents calmly, and was forgiven without any fuss whatever, just as he had expected.

For, as has been already stated, he was a good newspaper man, and an excellent reader of character, and knew that each parent would be consoled because a good part of the joke was on the other.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

The young men who were arrested as burglars did not forgive. But then, they did not count anyway.

UNDINE (Part One) (Sept. 24).—In the days long ago when knights were brave and venturesome, lived Lord Huldbrand of Ringstetten. The Duke's daughter, Bertalda, Huldbrand's kinswoman, was the most famous beauty in that section, and Lord Huldbrand was one of the cavaliers who vainly sought to win favor in her eyes.

Just beyond the Duke's domains was a gloomy stretch of woods, known as the enchanted forest. It was said to be the resort of all kinds of spirits and goblins, and travelers durst not venture there.

The haughty Lady Bertalda was struck with the idea that here was a way to prove her power over her admirers. To the one who would dare to make a midnight trip through the enchanted forest, she offered a bow of ribbon, fashioned by her own fair hands, which did not seem much of a prize, except to the infatuated young men. At that, however, Huldbrand was the only one who dared to tempt fate. Bravely he rode through the forest, pestered and annoyed by spirits, until at last, faint and exhausted, he saw the humble cottage of a fisherman, and gladly sought refuge there.

The fisherman and his wife, both past middle age, were common peasants, but the girl with them, whom at first he thought was their daughter, was of entirely different class. She was young, beautiful and refined, and the knight lost his heart to her at once. The peasants told him that they knew nothing about the girl except that they believed she had been shipwrecked, and that although they had learned to regard her as a daughter, they knew nothing of her history, except from the time that, seemingly half drowned, she had arrived at their humble home.

Lord Huldbrand's love became more and more pronounced, and in a very short time he asked her to be his bride. Then she told him her story.

"Many a fisherman," she said, "has had a passing glimpse of some fair water nymph, rising out of the sea with her song; he would then spread the report, and these wonderful beings came to be called Undines. And you now see before you, my love, an Undine."

She then went on to explain that Undines have no souls, and only by marriage with human beings could they acquire them. Undine determined to be of this number, and made her appearance as an earth maiden. Other sprites had aided her, and Lord Huldbrand had practically been driven by them through the enchanted forest to the fisherman's cottage.

The knight's love conquered, and he embraced the beautiful Undine, telling her that she should be his bride and that nothing else mattered. They were married, and returned through the forest together. To the surprise of the haughty Bertalda, Lord Huldbrand returned to announce that he had fulfilled his quest, but he returned the lady her token, saying that by his trip to the enchanted forest he had won the fairest of brides. Then the nobleman and Undine proceeded to the castle, where they hoped to live together forever.

UNDINE (Part Two).—Many years ago Lord Huldbrand lived in his castle on the Danube River with his beautiful bride. He knew that before his marriage she had been a water nymph, because she had confessed the fact to him, but her marriage to a man of the earth gave her a soul, and she was so sweet and charming that he tried to forget the fact. From time to time, however, it was brought back to his attention by the unexpected appearance of some of her relatives, notably one Huhlborn, an uncle who in repose was a most charming brook, but ever and anon would resolve himself into a tall, old man, who seemed full of curiosity as to how his niece was faring. It palled upon Huldbrand, and he often wished that his bride had had earthly kinsmen.

Matters came to a crisis when Huldbrand's kinswoman, the charming Lady Bertalda, arrived with her father to pay Huldbrand a visit. There had been a time when Bertalda regarded Huldbrand as her chosen knight, but when she sent him into the enchanted forest he met Undine and gorgot everyone else. So Bertalda hated Undine, althougb she hid her feelings under a mask of friendship.

Huldbrand again fell under the spell of Bertalda. He neglected his beautiful wife, and this was noted by the water nymphs, who determined to avenge her. Their chance came when Huldbrand and the two women were taking a trip on the water. The nobleman had been more tban usually attentive to Bertalda and neither of them noticed that in the water surrounding their boat were scores of hands stretched out to drag them to destruction. Undine saw them, however, and after trying vainly to induce the nymphs to depart, sbe sacrificed herself to save her husband, leaping overboard and sinking, supposedly to death, under tbe sea.

Huldbrand's mourning was brief, and soon his betrothal to the beautiful Bertalda was announced. The latter was of a vengeful dispositon, and remembered that the only time Huldbrand had upheld his wife was once when she wanted a fountain in the courtyard blocked up, and the nobleman permitted it to be done, despite the protests of Bertalda. Now the young woman, in her husband's absence, had the obstructions removed and laughed as she thought that she had removed the last vestige of her former rival.

The unbappy Bertalda didn't know that the fountain was the only road by which the sea nympbs could get into the castle. Undine had closed the door to save her husband. Bertalda opened the way again, and through the fountain came a woman in white, weeping bitterly. Spectators drew aside in awe as she entered the banqueting room and approached the bridegroom. They recognized Undine as she stepped to the side of Huldbrand and enfolded him in an embrace—the embrace of his death, for he fell dead at her feet.

At tbe funeral of the unhappy knigbt there was one mourner who followed the others alone and remained after they left. It was the faithful Undine. She fell on her knees beside the tomb, her arms encircling the body. Then she faded from human sight, and a bright silvery brook appeared, and is there to this day. From tbat time forth villagers are said to have shown travelers this spring, and they believe it to be the poor, forsaken Undine, who continued thus to twine her arms around her beloved lord.

COMET

A ROUND-UP IN THE HILLS (Sept. 16).—Thrills, and plenty of them, tense situations and types make this unique film both interesting and out of the ordinary. A band of counterfeiters have taken refuge in the mountains. They are composed of Italians, with one Giovanni Ferraro as the leader. Ferraro is known among his confreres as a desperate and most resourceful man. No one has ever accused him of cowardice, and he proves this as the story progresses. The gang have been circulating counterfeit money right and left and their operations become so brazen that the Secret Service are at their wit's end how to capture them. Dick Wallingford, one of the most fearless of the Government officers, is assigned to the job of rounding up the law breakers and his efforts to catch the offenders is attended by plenty of hair-raising and stirring adventures. Conspicuous in the raid is Millie Bates, daughter of Allen Bates, the sheriff of the county. Miss Bates accompanies Dick and her father, whose services have been enlisted. The part Miss Bates plays in the proceedings to get tbe gang is spectacular as well as melodramatic. Undaunted, she goes direct to the haunts of the counterfeiters and when Ferraro is about to shoot Dick she takes his gun away and saves tbe day. Another feature is a minute and faithful reproduction of a counterfeiting den. A press, showing how the "queer" is printed, is displayed, giving the public a good insight to just how bad money is really made.

Get this money maker.
CALEB WEST
Released Sept. 18th. 2 reels. A rousing story. Adapted from F. Hopkinson Smith's popular novel. Dramatic situations. Sensational Diving. A fine love theme.
SPECIAL. 3 and 1 sheet posters. SPECIAL

RELIANCE

LOOK! You will want these advance releases. LOOK! "For Love of Her," Sat., Sept. 14th. "The Redemption," Sat., Sept. 21st. "The Geranium" and "Bedelia and Her Neighbor," Wed., Sept. 25th. "The Cuckoo Clock," Sat., Sept. 28th. "Brothers Under the Skin," Wed., Oct. 2.

ECLIPSE—George Kleine

THE SACRIFICE (Sept. 25).—A terrific riot rages in the street, and the troops are finally called to quell the tumult. When quiet is restored, Major Browning discovers a child lying helpless and forlorn in tbe roadway, and learning that her parents have been killed, decides to take her to his home. A few weeks later, the child makes such a charming impression that the major makes up his mind to adopt her.

As the years roll by, little Susie remains under the Major's fatherly protection, and they become so attached to each other that he even decides to break with his fiancee.

When Susie reaches womanhood, the Major's paternal feelings give way to love. One day he asks his ward to marry him, but because she loves anotber she is forced to refuse her benefactor.

Later, when the younger suitor comes to ask tbe Major's consent, the old man is inflamed witb jealousy at first, but soon the manly bearing of the one and the maidenly appeal of the other cause his better feelings to predominate, and forgetting his selfish interest, he joins them with his blessing.

CINES—George Kleine

HONORS DIVIDED (Sept. 14).—Edwin Blake, a struggling young autbor, toils day and night in writing his new play, and is making rapid progress, when suddenly he is taken ill, and is forced to retire to his bed and a doctor's care.

During the long days of sickness Helen, the landlady's daughter, offers her gentle sympathy to the impatient invalid, and listens with close attention as he explains the story of his play. She becomes greatly interested and longs to try her talents along this line.

Seeing her friend in despair at not being able to finish his work, she is suddenly struck with an idea, and her purpose formed, she carries the manuscript off to her room. By working almost continually for several days, the plucky girl manages to complete the play and, confident of the quality of her work, she delivers it in Edwin's name to the theatrical manager.

As it turns out, the play proves the success of the season. When Edwin grows better he is at first unable to understand why he is to be congratulated, but the truth soon begins to dawn upon him, and when he receives the first reward of his success, he rushes to find Helen and offers her a partnership, not only in this venture, but for life.

EDISON

THE GOVERNOR (Sept. 17).—John Meade, the retiring governor, is an honest, fearless reformer. He sees that his friend Waring is elected as his successor. Waring is not a strong character and his new office goes to his head. Nolan and Deems, party bosses of the worst type, recognize the new governor's weakness and play on it with flattery. Nolan introduces into Waring's service, as stenographer, Margaret Ward, a girl who is under obligations to Nolan, because he has befriended her family.

Charles Waring, who becomes bis father's secretary, is suspicious of the two bosses and suspects the new stenographer. Nolan and Deems father a certain traction bill in the legislature. It is a bad bill and it means a great deal to them financially. It is passed and sent to the governor for signature. At tbis juncture a telegram is received from Meade urging the governor not to sign the bill until he, Meade, can come with evidence that the bill is a steal. Margaret hears Waring announce that he will veto the bill and telephones to Nolan about it. Nolan and Deems come in hot haste to use all their wiles to make the governor sign the bill at once.

Charles discovers Margaret in the act of telephoning Nolan, and accuses her. She breaks down and comes to see that she has acted wrongly. Charles tries to get Meade by telephone but finds that the former governor is playing golf some miles away. Margaret, eager to make amends for wbat she has done, tells Charles to keep his father from signing the bill while she takes the governor's motor car and sets out to find Meade.

Charles enters his father's office as Nolan and Deems are appealing successfully to his pride. Charles upsets the inkwell over the desk, but even this fails, for Nolan snatches the bill away before it is damaged and Deems is ready with a fountain pen.

Meantime we have seen many flashes of Margaret's motor ride. At the critical moment she gets Meade to the executive offices. Meade bursts in upon the scene followed by Margaret and after seeing the proof Waring vetoes the bill, banishes Nolan and Deems and clasps hands with Meade in the old friendly way and Charles comforts the self-blaming Margaret.

LAZY BILL HUDSON (Sept. 18).—Bill Hudson's wife is a devout churcbgoer but Bill would rather be in bed Sunday mornings and turn over to have another sleep. One Sunday morning Mrs. Hudson arises and wakes up Bill to go to church with her. He simply turns over. She dresses and before leaving reproaches him for his lack of religion. He listens to her lazily and goes to sleep again and Mrs. Hudson goes to church alone.

An hour later he looks out of the window and sees the boy leave a Sunday paper on the front stoop. He goes down stairs in his pajamas, makes a quick dash out of the front door to get the paper when lo! the door slams and Bill finds himself locked out. He tries to open the door in vain. His predicament suddenly becomes worse when he sees his wife with the minister and several others returning home from church.

Bill makes a wild dash for the rear of the house and with the aid of a ladder starts to re-enter his bedroom. Mrs. Hudson and the minister get a glimpse of the strange figure on the ladder and conclude it is a burglar. They send for the policeman, who climbs the ladder to arrest the supposed burglar, but Bill resents the policeman's attack and a battle royal ensues in which Bill is badly battered up by the policeman, who is dragging him out in triumph when he is recognized by the frightened Mrs. Hudson and her neighbors. They have difficulty in convincing the policeman that he is not a burglar, but after due explanations the policeman apologizes and Bill promises to be good and become a better church member in the future.

KINEMACOLOR

HATCHING CHICKENS—CYPHER'S ELECTRIC INCUBATOR.—This is a most extraordinary film, showing the gradual hatching of eggs in an electric incubator.

We marvel at the strength of the tiny chicks as they peck and break their way out of the hard shell—finally emerging in their fluffy coat of down. The warmth of color in the various little chickens is remarkable—the beautiful yellows and soft browns, the tiny jewel-like eyes and sharp little bills scouting about for sustenance is a most captivating picture.

This film is a remarkable demonstration of a modern invention versus nature's method.

Motion photography clearly proving the achievements of this wonderful century.

THE HOUSE ON THE PLAINS.—A thrilling drama full of climaxes, portraying love's tragedy and heroism. A young miner visits his sweetheart, the daughter of the proprietor of an outpost store, and is ordered out by her father. The girl slips him a note, telling him that she will fire two shots when her father leaves, so that he may return.

Some miners call and leave their gold with the proprietor for safe keeping. This he places in the safe. Two Mexicans observe this and, when the proprietor is alone, come in on a pretext of wanting some goods. They overcome him, and attempt to blow the safe. The girl detects them at their work and leaves for help, but is discovered by the Mexicans, who fire two shots after her, to no avail. These shots attract the young miner, but he is held by his friends, who wish to tease him. Upon the arrival of the girl, they are informed of the attempted robbery, and leave for the scene, arriving just before the explosion. The young miner dashes in and pulls the fast-burning fuse from the charge, while the rest give chase and capture the Mexicans, and punish the culprits with death.

The father is impressed by the heroic action of the young miner, and is reconciled.

WAR AND PEACE.—Hugh Deming, a young Northerner, in the early '60s, meets Sidney Carey, of Virginia, and is invited to the latter's home for a visit. He accepts the invitation and meets Sidney's sister, with whom he becomes infatuated, and she also is pleased to accept his attentions. A ball is given in honor of Hugh. In the midst of the festivities a message announcing war is brought in by a neighbor. Fort Sumter had been fired upon. They all pledge allegiance to the Stars and Bars in turn, until Hugh Deming is asked —he refuses—his sweetheart pleads, but in vain.

He returns North. Later he becomes a captain in the Union army, and some time afterwards is detailed in the locality of the Careys' home. A spy is reported and Captain Deming details his men to search the surrounding country. They track the spy to the Carey home, and are refused admittance by Miss Carey. They surround the house and send for Captain Deming, who orders the house searched. The spy is located in a wardrobe, and is none other than Sidney, who is ordered shot at sunrise.

That same night Lee surrenders, and the news reaches Captain Deming in time to save the life of his friend. The Carey family, with the exception of Miss Carey, are very grateful, and the father says, "No man is worthy who doesn't do his duty." She is finally persuaded by her family, through her strong love, and forgives Hugh.

BIOGRAPH

AN UNSEEN ENEMY (Sept. 9).—These two girls and their brother live at the little homestead left them by their late father. The brother having disposed of a portion of the small estate, comes home with the money to show it to his sisters, telling them that they may now enjoy a few of the luxuries of life. As it would be after banking hours before he could get to the village he places the money in the safe and returns to his office, some distance away. He has hardly departed when the maid, a slattern individual, who has seen him put the money in the safe, attempts to get it. Failing to work the combination, she calls up an erstwhile friend, requesting him to come and help her. While these two work, the two sisters are locked in the sitting room, terrorized in a most unique way. The brother, however, arrives after a series of tantalizing delays and apprehends the criminals just as their schemes seems to have succeeded.

BLIND LOVE (Sept. 12).—In the little village there lived two families who were almost lifetime neighbors and friends. In the one family there was a boy, in the other a girl. These two had been sweethearts from childhood and each found happiness in the other's company. All was sunshine for Dave, the boy, until the day of the church lawn party, when the nephew of the minister arrived from college. His easy manners and good clothes make quite an impression on the unsophisticated girl, and it is with slight persuasion she consents to elope with him that evening. The result is inevitable, for the man proves to be a scapegrace. Meanwhile, the girl, through pride, pretends in her letters home to be doing well. Dave, however, has his misgivings and decides to pay them a visit. The result of his visit is a startling revelation. Later the girl is made to realize faithful Dave's true worth.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE FRERE'S WEEKLY No. 38 (Sept. 16).

THE ELOPEMENT (Sept. 17).—This film is inspired by the series of famous paintings by John Lomax which tells the story of a maid who disregarded her father's objection and eloped with the man of her choice. Each of the delightful characters is faithfully reproduced and an additional charm added by their animation.

On the same reel:

GERONE—THE VENICE OF SPAIN.—A Spanish town where boats take the place of taxicabs, as beautiful as the famous Italian city.

THE BANDIT'S SPUR (Sept. 18).—Manuel Garcia, a bandit, has ordered an Indian to make him a pair of spurs, and he then refuses to pay for them. On his way home he robs the passengers of the Overland stage. In escaping, however, he loses one of the spurs, and the victims of the robbery bring it to the sheriff. Garcia's daughter is in love with Ed. Stanton, a ranchman, who does not take her seriously. She sees Ed. embracing another girl and vows to be revenged. When the sheriff is informed of the holdup she is one of the spectators. Returning home to her father he tells her he has lost one of his spurs. She recognizes the spur he has as identical with the one in the sheriff's possession. Taking it from her father's boot, she hides it in Stanton's cabin and informs the sheriff where he will find it. The sheriff gathers a posse and they come upon Ed. and his sweetheart examining the spur. This evidence is too conclusive for the posse, and they take the prisoner away from the sheriff, determined to lynch him. The Indian comes to the sheriff to complain of the theft of the spurs by Garcia, and the sheriff thus learns the truth. He acquaints the posse with this additional evidence just in time to prevent the death of an innocent man.

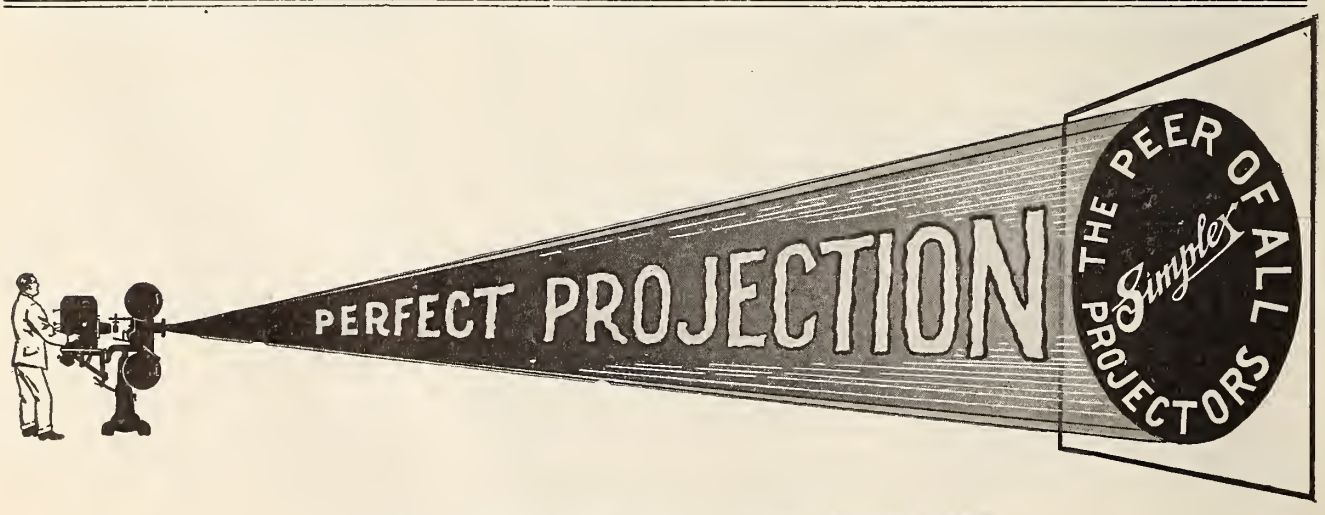
THE DESPERADO (Sept. 19).—The big man in Copper City is Dick Rand. He owns the town's only bank, and his pretty daughter, Jane, acts as cashier. She is attending to her duties when a stranger enters and asks numerous questions which arouses the girl's suspicions. Late at night the stranger returns, opens the safe and departs with the strong box. Rand hears him, but too late to get a shot at him. The sheriff is aroused, a posse secured and the robber pursued. He has too much of a lead, however, and escapes. When Rand and the posse return to Copper City they find a surprise awaiting them as Jane, suspecting the stranger, emptied the strong box that night and hid its contents beneath her pillow. The bandit, when he finds he is no longer pursued, sits down to count his golden harvest, and to his dismay discovers that he has stolen only some golden lemons.

MAX'S TRAGEDY (Sept. 20).— Max Linder, the author-comedian, is shown in another of his own sketches. This one includes a tragic scene and the manner in which it is handled will prove a revelation and a delight to his many admirers.

On the same reel:

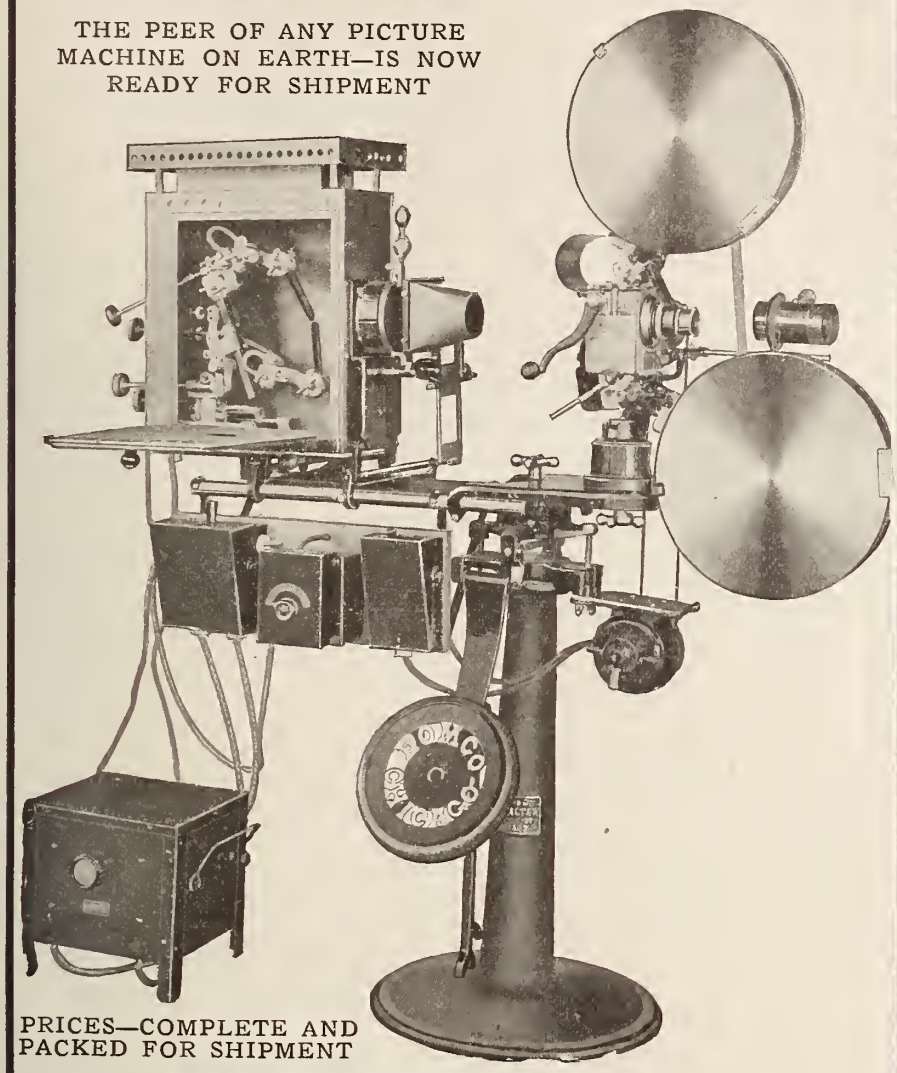
THE EDMUNDS KLAMM RAVINE.—Some views of a beautiful scenic wonder in beautiful Switzerland.

SILVER MOON'S RESCUE (Sept. 21).—A party of cowboys, on a spree, try to force an Indian girl to take a drink of whiskey. An Indian brave resents this, and in the struggle



THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

THE PEER OF ANY PICTURE MACHINE ON EARTH—IS NOW READY FOR SHIPMENT



PRICES—COMPLETE AND PACKED FOR SHIPMENT

$250.00 without motor, switchboard or seat.
$285.00 with motor (any voltage), switchboard and seat.
$300.00 special Massachusetts, with motor, switchboard and seat.
THE PRICE HAS GONE UP FOR THREE REASONS:
1st: Because of the advance in Material and Labor Cost.
2nd: Because we furnish a complete metal equipment.
3rd: Because the introduction of the Motiograph is complete.

OUR GUARANTEE

FREE UPKEEP FOR ONE YEAR COVERING PARTS of the 1913 model Motiograph mechanism, THAT MAY BECOME WORN OUT IN SERVICE, or WHICH MAY SHOW DEFECT IN MATERIAL OR WORKMANSHIP, with the understanding that the part be sent to us, charges prepaid, for examination.

Manufactured by THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
564-572 W. Randolph Street CHICAGO, ILL.
For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

which follows he kills one of the cowboys. The cowboys summon some friends who capture the Indian girl and bring her to their camp. The Indian chief is informed of what has happened and, taking a force of his warriors, he goes to the white settlement. The story has an unusual ending, for, after a rattling good fight, the Indians succeed in rescuing the girl and bring her home with them.

LUBIN

A TRUSTEE OF THE LAW (Sept. 14).—Bob McNeal, an attractive and popular young man, is elected sheriff. He loves Virginia Gordon, beautiful and high spirited, but is objected to by her family on account of his lower social standing and comparative poverty. One of Virginia's two brothers is found dead, and a worthless negro is suspected of having murdered him. The evidence against him seems conclusive to the Gordons and the community, and they determine to lynch him when he is captured by the sheriff. To their amazement, Bob declares he will protect his prisoner. His attitude finds no sympathy, even Virginia, frantic with grief, desiring swift vengeance for her brother. Bob's deputy deserts him—the entire community is against him and worked up to the fire heat. Bob prepares to defend his prisoner, the citizens to attack. It is certain both sheriff and prisoner will be killed. An accident demonstrates the fact that young Gordon's death was accidental. Virginia is just in time with this information to prevent a deadly assault on the sheriff.

The conclusion of the story sees Bob with enhanced popularity, the friendship and approval of the Gordons, and the accepted suitor of Virginia.

ITALA FILMS

"A Woman's Duplicity"
Two Reels
Released Sept. 15
A dramatic masterpiece, superbly acted, showing the dual life of a woman, and the tragic finale to her duplicity.

"Toto's Talisman"
"A Naughty Boy"
A Split Reel of Comedy
Sunday, Sept. 22

"His First Lawsuit"
"A Nail in the Shoe"
Two Comedies on One Reel
Sunday, Sept. 29

"Too Many Children"
A screaming comedy drama in two parts
Sunday, Oct. 6

AN ITALA SPLIT REEL COMEDY EVERY SUNDAY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION
60 Wall Street, New York City

THE SLEEPER (Sept. 16).—Dave Ryland, an old prospector who has prospected in the Southwest for thirty-five years, leaves his wife and grandson, with a grubstake seeking his fortune. After a month in the hills his grub has run low and he has not been able to strike anything or communicate with his wife. She, in the meantime, is dispossessed by an avaricious landlord. Two drunken cowmen, riding along after a debauch, see old Dave asleep and, being full of the Old Nick, determine to play a joke upon him by locating a claim beside him while he is asleep. They build a monument and write out a location notice. Old Dave wakes up to find that his hand falls on one of the richest pieces of ore he has ever seen, the cowmen not heeding same. He makes the richest strike that has ever been known in these parts. One Robert Adair, in the meantime, has found old Dave's wife and grandson and taken them into his home. Dave rushes to town, but has not sufficient money to record his claim. Robert happens along at the right moment and assists him, takes him to his home, and there the old couple are reunited. Robert assists old Dave in developing his claim, which turns out to be one of the wealthiest mines the country has ever known. The people far and wide hear of the strike and stampede to this district in the usual motley throng. Ten years later we see old Dave and Bob giving a little banquet celebrating the tenth anniversary of the discovery of "The Sleeper." Later, old Dave leaves the throng and returns to his wife, where they offer up a prayer of thanks in their old age.

MAJESTIC

MARY'S CHAUFFEUR (Sept. 22).—Hal Stowe, a good-hearted but rather dissolute scion of a wealthy house, is reprimanded by his father when he appears at breakfast with a "head." He is advised to mend his ways, but when he later appears at his father's office with a demand for money, the old man is disgusted and arranges to send him, under care of his chauffeur, to spend a while in the country at the house of a former business associate, Henry Hawkins.

This news is communicated to Hawkins in a letter, just as he is forced to absent himself from home on a business engagement. It is not altogether pleasing to Mary Hawkins, and, until she is acquainted with the character of the guest, she plans to have herself and maid change identities. This is done with the approval of her mother.

Hal and the chauffeur, on their way by motor to the Hawkins home, stop at a road house, where a similar change of identities is effected, as Hal is uncertain of his reception.

Arriving at the house much is made of the pretended heir and Hal, as the chauffeur, is shown to quarters above the garage. He is attracted by the appearance of Mary and she is attracted to him, each believing the other to be a servant.

In the meantime, the chauffeur, masquerading as the master, and the maid, masquerading as the mistress, indulge in a hurried courtship, which ends in an engagement, they obtaining the consent of Mrs. Hawkins, who is greatly amused.

Mary is overheard and seen by Hal one day with her mother, and he divines the real state of affairs. Pretending to be still in ignorance and wishing to be loved for himself alone, he leads an exemplary life and presses his suit to a happy completion.

The irate Hawkins arrives from town, accompanied by Stowe, Sr., to find his daughter in the arms of a chauffeur, as he thinks, but a few words of explanation and all is set aright, the chauffeur being willing to stay hound to the maid when he finds that she is of his own station in life.

THE BUTTERFLY (Sept. 24).—Nina is a veritable butterfly—gay and irresponsible and heartless. Will, a serious chap, falls in love with her and she accepts him. Her other suitors are dismissed with never a thought for possible aching hearts. Will's mother is not pleased at the match, but prays for her son's happiness. Six years pass. Nina is still a butterfly, devoted to a gay set of merrymakers and loving her husband and child—when they do not bother her! The child becomes ill. The mother goes in to see and then, forgetting all about him, she starts to dress for a dinner party. When her husband tells her they cannot go on account of the sick child she gets angry and dashes out to see the boy. The doctor tells her gravely that he fears the child has contracted smallpox, as there is an epidemic in the village. She falls back in horror —going to her own room she lifts a mirror in shaking hands to scan her face. The child cries for its mother. She locks the door and, although she hears the little voice, she is afraid to answer its call. Her husband pleads with her to go to the child, but she refuses until, unable to bear it any longer, she opens the door. But outside of the child's room she falls upon her knees and takes her husband's hand off the knob, pleading, "Don't open it—I'm afraid." He casts her off in disgust. She creeps back to her own room. Worn out with grief and fright she falls asleep and dreams. She sees her husband and child about to leave her. She begs and pleads with them but they go out and close the door upon her. She awakens to find herself banging on the door of her own room. She can still hear the child crying. She goes to him. Content he falls asleep in her arms. All through the long hours she holds the little tense body. With the dawn the child relaxes and falls back on his pillows asleep. The doctor arrives and tells them that it was merely a scare and the child had no smallpox. The father holds out his arms to his wife and she, weeping and worn out, falls into them.

IN THE LAND OF THE LIONS.—This is a story built around financial differences between South African colonists. The Del Espinar family becomes indebted to its neighbor, the Juan Moreno family. The creditor presses for payment and threatens drastic measures in order to enforce collection. Lions have recently been observed prowling around the neighborhood and the Del Espinar family hits upon a diabolical scheme to revenge themselves against the neighbor demanding his just dues. An ingenious trap is set, baited with a tempting lamb. In the evening twilight the huge lion is observed approaching the ambush, slowly creeping nearer to its bait. The prey leaps across the hedge and lands in the huge box which automatically closes, making the king of beasts a prisoner. The Del Espinar family with the help of servants drag the caged lion by night to the plantation of their creditor and turn the animal loose among this neighbor's live stock. The lion, however, prefers the home of the Juan Morenos and proceeds to try to feast on human beings instead of on live stock. The battle for life is most exciting. The Morenos crouch behind their barred door while the enraged lion frantically attempts to batter his way to the horrified family. Eventually, however, their cries bring help from without and a servant slips a pistol through a window to the head of the house. Cautiously opening the door, this man takes a chance on a quick shot. With two bullets he lays the lion low. Investigation indicates that the lion has been maliciously turned loose on the plantation and the Del Espinars are immediately suspected. Further inquiry proves the fact that the lion had been trapped on the debtors' property and in due order the arrest of the culprits is accomplished. The story ends with the lioness prowling about her den apparently mourning her lost lord.

TEXAS CONVENTION

An official call for a state convention to be held in Dallas, Texas, on the 15th and 16th of October, at the Chamber of Commerce Hall, has been issued by the National President. There will be big doings, automobile rides, sight seeing, banquet. All of the visiting ladies will be entertained by the ladies' committee on entertainment. The film companies of Dallas are going to demonstrate their friendship and goodwill by taking off their coats and working to make the convention a grand success. Every exhibitor in the state of Texas is not only invited to attend this convention, but is urged to do so as matters vitally effecting his business will be discussed.

The first day will be more of a social gathering. At 10:30 the convention will be called to order at the Chamber of Commerce Hall, by the National President, M. A. Neff, an address of welcome by the Mayor of Dallas, a speech by the President of the Chamber of Commerce, and a response by M. A. Neff, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, appointment of committees and adjournment to see the beautiful city of Dallas. This convention will bear out the traditional hospitality of the grand old commonwealth of Texas.

The exhibitors who are not in Dallas on the 15th and 16th of October will be like those who did not attend the Chicago convention, sorry that they did not go. This will be one of the grandest state conventions that any state has heretofore held. Mr. Anthony Xydias, who has been appointed National Vice-President for the State of Texas, is working hard to co-operate with every exhibitor to make the Dallas convention an epoch in the history of the State of Texas. The State Fair will be on the 15th and 16th of October, and there will be big doings.

Davenport, La.—The Iowa Theatre, located at 324 West Second street, was sold to Oscar Wernentin.

Ansonia, Conn.—The Sterling Theatre will be opened shortly.

Passaic, N. J.—The moving picture theatre on Palisade avenue, near Monroe street, will open again.

Tampa, Fla.—The Crescent Theatre has opened.

WANTED AT ONCE

MANAGERS FOR FILM EXCHANGES. STATE AGE, EXPERIENCE, ETC. REPLIES CONFIDENTIAL.

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., New York City

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING
PHOTO
ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 817 CHELSEA

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL
A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.
Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST
The Cleveland Leader
Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

SLIDES
¶ Announcement - Advertising, something that pleases the eye. Slides like you can't buy without you follow the crowd to Niagara Slide Company
Lockport, N. Y.
Catalog Free Box N

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD
YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.
J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a brigbt brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Sbow Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.
THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

PATENTS
promptly obtained OR NO FEE. Trade-Marks, Caveats, Copyrights and Labels registered. TWENTY YEARS' PRACTICE. Highest references. Send model, sketch or photo, for free report on patentability. All business confidential. HAND-BOOK FREE. Explains everything. Tells How to Obtain and Sell Patents, What Inventions Will Pay, How to Get a Partner, explains best mechanical movements, and contains 300 other subjects of importance to inventors. Address,
H. B. WILLSON & CO. Patent Attorneys
Box 202 Willson Bldg. WASHINGTON, D. C.

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc., 248 WEST 35TH ST., NEW YORK.

BE UP-TO-DATE
Subscribe for the Leading Moving Picture Trade Publication
Moving Picture News

FILM PROJECTORS
FOR SALE
One new Newman & Sinclair latest model; never used; one rotary wheel perforator, in good condition. Can be seen at this office. Apply ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, 30 W. 13th St., New York.

For reference as to quality consult the following: The Vitagraph Co. of America, The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America, The Powers Picture Plays Co., Nestor Co., Thanhouser Co., Rex, Champion, Melies, Gaumont, St. Louis Motion Picture Co., Kinemacolor Co. of America, N. Y. Motion Picture Co., Bison, Crystal Film Co., Universal Film Mfg. Co., Solax Co., Kalem Co.

Corcoran Moving Picture Tanks
Develop your films to perfection. Save Time and Reduce Your Expenses by using a "Corcoran Film Development Tank." All up-to-date houses have installed the "Corcoran System."
Send for Price List No. 5
A. J. CORCORAN, Inc.
No. 9½ JOHN ST., NEW YORK CITY

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 28—The Actor's Test.....
June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.) .....

AMERICAN

Aug. 19—The Land of Death (Dr.).....
Aug. 21—The Wooing of Wathena.....
Aug. 22—The Bandit of Point Loma.....
Aug. 26—The Jealous Rage.....
Aug. 28—Lonesome Trail Pioneers.....
Aug. 29—The Will of James Waldron (Dr.).1000
Sept. 2—The Greaser and the Weakling (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 4—The Masked Gun (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Stranger at Coyote.....
Sept. 9—The Dawn of Passion.....
Sept. 11—Vengeance that Failed.....
Sept. 12—Geronimo's Last Raid (2 reels)..

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

"101 Bison"

Aug. 13—The Bugle Call.....
Aug. 16—The Other Girl.....
Aug. 20—The Buffalo Hunt.....
Aug. 23—The Reckoning .....
Aug. 27—The Bandit's Gratitude.....
Aug. 30—The White Lie .....
Sept. 3—The Honor of the Tribe.....
Sept. 6—An Old Tune.....
Sept. 10—The Fugitive.....
Sept. 13—A Frontier Child (2 reels).....
Sept. 17—The Penalty .....
Sept. 20—The Doctor's Double.....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Aug. 27—For Love, Life and Riches (Dr.)..
Aug. 31—A Shot in the Dark (Dr.).....
Sept. 10—A White Indian.....
Sept. 17—The Ranch Man's Awakening (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Massacre of the Santa Fe Trail (2 reels; Dr.).....
Sept. 24—The Sheriff's Reward (W. Dr.)...
Sept. 28—At Old Fort Dearborn (2 reel Hist. Dr.) .....

BRONCHO

Sept. 18—Sundered Ties.....
Sept. 25—His Better Self.....

CHAMPION

Aug. 12—For His Child (Dr.).....
Aug. 19—The Bum and the Bomb (Com.)...
Aug. 26—The Foundling .....
Sept. 2—The Maid and the Rocks.....
Sept. 9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—The Dummy Director (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)....

COMET

Aug. 24—The Deputy's Duty (W. Dr.).....
Aug. 26—A Divided House.....
Aug. 31—The Moonshiner's Task (Dr.)....
Sept. 2—The Dentist's Dilemma.....
Sept. 7—A Waif of the Mountains.....
Sept. 9—The Romantic Suicide.....
Sept. 14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune.....
Sept. 16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.).1000
Sept. 30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.)1000
Oct. 5—The Mystery of Mule Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000

ECLAIR

Aug. 22—Robin Hood (Dr.).....
Aug. 25—The Will (Dr.).....
Aug. 25—A Moslem Lady's Day.....
Aug. 27—Dolls .....
Aug. 29—The Passing Parade.....
Sept. 1—Two Brave Little Hearts.....
Sept. 3—The Actress Pulls the Strings..
Sept. 5—The Guest at the Parsonage....
Sept. 8—The Kind Old Man.....
Sept. 10—The Marshal's Honeymoon (Com.)
Sept. 10—The Haunted Bachelor (Com.)....
Sept. 12—The Rancher's Lottery (Com. Dr.).
Sept. 16—A Marriage of Convenience (Com.)
Sept. 16—Around Constantinople (Travel)...
Sept. 17—My Wife's Away, Hurrah (Com.)
Sept. 19—Filial Love (2 reels; Dr.).....
Sept. 22—A Frivolous Heart .....
Sept. 22—Through China .....
Sept. 24—The Word of Honor (Dr.).....
Sept. 26—The Old Clock on the Stairs (Dr.)
Sept. 29—Love and Science.....

GREAT NORTHERN

Feet

July 27—Don't Go on the Spree (Com.).... 876
Aug. 3—The King's Power (2 reels) (Dr.).2000
Aug. 10—Thou Shalt Not Kill (Dr.).....
Aug. 10—When the Cat's Away (Com.).....
Aug. 17—The Prodigal's Return (Dr.).....
Aug. 24—For Her Sister's Sake (Dr.)..... 944
Aug. 31—Love is Blind (Dr.)..... 943
Sept. 7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.).... 496
Sept. 7—The Spring Lock (Com.)..... 457
Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)...1000
Sept. 21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.).....1000

GAUMONT

Sept. 3—Refugee's Casket (2 reels).....
Sept. 5—A Midnight Encounter and The Launching of the Imperator.....
Sept. 10—Love's Serenade .....
Sept. 12—The Plague-Stricken City .....
Sept. 17—Queen Elizabeth's Token.....
Sept. 19—Kings in Exile (2 Reels).....
Sept. 24—The Heart of a Redman.....
Sept. 26—The Stolen Cub.....
Sept. 28—Life in Caucasia .....
Oct. 1—The Convict's Band.....
Oct. 3—Nigoto to the Rescue .....
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive.....
Oct. 8—Love's Test .....
Oct. 10—A Domestic Treasure.....
Oct. 10—The Gorges of Albuquerque.....

GEM

Aug. 6—'Neath the Homespun.....
Aug. 13—Babette (Dr.).....
Aug. 20—White Dove's Sacrifice (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—Baby Fingers .....
Sept. 3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)...
Sept. 10—A Turn of Fate.....
Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)..

IMP

Aug. 31—A Case of Smallpox.....
Aug. 31—Her Burglar .....
Sept. 2—The Love Test.....
Sept. 5—Tears of the Weak.....
Sept. 7—Lem's Hot Chocolate.....
Sept. 7—Queenie and the Cannibal.....
Sept. 9—The Intrigue (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—Human Hearts (Dr.) (2 reels)....
Sept. 14—Dalby the Tomboy and Dick's Predicament .....
Sept. 16—The Millionaire Cop (Com.-Dr.)..
Sept. 19—Sweet Alice Ben Bolt (Dr.).....
Sept. 21—The Blind Musician (Dr.).....
Sept. 21—The Exchange of Labels (Com.)..
Sept. 23—Getting Mary Married (Com.)....
Sept. 26—The Parson and the Moonshiner (Dr.) .....
Sept. 28—Lie Not to Your Wife (Com.)....
Sept. 28—Curing Hubby (Com.).....

ITALA

Feb 17—Making a Cinematograph Scene....
June 29—The Great Bank Failure (2 reels)
July 6—A Woman's Duplicity (Dr.).....
July 20—Magical Hat .....
July 20—An Eventful Day.....

KEYSTONE

Sept. 23—Cohen Collects a Debt.....
Sept. 23—The Water Nymph.....
Sept. 30—Riley and Schultze.....
Sept. 30—The New Neighbor.....

LUX

By Prieur.

Aug. 2—The Mysterious Flowers (Dr.)..... 983
Aug. 9—A Race for Liberty (W. Dr.)..... 580
Aug. 9—The Postman's Escapade (Com.)... 272
Aug. 16—Tommy Saves His Little Sister (Dr.)
Aug. 23—Uncle's Favorite Pudding (Com.).. 744
Aug. 23—Views of the Livran (Sc.)..... 239
Aug. 30—The Modern Child (Dr.)..... 990
Sept. 6—A Cripple's Folly (Dr.)..... 990
Sept. 13—Tommy's Playmate (Dr.)..... 980
Sept. 20—The Little Beggar Boy (Dr.)..... 963

MAJESTIC

Sept. 1—The Chaperon.....
Sept. 3—Mabel's Beau.....
Sept. 8—Willie's Dog and The Pleasures of Camping .....
Sept. 10—Lola's Sacrifice .....
Sept. 15—Cupid vs. Cigarettes .....
Sept. 17—Thorns of Success .....
Sept. 22—Mary's Chauffeur .....
Sept. 24—The Butterfly .....
Sept. 29—A Garrison Joke .....
Sept. 29—Belligerent Benjamin .....
Oct. 1—The Call of the Blood .....
Oct. 6—The Little Music Teacher .....
Oct. 8—The Winner of the Spoils .....

MILANO

Feet

Sept. 7—Victims of Ingratitude (2 Reel)..
Sept. 14—The Wedding Gift.....
Sept. 21—The Two Overcoats .....
Sept. 21—Bonifacio in Society .....
Sept. 28—The Mysterious Auto .....
Sept. 28—Honesty Punished .....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Aug. 16—The Miner's Widow (Dr.).....
Aug. 19—When the Heart Calls (Dr.).....
Aug. 21—The Alibi (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—A Stubborn Cupid.....
Aug. 26—The Story of a Wallet.....
Aug. 28—Uncle Bill .....
Aug. 30—The Girls and the Chaperon.....
Sept. 2—On the Border Line.....
Sept. 4—The Evidence.....
Sept. 6—The Girls and the Chaperon.....
Sept. 9—In the San Fernando Valley (Dr.)
Sept. 11—The Men Within (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Those Lovesick Cowboys.....
Sept. 16—The Horse Thief's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept. 18—A Western Vacation (Com.).....
Sept. 20—Won by a Call (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Carl Von Gordon's Family (Com.)
Sept. 25—The Criminologist (Dr.).....
Sept. 27—Percy, the Bandit (W. Com.).....

POWERS PICTURE PLAYS

Sept. 4—Love Will Find a Way.....
Sept. 6—His Weakness.....
Sept. 11—His First and Last Appearance (Com.) .....
Sept. 13—The Supreme Power.....
Sept. 18—All on Account of a Widow (Com.)
Sept. 20—Fate's Way (Dr.) .....
Sept. 25—The Plan That Failed (Com.)....
Sept. 25—Swat the Fly (Com.).....
Sept. 27—Her Ambition (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Aug. 28—Secret Service Man.....
Aug. 31—Thelma (2 reels).....
Sept 4—The Heart of a Cossack.....
Sept. 7—The Bully and the Shrimp.....
Sept. 11—Love Knows No Laws.....
Sept. 14—For Love of Her.....
Sept. 18—Caleb West (Dr.) (2 reels).....
Sept. 21—The Redemption .....
Sept. 25—The Geranium .....
Sept. 28—The Cuckoo Clock .....

REPUBLIC

Aug. 5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice.....
Aug. 12—The Borrowing Simp.....
Aug. 19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.).....
Aug. 26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons .....

REX

Aug. 29—A Japanese Idyl.....
Sept. 1—In Honor Bound.....
Sept. 5—From the Wilds.....
Sept. 8—The Ghost of a Bargain.....
Sept. 12—The Squatter's Rights (Dr.).....
Sept. 15—Lost, a Husband (Com.).....
Sept. 19—Far-Away Fields (Dr.) .....
Sept. 22—The Conflict's End (Dr.).....
Sept. 26—The Old Organist (Dr.).....
Sept. 29—The Hidden Bonds (Dr.).....

SOLAX

Sept. 4—The Fight in the Dark.....
Sept. 6—Open to Proposals.....
Sept. 11—Treasures on the Wing.....
Sept. 12—Fra Diavolo (3 reels), States Rights Feature .....
Sept. 13—The Soul of the Violin.....
Sept. 25—Dublin Dan (3 reels).....
Sept. 18—The Spry Spinsters .....
Sept. 25—For the Love of the Flag.....
Sept. 27—Si's Surprise Party .....
Oct. 2—The Fugitive .....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Aug. 25—When a Count Counted.....
Aug. 27—Lucile (Part 1 and 2).....
Aug. 30—Lucile (Part 3).....
Sept. 1—The Capture of New York.....
Sept. 3—The Voice of Conscience.....
Sept. 6—His Father's Son.....
Sept. 8—Don't Pinch My Pup.....
Sept. 10—A Star Reborn.....
Sept. 13—The Birth of the Lotus Blossom..
Sept. 15—Orator, Knight and Cow Charmer
Sept. 17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation.....
Sept. 20—Two Souls .....

VICTOR

Sept. 6—After All.....
Sept. 13—All for Love.....
Sept. 20—Flo's Discipline (Com.).....
Sept. 27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.).....

A Live Wire

The Man Who Buys NOW

Power's Cameragraph

No. 6A

The man who sent this wire was "A Wise Mann." He didn't waste time thinking it over; he did it NOW—get in out of the wet—and believe us it is raining orders here.

This is the situation: You want the best? Very well. We are working tooth and nail to fill orders, and we are now TEN DAYS BEHIND ON DELIVERY. So be "A WISE MANN" and order quick.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPHS have always led the world. Our remarkable business is no spurt but the logical result of recognized absolute merit.

Let us send catalogue D showing the wonderful improvements on our new Model 6A. Our loop setter device when furnished with this model costs $10.00 additional and does away with the dark screen and interrupted pictures, thus giving POWER'S a greater efficiency than ever before.

Let us hear from you AND DO IT NOW.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

90 Gold Street, New York City

For sixteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

Malden, Mass.—The new Holland Theatre opened up at York Beach.

New York, N. Y.—Peerless Film Exchange Company, moving picture films. Capital, $10,000. Directors: Adam Kessel, Jr., O. Bauman and Charles Kessel.

THE GERANIUM
Reliance release Sept. 25th.

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative

AND

NON-FLAM POSITIVE

(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.

15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK

Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

PATHE FRERES' OFFICES MOVED TO JERSEY CITY

Pathe Freres, on September 6th, moved their offices from 41 West Twenty-fifth street, New York, to their new office building at No. 1 Congress street, Jersey City, N. J.

It was found that the New York office was inadequate for handling the ever-increasing volume of business, and this led to the erection of a new building. The new offices are in a handsome structure which was built with the accommodation of a motion picture business as an object. It is situated adjacent to the Pathe studio, and this convenient location, together with the perfect appointments of the new building, will make the new home of Pathe Freres ideal for their purposes.

Saratoga, N. Y.—The Liberty Theatre on Ferry street is completed.

Appleton, Wis.—John Maurer closed out his grocery business and will remodel the building and open a motion picture theatre.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Missouri Film Company has been incorporated with a capital of $5,000. Incorporators—Paul Swartz, A. L. Palmer, Jr., M. E. Maloney and Claude E. Huff.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Aug. 12—Rameses, King of Egypt (2 reels) (Dr.) .....
Aug. 12—The Inner Circle (Dr.).....
Aug. 15—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.)
Aug. 15—The Tragedy of a Dress Suit (Com.)
Aug. 19—With the Enemy's Help (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 22—A Change of Spirit (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 26—Mr. Grouch at the Seashore (Com.)
Aug. 26—Through Dumb Luck (Com.).....
Aug. 29—A Pueblo Legend.....
Sept. 2—In the North Woods (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—Getting Rid of Trouble (Com.)..
Sept. 5—He Must Have a Wife (Com.).....
Sept. 9—An Unseen Enemy (Dr.) .....
Sept. 12—Blind Love (Dr.) .....
Sept. 16—Stern Papa (Com.).....
Sept. 16—Love's Messenger (Com.).....
Sept. 19—Two Daughters of Eve (Dr.).....

CINES

C. Kleine

Aug. 24—A Picture C. O. D. (Com.)..... 450
Aug. 27—The Bridge of Lammermoor (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 3—A Tragedy of Long Ago (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 7—The Sacking of Rome (Dr.)..... 770
Sept. 7—Picturesque Sardinia, Italy (Sc.).. 230
Sept. 10—Scenes Along Salerno Coast, Italy (Sc.) 140
Sept. 10—The Conspiracy of Catiline (Dr.).. 885
Sept. 14—Honors Divided (Dr.).....1075
Sept. 17—Amalfi, Italy (Scenic); and A Gun Factory (Ind.); and Traditional Customs in Southern Italy (Top.) 1005
Sept. 21—Betrayed for Love (Hist.-Dr.)....1000
Sept. 24—Castrovillari, So., Italy (Sc.).... 335
Sept. 24—A Cavalier's Romance (Dr.)..... 665
Sept. 28—Quaint Sights in Sardinia (Sc.).. 205
Sept. 28—Reuben and the Boys (Com.)....
Oct. 1—The Island of Malta (Sc.)..... 460
Oct. 1—How a Brave Man Died (Hist. Dr.) 540
Oct. 5—Laino, Southern Italy (Sc.)..... 300
Oct. 5—Trifle Not With Love (Com.)..... 700

EDISON

July 24—The Grouch (Com. Dr.) 985
July 26—The Escape from Bondage (Dr.)....1000
July 27—The Relief of Lucknow (Hist. Dr.).1000
July 30—More Precious Than Gold (Dr.)....1000
July 31—When She Was About Sixteen (Com.) 1000
Aug. 2—The Lord and the Peasant (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 3—Ninth International Red Cross Conference, Washington, D. C., May 17, 1912 700
Aug. 3—Mary Had a Little Lamb (Com.)... 300
Aug. 7—Marjorie's Diamond Ring (Com.)..1000
Aug. 9—The Librarian (Dr.)..... 980
Aug. 14—Holding the Fort (Com.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Harbinger of Peace (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 17—Spring Log Driving, Maine.....1000
Aug. 20—The Street Beautiful (Edu.).....1000
Aug. 21—Mr. Pickwick's Predicament (Com.) 1000
Aug. 23—The Cub Reporter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 24—The War on the Mosquito (Edu.) 1000
Aug. 27—Alone in New York (Dr.)..... 1000
Aug. 28—Helping John (Com. Dr.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Simla (Sc.) 1000
Sept. 3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Sept. 4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)..1000
Sept. 7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912.. 400
Sept. 10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.) 1000
Sept. 11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.) 1000
Sept. 13—The Dam Builder (Dr.) 100
Sept. 14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies 1000
Sept. 23—Benares and Agra, India (Sc.).... 350
Sept. 23—How Bobby Joined the Circus (Com.) 650
Sept. 24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.).....1000
Sept. 27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.).....1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Aug. 3—The Loafer's Mother (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 6—The New Church Organ (Dr.).....
Aug. 8—The Old Wedding Dress.....
Aug. 9—The Tale of a Cat (Com.).....
Aug. 10—The Little Sheriff.....
Aug. 13—Broncho Billy's Last Hold-up (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 15—An Adamless Eden (Com.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Magic Wand (Juvenile).....1000
Aug. 23—Work in a U. S. Arsenal (Edu.)..
Aug. 23—A Water Fight (Com.).....
Aug. 24—The Government Test (Dr.).....
Aug. 17—On the Moonlight Trail (Dr.)....1000
Aug. 20—The Return of Becky (Dr.).....
Aug. 22—A Corner in Whiskers (Com.).....

Feet

Aug. 23—Her Adopted Father (Dr.).....
Aug. 24—Broncho Billy's Escapade (Dr.)....
Aug. 27—Alkali Ike Plays the Devil (W. Com.) 1000
Aug. 29—Three to One (Com.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Hermit (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Broncho Billy for Sheriff (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Wildman (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Twilight (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.) ....
Sept. 10—A Woman of Arizona (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Listener's Lesson (Com.).....1000
Sept. 13—Billy McGrath's Love Letters (Com.) 1000
Sept. 14—Broncho Billy Outwitted (Dr.)....1000

LUBIN

Aug. 28—The Burnt Cork (Com.).....
Aug. 29—For the Love of a Girl (Dr.).....
Aug. 30—Pinned (Com.).....
Aug. 30—The Overworked Bookkeeper (Com.)
Aug. 31—The Sheriff's Prisoner (Dr.).....
Aug. 28—The Caretaker (Com.).....
Sept. 2—A Substitution (Com.).....
Sept. 4—The Bank Cashier (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—The Smuggler (Com.).....
Sept. 6—A Romance of the Coast (Dr.)..
Sept. 7—Little Family Affair (Com. Dr.)..
Sept. 9—The Halfbreed's Sacrifice (Dr.)...
Sept. 11—A Redhot Courtship (Com.).....
Sept. 12—Betty and the Roses (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Never Again (Com.).....
Sept. 13—Buster and the Pirates.....
Sept. 14—A Trustee of the Law.....
Sept. 16—The Sleeper .....
Sept. 18—When Father Had His Way.....
Sept. 20—Turpentine Industry.....
Sept. 20—No Trespasssing.....
Sept. 21—His Pair of Pants.....
Sept. 23—A Gay Time in Quebec.....
Sept. 25—The Renegades .....
Sept. 26—Swimming and Life Saving.....
Sept. 26—Buster and the Gypsies.....
Sept. 27—Glued .....
Sept. 27—The Water Wagon.....
Sept. 28—The Doctor's Debt.....

G. MELIES

July 25—A String of Beads (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 1—The Will of Destiny.....
Aug. 8—The Ranger's Girls.....
Aug. 15—Romance at Catalina.....
Aug. 22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 29—His Partner's Share (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Obsession (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000

PATHE FRERES

Aug. 14—Silver Wing's Two Suitors (Dr.)
Aug. 15—Cupid's Stolen Arrows (Com.)....
Aug. 15—Some Inhabitants of Stagnant Water
Aug. 16—A Love Story of Old Japan (Dr.)
Aug. 17—The Cactus County Lawyer (W. Dr.)
Aug. 19—Pathe's Weekly No. 34.....
Aug. 20—His Windmill (Dr.).....
Aug. 20—The Sedge Warbler and the Cuckoo (Edu.) .....
Aug. 21—Jealousy on the Ranch (W. Dr.)...
Aug. 22—The Hand of Destiny (Dr.).....
Aug. 23—The Queen's Pity (Hist. Dr.).....
Aug. 24—The $2,500 Bride (Com.).....
Aug. 26—Pathe's Weekly No. 35.....
Aug. 26—Fire at Sea (Dr.).....
Aug. 27—A Prince of Israel (Bib.).....
Aug. 28—The Live Wire (Dr.).....
Aug. 29—The Detective's Desperate Chance (W. Dr.) .....
Aug. 29—The Armless Wonder.....
Aug. 30—The Musketeer's Love (Hist. Dr.).
Aug. 31—An Aeroplane Love Affair (Com.).
Sept. 2—Pathe's Weekly No. 36.....
Sept. 3—Beat rix d'Este (Dr.).....
Sept. 4—Locked Out of Wedlock (Com.)
Sept. 5—The Penalty Paid (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—Whiffles and the Magic Wand (Com.); and The Bud, the Leaf and the Flower (Sci.).....
Sept. 7—Gee! My Pants! (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Pathe's Weekly No. 37.....
Sept. 9—The Blighted Son (Dr.).....
Sept. 10—Love's Progress (Dr. Com.).....
Sept. 10—A Little Journey in Tunis (Custom)
Sept. 11—Black Beauty (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—Anguished Hours (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Ford Her Lord (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Late Harriet Quimby's Flight Across the English Channel.....
Sept. 14—Saved at the Altar (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—Pathe's Weekly No. 38.....
Sept. 17—The Elopement (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Gerone—the Venice of Spain (Tr.)
Sept. 18—The Bandit's Spur (W. Dr.)....
Sept. 19—The Desperado (W. Dr.) .....
Sept. 20—Max's Tragedy (Com.).....
Sept. 20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept. 21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.).....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Aug. 30—Jim Bludso (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Saved from Courtmartial (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 2—The Hoodo Hat (Com.).....
Sept. 2—From Jerusalem to Dead Sea (Sc.)
Sept. 4—Down Through the Ages (Dr.)...1000
Sept. 6—The Loneliness of the Hills (Dr.).1000
Sept. 7—The Darling of the C. S. A.....1000
Sept. 9—The Girl Reporter's Big Scoop (Dr.)1000
Sept. 11—Dr. Skinnem's Wonderful Invention (Com.) .....
Sept. 11—The Ancient Port of Jaffa (Sc.)
Sept. 13—The Street Singer (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 14—A Railroad Lochinvar (Com.-Dr.)..1000
Sept. 16—The Parasite (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 18—In Peril of Their Lives (Dr.)....
Sept. 20—Chips of the Old Block (Com.)....
Sept. 20—Tilley's Bird Farm (Edu.).....
Sept. 21—The Grit of the Girl Telegrapher (Dr.) 1000

SELIG

Aug. 22—Betty Fools Dear Old Dad (Com.).1000
Aug. 23—Land Sharks vs. Sea Dogs (Com. Dr.).....
Aug. 23—From Forest to Mills (Edu.).....
Aug. 26—The Laird's Daughter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 27—The Whiskey Runners (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 29—The Little Indian Martyr (Dr.) ..1000
Aug. 30—Just His Luck (Farce-Comedy)....
Aug. 30—Frenzied Finance (W. Com.).....
Sept. 2—As the Fates Decree (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 3—An Equine Hero (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—Serg. Byrne of the N. W. M. P. (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 6—Circumstantial Evidence (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 9—The House of His Master (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 10—The Fighting Instinct (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Indelible Stain (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 13—The Trade Gun Bullet (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 16—The Substitute Model (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 17—The Brand Blotter (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—Into the Genuine (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Life and Customs of the Winnebago Indians (Dr.) 1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Aug. 21—Pulp Mills in the Province of Quebec (Ind.) 275
Aug. 21—A Day in the German Navy (Top.). 400
Aug. 28—The Golden Curl (Dr.).....1020
Sept. 4—An Eccentric Sportsman (Com.).. 455
Sept. 4—Small Game at the Zoo (Sc.)..... 165
Sept. 4—From Lauterbrunnen to Murren, Switzerland (Sc.) 380
Sept. 11—Glimpses of St. Petersburg (Sc.) 360
Sept. 11—And Chemical Action (Ed.)..... 180
Sept. 11—And Winter Sports in Moritz.... (Topical) 485
Sept. 18—New Plymouth (Scenic); and A Country Holiday (Com.)..... 980
Sept. 25—The Sacrifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel) 500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.).... 500

VITAGRAPH

Aug. 12—Ingenuity 700
Aug. 13—The Heart of Esmeralda.....1000
Aug. 14—Vultures and Doves.....1000
Aug. 16—A Bogus Napoleon.....1000
Aug. 17—Two Battles 1000
Aug. 19—Her Grandchild 1050
Aug. 20—Lovesick Maidens of Cuddleton....1000
Aug. 21—The Ancient Bow.....1000
Aug. 23—Saving an Audience.....1000
Aug. 24—On Board Kaiser Wilhelm II..... 388
Aug. 24—The Party Dress 614
Aug. 27—Flirt or Heroine.....1000
Aug. 28—Two Cinders 555
Aug. 28—Bumps 477
Aug. 30—Written in the Sand.....1000
Aug. 31—The Bond of Music.....1000
Aug. 26—A Double Danger.....
Sept. 2—Tommy's Sister .....
Sept. 3—Coronets and Hearts.....
Sept. 4—Capt. Barnacle's Legacy.....
Sept. 6—Bunny's Suicide .....
Sept. 6—She Wanted a Boarder.....
Sept. 7—A Wasted Sacrifice .....
Sept. 9—Patio Days .....
Sept. 10—The Higher Mercy.....
Sept. 11—The Hindoo Curse.....
Sept. 13—The Loyalty of Sylvia.....
Sept. 14—Popular Betty.....
Sept. 14—Fortunes in a Teacup.....
Sept. 16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif.....
Sept. 17—The Troubled Trail.....
Sept. 18—A Vitagraph Romance.....
Sept. 20—The Indian Mutiny .....
Sept. 21—Adventure of the Italian Model..
Sept. 23—Bobby's Father .....
Sept. 24—His Lordship, the Valet .....
Sept. 25—Bill Wilson's Gal.....
Sept. 26—The Signal Fires.....
Sept. 27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville.....
Sept. 28—Irony of Fate .....
Sept. 30—Her Choice .....

Get Prosperous!

Master minds are striving with might and main to outdo each other in our great

QUALITY COMPETITION

9 RECOGNIZED MANUFACTURERS 9

offer through us the result of their greatest efforts comprising in the approximate

21 ATTENTION COMPELLING REELS EVERY WEEK 21

these are available through

AUTHORIZED AGENCIES in every section of America and Canada

Write for Name of Nearest Office

Film Supply Co. of America
133-135 West 44th Street New York

EASTMAN
motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

To Writers:

THE EDITOR

(The Journal of Information for Literary Workers) published in your interest for eighteen years, is the magazine of which Jack London said: "I may not tell a hundredth part of what I learned from THE EDITOR, but I may say that it taught me how to solve the stamp and landlord problems." It is a monthly stimulus to the production and sale of more and better manuscripts. Besides articles of concrete, practical worth by editors or by writers successful or about to be successful, each number contains in "The Literary Market" all the news of all the magazines, new and old, that pay for manuscripts.

THE EDITOR is especially helpful to the scenario writer. It publishes from time to time helpful articles by those who are successful producers of photoplays. A copy of the current number will be sent for 15 cents. The yearly subscription is one dollar.

The Editor
Box 830, Ridgewood, New Jersey.

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th

"THE WORD OF HONOR"

The sort of a drama which keeps interest at fever point and ends just as it seems the least likely to, then everyone is satisfied.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26th

LONGFELLOW'S "THE OLD CLOCK ON THE STAIRS"

Another Eclair Classical Master-Vision. If we could paint the lily or engolden the rose we could describe this mystic dream of pictures.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 29th

"LOVE AND SCIENCE"

The day will never come when love can be reduced to a science. This comedy drama demonstrates why.

FILMS OF QUALITY

ECLAIR FILM CO., 225 W. 42nd St., New York City, N.Y.

THE GERRARD FILM CO., Ltd.

The Film House

The Firm on the spot with all British Buyers and Showmen—is open to market one first class American Make —get right in touch with us now— Cables, GERRAFILM, LONDON

GERRARD STREET LONDON, ENGLAND

UNDINE

Released in two reels, Tuesday, Sept. 24, a marvel — adaptation of the famous Riverside Classic and a "perfect publicity" picture, is not the only feature of

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

for the week beginning Sunday, Sept. 22. The Sunday and Friday releases for that week (Undine is the Tuesday) are one-reel features and should be billed that way. There is that something in the plot of each that throws them all instantly into the feature class. Check 'em as you get 'em in the squares alongside the titles below:

At the Foot of the Ladder ☐	Undine ☐	"But the Greatest of These is Charity" ☐
Sunday, Sept. 22	Tuesday, Sept. 24	Friday, Sept. 27

NEXT TWO-REELER:
Put Yourself in His Place
From the Story by Charles Reade — in October

NEXT JAP FEATURE:
For the Mikado
With Miss Taku Takagi in October

THANHOUSER COMPANY
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
Film Supply Company Agents for U. S. and Canada

A REMARKABLE production plus a well known star plus a well known play and plus the well known Solax Photography. Four big perfect factors in one big perfect attraction.

DUBLIN DAN
THE IRISH DETECTIVE

Three reels of thrills and sensation

With the Popular
BARNEY GILMORE

In the leading role. The late star with "Kelly from the Emerald Isle" and "The Rocky Road to Dublin" and other big attractions.

STATE RIGHTS SELLING

Through Film Supply Company of America.

ATTRACTIVE ADVERTISING MATTER

Includes, Three Sheets, two kinds of One Sheets, Half Sheet, Lobby Displays, Heralds, Magnets, Colored Slides and still pictures.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

THE LOVE OF THE FLAG
(Comedy Drama)
Released Wednesday, September 25th, 1912

THE FUGITIVE
(Drama)
Released Friday, September 27th, 1912

SI'S SURPRISE PARTY
(Comedy)
Released Wednesday, October 2d, 1912

Solax Company
FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

If ROOSEVELT Speaks in Your Theatre Will He Fill It? Try It

HE HAS PACKED EVERY TOWN HE HAS SPOKEN IN. People travel hundreds of miles to see and hear Roosevelt. We take Roosevelt to YOUR theatre. Regardless of your politics, remember Roosevelt has a following of millions. Remember Roosevelt is the first American statesman to recognize the right of American womanhood to help rule the country.

Women Want to See Him

THIS FILM WILL BE SHOWN IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES

Will Roosevelt Appear in YOUR Theatre?

AFTER OCTOBER 1st WE RELEASE THE

Mikado and Y-O

FILMS

The only films of famous Japanese actors. Made in Japan. Place orders now.

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

WE OFFER YOU ONLY SUCCESS FILMS

Nat C. Goodwin as Fagin

This Country's Greatest Film Masterpiece

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

GENERAL FILM PUBLICITY & SALES CO.

H. A. SPANUTH, Pres. J. W. STROUSE, Treas. 145 WEST 45th STREET, NEW YORK

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

SEP 25 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 12

SEPTEMBER 21
1912

BILLY QUIRK
in "Canned Harmony"
Solax Release of October 9

PRICE
TEN
CENTS

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS SEP 1912

ROOSEVELT

THE GREAT REGENERATOR

YOU owe the people of your district the right to see the great American statesman at close range, regardless of your political creed. Thousands and thousands of people of your territory love Roosevelt. REALIZE THAT THEY WILL PAY TO SEE HIM!

THIS MEANS DOLLARS TO YOU

We show Col. Roosevelt among the Cowboys, Indians, running locomotive over Rocky Mountains, walking over bed of roses, boys and girls on horseback receiving Roosevelt and all his speeches among enthusiastic crowds.

This Film Is The Greatest Attraction Ever Offered

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

This picture is just what I expected it would be. Already, orders for forty-seven sets have been received.

Is yours among them? If not

WIRE IN AND PLACE ORDER AT ONCE

Approximately 2000 feet, 15 cents a foot

Released on or about Sept. 26th

POSTERS OF ALL KINDS HERALDS AND CARDS

General Film Publicity & Sales Co.

H. A. SPANUTH, Pres. J. W. STROUSE, Treas.

145 West 45th Street, New York

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

GAUMONT

"Sights For Well Eyes"

Bear In Mind

THE STOLEN CUB

The prize of pleased patronage awaits its presentation.

A "cute" baby bruin—Mother love outraged—Desperadoes and the art of making money with smokeless powder—Over the cliff but still alive—Through the woods, crippled, to relieve a besieged family.

RELEASED THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 26

THE CHICAGO AVIATION MEET

A SPLIT REEL

and

LIFE in CAUCASIA

RELEASED SATURDAY SEPT. 28

Take a Flyer See High Life

You Cannot Fall Down On Your Receipts

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1
THE CONVICT'S BRAND

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3
ZIGOTO TO THE RESCUE

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5
ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8
LOVE'S TEST

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10
THE TIE ETERNAL
(THE BINDING LINK)

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12
THE COTTON INDUSTRY
AND SPECIAL

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15
BEETHOVEN

COPYRIGHT PROTECTS ALL OUR FILMS
INFRINGEMENTS WILL BE VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED

Gaumont

GAUMONT CO.

Flushing

FILM SUPPLY CO. OF AMERICA, Sole Distributors

Gaumont

GAUMONT GAUMONT

GAUMONT

Great Crowds Greet the Ridgelys All Along the Line

Dick Ridgely and Cleo Ridgely, who left Brooklyn, N. Y., August 26th, as representatives of the Motion Picture Story Magazine, on a horseback trip to San Francisco, Cal., are meeting with tremendous success in all cities which they visit. Those theatres at which they appear are crowded to the doors, and they are always given an enthusiastic reception.

On date of writing, September 20th, they are at Harrisburg, Pa., and during the next two months they will probably pass through the following cities:

PENNSYLVANIA

Harrisburg
Dauphin
Duncannon
Newport
Millerstown
Miffiintown
Lewistown
McVeytown
Mt. Union
Huntington
McConnellstown Sta.
Williamsburg
Hollidaysburg
Altoona
Gallitzin
Lilly
Portage
South Fork
Johnstown
New Florence
Blairsville
Saltsburg
Apollo
Vandergrift
Leechburg
Free Port
Oakmont
Sharpsburg
Pittsburg
Allegheny
McKees Rocks
Coraopolis
Aliquippa
Freedom
Rochester
New Brighton
Beaver Falls
Ellwood City
New Castle
Sharon

OHIO

Youngstown
Washingtonville
Lisbon
Hanoverton
Minerva
Malvern
Waynesburg
Mineral City
Canton
Massillion
Dalton
Fredericksburg
Millersburg
Coshocton
Frazeyburg
Newark
Pataskala
Columbus
West Jefferson
Springfield
Osborn
Dayton
Brookville
West Alexandria
Lewisburg
New Paris

Those exhibitors in the above mentioned cities who desire to make arrangements with Mr. and Mrs. Ridgely to appear at their theatres, can do so by writing to us direct.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

26 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1st

"THE OLD DOCTOR'S HUMANITY"

A story of great set-you-to-thinking interest, yet not all complex nor confused like many.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3d

"THE LUCKY LOSER"

It has every little touch which your patrons like. There is love aplenty, rivals, comedy, dramatic suspense, all combining a great big whole.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 6th

"THE LOCK OF HAIR"

A Paris Eclair drama enacted by the artists which have called forth the highest praise accorded any one company of actors.

FILMS of QUALITY

ECLAIR FILM CO., 225 W. 42nd St., New York City, N.Y.

THE GERRARD FILM CO., Ltd.

The Film House

The Firm on the spot with all British Buyers and Showmen—is open to market one first class American Make —get right in touch with us now— Cables, GERRAFILM, LONDON

GERRARD STREET LONDON, ENGLAND

MABEL NORMAND

SPARKLING COMEDY IN SPLIT REELS

KEYSTONE FILMS

FOUR FAMOUS COMEDIANS

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND
FRED MACE
FORD STERLING

AND AN

ALL STAR CAST

A KEYSTONE EVERY MONDAY

"COHEN COLLECTS A DEBT"
"THE WATER NYMPH"
Monday, September 23

"RILEY AND SCHULTZE"
"THE NEW NEIGHBOR"
Monday, September 30

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

"For the Honor of the 7th"

1 Reel BRONCHO FEATURE Wed., Oct. 2

THRILLING, SPECTACULAR, MILITARY SUBJECT

A lieutenant and a captain love the same girl. In a sensational battle with the Indians the soldiers are hard pressed. The lieutenant persuades him to order a retreat, though reinforcements are rushing to the rescue. The captain is courtmartialed and the lieutenant turns against him. Discharged, the captain discovers the dual life of the lieutenant, and with bearded face secures employment as a scout. During a battle the lieutenant is fatally wounded and in a dramatic scene confesses his duplicity and the wrong he has done the captain, who is reunited with the girl he loves.

"SUNDERED TIES"
SEPTEMBER 18th
A Wonderful War Story

"HIS BETTER SELF"
SEPTEMBER 25th
A Stirring Western Drama

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

© CLB 238630

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI September 21, 1912 Number 12

PERSONAL—TO THE OPERATOR

I WANT in this week's editorial to ask a very few pertinent questions from the moving picture machine operator. Without the operator the machinery could not work, and it depends upon the operator what result the picture shows on the screen. The operator may mar or bring out the best qualities of a picture, and between these two extremes he can work, but it is the results that tell.

The public are a very appreciative quantity as audiences of the moving picture theatre, and oftentimes comments favorable or unfavorable, as may be deserved, are heard throughout the houses I have visited, and if some of the operators could hear the remarks, they would, I am sure, endeavor to do better in the future. One great help to the operator is organization, unity, or, if you like, union, and these are questions I want to ask the operators of America: Why are you not organized? Why are you in a state of chaos? Why are you so foolish in not looking after your own interests better than you are doing at present? Some of you may remark to me that you are organized, that you have a union, that you are not in a chaotic condition. I reply unto you this is not so, for a greater disorganization of any body of men I think it will be hard to find anywhere in organized labor as it stands to-day, either in the American Federation of Labor or any other organization that may be mentioned. I am now stating a fact which cannot be controverted when I say there are at least from twelve to fifteen thousand moving picture operators throughout the country, and I am taking this as a low estimate so that I may be within the bounds of a practical statement. Do you know of any other organization of 15,000 men that are not represented in the A. F. of L.? If so, whose is the organization? I think the operators throughout the country are very blind to their own interests and also to their own progress; if they were united in as full a degree as they should be, we would not have such anomalies as schools turning out crude men, who are accepted into unions free of charge simply because that school is corrupt enough to graft the officers of that organization; and many of my readers will understand what I mean without speaking any plainer.

The condition of the operators in Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis and New York should certainly be altered, and be put upon a sound, firm business basis. What I propose to every operator is that he, individually first of all, and later in a collective capacity, should request the A. F. of L. to grant a special charter and special unions for the moving picture operator alone. By so doing better men, more skilful workers and more contented employers would be the result. It was pointed out to me the other day that the operators were organized, that they belong to the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees. What, in the name of common sense, has this organization to do with the moving picture operator? Why should the M. P. operator be an auxiliary to the stage employees'organization? The I. A. T. S. E. is an organization for the spotlight men, who need no great skill in their work of throwing a light or turning a series of colored discs onto the stage; and, if I understand aright, the scene-shifter is also a member of this organization, as are also the stage hands, who need not be very skilful artisans. Compare these with the experience required to operate a projecting machine and a careful handling of films, and we think the skilled labor of the moving picture operator ought to predominate over unskilled labor. Therefore I think the time is now ripe when the moving picture operators should ask to be released as auxiliaries to stage employees, and ask for a union belonging to themselves, which, if properly formed as the organizers of the A. F. of L. know how to organize, might be made a good factor in keeping out of the ranks of the operators unskilful schoolboys, and put in their place men who have been in the business for a number of years, and if this was done I fully believe that a better, more superior class of men would be the net result, and that instead of the exhibitor giving the lowest salaries to his operator, making him very discontented, unfaithful and unsatisfactory in his work, the reverse would be the case, and the employer would then select the very best help to operate the machine that it is possible for him to do.

Let some of the most important and best qualified among the expert operators take up this question with the heads of the A. F. of L., and I am fully convinced that the conditions which now exist would be entirely improved, and that the best interests of the men as a unit and a body would be looked after. I have been among operators in many of the large cities, and they give voice to the same cry of incompetence among some of the operators employed, they have expressed their utter inability to cope with these conditions. and have asked me what I would advise them to do. After long thought the above is the advice I tender to every moving picture operator in the industry. Now let them get to work and secure what they need.

Alfred H. Saunders.

THE SCREEN CLUB

This club, as reported in our last issue, met on Saturday, September 14th, at Bryan Hall and received the report of Secretary Calder Johnstone, who reported the club was going along in a very satisfactory manner, and approving the minutes of the past meeting. Treasurer Francis Power reported $510 subscribed and with a few expenses, which were authorized to be paid, left the balance in hand $486. This, with a few who were enrolled at this meeting, brought up a total of approximately $500 in hand and with 120 members on the roll. Rules and constitution committee reported progress, as did also the membership committee. The meeting adjourned until Thursday, September 19th. The other committees in the meantime will meet and report at this adjourned meeting. The members present at the first and second meetings, which were unfortunately crowded out of our last issue were: John Charles, Powers; Lee Beggs, Solax; Lamar Johnstone, Eclair; M. J. MacQuarrie, Kinemacolor; William Shea, Vitagraph; Joseph Graybill, Biograph; I. B. Rubenstein, American; L. J. Rubenstein, American; Edward Dillon, Biograph; Leo Delaney, Vitagraph; Robert Goodman, Majestic; Herbert Prior, Majestic; Darwin Karr, Solax; Parker Read, Jr., Producer; Henry Cronjager; Oscar C. Apfel, Majestic and Reliance; Carl T. Gregory, Thanhouser; Edmund S. Hirsch, photographer; James Carroll, author; P. C. Foy, Solax; Edw. J. Montagne, the Brooklyn Citizen; William Steiner, Republic; Larry B. McGill, Republic; Pierce Kingsley, producer; Walter Edwin, Edison; Harry R. Rever, Film Supply Co.; T. Hays Hunter, producer; Hopp Hadley, Majestic; Harry Spear, Thanhouser; Rev. Elias Stockton, author; Owen Moore, Victor; James Kirkwood, Imp; Gus Pixley, Biograph; Paul Scardon, Majestic; William Robert Daly, Imp; Guy Hedlund; Albert W. Hale, Thanhouser; Herbert Brenon, Imp; C. A. Willat, N. Y. Motion Picture Co.; Alfred H. Saunders, Moving Picture News; Michael Potter, author; William H. Sloan, Biograph; W. Robinson, Biograph; H. Harvey, Solax; Jack Pickford, Biograph; Henry Walthall, Biograph; David Thompson, Biograph; Wm. F. Russell, Thanhouser; Wm. Garwood, Thanhouser; Harry Benham, Thanhouser; Wm. F. Haddock, Eclair; A. V. Smith, Vitagraph; Courtenay Foote, Vitagraph; Van Dyke Brooke, Vitagraph; Maurice Costello, Vitagraph; Charles Eldridge, Vitagraph; Wm. J. Welsh; Geo. J. Elmore, Biograph; T. J. Young, Biograph; Chas. Kent, Vitagraph; George A. Holt, Rex; Tefft Johnson, Vitagraph; E. J. Le Saint, Kinemacolor; Jack Cohn, Imp; James Woods Morrison, Vitagraph; Hal Wilson, Vitagraph; George Cooper, Vitagraph; Glen White, Powers; Edw. W. Roskam, Commercial M. P. Co.; John Bunny, Vitagraph; Hugh J. Hoffman, J. H. MacDonald, Powers; F. E. Holliday, Gaumont Weekly; C. Gardner Sullivan, author; Alfred Tagro, Biograph; Bert Adler, Thanhouser; A. A. Cadwell, Thanhouser; H. C. Judson; Epes Winthrop Sargent; Richard V. Spencer, Bison; William Lamp, Majestic; F. J. Carroll, Cheyenne M. P. Co.; Dell Henderson, Biograph; Wm. Shay, Imp; King Baggot, Imp; Frank Powell, director; G. F. Blaisdell, Frank J. Beecroft, Dramatic Mirror; Calder Johnstone, Morning Telegraph.

Among those not present, but who are already on the roll call personally or through proxy, are included Sigmund Lubin; Mr. Thanhouser of the Thanhouser Co.; Chas. Simone, Universal; C. P. Clapp, Dramatic Mirror; David Miles, Kinemacolor; Frank E. Woods, Kinemacolor; James Hoff, Moving Picture World; Mr. Hoadley, Universal; J. G. Brammall, Kinemacolor; Ben Musson, author; Lee Starrett, director; Arthur Johnson, Lubin; Lawrence Trimble, Vitagraph; Earle Williams, Vitagraph; William Quirk, Solax; George Nichols, Rex; P. Thad Volkmann, Lubin; Wilfred Lucas, Biograph; Travers Vale, Rex; George Loan Tucker, author and director; Glenmore Davis, author and journalist; Chas. M. Seay, Edison; Harold Shaw, Edison; Arthur D. Hotaling, Lubin; Lawrence McCloskey, Lubin; Walter Stanhope, Lubin; Francis J. Grandon, Lubin Hector Dion, Reliance; George W. Terwilliger, scenario editor and manager; Stanley H. Twist, Selig.

Telegrams were received from Stanley H. Twist of the Selig Co., Chicago; Hector Dion of the Reliance Co.; Walter Stanhope of the Lubin Co., and Frank J. Grandon of the Lubin Co.

AND SPANUTH GOT NEXT!

If there's one trick in a body's makeup that's worth money, it's the trick of getting "next," and who says that H. A. Spanuth hasn't got the trick down pat?

Now, perhaps you think it doesn't mean a lot of thinking and scheming and clever manipulating to get next to some things in the business world. Perhaps you think that opportunities just come rapping on the businessman's door begging for admission. If you are foolish enough to think any such thing, just go in the film business as it is to-day, and we'll wager that in a month's time you'll feel you have another guess coming. Sometimes opportunities do come; but they wait as a rule until you have proved yourself worthy of taking care of them.

This latter is what H. A. Spanuth has done. He started in the big film world on a small basis, he and his worthy partner, Joseph Strouse. They have been not yet a year in the business, and have passed on an easy trot some of those who have been years at it. They have grasped their opportunities, and now opportunities are really coming begging at their door.

The Nat Goodwin film, their first and well-chosen big production, scored a hit. And now we find Spanuth getting next to no less a man than Colonel Roosevelt. We want to tell you that it takes "some" nerve to get a contract such as the General Film Publicity and Sales Company have, and which gives them the sole right to keep a camera man continuously with the ex-President in his private car, and following every incident of his present history-making trip.

The film is not political and its object is not to be a political booster. It is to show the greatest and most conspicuous American of to-day to the people as a man, outside his political activities and to show him to his enthusiastic admirers as he tours the country, and to allow the people in the towns which are unfortunate enough not to be able to see him, to get as near a lifelike presentation of the Colonel as it is possible to give.

Besides the Colonel the film will show photographs of the great men with whom he has come in contact in the different States and his associations with the cowboys and the Indians and taking exercise as an engine driver while his train crosses the Great Divide.

By an additional piece of good fortune Mr. Spanuth was able to get by working the cables the royal moving picture photographs of the German Emperor escorting Mrs. Roosevelt and Colonel Roosevelt escorting the Empress in Berlin greeted by a cheering crowd. The importance of this film will be understood when it is taken into consideration that none of the pictures of the German Emperor are allowed to be released without his consent, and Mr. Spanuth understands that it was the German Emperor's friendship for our ex-President that got the General Film Publicity and Sales Company this concession.

Another reward for H. A. Spanuth's energy is the securing of the Mikado and Y-O films made by the famous Japanese Film Company. These films will be the only ones that are really Japanese and manufactured in Japan, played by Japanese actors and stories written by Japanese authors The first Japanese picture that will be shown according to present indications, will be the picturesque and ceremonial funeral of the late Mikado, said to be one of the most gorgeous spectacles of a spectacular people.

Mr. Spanuth has also secured for his firm the agencies of the Aquilla, Welt, Empire and B&C films. These films will be released at regular dates as soon as arrangements have been made for the shipping of the negative to this country.

The General Film Publicity and Sales Company have stated that all the productions that they make must come up to the quality of Nat C. Goodwin as Fagin in "Oliver Twist." This picture has made a standard for this young, energetic and successful firm, and they intend to live up to it.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

Gaumont

"The Plague-Stricken City," released September 12, is one of the most thoroughly artistic moving pictures that it would be possible to imagine. To say that it ranks with the best that the market has seen since the beginning of the Cinematograph industry, is not saying too much. Its merit lies not in the story, which is one of a cruel prince, who led a life of debauchery within the palace, while the people of his city lay dying in the streets of a terrible plague, and of his retribution by having the plague brought into the palace by the wife and daughters of a murdered adherent, but in the masterly manner in which it has been produced. There are marvelous groupings, marvelous detail in stage business, and it is beautifully hand-colored.

"Kings of Exile," released September 19, and a two-reel Gaumont is equal in artistic beauty and staging to the above-mentioned. "The Funeral of General Booth" and "An Eclipse of the Sun," for September 21, are fine photographic studies.

American

"Bad Pete's Gratitude" for September 25, is a very excellent production, and could be recommended for use by churches or philanthropic societies as well as in the theatre.

"The Foreclosure" not only affords many pleasing scenic panoramas, but is excellently acted, and has a good story.

Great Northern

"Benoit's Fortune" for September 21, is a comedy-drama of special interest. It contains a lot of real good, natural fun. The cabinet-maker taking possession of the beautiful country seat which he has inherited from a relative, is a scream.

Lubin

"Betty and the Roses," released September 12, is one of the freshest, prettiest little romances we have seen.

Solax

"The Life of a Rose" is quite the prettiest thing that Solax has done in some time. The story is of a beautiful white rose given by a bride on her honeymoon to a poor breadwinner, and of the different hearts it gladdened.

On the same reel with the above are views of "The Picturesque Hudson," taken apparently near its source. They are very beautiful indeed.

Essanay

"Neptune's Daughter," the dream of an artist, is fair. There are few essentials missing.

Kalem

"The Parasite" is good although its title leads one's mind to the subject presented in a more amplicated form.

Bison "101"
(Released Through Film Supply)

"The Penalty" is a wonderful production in more ways than one. The story and its detail are well worked out, the scenes are well chosen, the photograph is clear and beautiful, but most remarkable of all is the fact that the real, genuine red man figures in this film as an actor of no mean ability. It is hard to realize that the Indian, whose opportunities for education and development date back to so recent a date, is capable of the splendid work which has been done by men of his race in this film. It is a revelation.

Edison

"The Dam Builders" is of special interest, and apart from the story, shows some interesting scenes of the work of the steam shovel.

Kalem

"The Street Singer" is the story of a little street singer who, picked up on the street by a young violinist, at the death of her father, after growing to young womanhood, and discovered to have a beautiful voice, is sent abroad to study. The beautiful character of the girl is shown when in spite of the persuasions of her rich and haughty benefactress, she seeks out the benefactor of her childhood.

THE PICTURES AND THEIR MUSIC
(M. I. McDonald)

It is rather a mad tirade that I have been having, trying to find out what people do think about the pictures and their music. Of course people do commit themselves quite freely regarding their views on the mere pictures, but somehow when it comes to discussing the "better half," that is the musical end of the subject in question, the idea of essential relationship seems to be more or less of a myth, or at any rate a subject shrouded in mystery. A subject to which few have given really serious thought.

And it is for the purpose of getting a few free and easy, and intelligent opinions that I have been scouring New York from one to another music publishers and such, who ought to have some thoughts worth while on a subject so thoroughly up-to-date as moving picture music, one which fairly bulges with possibilities, but it is surprising how many of them kite the question or turn one down altogether; others look very stupid, trying to look wise, and only one or two have deigned to give any serious revelation of their innermost thoughts on the subject.

Raymond Browne, of Smith & Browne, publishers, is one of these latter.

Raymond Browne is notable in an interview for his courtesy, his good nature, and his frankness. He seems to have an intelligent idea of what you've come after, and talks to you as though you really were "some pun'kins." And by the way, Raymond Browne's folks were "some pun'kins" years ago in old Germany. His grandmother was first cousin to the famous Bismarck, and he's probably in a position to know "pun'kins" when he sees them.

Raymond Browne is a man of large theatrical experience. He was at one time a partner of Ned Weyburne. In fact he has figured in almost every capacity that stage liffe boasts of. Now he has been in the song writing and music publishing business for the past three months, and it looks as though he was going to stay with it. Everything about him spells success, even to the office equipment, and the individuality borne in upon the printing of the music, the arranging of front cover designs, etc. If you look at a Smith & Browne publication you will find that everything on the cover is in exactly the opposite place to what all other publishers have the same things; for instance, the publisher's name is at the top, instead of at the bottom, the composer's name is at the right lower corner instead of at the left, and a number of other things individualize their publications from others we see.

Raymond Browne's opinion on the music of the pictures is that the average theatregoer does not notice whether the music fits the picture or not. In fact, the firm has established a unique method of advertising its music, by sending free of charge to the different theatres copies of their new sheets, because they believe that many people go to the theatres to hear the music individually, just as much as to see the pictures. Mr. Browne believes that although he may be a connoisseur, or I may not be a connoisseur, and our critical ears and eyes catch sight of every little defect, or lack of synchronism, the ordinary individual may be perfectly enchanted, and satisfied with things as they are. Mr. Browne also states that at the theatre of which he was the owner in a little town of Nova Scotia, it was exceedingly difficult to get just the musical numbers which one might be called upon to use at the time, and believes that many theatre managers are in the same position with regard to music.

But regardless of the fact that the bulk of the people to-day are not sufficiently educated along these lines to thoroughly appreciate the situation, or demand a proper synchronization of the whole, we can by persistently stirring this up, and demanding better conditions by-and-by obtain what we want.

THE NEW SOLAX PLANT

A Modern Structure Representing the Last Word in Moving Picture Plant Architecture.

While the new one hundred thousand dollar Solax studio and factory at Fort Lee, N. J., is not the largest in the world, it is one of the best equipped. The completed establishment represents the combined efforts of Madame and Mr. Blache. The buildings were erected from plans drawn under their personal direction. In drawing and re-drawing the sketches for the new plant they have had the guiding knowledge of results from years of experimenting, personal acquaintanceship with the facilities of the biggest and best plants in the world and with all of this they have combined their general knowledge gained from experience. The results show that for studio facilities, factory layout and equipment, lighting, heating and sanitation, the new Solax plant is not excelled.

The massive building, erected a few hundred feet from the main street of Fort Lee and occupying several acres is an edifice that has changed the skyline of the neighborhood. It is situated only thirty minutes from Broadway. Its glass roof can be seen at a radius of several miles. The lawns, fountains and private walks with which a landscape architect plans to surround the building, will give the place a most beautiful and inviting appearance. It is planned to so arrange the exterior that outdoor pictures may be posed without leaving the studio grounds.

The plant is divided into departments and each department is located according to its relation to other departments. The executive, producing, art, selling, laboratory, publicity, shipping, accounting and electrical and mechanical departments, all have their logical location with special offices for the department heads. It is so planned that each department head can conveniently co-operate with his colleagues of the other departments with very little trouble. In making the plans, the executives realized that only by convenience of location could harmonious co-operation be maintained and thus the highest average of efficiency secured.

On the ground floor is located a suite of executive offices with private offices for the president, the sales manager and publicity manager. On the same floor is also the accounting department, clerical force, scenario department, shipping department, mechanical department, laboratories and projecting room. A special extension from the ground floor was built and space utilized for the plant. The ante-room of the executive offices is utilized as the poster exhibiting room, all of the artistic Solax posters are displayed for the edification of visitors.

Half of the ground floor is devoted to the laboratories. There are stock rooms in which positive and negative raw stock is stored, a perforating room, equipped with patented perforators and negative and positive developing rooms equipped with Corcoran tanks and frames for handling 60,000 feet per day; these rooms are also equipped with a perfect filter and running water system and fire protection appliances. The printing room is equipped with the latest model printing machines with facilities for printing 20,000 feet a day. A drying room, equipped with drying drums and racks, drying frames receive the wet negatives and positives after they have gone through their chemical baths. The number of feet the drying room has facilities for handling is almost unlimited. In addition to these important parts of the laboratory system are rooms for cutting and joining films, chemical storeroom and fire and burglar proof negative vaults. The laboratory is so arranged that the whole process of film manufacture after the camera man turns in his negative proceeds logically from room to room in each succeeding process without needlessly making a single step that would tend toward delay or entail a waste of movement and consequently a waste of energy.

INTERIOR VIEW OF NEW SOLAX STUDIO

The studio occupies both the second and third stories. It has a direct entrance from the outside constructed of stone steps, twenty-one in number, with an iron railing on both sides and a camera platform at each side of the railings making a sort of balcony at the top landing. This balcony is about eighteen feet from the ground. This entrance is spacious in appearancec and was built for the purpose of moving large scene frames and big "props" in and out of the building and will rarely be used for other purposes. The main entrance to the studio is through the general offices, up a flight of stairs. The studio is of the glass variety. Its framework is of iron and the frames on four sides, top, north, south and west hold translucent glass. Half of the second story is devoted to the studio and the other half to the frame room, scenes, drops and large properties.

The studio equipment is perfect and complete. There is enough floor space for four ordinary sets and any three large or deep sets. A balcony running halfway between the floor and top of the studio was built not only to answer the purpose of a third story of the building but also as a camera platform for trick work and special effects. The ornamental stairway leading up to this balcony is so placed that it can very easily be used in a set. The camera platforms which form the balcony on the outside of the building can be utilized when an especially deep set is wanted. The translucent studio windows, the majority of which work on hinges, may be opened, the camera placed on the platform and thus shoot right through in on the scene. This arrangement adds about eight or nine feet to the actual studio depth. By working the hinged windows, the company can take advantage of a natural "back drop" combined with the ingenious arrangement of a set and by the opening of the studio windows a fine country effect through a sitting-room window could be obtained without the use of a "back drop" for the studio building is surrounded by trees and cottages and natural rural atmosphere that could not be easily obtained by the use of a "back drop," the artificial perspective of which is seldom accurate. The studio is equipped with other ingenious devices, all used for the purpose of making the Solax pictures as near true to life as possible.

The third and top floor of the plant is divided up into dressing rooms, the director's offices, wardrobe, small properties and art departments. The dressing rooms are all large and airy, well lighted, sanitary, and have both hot and cold water. Many funny stories are told about dressing rooms and their effect on artistic temperaments. The wants of the leading lady always conflict with the demands of the character woman or the ingenue. And the same trouble is experienced with the men, when considerable tact and diplomacy are necessarily resorted to in order to avoid a good deal of unpleasantness.

The art department is always an interesting place. The artist studio has a glass roof and a special light arrangement. A floor opening on both sides of the room makes it possible for the artist to work on his scene frames and panels without using a ladder. All he has to do is to slide the frame up and down; when his scene is painted he slides it down through the opening into the carpenter shop and from there it is taken out into the studio or scene room. The carpenter and artist cooperate. As soon as he builds a frame and covers it with canvas, all he has to do is to slide it up through the opening into the artist's gallery.

Every detail of the plant has been laid out after considerable thought and each device and part of equipment before their installation, were weighed on the scale of experience. Even heating, sanitation, fire-proofing, all of which are up-to-the-minute in the way of patents, were installed after rigid tests and close inspection.

INTERIOR VIEW OF THE NEW SOLAX STUDIO

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

THE endless variety of moving pictures incites one to wonder. We often wonder if theatre audiences appreciate the hazard inseparable with film production? One party attempted a boat upsetting scene; four girls in it and some young men; then the scramble and rescue of it; but the boat in overturning caught one of the girls under, and it took desperate efforts to get her unconscious from the water. Then they tried it all over again. In another scene, showing convicts on a rock pile, the leading actor, who was not a convict, strolled away to light a pipe, was challenged by a prison guard, whom he defied, was shot at really and truly, but wasn't hit. It's all in the game, Hortense, all in the game!

One application of the moving picture is very interesting, and that is taking the life scenes from the inside of an office or mill, or any outdoor work on the street or elsewhere, showing how the men work. It would also be highly educational to see some pictures of men who don't work.

The above is a good picture of R. R. Neils, general manager of the American Film Company, Chicago. It will be seen that Mr. Neils is in soldier garb and has undoubtedly been supervising and participating in some of those excellent American films taken at Starved Rock. Mr. Neils is one of the most popular and accommodating heads of moving picture establishments in the country. He numbers his friends and admirers by the hundreds. To his keen business judgment and ability much of the success achieved by the American company can be attributed.

Seumas McManus, noted Irish writer, interviewed at Cleveland, Ohio, recently, said he believed it would not be long before the universities of America will be establishing chairs of story telling. In other words, moving pictures. "Your country is too materialistic and now is enjoying a rebound. I have been surprised at the great interest which the people of America have taken in story telling of late years. Through the moving picture the importance of the story has become appreciated. There will be a return, also, to the old days of fireside stories."

* * * *

"This won't cost you a red penny," remarked the moving picture enthusiast as he used up our expensive Irish linen note paper with a spluttering pen.

"Now look here, we don't want any more poetry. What th'——"

But the M. P. E. had hurried away leaving the following touching verses:

"I'm weary of clash and of clamor,
Of heroes who hustle for cash,
Of bludgeoning blows with a hammer,
Of motors that go all to smash;
I want to shed tears o'er a story
Which tells how the hero proposed,
Then waited a year ere he wrapped her
In arms that were never quite closed.

I'm weary of young men of action, of damsels of quarter-back build
Who run a political faction
Or swing deals with intellect skilled—
Oh, give me the heroine shrinking
The actress in garments so quaint,
Who spends half a reel in thinking
And ends everyone in a faint."

* * * *

Europeans who refuse to see the wonders of America, possibly refusing to leave the pleasant occupation of going through American tourists' pockets at home, are to have the natural beauties of the United States brought to their doors through the medium of moving pictures. America could well do likewise.

* * * *

Here is a little something for the pessimistic picture-playwright:

When you think the Fates betray you
Growl about it;
When your writing fails to pay you
Howl about it;
Don't brace up and keep on trying,
Spend your time in mournful sighing,
Let 'em all behold you crying:
"I've been robbed!"

When your hero's acting badly
Yell about it;
Sit around and discourse sadly—
Who can doubt it?
Time was merely made to fritter;
When your luck is bad, grow bitter,
Be a weakling and a quitter—
"I've been robbed!"

* * * *

Motion pictures played a big part in connection with a monster safety gathering of employes of all railroads entering Kansas City that the Santa Fe Railroad held in Kansas City this month. Special films showed the great railroad yards, railroad shops and speeding trains. The various ways in which employes are injured and killed and wrecks occur were vividly displayed on the screen. Another film showed the same scenes and demonstrated how men can protect themselves from accident by being careful. Thousands of employes who were present had ocular proof that it is carelessness alone that causes a great majority of railroad accidents.

* * * *

Dr. G G. Murray, regius professor of Greek at Oxford, after a visit to the United States, goes home and remarks that "deep decay" has eaten into the study of the classics in American colleges. Maybe. But the common people are getting their Greek classics all right through the medium of moving pictures and all enjoy those self-same classics, too.

* * * *

The editor of the Ohio State Journal visited a moving picture theatre recently and saw a very great man.

He was apparently 30 or 35; a handsome fellow, graceful as a child, and with a face as kind as a mother's. He played the flute and seemed to play its melody into his life. They say he was shiftless and didn't seem to have any purpose in life. Still, he went about doing good in this way: He had a temper as sweet as a summer evening, and wherever he went it glowed in his manner, and lightened and brightened up many a sorrow and perplexity.

He had a habit of always appearing just where some one was unlucky or in sore distress, and who needed a little patience and gentle temper, and these this man brought in a measure sufficient to turn the untoward incident into a real benefaction. He seemed more like an angel than a man, and always happened to be where he was needed. How that audience loved to see that man appear in a scene! He was like a blessing coming into the life of everyone who saw him, even in a moving picture.

The lesson was that a patient, kindly, gentle, sympathizing man or woman touching the life of another, at an anxious and disappointing moment, is the truest example of a special providence and the most beautiful ornament that human nature ever wears.

Barnstable, Mass.—The Idlehour Motion Picture Theatre has opened

EDWIN AUGUST

Edwin August, who has been notable in several of the pictures produced by the big pictureplay manufacturers, has been engaged by the Lubin Co., of Philadelphia. His career upon the legitimate stage has been enhanced by responsible engagements, with Belasco, Otis Skinner, Mrs. Leslie Carter, and other prominent stars and producers. He has played considerably in England, Australia and other British colonies.

A DELIGHTFUL FUNCTION

The dinner given in Henderson's restaurant, Coney Island, New York, last Saturday afternoon for pictureplay editors, writers and others, proved to be a delightful function. Credit is certainly due Mr. Epes Winthrop Sargent, the originator of the idea, for the gathering was certainly a feast of reason and a flow of soul.

A committee was appointed to arrange for another meeting to be held probably within the next three months. Epes Winthrop Sargent was elected chairman and Messrs. Hoadley, of the Universal; Hadley, of Film Supply, and Phil Lang, Kalem editor, are other members of the committee.

There was a host of good fellows at the feast, among the guests present being C. B. Hoadley, A. Van Buren Powell, Messrs. Hall, Schulberg and Roach, of the Universal; Rev. Dr. Stockton, Richard V. Spencer, of the Bison; Herman E. L. Beyer, dramatic Critic of "Town Talk;" E. G. Montague, J. F. Clifton, A. D. Hotaling, Lubin director; H. Z. Devine, of Solax; Genial Billy Quirk, of the same company; Mr. Hennessy, of Biograph; Mr. Carroll; Frank E. Woods, known to fame as "Spectator," Mark Kintenfass, of the Champion Company; H. G. Plimpton, of Edison Company, and many others prominent in the game.

It was announced that the banquet would be a stag affair but Mr. Sargent and the others were unable to bear the thought that the festal board was not to be graced with charming femininity and there were several ladies present to add charm and eclat to the occasion.

A Van Buren Powell in describing the convivial gathering for Moving Picture News, says that everyone present thought the opportunity afforded for all branches to get into close touch, was a splendid one. Speeches were made by many and words of wisdom flowed freely from lips well qualified to utter them. Mr. Powell writes: "We free lances had the best of the bargain, for we soaked up the tips and information like veritable sponges. As for the dinner itself, looking at it from my point of view, it was in very good taste, conventionally and palate-ably speaking. We were photographed for the Animated Weekly before the feast and Mr. Carroll, winner of the Powers' first prize in the recent scenario contest, posed alone for a picture that will, no doubt, be a lasting reminder of an everlasting good time."

"There was no need to preach optimism. Just think of a bunch of free lances mingling in harmonious accord with editors, who may at that very hour, have it in mind to ship back their work; of directors 'seeing' scriptwriters whose efforts they have not been able to 'see.' And yet never a word, a look, or a thought of ill-feeling.

"It has always been my idea that an editor could tell a writer more in five minutes of actual conversation than he could in thirty letters—and, besides, he hasn't the time to write the letters. So it proved at the gathering. C. B. Hoadley expounded to attentive listeners the elements and essence of success in pictureplaywrighting, ably seconded by Messrs. Hall, Roach and Schulberg, of the Universal. Other authorities could be seen taking like action.

"And in closing, let it be known to all that an editor, a director, an actor, or in fact any authority in the business, is just as good a fellow as the world can produce. They want your work and frankly tell you so.

"It is certainly not their fault if one cannot always reach the standard that necessity compels them to set in quality of scripts. All they ask of one is to 'deliver the goods,' and I have it on authority, checks and contracts will be things of actual substance instead of matter for dreams. And again I say—Optimism Pays!"

Such a gathering as that held at Coney Island last Saturday between writers and editors tends to promote a better spirit among the rank and file of pictureplaywrights. They are able to meet personally the men who read and adjudge their work. They find these men gentlemen, and willing and ready to help talent. Thus is the "plot-stealing" bug; the cry of "favoritism," etc., lost. Mr. Sargent is entitled to great credit for his idea of bringing writers and editors into closer communion. It is our idea that it is certain to prove beneficial to the profession.

Anita, Iowa—Schwenneker Bros. sold their motion picture theatre to E. F. Grace.

THE WORD OF HONOR

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Eclair Release)

THE clubroom was empty save for four men in a far corner. They had been playing cards all evening and even now that all other men had gone, they showed no sign of leaving.

Now and then some one suggested going home. It was always Jim Ainslee who wanted another game, for the pile beside him was much the smallest of the four. There was an anxious, eager look in his eyes that the other men did not have, and it was something almost like fear of that look that kept the other men playing so late.

"For heaven's sake, Ainslee, don't look like that," Fred Dunlop exclaimed, rising to his feet. "You give me the creeps. We're not playing for the sake of the money but for the game. The game's as good whether you lose or win. You look as though you had thousands at stake."

Ainslee laughed unpleasantly as he pushed the chips from him. "I must confess I do get excited," he said, "I suppose I'd play forever if nobody stopped me."

George Andrews stretched himself well as he said: "We might as well settle up and go home. I'm getting sleepy. It's time I was in my little trundle bed."

The men took out their pocket-books—Henry Blackwood to receive what he had won and the other three men to pay their debts.

As Blackwood was putting away his winnings the telephone rang.

"There's a long distance call for you, Blackwood," said Dunlap, who had answered the telephone.

"Good!" exclaimed Blackwood eagerly, "I know who it is," and he hurriedly left the room, unconsciously leaving his pocket-book on the table.

"Come on, let's have something before we go," suggested Andrews.

"All right," said Dunlap, but Ainslee did not answer.

"Don't you want anything, Ainslee?" asked Fred.

"No," he answered, and the others saw that he was in no mood to be coaxed.

Jim Ainslee's father had left him fairly well off in his early youth, but he was careless and fond of show, so that at thirty he had very little money left. So little, in fact, that he was constantly in debt and never was sure how he could get out. The men he associated with were all doing well in a business way, but Jim had not gone into business when he should have, and now he found himself without means of getting his living.

His friends were not aware of his condition, having known of the money left him by his father and not realizing that he had run through it all.

When the three men returned they found Jim sitting at the table where they had left him, smoking.

"Oh, here it is," Blackwood said, picking up his pocket-book.

"Yes, you left it there when you went out," said Jim without looking at him.

"How much was that bill, Fred? That's my treat."

Blackwood opened his wallet to take out the money. To his surprise the majority of the bills had disappeared.

"Why—Who's been in here? Ainslee, did you go out?"

Jim remembered that he had said the wallet was on the table, so there was nothing to say but that he had been there all the time.

"It's absurd to think anybody took it. You must have put it in some of your pockets."

"That's just as absurd, but I'll look."

Blackwood began to go through his pockets. The three men watched him in silence.

"No," he said at last. "Not there."

"Let's look on the floor, you might have dropped it," suggested Andrews.

But the money was nowhere to be found.

They stood in silence for a moment, plainly embarrassed. Then Dunlap said:

"Look here, fellows. I don't like this. Blackwood went out and left us three here with that money. Something queer has happened and I insist upon being searched. Could you identify the money, Blackwood?"

"I can't exactly say I could identify it, but I know that I had four fifties and five twenties in new bills that came from the bank this afternoon. I think that is all that's gone. Yes," he continued after looking in his wallet, "the small bills are here.

"Dunlap is right," said Andrews earnestly. "You must search us." He turned to Ainslee.

"Why, of course," he said quickly, "of course."

"I can't do that, boys," Blackwood said in distress. "You know I don't suspect you, although it is mysterious."

"But you must do it," insisted Fred. "You owe it to us to do it."

"Well, if you put it that way, I'll have to, but it's ridiculous."

Silently Blackwood went through Fred's pockets. "There, you idiot," he laughed when he had finished, "are you satisfied?"

Ainslee walked to the fireplace and lighted a cigarette.

"My turn," said Andrews, and Blackwood went through the same action as he had with Dunlap.

"Come on, Ainslee, prove that you are an honest man," called Fred.

Jim crossed the room to where the three men stood. "If we weren't friends," he said nervously, "I would be in a peculiar position. I went to the bank this afternoon and I am afraid my bills are very similar to Blackwood's. Go ahead."

The second pocket Blackwood put his hand into contained a roll of bills. He drew it out hesitatingly and then he stopped.

"Say, I feel like a dog," he said. "It's awful to do this."

"Count them," said Fred in a hard voice. Jim looked at him quickly.

Blackwood counted. When he had finished the four men stood in silence. There were four fifty and five twenty dollar bills.

Jim tried to look unconcerned, but the consciousness of the three pairs of eyes upon him made it impossible. His face flushed crimson and he turned from his friends

"My God!" said Blackwood hoarsely. "Jim, say it isn't so."

Jim turned toward the others almost fiercely. "Yes, it is so!" he cried. "I might as well let you know the whole truth now. I took the money because I was desperate. Fellows, I've run through all the money my father left me and I'm hard up. You see I wanted to keep up appearances and it's been a pretty bad business."

"But why—why in the world didn't you ask us for money?" asked Blackwood.

"I didn't want you to know. Pride I guess."

"What are you going to do, Blackwood?" asked Dunlap.

"Why I—I don't know—I——"

"You wouldn't expose me, would you, boys?" pleaded Jim, and they saw in his face the look of a coward.

Blackwood looked at the others. "Will you leave it in my hands?" he asked.

They nodded and he turned to Ainslee. "I shall do nothing about this at all, but it is for the sake of past friendship. I am going to write on this paper a promise not to betray you, and we will all three sign it. After that we had better part."

Blackwood seated himself and drew a sheet of paper toward him. He wrote silently for a few moments, then made three copies of what covered the first sheet.

When the three men had signed their names each four times, Blackwood handed one copy to Jim Ainslee.

"Are you satisfied?" he asked.

"Yes. Good-night," and Ainslee hurriedly left them.

The thoughts of the three men were too heavy and too intense for expression. They left the club almost in silence.

Jim Ainslee had grown up with them and had been on the most intimate terms. And now, to-night, that they had seen the true nature of the man they felt very depressed. It was not merely the fact that he had stolen the money, but his actions and looks upon discovery.

So strongly was Blackwood affected by the occurrence that he went out very little that winter. About the only places he went were to the club and to see Elsie Condon.

He was not engaged to the girl but he hoped some day to be, and eventually to marry her. He believed that she loved him, but she was young and wished to be entirely free for awhile. Blackwood was content to have it so, for his hopes for the future were strong.

But when summer came something seemed to happen. Elsie left town in May for her father's summer home. She had told Blackwood that she would let him know when she wanted him to come up. But the summer came and went, with less and less frequent letters, and never a word about Blackwood's visit.

In October Elsie returned and before Blackwood had seen her he heard at the club that she was engaged to Jim Ainslee. At first he didn't believe it and said so.

"Well, you know Jim's aunt died this summer and left him a snug little sum, and he's no fool when it comes to making love to women," said one of the men.

Blackwood decided to go to Elsie at once.

When he was shown into the parlor who should he find present but Ainslee. After greeting Elsie he turned to Jim, and looking him in the eyes he said: "I think it will be necessary for me to make a few remarks to Miss Condon in private, Mr. Ainslee."

Jim smiled a smile of security. "You have not forgotten the twenty-ninth of September, I am sure," he said.

The color left Blackwood's face. He had forgotten for the moment, that he could not expose Jim.

"I have not forgotten," he said, "but I should like to speak to Miss Condon alone."

Jim went into the other room.

Blackwood began at once: "You are engaged to Mr. Ainslee?" he asked. "I think you owe it to me to tell me that."

Elsie lowered her eyes for a moment. "Yes, I am. We shall be married about Christmas."

"Very well. Thank you. Good-day."

Blackwood left the house. When he reached his rooms the first thing he did was to find in his desk the paper of the memorable night at the club.

There it was in plain writing: "I solemnly swear upon my word of honor as a gentleman never to tell what occurred among the undersigned and James C. Ainslee on the evening of September 29th, 19—. As long as I live.

"HENRY BLACKWOOD,
"FREDERICK DUNLAP,
"GEORGE ANDREWS."

No, he could not do it. He had given his word of honor and he would be compelled to see the girl he loved marry a man he knew to be a scoundrel.

He looked at the paper again. Suddenly the last words seemed to stand out in letters of fire: "As long as I live." The paper fell from his hand and he covered his face. "That is the only solution," he whispered. "I'll do it for her sake."

For an hour Blackwood sat silent, with closed eyes. Then he went to the desk and wrote the following note:

"I have given my word of honor not to tell what I am going to tell as long as I live. Therefore it is necessary to do what I am about to do.

Jim Ainslee is a thief and a coward. I do this to save Elsie.

"HENRY BLACKWOOD."

He addressed an envelope to Mr. Charles Condon and put the note into it.

Taking from a drawer of his desk a revolver, he inspected it carefully and laid it beside the note. Then he went into his bedroom to remove his clothing. He knew what he had to do and he had steeled himself to do it.

He did not hear a rap on his outer door, followed by someone entering the room.

An elderly man came into the room and looked around him.

"Well," he thought. "I must have beat him home. I'll wait awhile and see if he comes."

The man's eyes fell upon the revolver.

"Hello! What's this?" he said under his breath. "And a note for me," as he saw the note addressed by Blackwood.

The natural thing to do was to read the note and Mr. Condon did so.

As he finished he turned at a slight noise behind him. Blackwood stood there in his dressing gown.

"Good God, man, what does this mean!" exclaimed the older man.

"Just what you read."

"Then I've just come in time to save you and you haven't broke your word either."

"It seems so," answered Blackwood in a lifeless voice.

"Do you know," went on Mr. Condon excitedly, "I overheard what you said to Ainslee at our house a while ago and as I never liked him it set me thinking. So I followed you here as soon as I could."

He crossed to Blackwood and put his hand on the young man's shoulder. "How you must love my little girl," he said.

"I do love her and I wished to save her misery."

"I have a very strong suspicion," said Mr. Condon, "that that man has some queer influence over Elsie. I believe she loves you, Blackwood."

Blackwood smiled sadly and shook his head.

"Well, anyway, I'm going to try a scheme. I'm going to tell Elsie about this occurrence and then I'm going to take her to Europe to recover from the shock. She'll have plenty of time to think of your devotion and bravery. And then—well, wait and see."

A faint spark of hope burned in Blackwood's breast. He determined not to see Elsie until she had had time to know her own mind. That evening he left town to stay until the girl had gone to Europe.

Blackwood spent a pretty bad winter, but when the bright days of spring came his heart was cheered. A cable came for him which read: "Coming back. Hurrah! Condon."

NEW YORK MOVING PICTURE LEAGUE

The motion picture exhibitors of New York are certainly boosting their second annual ball.

Mr. A. Coleman, chairman, announced at the meeting that he had ordered ten thousand (10,000) souvenir programs and that he had received advertisements sufficient for forty or fifty pages of the same.

The whole of the actors and actresses in the Vitagraph, Rex, Imp, Pathé and other players of all the first-class picture producers have promised to attend.

The entertainment has been arranged and will give two hours of varied amusement to all who attend.

The proprietors of the Palm Garden have procured two of the finest orchestra bands and are preparing to enlarge both halls to accommodate the great number we expect.

SCENE FROM "THE BUTTERFLY"
Majestic release Sept. 24.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Correspondence Schools

EVERY month sees the crop of "Schools for Photoplaywrights" growing larger and the courses and advantages offered by them constantly being extended. The number of students reached by them is steadily increasing and all are meeting with more or less disappointment at the end of their studies. It cannot be denied that the correspondence school has its place in the educational world to-day. Thousands who through poverty have been unable to attend regular schools and colleges, have been enrolled in correspondence schools and have greatly profited. However, these are not schools for pictureplaywrights. This field was overcrowded from the start for the reason that the entire scheme is a delusion and a snare. No person can be taught to write picture plays through a correspondence school. By means of misleading advertisements and a skilled portrayal of some exceptional success scored by a highly talented individual, the irresponsible "school" for ambitious writers of the pictureplay have lured thousands to enroll in their courses and then have failed to teach their dupes even the practical rudiments of the subject offered. The student has found that long hours of work have gone for naught when his manuscripts, prepared so carefully upon instructions from the "school," have been returned.

The current magazines are full of the advertisements of the "courses" for pictureplay writers. "It's easy," "make $50 a week writing pictureplays," "we show you how," "no education necessary." These and other misleading statements trap the unwary at this season of the year and separate the dupe from his hard-earned money.

There isn't a responsible trade journal in the field today that will recommend one of these schools; there isn't a successful pictureplaywright who will endorse the courses; there isn't a responsible scenario editor in the business that will honestly advise a beginner to pay for and go through one of these courses. And still the steady stream of gold flows into the coffers of the "correspondence schools" which advertise "Photoplay Building" where there is no such building; tell the students they can "make $50 weekly" when an expert cannot make so much; say that "no education is necessary" when education is necessary. Take the advice of those who have investigated the school subject and save your money, beginners. It is our honest advice, and we know. Write to the manufacturers for scenario forms; study the pictures on the screen, read the stories of releases in the trade papers. You will gain more in the end than you will by paying out $10 or $25 to a correspondence school. We confess we were rather surprised to see Collier's Weekly "also doing it." That great national weekly, published in the cause of reform, we thought was above printing the advertisements of correspondence schools for pictureplay writers when a little investigation among authorities would have convinced the editor that such schools cannot fulfill promises made.

Not in the Market

The Gaumont Company does not require pictureplay scripts of any kind as the concern does not take pictures in this country. A number of writers have been sending scripts to Gaumont believing the company in the market and Gaumont wishes all writers to know that they are not purchasing any scripts.

Better Be Careful

Be careful about answering the advertisements of concerns you do not know, and which ask for pictureplay scripts. Several readers of this department have been "stung" recently. Better stay with the old standbys, Universal, Film Supply and Patents branches.

Warning to Pessimists

A. Van Buren Powell, president of the Order of Optimists, was a guest of Epes Winthrop Sargent's party September 7th, for the express purpose of initiating Mr. Sargent and others into the great and beneficent order. Mr. Sargent paid his dues some time ago and has been presented with the password of the fraternity. It is understood the guests formed an Optimist Chapter meeting before cigars were passed. Anyhow, President Powell writes in on the "plot-stealing" bug and his experience as related should prove a dire warning to those who will not optimize. Our worthy president soliloquizes in the following:

> "Oh, unhappy day! Is that veritable virago, 'Plot-theft' never to be vanquished? Must We Optimists, like Perseus of old, burnish silvered shields, and with averted eyes, seek to sever the squirming, snaky headpiece from this modern Medusa, only to find that it will writhe about hoisting, hissing heads though lifted from its loathsome location? If such must we do, then let us e'en start everybody doing it.
>
> "Speaking of this plot-stealing bug recalls an incident of my recent trip that should serve as a warning to all who will not optimize.
>
> "While at Matteawan I was permitted a visit to a certain State institution there located. As soon as the attendant learned that I wrote pictureplays he led me, with an air of importance, to a heavily barred door, through which we gazed into a heavily padded room wherein, at a heavily built table, a heavily frowning individual was busily engaged upon some strange task. He ignored us as we entered. I saw that the top of the table was laid out in large squares, each of them inscribed with the name of a film manufacturing company, such as Imp, Vitagraph, etc. He laid a lump of sugar on a square and waited. A fly alighted and approached the sugar. Ere it could even near the sweet, the inmate, with a whoop, made a swoop with a folded newspaper—and the fly was no more.
>
> "The attendant nudged me. 'What are you doing, my friend?' I asked. The man looked up, moving the sugar to another square.
>
> "Well, you see, I am a photoplaywright," he explained.
>
> "And the sugar ——" I pursued.
>
> "That represents an original picture plot."
>
> "And the flies ——" I prompted.
>
> He swatted one on Kalem ere it could taste the sweet.
>
> "Ughrrr!" he growled, "those are editors."

Where to Put It.

San Francisco has become all "het up" over an argument he has been having with another one of those successful pictureplaywrights of the Pacific Coast. The argument: Shall the cast of characters come before or after the synopsis? Personally we write the title of the script, then the cast of characters, then the synopsis. Then starting a fresh sheet we start the scenic action. Some prefer the synopsis after the title, then the cast of characters. If you use a short cast (which is wise) it makes little difference whether the cast comes before or after the short synopsis for you can get it all on one sheet. You can easily get a good striking synopsis into two hundred words. Keep at it until you do.

Experience a Teacher

Topeka, Kansas, writes:

> "Some months ago I thought you were prejudiced on the 'correspondence school' subject and and so I have recently finished a $20 course. I want to say for the good of other writers who read your department that you knew exactly what you were talking about when you got on the school subject. I find a book on the subject at one dollar more desirable than correspondence lessons which do not teach the essential points. I do not think the correspondence plan worth the money I paid. My own opinion is that brains are the essential in writing pictureplays."

Honestly, we just couldn't resist using the above testimonial. Several more on file. Names furnished on application.

A Wee Bit of a Notice.

To those energetic gentlemen who have been using the names and addresses of writers mentioned from time to time in this department in order to worry them with offers, contests, etc., we beg to state that no more names or addresses will be printed unless we are given especial permission so to do by the writer. Our correspondents need not feel uneasy about querying us as before. Names will be held confidential and replies will be made as usual by mail providing you enclose the stamped self-addressed envelope. Come along, we like to hear from you.

The Town of Struthers

Struthers, Ohio, consists of a tank, the postoffice and general store, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the sawmill. Yet we received a letter from Struthers that caused us to sit up and take notice. Einsel & Ressler, of Struthers, wish to furnish editors with "neatly printed" rejection cards bearing on the reverse side a free advertisement informing writers that the versatile firm at Struthers will revise Mss., negotiate a sale, etc. "You never get anything in this world unless you ask for it," reads the letter. If that is true, enterprising Struthers should flourish like a green bay tree for the asking part will be nicely looked after, all right, all right.

Perseverance Conquers

A lady wrote into the Universal Script Clearing House and said she proposed sending in a script a week until one was accepted. Mr. Reid, head of the department, and who is noted for his liberal and prompt payments for acceptable stuff and who sometimes writes pleasing notes on margins of rejection slips, is quoted in a house-organ as saying that "he admired the lady's determination and hoped she would succeed." And it is said that every week the script goes into headquarters. Mr. Reid, by the way, has contributed a very interesting article to this department. It will appear next week.

Leaves Universal

It is announced that Mr. Hal Reid, who has been editor of the Universal Script Reading Bureau, will shortly sever his connection with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is said that he may return to directing picture productions.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

The first German school to have a moving picture machine as a regular part of its equipment is in Thuringia. The apparatus will be used mainly in geography and nature study.

* * * *

It is interesting to know that in Schuylkill County, Pa., the moving picture theatres have hit the saloons such a hard blow that out of the 1,200 saloons in Schuylkill, only 30 per cent. of them are making money. The other 70 per cent. are seriously thinking of going out of the business.

* * * *

The following from the Atlantic City, N. J., Evening Union is only another instance of feminine influence and handiwork:

"When Mr. B. F. Keith in 1908 had come to the conclusion that the cheap moving picture show could be made both clean and profitable, he tested his theory by opening the Bijou Dream in Boston, with Mrs. Josephine Clement, Brookline social leader and wife of a former editor as free and unfettered manager. His only stipulations were that moving pictures should be the main entertainment, and that the price of admission should remain ten cents.

"Now, after four years, students of the cheap-entertainment problem all over the United States are ready to testify to the excellence and educational value of the performances at the Bijou Dream, while as to the very essential matter of financial success Mrs. Clement says, 'There are five shows a day, and it is rare indeed that at least three out of these five do not call for the "Standing Room Only" notice outside.'

"Mrs. Clement began by fitting the Bijou Dream as tastefully as if it were a high-priced theatre. The entrance is faced with marble and banked with growing ferns; there is a lobby with writing-desks and armchairs, and a ladies' room with a maid constantly in attendance. The ushers are presentable young women in uniforms of gray nun's-veiling, caps, kerchiefs and aprons.

"The theatre is not kept in darkness during performances, but is illuminated by a violet light which does not impair the clearness of the pictures. Musical selections neither too trashy nor too heavy, but such as will appeal to all, are played by trained musicians. Mrs. Clement's latest innovation is the weekly one-act play, and many plays written by students of Harvard and Radcliffe have their first presentation on the stage of the Bijou Dream."

* * * *

The following from the Louisville Courier is rather good:

"What do you think of the war?"

"What war?"

"The war in Tripoli."

"I really can't say. I haven't seen any of the films."

* * * *

The latest invention of E. S. Dinisthorpe is the Stentorphone. A private demonstration was recently given of a play and several songs, with camera illustrations, in London, at one of the Strand picture theatres. A farce was given in which the photographed characters spoke in complete accord with every movement, the singing being in harmony with melody and motion.

* * * *

The following from the Minneapolis Journal is interesting:

"The motion picture will be used in the Minneapolis public schools this fall in teaching history and geography. Board of education members say motion pictures and stereopticon slides will give a pupil a better and more lasting idea of the country or character being studied than books. More than half the schools in the city now have their own stereopticon machines and with a circulating library of slides treating the different countries and historical subjects it is planned to make them a part of the school work at least once a week. To encourage high-class music in the public schools, T. P. Giddings, supervisor of music, is planning to equip every school in the city this year with a phonograph. "It will help greatly in creating enthusiasm for real good music in the school pupils," said Mr. Giddings yesterday, "and I think every school in the city should have one." In some of the schools phonographs have been purchased and concerts have been given from time to time, at which only the highest class music has been given.

* * * *

The following quotation from an article which appeared recently in the San Antonio, Tex., Express should be encouraging to the trade:

"The action of the federal authorities in the City of Mexico in establishing free moving picture shows for the benefit of the lower class of the people as a means of keeping them from drinking places, is wise and commendable, and it is believed will result in good, in affording amusement and entertainment of a wholesome character to the people. At the same time the shows, if properly conducted and the right sort of pictures are provided, will have a tendency to educate and elevate a class that is now extremely ignorant.

"In Mexico, where there are thousands who cannot afford to spend more than the few centavos charged for admission, it is necessary for the government to establish shows for their benefit. They have been accustomed to spend their evenings in pulque shops, where their scanty earnings have been swept away despite the fact that they and those dependent upon them have not comfortable food or clothing, and the vile drink found in such places inflames their passions and makes them troublesome for the officers to deal with, particularly when the government already has its hands full keeping down malcontents among the higher classes.

"But, as has been said, the moving picture show is an institution worthy of encouragement in any country, and as its character improves it will become more valuable to the people."

* * * *

According to the Springfield (Mass.) Morning Union, the civilizing influence of the American motion picture is being felt in far-away Servia, where the younger generation in the last six months has been having its hair cut American fashion, has been wearing clothes cut on American lines and otherwise has been endeavoring to imitate the actors whose pictures appear on the curtains. The popularity of American pictures abroad suggests the desirability of using them for advertising American products in the Balkan countries, where new railroad lines are being built, new territory being opened up and old industries modernized.

THE CHRONO-KINETOGRAPH

John Cort, president of the Cort-Kitsee Company, gave the initial demonstration of the Chrono-Kinetograph, a speaking-moving-picture device, at St. Timothy Hall, Ridge avenue and Vassar street, Wissahickon Station, Philadelphia, on Monday afternoon, September 16th.

Dr. Isadore Kitsee, the inventor and patentee of the Chrono-Kinetograph, made his first attempt to master a device for the development of speaking-moving pictures in the year 1905. In his laboratories in Philadelphia he first produced films in which, through a chemical process, the exact spacing was attained. Later on he used electro-magnetic means for this purpose, evolving his present device, which may be applied to any of the existing types of projecting machines, synchronizing the same with any existing types of phonograph machines; in other words, given a picture house already equipped with a projecting machine, Dr. Kitsee is able to synchronize the same with a phonograph of any type desired, either of his own invention or any of the machines already on the market. The art of perfecting a speaking-talking device which positively synchronizes has been the ambition of the greatest inventors throughout the entire world, and much has been written of the claims of aspirants to these same honors.

Dr. Kitsee is an inventor of exceptional genius. The "Central" battery system, now generally used in all telephone exchanges, was invented by him in 1887, and was sold to the Western Electric Company (closely allied to the Bell Telephone Company). Without the central battery system telephony, as it is understood to-day, would be an impossibility.

The first patent issued from the United States Patent Office for "wireless telegraphy" was granted to Dr. Kitsee on November 26, 1895, under Patent No. 550,510. The first patent issued to G. Marconi from the United States Patent Office bears date of July 13, 1897, No. 586,193. On account of sickness at the time the doctor transferred his patents to a wireless syndicate.

The so-called "Portable-Kitsee," a semi-dry storage battery, is still used to a great extent in automobiling, and by one of the largest telegraph companies in connection with its submarine cable transmission.

According to the most prominent electrical magazines (the Electrical World and the Electrical Review) of April 30, 1910, Dr. Kitsee was the first to successfully cable across the ocean in Morse characters and receive the message with a common sounder.

About six years ago one of the largest phonograph companies secured the patent of Dr. Kitsee for "making original phonograph records," and it is said that all records since that time are made with the process as outlined in this patent. Users of phonograph records may never have heard the inventor's name, but yet have recognized the big improvement in recent sound records.

As a coincidence it may be remarked that in 1896 Dr. Kitsee made application in Germany for a wireless station in a dirigible balloon and was refused by the office; the reason given was that such a station would be impracticable.

* * * *

The following program was given to a full representation of the Cinematograph and theatrical interests and was an immense success. The synchronism was perfect and under control:

1. Duet—"I Love to Tell the Story."
2. Solo—"I've Got Rings on My Fingers."
3. Original Playlet—"The Lord's Prayer."
4. Quartet—"Down Where the Mohawk Flows."
5. Duet—"Just Before the Battle, Mother."
6. Solo—"Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms."
7. "The Angelus," with Chimes.
8. Duet—"Alexander's Ragtime Band."
9. Solo—"My Carolina Lady."

* * * *

The Uno Manufacturing Co., of, Wissahickon, Pa. James D. Law, president, and Duff C. Law, vice-president, did all the work in connection with the development of this invention, the pictures and round reproductions being made at the Uno factory.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

At the recent congress of dentists in this city, the motion picture played an important and entertaining part. Under the title of "Toothache" a pathetic and humorous drama was enacted which is common in many households. This formed the offering of the National Mouth Hygiene Association, showing how a father wild with the toothache is persuaded by his little daughter to go to the dentist and how, being relieved of the pain, he is so delighted with the result that he is willing to pay a higher sum than will be accepted.

The film is very educational in that it clearly demonstrates that the toothache pain is not the field of the family doctor, but for the dentist; that the seed of proper attention of the teeth must be planted in the child; that the relief that comes from a visit to the dentist banishes a goodly part of the supposed horrors of that chair. It also brings out the most up-to-date equipments and hygienic and surroundings of the modern dental offices.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the film to the investigator and dental fraternity are those scenes which show the scientific experiments which have been carried on in the public schools of Cleveland, O., for the purpose of ascertaining the value of a healthy condition of the mouth. Proper mastication, the tooth brush drill, use of dental floss, and the diseased condition of neglected mouths are brought out in detail. The improvement of these children in digestion, general health, disposition and facial features after these experiments was wonderful.

An interview with Dr. W. G. Ebersole, secretary-treasurer of the National Mouth Hygiene Association, on the value of the motion picture in the dental profession will probably interest everyone: "I consider the motion picture about the best and surest means of teaching the public mouth hygiene that can be procured. It makes the mother, father and children think on subjects they never thought about before; it makes them realize more forcibly the harmful results of neglect and the necessity of a healthy mouth.

In our present scenario of "Toothache" we presented a home drama that teaches many lessons and which is at the same time interesting. This reel is our first in this direction and it will be circulated among the motion picture theatres in all cities. We will have others made which will prove equally as entertaining and instructive that may be used by schools for the promotion of hygiene and sanitation. It is also our intention to have taken a number of more scientific films which will be exceedingly useful to the dental profession. The value of the motion picture in clinical work is limitless; the industry has only begun its most needful career in this direction.

"The experiments we have made in the public schools of Cleveland would never have been so far-reaching if only confined in an official report of words; but put, though only in part, in motion picture form, it has already caught public attention and interest, and the film is now ready for distribution. Other educators and scientific men want to do likewise. This is the age of "show me," and the motion picture is the best live illustrator we have at present." W. H.

NICHOLAS POWER CO. ANNOUNCE INCREASED BUSINESS AND FACILITIES FOR HANDLING IT

The Nicholas Power Co. have added an extra floor to their factory and are now occupying over 2,400 square feet of space.

On account of the big demands for their machines they are ten days behind on deliveries, which has necessitated their adding a night shift of over ninety men. They employ a regular force of over 225 men in addition to the extra force just established.

Casey, Iowa—R. C. Otis has opened an electric theatre here.

Davenport, Iowa—J. H. Blanchard sold the Iowa Theatre to Oscar Wernentin.

Decorah, Iowa—E. K. Hoyden is succeeded by Henry Wolfgram in the Empire Theatre.

MOVING PICTURES AID IN EDUCATION

Tend to Enhance the Work of Schools and Libraries

(By Mary Lawton Metcalfe)

"No woman in America has helped to give moving picture interests a place in civic and patriotic education as has Mrs. Metcalfe in her series of articles in the Moving Picture News."

This was the gracious remark of Sidney Ascher, the shining light in the Greater New York Moving Picture League and vice-president of the National Association.

At the Eden Musée last winter, I had an audience of four hundred teachers, club-women, librarians and professional folk.

We know that the eye learns more rapidly than the ear; and that it is the scenes impressed on this brain camera which make indelible impression. Only the most narrow-minded past edition of educators will pull down the blinds and shut out the advantages of illustrated teaching.

I have been asked to write an article expressing my ideas and an authority on the desirability of moving pictures in the school sessions.

It will be a great mistake, verily, to take any more time in those precious five hours from the indispensable elementary English work, letter writing and arithmetic.

Every parents' and teachers' club should protest against this innovation. This seems drastic work against the trade of which I am a recognized champion. But it is not. I know that the moving picture theatre, the public library, the public school in practical co-operation, form a powerful triumvirate in public, civic and patriotic education.

The club of parents and teachers at Westerleigh is much interested in supplying illustrated teaching. I urged the club to co-operate with the moving picture theatre men in their neighborhood, for all these men whom I have met in the trade and interviewed are doing their best to "give the town just what it demands."

The picture suggests a definite line of reading; the theatre, therefore, may be used as the vestibule of the public libraries. We are teaching English literature in the moving picture theatres, botany, chemistry, zoology, science, biology, and in such attractive methods that the lessons at night are never dull. Not only do the children learn more from the pictures, but the adults and parents of the home are getting a university extension course, which would be impossible to understand except through the eyes.

I believe with the wonderful films taken by the Edison Company in the Holy Land we can do greater teaching in the public places than ever from the catechism articles.

It is simply the old habit of not patronizing the new idea, which chains up the wheels of progress.

A woman in Louisiana has revolutionized the work of public education by being the connecting link between the public schools and moving picture theatres. And this work we can do right here in this borough and in Greater New York.

Take the Odeon and Park Theatres, for instance. Both Mr. Greene, the proprietor, and Mr. Leo are perfectly willing to illustrate in films any subjects which are being taught in the classrooms.

Such men as Mark Twain and Elbert Hubbard have written the strongest kind of endorsement of the moving picture trade, as an agent in every community for educational entertainment.

We have asked that scenes of sorrow, death and tragedy, in any form, be refused, and yet there are some people who will take children into theatres where only "thrillers" are featured.

In an interview with Mr. Greene at the Odeon, I find that he has opened up this well ventilated picture theatre and is anxious to respond to the suggestions of parents and teachers of schools Nos. 15 and 16 to furnish such films as will be supplementary to their classroom work, besides helping to increase the circulation in the public libraries. Alfred Saunders, of Westerleigh, editor of Moving Picture News, stands only in his trade journal for the great educational uplift movement that is on the threshold of promoting the enormous commercial enterprise into the front ranks of public agents for distribution of knowledge.—Staten Islander.

KLEINE RELEASES

"A Cavalier's Romance"—the Cines film to be released by George Kleine, Tuesday, September 24th—is a charming love idyll with gallant and richly costumed courtiers and beautiful noblewomen of the Court of France in the seventeenth century as the principal factors, and love, jealousy, bitter rivalry and the inevitable duel on the "field of honor" forming the theme and main action.

Of all the beauty spots of scenically magnificent Italy, there is none fairer to look upon nor more interesting than the old, quaint and historic eighth century town of Castrovillari in southern Italy, which has been finely pictured by Cines and added to complete the "Cavalier's Romance" reel.

Self-abnegation and a life's devotion form the basis around which the Eclipse picture-drama released Wednesday, September 25th, entitled "The Sacrifice," is built. This splendid film is ably presented by the capable Eclipse players assisted by a large company of supernumeraries.

George Gambard, who so humorously portrays the character of Mr. Stout in the Cines films, will be seen in the release of Saturday, September 28th, as a country yokel—a "come-on." As Reuben in "Reuben and the Boys," he plays the unsophisticated "boob" with a naturalness that is intensely amusing.

Berlin, N. H.—The proprietors of the Gem Theatre have leased the theatre for the coming year to F. S. Story, of Lyndonville, Vt., and he will take possession immediately.

New Hampton, Ia.—The Idle Hour Theatre has been purchased by a Mr. Matlock.

Wellsburg, Ia.—Eells & Chase will soon open the Crystal Theatre.

Hearne, Neb.—Emmett Rohde will open a motion picture theatre here.

THE CUCKOO CLOCK
Reliance release Sept. 28th.

"THE LUCKY LOSER"

Eclair Release, October 3d

"The Lucky Loser" is one of those free, easy swinging comedies on love and frivolity. It deals with the flirtations of a young lady intent on leading the young fellows to propose, and then joyfully turning them down, that she may gloat and boast over the hearts she has broken. But when mamma gets wise to the situation, daughter is told to make a choice among three young eligibles, or beget herself back to boarding school. Daughter having neither taste nor desire for convent school life, if, of course forced to the other alternative of marriage; but whom to choose is her perplexing question.

So she plans to have the three young men race to New Rochelle, where the winner is to find the wife-to-be awaiting his victorious arrival.

The one fellow she loved best down in her heart of hearts, is tricked by the other two, and left injured by the roadside. He wires the girl, who rushes to his side and promises him her hand. Then she hurries back to meet the victor of the race. When he arrives she brings forth a colored maid, for she had merely promised the winner he would find a wife. It was her good fortune not to have said in implicit fashion, that she was to be the wife-to-be.

She was just a quick-witted girl who could take advantage of technicality.

ECLAIR EMPLOYEES' BALL

The Eclair Employees' Association announces a ball to be given on Friday, September 27th at Cella's Hall, Fort Lee. Mr. H. Maire, technical director of the Eclair plant is president of the association and he promises a great big whole-hearted good time to all who will journey over to attend. Tickets 50 cents each.

Mr. Maire insists that there is not a better place on this side of the world for "eats" than is Cella's cuisine. He argues the beauty of the village as an attraction, Eclair's beauty chorus and an abundance of lover's lanes. All of which is quite some luring argument. He says Miss Tennant has promised to make no attempt to make her eyes behave which vision alone is worth the journey abroad to Jersey shores. Isabel and Muriel, and Isabel's mother, too, have signed a bond to appear. Miss Stewart consents to chaperone if formality is to be desired. Little Clara Horton has secured her mother's consent to stay up till eleven. Geo. Larkin will start a buck and wing contest. Johnstone promises a dance to every girl, if they all desire. Francis threatens to prove he's not as old as he acts and Frazer will put his bells on. Sterling will give every one a part for the next day. Grisel may be induced to come with Bill Haddock. And last, but not least, if abduction plans do not miscarry, they will have E. Arnaud in the midsts of the "welcome to our village" Eclairites. So on and so forth. Come—be friendly.

Springville, N Y.—Nicholas Hotton, of Franklinville, N. Y., has leased Godard Hall with a seating capacity of 700 and will install a moving picture show commencing Saturday, September 21.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

In an interview with Mr. C. Kersell regarding the use of the name "101 Bison," he said:

"New York Motion Picture Company and five other motion picture manufacturers, together with the agent for Eastman motion picture film, attempted to enter into a combination under the corporate name of Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"From this combination New York Motion Picture Company withdrew on the ground of a violation of contract by the parties of the combination including Universal Company, and on other grounds, the details of which need not be set forth herein.

"The Universal Company, promptly upon receipt from New York Motion Picture Company of notice of withdrawal, commenced an action in the Supreme Court of this State, and made a simultaneous motion for an injunction against the New York Motion Picture Company, and its officers, directors and stockholders. After receipt of voluminous affidavits and exhibits, numbering about sixty, and covering several hundred pages, the motion was absolutely denied. The final trial will not be reached for several months, but the decision of the court on the preliminary motion may be accepted as an indication of the final result of the action.

"Universal Company also commenced an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles, California, and a motion there made for an injunction, which, if granted, would have made it impossible for the New York Motion Picture Company to do business in the State of California. The New York Motion Picture Company was not equipped in California with the evidence with which it defeated the motion in New York, whereas the Universal Company had all of the papers to make out a prima facie case. Notwithstanding this, the California Court granted only limited injuctive relief, and compelled the Universal Company to file a bond in the sum of $25,000, and the onerous conditions of this injunction were promptly lifted pending the appeal by New York Motion Picture Company filing a bond in a like amount. This limited injunctive relief coupled with the heavy bond required from the Universal Company, would indicate in the mind of the court, its doubt of the right of the Universal Company to final relief in the action.

"The result of the litigation to this point contains nothing whatsoever to justify that claim of Universal Company that it is entitled to use the brands "Bison" and "101 Bison," and if the New York Motion Picture Company claims are unheld by the court in the litigation now pending, Universal Company will be prohibited from using those tradenames."

J. B. CLYMER SUCCEEDS A. K. GREENLAND AT GAUMONT

Mr. J. B. Clymer, formerly a copy reader at the New York Herald, has succeeded Mr. A. K. Greenland in the publicity department of the Gaumont Company, at Flushing L. I., who recently vacated that position to take charge of the offices of the Billboard in Chicago.

"THE OLD DOCTOR'S HUMANITY"
Eclair release Oct. 1st.

GERRARD FILM CO., LONDON, ENG.

In our advertising columns will be noticed the announcement of the Gerrard Film Co., Ltd., London, who have just opened up business at that mecca of the British film trade—"The Film House," Gerrard street. The Gerrard Film Co., Ltd., are open to take exclusive British or European agencies for one American film, and as the company is under the personal direction of Mr. E. H. Bishop, who paid us a long visit to New York last summer. I can safely predict a fine future for it, and can assure those American makers in want of live representation that they cannot do better than write to the Gerrard Film Co., Ltd.

Talking of The Film House, London, this is an interesting and successful experiment in the British trade. It was started some three years ago, a modest building of four floors; two years ago its capacity was doubled by the addition of the next door premises; now it is certainly the centre of the film trade in London, and the ceaseless hum of many machines may be heard all day.

The Tyler Film Co., Ltd, representing "Eclair" and "Itala," have a sumptuous little theatre and close alongside is the British home of the "Bisons." These are sold by the Cosmopolitan Film Co., Ltd., who have a most comfortable and well equipped theatre—in fact, the note throughout the "Film House" is convenience and comfort for buyers and showmen. The latter, although not buyers, are welcomed, and are able to see and arrange their theatre programs many weeks in advance of release dates.

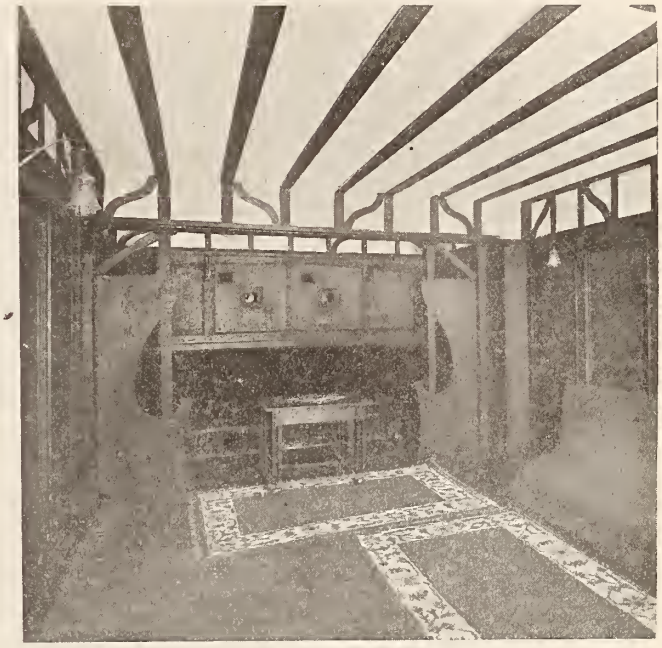
On the next floor, our old friend Mr. Montague, has large and spacious showrooms for Selig productions, and on the same floor the new Gerrard Film Co., Ltd., have just opened a capital show theatre. They have already the representation of one or two important Continental films.

Up above, Mr. Prieuer, the International, as well known in Paris and London as in New York City—presides over the British sales of Lux and Nestor and other films.

The Englishman is sometimes blamed for his slowness, but no time is wasted at the "Film House"; duplicate machines are installed in the projecting chambers, which are all built solid and fireproof, whilst the machines are all motor driven.

Besides the showrooms mentioned above, three or four foreign buyers have offices in the "Film House," and make it their headquarters.

Our readers can quite understand that the provincial buyers and showmen make a visit to the "Film House," where they can see under one roof such an immense variety of subjects—a standing weekly engagement.



TWO VIEWS OF THE PROJECTING ROOM, GERRARD FILM CO., OF LONDON, ENGLAND.

NEW INVENTIONS

Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by H. B. Willson & Co., Patent Attorneys, Eighth and F Streets N. W., Washington, D. C.—A Complete Copy of Any of These Patents Will Be Forwarded to Any Person by Messrs. Willson & Co. on Receipt of Ten Cents—Persons Ordering Copies Must Give Number of Patent.

1,037,934.—Attachment for Cameras. C. C. Lamb, Joliet, Ill., assignor to W. M. McEwen, Chicago, Ill.

1,038,135.—Photographing Machine. John Herricht, New York, N. Y.

1,038,171. Photographic Printing Frame. E. S. McAdam, Drummond, Mich.

1,038,245. Flashlight Apparatus. C. A. Waldeck, Cantonsville, Md.

1,037,188. Moving Picture Apparatus. E. I. Aiken, East Orange, N. J., assignor to T. A. Edison, Inc., West Orange N. J.

1,037,192. Method of Making Photographs. F. W. Battershall, Albany, N. Y.

1,037,198. Printing Device. R. L. Boyd, Plainfield, N. J.

1,037,325. Kinetoscope. A. C. Roebuck, Chicago, Ill., assignor to The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill.

1,037,346. Stereopticon. A. M. Smiley, Franklin, Pa.

1,037,460. Pantographic Apparatus for use of Sculptors. John Ettl, Leonia, N. J.

1,037,721. Photographic Camera. Carl Bornmann and G. W. Topliff, Binghamton, N. Y., assignors to Ansco Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

1,037,721. Photographic Camera. Carl Bornmann and G. W. Topliff, Binghamton, N. Y., assignors to Ansco Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—The Princess Amusement Co. will open a new theatre here.

Ft. Madison, Ia.—J. H. Fleagle and Fred Speilman bought the Crown theatre.

Lenox, Ia.—Chas. Hennig sold his motion picture theatre to Thos. Reiner.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By James Girvan

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION NO. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Recording Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

The Moving Picture Operators' Association will be known in the future as the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 1, office 133 Third avenue (top floor), telephone Stuyvesant 572. Meeting rooms at Teutonic Hall, 66 Essex street, N. Y. City.

All members are notified that the next regular meeting will be held on Monday night, September 23, 1912, at our meeting rooms, at 12 o'clock midnight. Important special business is to be considered, also nominations for permanent officers, as at the present time the organization is governed by a temporary board.

A full attendance of all members of No. 1 is earnestly requested.

We have been advised by the hospital authorities that Brother Sam Talofsky, who was severely injured in a recent motorcycle accident, is on the gradual road to recovery. We trust he will continue to improve and that we may have him speedily among us again.

It is gratifying to state that the enrollments in M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1 has totalled over 25 this week and the gradual increase as at the present time will no doubt bring the number of members back to the original total we had when we sent our delegate to the 1910 convention.

It is proposed that owing to the rapid increase of membership in No. 1 the initiation fee will be increased to $5.00 on or about October 1, 1912. All operators who desire to avail themselves of the opportunity to become members at the present low fee should call at the office, 133 Third avenue, and enroll.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

The following vaudeville acts were furnished by the Frank Forrester studio of 124 West Twenty-third street, N. Y., and gave great satisfaction at our smoker.

Among those who appeared were: Miss Irene Turner, female contortionist; Miss Mabel Girard, genuine Spanish dancer; Gentry and Baird, acrobatic marvels; Miss Julia Woods, popular ragtime singer; Mr. Casey, unusual feats; Miss Effie Fay, Houdin outdone; Mickey Finn, physical evolutions; Miss Meyers, soprano vocalist; Mr. Charles Hastings, star baritone; Jerry Callahan, eccentric dancer; Mr. Gibson, the Noblest Roman of Them All; Charles Richards, the Terrible Turk; Miss Nellie Cannon, dancer.

The entertainment and smoker given by the M. P. Machine Operators' Union No. 1 was a gratifying success, financially and socially.

The affair took place at Volks' Lyceum on Monday night, September 16, 1912, and exceeded all expectations, the hall being filled to capacity with an attendance of over 600 from various points within a radius of 60 miles of New York City. For orderliness and sociability it would compare with any entertainment given by New York's best society.

The only unpleasant feature was the trickery of some of the members of Local No. 35, who made attempts to place a stigma on the show by making false reports to the police, stating that obscene pictures and acts would take place. The police officials investigated this matter and found no cause for complaint, they remained during the entire entertainment and took part in the festivities, greatly enjoying themselves. This, in itself, was a great credit to Union No. 1 and showed how much value the mean methods used by the disturbing element of No. 35 had to produce a false impression.

Preparations for refreshments were made to accommodate 400 men, but owing to the unexpected attendance we went short of the supply at 12 o'clock midnight, and it was too late to get more.

There were six friendly contests in the manly art of self-defense, 17 vaudeville acts, which enlivened things at different periods, and a swell bunch of moving pictures. The use of the films was supplied through the courtesy of the Crescent Feature Film Company of 133 Third avenue and the G. N. Y. Film Company of East Fourteenth street. The three-reel feature from the Crescent Company, entitled "The Mystery of the Bridge of Notre Dame," was exceedingly interesting. The other films from the G. N. Y. Film Company were late releases from the leading manufacturers, and were greatly enjoyed.

The lectured picture, "The Passerby," held the attention of every one to its conclusion, and was liberally applauded.

In the near future it is proposed to give an entertainment and ball, and from the indications of this, the first effort of the boys, no doubt it will turn out to be a much greater success. Many thanks are extended to the editor of the M. P. News, who has so liberally extended the use of its columns for publicity of the affair, and also to the film companies for the use of their films. We also extend our thanks to Mr. Frank Cannock for furnishing the projecting machine. The affair lasted until the small hours of the morning. Every one was well satisfied that they had an enjoyable time.

Liberty, N. Y., Sept. 5, 1912.

Mr. Alfred H. Saunders,
Editor, Moving Picture News.

Dear Sir:

I heartily congratulate you upon the stand you have taken in supporting the new organized moving picture operators' organization, known as the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1 of Greater New York.

It certainly proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that you are the operators' friend, and it also proves that you are alone in the field of editors of moving picture papers that really mean to help and advise the operator as to what is best for him and his interests.

To my brother operators, I say without fear of being misled, that in Mr. A. H. Saunders, editor of the Moving Picture News, and Mr. Robert Goldblatt, president of the M. P. O. U. of G. N. Y., you have two honest men that you can place confidence in, and who are not looking to get any benefit or self praise out of their fight, but who are heart and soul for your progress and success.

The fight you are putting up now will really prove to the A. F. of L. and the I. A. T. S. R. that you mean to have the independent charter you were promised in 1908 by some of the members of the Executive Board of Local 35, and which you were then and surely now are entitled to.

The fight you are putting up now proves that you don't want to be humbugged and made a fool of any more with promises never intended to be lived up to.

The fight you are putting up now will prove whether 500 honest and intelligent workmen can govern and take care of themselves and their money, or whether they need an organization of 250 members to govern and take care of them and their money.

The fight you are putting up now will prove whether you can control your own trade or whether you need a shoemakers' or any other kind of a union to do it for you.

The fight you are putting up now will prove whether you are always going to be picked out to work the grinds, or whether you will have an equal opportunity to work at what jobs the trade affords, grinds or no grinds.

The fight you are putting up now proves who is for you and against you, and who in the future you can place confidence in.

The fight you are putting up now is what will count in the end and get you what you want.

Last but not least, the fight you are putting up now is for progress and self protection.

I hope that the A. F. of L. will grant you an Independent Charter, and if they don't, I wish you the best of success as an independent union and under the able leadership of Robert Goldblatt and many others who are now affiliated in this new organization, you can't help but meet with success.

With my best wishes for good health and happiness to Mr. A. H. Saunders and success to the Moving Picture News, I remain,

Yours truly,
JACOB COHEN.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

S. S. Hutchinson, president of The American Film Mfg. Company, who has just returned from Europe, tells some interesting things of theatre advertising in England.

"I found many theatres in the heart of London advertising exclusive 'Flying A' Days," said Mr. Hutchinson.

"The custom is spreading fast and seems to be highly successful. Theatres are more pretentiously decorated and generally show more attention to details in that manner than we do here. In addition to the usual posters are many colored banners and flags all combining to make a most inviting bid for business."

* * * *

Montreal and Toronto interests have organized another moving picture company, which will operate extensively in Montreal. The new company will be known as the Montreal Motion Pictures, Limited, and will have a capital of $100,000.

The new company has already purchased the Colonial Theatre on St. Catherine street, opposite Goodwins, and the Passe Temps on St. Catherine street, east, near St. Denis; and also has options on land in the north end of the city, on which it will erect a modern playhouse.

The interests identified with the company are already concerned in a company operating a circuit of theatres in Toronto. The board of directors of the new company include: N. H. Truett, president, president of Canada Moving Pictures, Limited, and vice-president of Cafeterias, Limited, Toronto; R. W. Norrington, vice-president, director Canada Moving Pictures, Limited, Toronto; A. F. Emerson, secretary and treasurer, Montreal; James Bailey, capitalist, Montreal; J. C. McGreevy, real estate, Montreal; Walter Williams, of Walter Williams & Co., manufacturers' agents, Montreal; W. H. H. Hume, broker, Montreal.

* * * *

Max L. Teich and Carl C. Roessler have sold the leasehold and building at 662-74 South State street, Chicago, to George K. Spoor, head of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, for a reported consideration of $130,000. The ground is 100x116 feet, with three-story brick building, occupied by the Dearborn Hotel, and the ground is under long term lease at an annual rent of $6,000. F. Thomas Morris and Clover Bros. negotiated the deal.

* * * *

A new motion picture plant is to be erected shortly in the vicinity of Los Angeles. The new concern is being organized by Mr. H. J. Brand, and will be incorporated at $1,000,000.

The plan of the company, as announced by Mr. Brand, includes the building of four great studios, half a dozen other buildings, all at a cost of $256,000, including site. The company owns a tract of eleven acres a mile and a half from Glendale, and two blocks from Brand station on the Burbank car line, where the plant, according to Mr. Brand, is to be built.

A new company which will differentiate the company from other motion picture concerns is that the films produced by the company will not be sold, but will be exhibited all over the country to show the pictures of the advanced company, says Mr. Brand.

Public to Be Invited

The productions in the advanced company stadium will be made unique by the invitations to the public to attend. The condition will be laid down that all who accept must go attired in the dress of the period of the play, and then the spectators will become part of the vast, where great crowds are required.

Among other historical plays to be enacted are the fall of the Bastile, fall of Babylon, events of the Franco-Prussian war, the book of Job and the reign of Pharaoh. In the fall of Sebastopol, which will be an early production, Mr. Brand says 7,000 persons will be required in the cast. Four thousand persons will be used in the "siege of Rome."

The stadium of the company is to be 500 by 275 feet in extent, with seats on one side for spectators. The studio buildings will be of glass to admit as much light as possible, while the other buildings will be constructed of wood and asbestos cement.

Picture making will begin on the stadium site within two weeks, it is declared, with temporary buildings.

Says the Christian Science Monitor:

"Apparently British film makers have not the same facilities as foreign and American film makers for reproducing scenes at popular resorts. Requests sent to the office of works are said to be invariably refused, and British manufacturers contend that many impediments are placed in their way, which goes far to explain why so many foreign scenes are shown in the cinematograph theatres in England to-day. English dramas are, however, shortly to be seen, depicting English rural life, and these plays, moreover, are stated to be of a cheerful and wholesome nature."

* * * *

According to the Denver, Col., News, arrangements have been completed to make Denver the headquarters of the Cheyenne Feature Film Company, said to be one of the best equipped moving picture manufacturing concerns in the world, especially for producing Western scenarios. The company promises to compete favorably in the general motion film market, and also to afford Denver and Colorado worldwide advertising of immense value.

* * * *

Mr. Henry McRae, of the Selig Polyscope Company's producing staff will leave the Chicago studios at an early date for Los Angeles, where he will join the production department of the Edendale studios. Mr. McRae is a native of California and is very well known on the Pacific Coast.

KINEMACOLOR EXHIBITS FILMS FOR PRESS REPRESENTATIVES

Ushered into the luxurious projecting room of the Kinemacolor Company of America, at Broadway and Forty-eighth street, New York City, for the first time, one experiences a surprise, that for the moment almost takes the breath away. The room is large and beautifully equipped for comfort. Your feet sink into the rich crimson velvet carpet, your eyes rest for a brief moment on the rich, deep-toned hangings, and the cream and gold of the wall decorations; then you drop with a satisfied sigh into one of the leather-covered easy chairs, two rows of which are arranged along the back end of the room, facing the screen on the other end.

Oh, the Kinemacolor process is a wonderful thing. There is such a satisfaction to the eye in getting the colors of the objects; and surely the pictures are thrice beautiful because of it.

One of the finest films exhibited at this particular exhibition was the one showing scenes about Monte Carlo. Wonderfully picturesque is this place of gambling notoriety, wonderfully luxuriant is the foliage that flourishes on the warm shores of the Riviera, leading into the Gulf of Genoa and wonderfully beautiful the mountainous background against which is built the town of Monte Carlo, where fabled millions have been lost and won. All of this gorgeous southern beauty which is fanned by the warm breezes of the Mediterranean, has been done justice to in Kinemacolor.

Then came a film called "Fisherman's Luck," the title of which is reminiscent of Henry Van Dyke. It is, however, just a little romance of a fisherman's daughter, and of more account in its beautiful fishing scenes, showing the hundreds of line fish caught up in the fisherman's net, than in the story or action. Neither the heart nor the eye seem to run particularly to the story in this production, it is the simplicity and picturesqueness of the fishing scenes that win.

"Experiments With High Explosives" is a film of especial interest, which was posed for the government, at Peekskill, N. Y. It shows the different uses to which the explosive can be put, from submarine mining to the cutting down of a tree.

The film showing "Paris Modes" was also interesting. In connection with this a new principle had been put to work which eliminated to some extent the usual flicker of red and green, and which resulted in a less brilliant illumination, but at the same time a much steadier projection of the picture.

The picture of Kinemacolor is just beginning to loom up like a great and glorious sun. The possibilities which may weave themselves into the moving picture film through Kinemacolor are legion.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

RELIANCE

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN (Oct. 2).—Bobby Burns, with a prophet's vision foresaw that men must eventually come to the "great understanding" when he wrote

"For a' that, and a' that,
It's coming yet for a' that,
That man to man, the world o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that."

That's our story. Jack Adams, spokesman for workmen in a factory, pleads with owner, Griscom, against a twenty per cent cut in wages. Griscom refuses to consider the men's side; the men walk out. Jack, seeking work at another factory, is "blacklisted." He leaves in an ugly mood. Unable to find work anywhere he is reduced to starvation. Wife needs a doctor. Jack sends note to Griscom pleading to be taken back. Griscom writes back: "Glad to see you so humble, but you can't work for me." Jack, desperate, determines on vengeance. Outside Griscom's mansion Jack is overcome by weakness.

Elsie, Griscom's favorite child, finds Jack and has him taken into the house.

Griscom comes in, suspects Jack's intentions, and accuses him. Jack tells of his terrible suffering. Elsie tries to console him. Jack is overcome and weeps. Griscom relents; offers food. Jack refuses. Elsie puts arms around Jack; he softens. The touching scene penetrates the armor of Griscom's selfishness; he offers his hand to Jack, who accepts, and they stand acknowledged "brothers under the skin."

COMET

THE HEIR TO THE BEAR CREEK RANCH (Sept. 21).—Through the death of his uncle, Henry Brown, a wealthy ranchman, Frank Brown, of Blue Lick, Ky., becomes heir to a large estate, including the famous Bear Creek ranch. James Brown, Frank's cousin, a ne'er-do-well, had anticipated all along that Henry would remember him in his will. His disappointment is naturally keen when he learns through James O'Donnell, a lawyer, of Frank's good fortune and immediately plots to take Frank's life and pave the way for himself to riches. O'Donnell comes to Frank's home and the first person he sees is James. James decides to act that same night and when all is still he sets the place on fire, aiming, of course, to destroy Frank. Fortunately the alarm is given by Jerry, a faithful negro servant in the Brown household. Everybody is saved, much to the annoyance of James, who is determined to do further mischief. O'Donnell suggests that Frank immediately start for Colorado, where the property is located, and in company with his wife and baby, Jerry, Bridget, the cook, and O'Donnell, the party set out for their destination. The journey, which is a long and tedious one, is fraught with many perils and adventures. On the way the party camp and Mrs. Brown, acceding to a plea from the baby to pick some flowers, stray to the mountainside. There they are discovered by James, who has followed. James endeavors to kidnap them and hold them for a ransom, believing that Frank will capitulate and give him a part of the fortune. Their cries are heard by Jerry, who notifies Frank. The latter overtakes James and rescues his wife and child. A hand-to-hand fight between James and Frank ensues and the wicked and villanous cousin is hurled to his death from a steep cliff.

THE RUSTLER'S TREACHERY (Sept. 28).—This is a pretty romance of the Golden West, the country where the late Bret Harte found so many inspirations for his many tales. Bud Clayton is an Easterner and he goes to a ranch owned by a man named Virden, where he secures a position. Old Virden has an only daughter, Nell, a most charming girl. Months pass and Bud seems to be getting along famously. He is often thrown into Nell's company and the pair learn to love each other. One day while out horseback riding he rescues Nell and his noble act, performed at the peril of his own life, entrenches him further in the good graces of the girl as well as her father, and their betrothal is announced. Pedro, a Mexican, is also employed on the ranch. He, too, loves Nell, and when he sees that she cares nothing for him he evinces his hatred for her and Bud. Cattle rustling has become so common in the community that a large reward is offered for the miscreants. Bud has an idea that the Mexican is involved and decides to watch him. He catches him in the act of branding a calf and when discovered Pedro draws his gun and, covering Clayton, compels him to throw up his hands. Bud is tied hand and foot and, when the rest of the cowboys rush upon the scene the Mexican tells them that he has discovered one of the rustlers and that Bud is the man. They believe the accusation and hasten to hang him. Just as they are about to execute the unfortunate ranchman Nell appears and informs them that if anybody is guilty it is Pedro whom she saw branding a calf one morning. Her story is so plausible that the tables are soon turned and in a jiffy Bud is released and Pedro taken in tow. The Mexican is on the verge of being hung when Bud, with the instinct of a noble man, interferes and the execution is stayed. Instead, Pedro is sen to prison and, as he is led away by the sheriff, Nell and Bud appoint their wedding day.

EDISON

THE GRANDFATHER (Sept. 21).—Old Jim Elliott's life was not pleasant after he came to spend his remaining days on the farm with his son. His daughter-in-law's coldness and lack of consideration for the old man was the cause. She knew nothing and cared less for his record from '61 to '65—when he fought with the famous "Fighting Sixth." To her he was merely a lame old man who had to be fed and cared for.

The love that grew up between the old soldier and Jennie, his little grandchild, was his only source of happiness and when the announcement of the annual township picnic came it was Jennie who helped him brush up his old uniform for the occasion. Judge Williams, from up state, was to speak and Jennie wanted grandfather to look his best. But grandfather was not to go. At the last moment Jennie's mother gave the old man's seat in the buckboard to a neighbor's child.

Sitting alone, grandpa nursed his disappointment, for it was keen. Suddenly an auto drove in—a stalwart soldierly old man alighted and inquired the road to the picuic grounds. Old Jim gave the desired information—a look of recognition passed and two old comrades clasped hands that had not met in fifty years.

Judge Williams (for it was he) was to speak at the picnic—but as he and old Jim fought battle after battle over and over again the picnic was forgotten until finally the chauffeur called his attention to the time. He insisted upon his old friend accompanying him and they arrived an hour late, but greeted by the cheers of the waiting assemblage.

Jennie's mother was thunderstruck at sight of her father-in-law and was more than ever embarrassed when the judge eulogized him from the platform.

After lunching together the old fellows strolled off for a chat on the bank of the lake. Little Jennie and the boy who had usurped her grandfather's place in the buckboard played on the rocks beside them until Jennie fell into the deep water. In a moment grandfather's coat was off and he had plunged in, saving her only after a bitter struggle.

The shame of Jennie's mother was great when she learned of grandfather's heroism, but she was womanly enough to repent of her past smallness towards the old man and make amends.

HOW BOBBIE JOINED THE CIRCUS (Sept. 23).—"Hey, fellers! De soicus has come down at Bradford's medder back of de deepo. Dey's just commencin' ter unload; hurry up an' come on." You have heard about the same as this before or probably it was you that said it around daylight on the morning the circus came to town, or you and the boy next door spent a sleepless night so as to get up in time to see the show unload and watch them build their city of cloth—to help around, perchance, and get in for nothing. Don't deny it, for you did.

Bobby is just an American boy, full of life, health and spirits. He goes to the circus with his father and little sister and we see them go in the side show and watch with them the snake charmer, in her den of serpents, and proceed through the managerie. As they go in the big tent Bobby makes the acquaintance of some of the attaches and talks to them. When he turns around expecting to see his father and sister they are nowhere in sight and be realizes that he has become lost from them. Late in the afternoon he gets tired and, lying down in an empty van, takes a rest, thinking, perhaps that he can join the show himself. He sleeps soundly, as boys do, and when they come to load the van at night Bobby is shut up in it.

The next morning when he is discovered he is getting a little bad treatment when "Big Bill" Haggerty, the boss canvasman, comes along and befriends him. Then Bobby's fun commences. "Big Bill" takes him all around and he sees circus life as it is: stake driving, the blacksmith shop, the cook tent and forming for parade. The performers take a fancy to Bobby and soon he is all made up as a clown.

Father, at home, gets a telegram from "Big Bill" telling him that his son is safe and relieves the family's anxiety as to Bobby's whereabouts. When Bobby and "Big Bill" part you are sorry to see them go, for you have learned to love "Big Bill," who has a heart of gold beating beneath his rough exterior.

BIOGRAPH

STERN PAPA (Sept. 16).—Papa is fearful of having his daughter on his hands, so schemes to get her married. To the first intended bridegroom papa offers every encouragement, hut he balks. This failing, he tries other tactics—that is, offering stern objections to the next candidate for son-in-law honors. Did the plan succeed? The picture will answer that question.

On tbe same reel:

LOVE'S MESSENGER.—The French cook and the maid are deeply in love with each other, and, finding it hard to pass as much time as they would like in each other's company, the cook devises a means for transmitting love notes to the maid in a most unique manner—that is, inserting the note in a biscuit specially marked. Fine, until the boss gets the biscuit with the note and thinks it is intended for his wife.

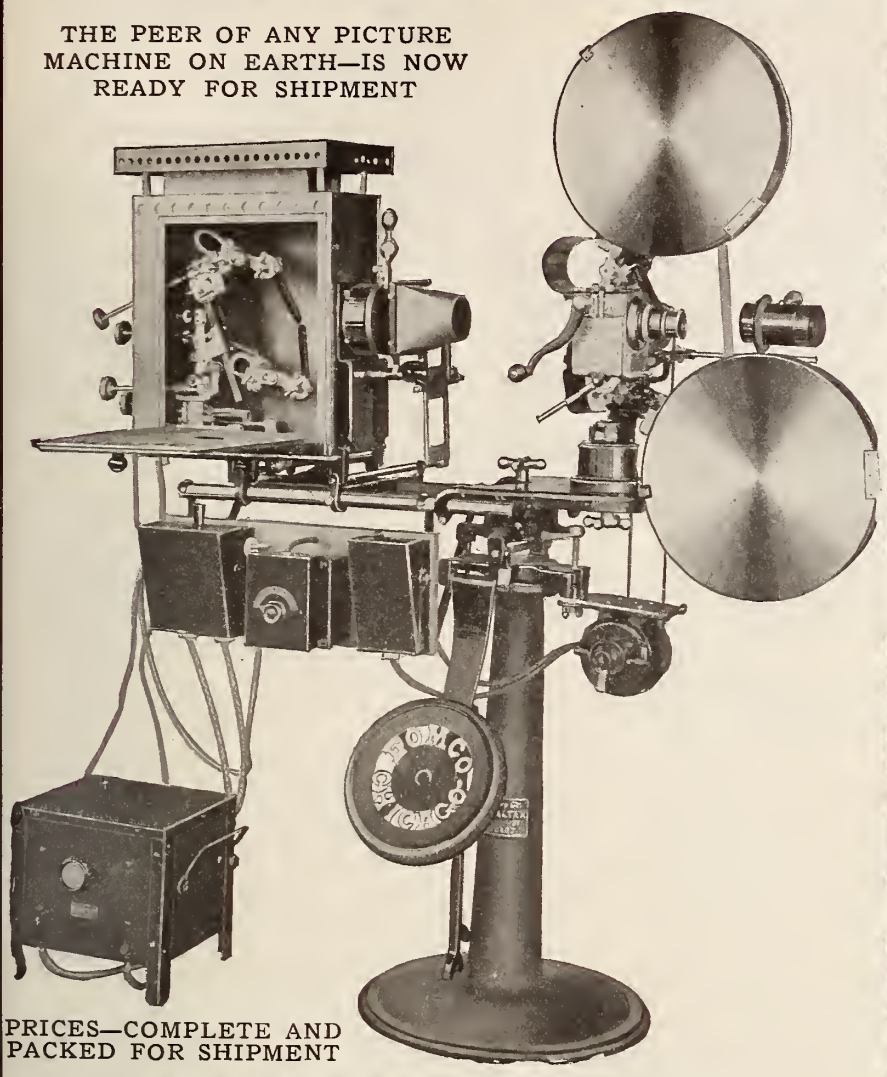
TWO DAUGHTERS OF EVE (Sept. 16).—Calumny is one of the most despicable crimes against our neighbor, and while the wife in this story acted conventionally, she nevertheless maligned the other woman simply because of her profession—an actress. While out on a shopping tour, the wife and her husband enter a store, leaving their little child in the auto in the care of the chauffeur. This gentleman pays but scant attention to the child, so the little one wanders off and strolls into the stage door of a theatre during the matinee. The parents, upon their return to the auto discover the child's absence and trace him to the theatre, where they find him in the arms of one of the show girls. The mother snatches the child from the girl's arms, scornfully exclaiming, "How dare you contaminate my child with your touch?" For this remark, together with the derisive laughter it occasions, the girl vows to be avenged.

ESSANAY

THE LOVE TEST (Sept. 20).—Robert Brandt and Lily Leslie, both young people of strong minds and ideas all their own, are informed by an old uncle they must marry each other in order to inherit $500,000. Neither having seen the other they both plan to get out of the matter and, when Brandt calls, Lily assumes the dress of her maid while the real maid plays Lily. Of course the maid's manners and assumed airs sicken Brandt, and he finally makes his escape from the house after having fallen in love at sight with the real Lily disguised as the maid. Now Lily has also fallen in love with Brandt, and reads with genuine alarm the note that Brandt has left in order to escape, saying he has suddenly been taken ill and is going home immediately. Arriving at the house Brandt finds his chums and disgustedly tells them of his experience.

THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

THE PEER OF ANY PICTURE MACHINE ON EARTH—IS NOW READY FOR SHIPMENT



PRICES—COMPLETE AND PACKED FOR SHIPMENT

$250.00 without motor, switchboard or seat.
$285.00 with motor (any voltage), switchboard and seat.
$300.00 special Massachusetts, with motor, switchboard and seat.
THE PRICE HAS GONE UP FOR THREE REASONS:
1st: Because of the advance in Material and Labor Cost.
2nd: Because we furnish a complete metal equipment.
3rd: Because the introduction of the Motiograph is complete.

OUR GUARANTEE

FREE UPKEEP FOR ONE YEAR COVERING PARTS of the 1913 model Motiograph mechanism, THAT MAY BECOME WORN OUT IN SERVICE, or WHICH MAY SHOW DEFECT IN MATERIAL OR WORKMANSHIP, with the understanding that the part be sent to us, charges prepaid, for examination.

Manufactured by THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
564-572 W. Randolph Street CHICAGO, ILL.
For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

Suddenly they see Lily and the dressed up maid drive up in an auto and, thinking only to escape further attentions, Brandt stretches out on the bed while his pals whiten his face with powder and strew the sheet with flowers. Then, when Lily enters, they inform her Brandt is dead and blubber profusely in their handkerchiefs. Overcome with grief, Lily kneels on the bedside and sobs out: "Oh, Robert, if you had only known! I am Lily Leslie, not the maid!" with which Robert suddenly comes to life in a hurry and Lily promptly faints in the nearest chair. Quickly she is revived and, on making sure Brandt is really alive, confesses the scheme she played and he gathers her in his arms while his pals grimace and echo "I told you so!"

"ALKALI" IKE'S PANTS (Sept. 21).—Coyote Simpson and "Alkali" Ike both love the buxom Soffie, pride of Buckskin, Ariz. Coyote has a long, curling mustache that is his one pride and joy, but Soffie objects to it when he kisses her and orders him to trim it down. Prior to this all three of the boys, "Alkali," Mustang and Coyote, have tried to help Soffie with a balky broncho she is driving, and it is not until Mustang mounts the horse in true Western style that things begin to move. Then so fast do they go that the broncho runs itself out of the harness, leaving "Alkali" and Coyote stranded with Soffie miles from home. Later, Coyote proudly shows the boys a fine valentine he has gotten for Soffie, then begins to trim off his mustache. Of course "Alkali" secures a hideous caricature valentine of an old maid with her false teeth and hair off and, with Mustang's help, they substitute it in place of Coyote's perfectly good one. Consequently when Coyote calls on Soffie with his trimmed mustache and valentine she is about to embrace him when she discovers the caricature and drives him from the house under an avalanche of everything she can lay her hands to. A few evenings later "Alkali" has invited Soffie to the town dance and is industriously ironing his pants in the shack when the boys discover him through the window, and, when he goes to get a hot iron, hook his pants through the window with a stick. Very much negligee, "Alkali" chases around looking for his nether garment, and finally tries to steal a pair from a convenient line, but is loaded with buckshot from the gun of the irate lady of the house. In desperation "Alkali" dons his old chaps, which fail to cover his exposed anatomy, and is leading Soffie proudly into town when he runs across the boys, who are holding up his long-lost pants. In the wrangle that ensues "Alkali" is left in the lurch by Soffie, who goes to the dance on the arms of Coyote and Mustang, while "Alkali" wraps his pants about him and strides home, cussing everything in general.

VITAGRAPH

BOBBY'S FATHER (Sept. 23).—Dick Ramsay is a "cracksman" and burglar. His wife, Jane, is a good woman and tries to persuade her husband to give up his dishonest ways. They have one child two years old, Bobby. One night before going out on a "job" Dick makes a present to the child of a lucky sixpence with his name engraved on it, hung on a silver chain. Jane does not want the child to have it at first, but Dick declares he has had it made for the child. He then bids them good-bye. A few days later Jane receives a letter from him, saying that he has been caught in the act and sent to prison for a year. She resolves to fly from London, which she has grown to hate. She takes her child and starts into the country. Worn out with travel and anxiety she faints on the doorstep of Herbert Ware's home, a young lawyer, who lives with his only sister. They bring Mrs. Ramsay into the house and get medical attendance. She dies and leaves Bobby, whom the Wares adopt. Six years pass and Bobby grows up in their love and care. Called away to the city on business one night, Herbert tells Bobby he will leave Bessie in his care. Bobby feels brave and important. Wakened in the night by the sound of someone breaking into the house, he goes down to face the intruder. It is Dick, who, having lost all track of his wife and child, has plunged deeper into crime. He meets Bobby, who very seriously tries to convince him of the error of his ways. Dick's sense of humor is touched and he admires the child's pluck. Picking him up in his arms, he sees the old chain and sixpence around his throat and learns he is robbing those who have protected his child. He departs, leaving a note with Bobby to be given to his friends. The next morning Bobby tells of his adventure and is greeted like a little hero, Bessie and Herbert keeping the note a secret and not revealing the identity of Bobby's father.

HIS LORDSHIP, THE VALET (Sept. 24).—In the American Club at London, Jasper Durbin, a young American, wagers with his friend, Richard Schuyler, that he can, within three weeks, cross the Atlantic to America without paying his passage. This is how Durbin does it: The Honorable Sir Arthur Courcy, an English peer, just preparatory to making a trip to America, discharges his valet and advertises for another. Durbin answers the "ad" and secures the position. Lord Courcy arranges with him to impersonate him on the voyage and he will take his place as the valet, to escape the attention of the title-hunting mammas. On board the steamer Jasper Durbin, as Lord Courcy, is the center of attraction, and Mrs. Knowlton, a wealthy American, takes special pains to make his acquaintance and introduces her daughter, Harriet, whose company Durbin very much enjoys. Lord Courcy, as the valet, finds his position very embarrassing when Durbin orders him about and makes him wait on him in the presence of the ladies. Incidentally, he objects, and when Durbin reprimands him for insubordination, he becomes somewhat assertive, which greatly astonishes the ladies. The lord is unable to stand it longer and tells Durbin he must declare his identity. A reception is to be held, and this is thought by Sir Courcy to be a favorable time in which to declare himself to the ladies, also let them know that Jasper Durbin is only his valet. This affords Durbin an opportunity to make himself known to Lord Courcy and shows him the written wager with Schuyler. After Sir Courcy's astonishment has subsided, they have a good laugh over the matter and then agree to appear at the evening reception together and introduce each other.

Arrayed in evening dress, they attend the reception, much to the surprise of Harriet and her mother, whose surprise is greatly increased when the two men tell exactly who they are. The revelation creates a delightful pleasantness between them all. Harriet readily accepts Durbin's proffered arm, while Mrs. Knowlton is escorted by Courcy to another part of the room, leaving Harriet and Jasper in the blissful enjoyment of each other's company.

LUBIN

HIS PAIR OF PANTS (Sept. 21).—Enthused by the warm weather, Mr. Horatio Smith yields to his wife's entreaties to dig up the back yard truck garden. He gets half way through his work before he sees that he is soiling his pants, and he goes to the garret, dons a pair of overalls and leaves his pants up there and, incidentally, his month's salary in the same. While he is digging the garden an old clothes peddler calls at the front door. Mrs. Smith sees a chance to get some money for buying garden seed and sells the pants Smith left up in the garret. Poor Smith discovers the awful truth and he and his wife hurry frantically after the peddler. They swoop down upon him and scatter his clothes right and left before he can explain to them that he has just sold the pants to a tramp. Mr. and Mrs. Smith leave the indignant peddler and continue the search after the tramp. Meanwhile the hobo has put on the pants in a convenient shed nearby, has discovered the roll of greenbacks and is spending Smith's wad right and left on ice cream and peanuts for kids. About this time the Rev. Jones, a minister, hurriedly leaves his house with a pair of pants that he has to have pressed (they are an exact duplicate of Smith's); he is overtaken by Smith and wife. Smith, in his excitement, declares the minister has his pants and tries to pull them away from him. They are ripped in two, and the minister and Smith begin hitting each other right and left with the two halves. A cop separates the combatants and is just about to arrest them when Smith sees the tramp down the street. The tramp has come out of the saloon, gloriously drunk, and is throwing Smith's money right and left to a big crowd of men, women and children. Smith, the minister, the cop and Smith's wife rush up to the tramp, but he sees them coming and the crowd chase him down the street. The tramp, during the chase, crawls through a barbed wire fence. It is not until he stumbles and falls into a shallow pool of puddle water that the cop and Smith can lay hands on him. Smith then discovers, to his great grief, that the pants are not only ruined but that little of the money is left.

A GAY TIME IN QUEBEC (Sept. 23).—Fritz and Hans, two typical Germans, decide to visit Quebec, Canada. They arrive on the steamer and as they are coming into the harbor get an excellent view of the quaint old town. After passing customs they take a walk on Dufferin Terrace, from which they have a fine panoramic view of the lower town. They board a trolley car and, after passing through the principal business streets and residential section, they arrive at the celebrated Montmorency Falls. They marvel at the height and beauty of the falls and are much astonished when they learn that the falls are 274 feet high. They visit the Rustic Theatre, located at Montmorency, and have a very lively time, upon which they return to Quebec. They decide to have a ride on the common vehicle of Quebec, a cart with two wheels known as a caleche, which has been in use there for tourists for years. While riding around in the caleche they were attracted by two beautiful young ladies and a flirtation is started. They immediately alight from the caleche and start after the ladies, forgetting to pay their fares. This, however, is quickly adjusted by a bobby who happens on the scene. They catch up with the girls and as the ladies are kodaking they pose the Germans for a snapshot. But they only pose the unsuspecting Fritz and Hans for a joke and, after having a good laugh, the girls run off. A policeman moves the two Germans on their way. Fritz and Hans make up their mind that a camera is the one thing essential to make their trip a grand success, so they purchase one. Upon coming out of the store they see the auto fire engine and think it would be great to have one of them at home. If they could only get a picture of the auto apparatus they could then have one built. They stop in front of the engine house to take a snapshot, but are quickly ordered away. But a picture they must have, so they decide to send in a false alarm. Accordingly they find a fire box and ring the alarm. The fire engines are seen upon the street. They get their picture but the police get them. They are escorted to the depot and put upon the train and sent away. Fritz and Hans bid good-bye to Quebec and are satisfied they had a gay time.

Get this money maker.
CALEB WEST
Released Sept. 18th. 2 reels. A rousing story. Adapted from F. Hopkinson Smith's popular novel. Dramatic situations. Sensational Diving. A fine love theme.
SPECIAL. 3 and 1 sheet posters. SPECIAL

RELIANCE

LOOK! You will want these advance releases. LOOK! "The Geranium" and "Bedelia and Her Neighbor," Wed., Sept. 25th. "The Cuckoo Clock," Sat., Sept. 28th. "Brothers Under the Skin," Wed., Oct. 2. "Time Avenges," Sat., Oct. 5th. "Guy Mannering" (2 reels), Wed., Oct. 9th. "The Peddler's Find," Sat, Oct. 12th.

AMERICAN

BAD PETE'S GRATITUDE (Sept. 25).—Bad Pete eyed the collection box with greedy eyes. The little minister gathered his funds, with which to build a new church, and started for the bank. His pretty daughter, Claribel, much loved by John Walling, accompanied him. Charley Hicox hated John and loved Claribel; so when Bad Pete held up the minister, Hicox saw an opportunity to throw the blame on John. This he did and nearly succeeded if Bad Pete's baby had not taken sick. Claribel nursed the child back to life, and Bad Pete, to square himself, confessed the hold-up. A particularly fine Western, powerfully portrayed and possessing a crooked, twisting plot of many delightful turns.

THEIR HERO SON (Sept. 26).—The old couple dreamed long of the return of their hero son. They had not heard from him in many years; so, one day, they wrote at random, sending many blessings. The hero son, leader of a band of mountain thieves, held up the mail man. By sheer chance he came upon the pitiful letter. His heart melted, the years rolled back, and the hero son determined to give up the life and go home. On his way, the sheriff got him, wounded him and searched him. The sheriff's heart was touched. He bore the fast-dying man to the old homestead, pinned a sheriff's star upon him and deposited him in the old mother's arms for the last time. A drama of exquisite feeling, much power and beautiful situations. You will enjoy it. So will every member of the family.

THANHOUSER

"PLEASE HELP THE PORE" (Sept. 29).—An eccentric old millionaire, noted in Wall Street for the hard financial bargains he drove, had one weak side, although very few persons knew it. He was extremely fond of children. Years before the story opened, his wife and infant daughter had died, and despite his great wealth, he was heartsick and lonely.

One day a young business man called at his office to ask an extension of time on the note the millionaire held. At the first the old man refused; later he promised to "think it over." The caller, however, went away disheartened, for the future looked blue to him.

It was a Saturday half-holiday in May, and the old man closed his desk early and went for a walk in the park. There he ran into a children's May party and stopped to watch them. One little girl came to him and made friends immediately. The old man's heart was touched, for she reminded him of the daughter he had lost.

"I am in the park every afternoon," the child said. "We live here, and I hope to see you again, kind old man."

The millionaire walked away, his thoughts in the past. The child tripped merrily homeward, never dreaming how important a friend she had made.

On the following Monday morning the child's father received a letter, which the millionaire had written on Saturday, just before he went to the park. In it the father was told that creditor could not grant any extension of time and that he must pay up what be owed by the following day.

The child saw the tears in the eyes of her parents, she heard their conversation, and when they left the room picked up the letter which they had dropped on the floor, and took it with her into the park. She puzzled over the communication, for she was only a little girl and could not read extra well. Finally she realized that all that was the matter was that her parents needed some money. There was only one thing to do, and that was to get it.

Luckily a hand-organ grinder came along about this time, and the problem was solved. Hurriedly she went home; hastily she prepared a sign like that of the organ grinder. It read, "Please help the pore." The spelling might have been a little poor, but the idea was there. Then the child took her toy piano, hastened back to the park, prepared to entertain the passing public.

She had all of four cents when her "kind old man" happened along. He had hoped to see her, but was astonished to note her occupation. In response to her questions she told him her troubles and confidingly displayed the letter. He read and understood. Then he explained that he would act as her agent, took the pennies and sent a note to the parents explaining that their talented daughter's successful concert had supplied funds sufficient to induce him to grant them all the time they wanted to settle the debt.

While the parents were getting the details from the excited child, the old man sat in the park and mused.

"She is so much like little Annie," he murmured. "I must see that she has a fair chance in life, for there is no one dear and near to me."

He was a close-fisted old millionaire, but the child had touched his heart. And the promise he made to look after her he kept.

LETTERS OF A LIFETIME (Oct. 1).—The wealhy old bachelor returned to his beautiful home after a visit to his club, and found waiting him news that his time on earth was pitifully brief. He had money to pay for the best of medical attention but doctors could not save him. A consultation of the men highest in the profession had passed upon his case, and they communicated to him the fact that they were powerless to aid him. All that remained for him was to "get his house in order," and await for the coming from on high.

For the first time it struck the old millionaire that no man or woman would care whether he lived or died. Essentially selfish, he had never made friends. Many would go to his funeral, undoubtedly, but there would be no real grief, while paid servants, instead of staunch friends, would be called upon to soothe his dying hours.

ITALA FILMS

"A Woman's Duplicity"

Two Reels

Released Sept. 15

A dramatic masterpiece, superbly acted, showing the dual life of a woman, and the tragic finale to her duplicity.

"His First Lawsuit"

"A Nail in the Shoe"

Two Comedies on One Reel

Sunday, Sept. 29

"Too Many Children"

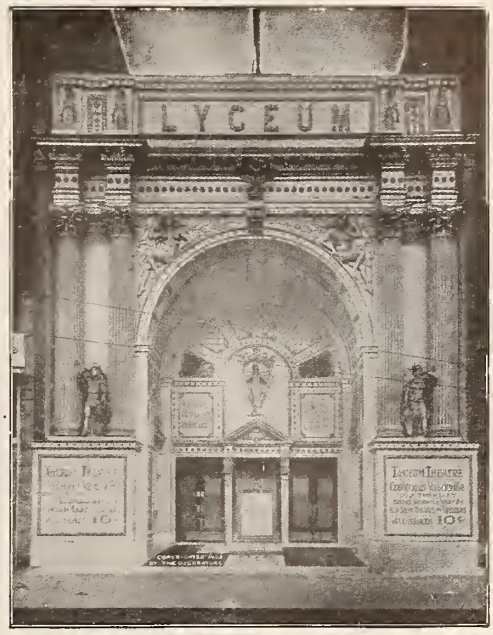
A screaming comedy drama in two parts

Sunday, Oct. 6

AN ITALA SPLIT REEL COMEDY EVERY SUNDAY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION

60 Wall Street, New York City



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The* Decorators Supply Co.

2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

From his safe he took a package of letters and legal papers, intending to straighten them out. In the bundle he ran across a number of messages from his youthful days, and memories he had long forgotten returned to him.

As a boy he and his brother had loved the same young woman. The boy was the favored suitor, and although not engaged, he confidently expected to wed the girl some day. Then a letter arrived from a lawyer. It informed the brothers of the death of their uncle, a recluse and woman-hater. He left all his large fortune to them, conditional upon their remaining bachelors.

The old man who now sat musing had accepted the condition. His brother, still hoping that he might win the girl, refused them. The elder boy with the money that had so strangely come to him lived a happy, careless, heartless life. Another letter told how the brother had achieved the ambition of his younger days and won the woman he loved. Other notes told of poverty and suffering and unsuccessful appeals for aid to his rich relative. Sickness and want, that might have been warded off by money, cost the life of one of his children, and he bitterly blamed his wealthy brother.

The millionaire mused over these things, and wondered what good his money was after all. Even his relatives were estranged from him, and in his time of affliction he could not appeal to them. While he sat there dreaming over the past, a servant brought him a letter from his brother that had just arrived. In it the writer told of hearing of his brother's illness, and offered to welcome him at his "humble but happy little home." For the poor brother had triumphed over the sorrow of years, and although far from wealthy, he was content, as his declining days were made comfortable by his children and grandchildren.

"He is better off than I am with all my wealth," muttered the millionaire. "If it wasn't that I am going to die soon I might be able to teach some one to love me. I wonder whether it is too late?"

Then he shuddered, for his doctor had only given him a month to live, and a month is a mighty short period in which to repent of the errors, the selfishness and the follies of a lifetime.

THE WARNING (Oct. 4).—Happy in the love of his devoted wife and their child, a young business man found life's pathway pleasant. Then the greatest of sorrows came—his wife died—and he was plunged into gloom.

The man didn't make the best of it; there was a strain of weakness in him, and he didn't even try to conquer it. He found that drink brought forgetfulness, and day by day he receded further from being the man he was.

There was no one to correct or guide him, no one to plead with him except his son, and he was a helpless little boy. He saw the change in his father and grieved over it, but more than that he could not do.

One afternoon while the boy was playing in front of the house the man passed out of the front door. The boy knew he was going to the saloon, and hoping to keep him away from there, timidly asked his father if he would not go fishing with him. The man was in a complacent mood and consented, but, despite the child's protest, insisted on stopping on the way to purchase a flash of whiskey.

At the water's edge the boy fished, the father drank. Finally the youngster caught a fish and turned joyfully to show his father, but he was sunk in a drunken stupor and the child could not arouse him. The boy's face fell. Life seemed so empty, so useless after all. He dropped his fishing pole, which slipped into the water. He then wandered off a ways, fell on the sandy beach and sobbed bitterly.

The drunkard stirred uneasily in his sleep, for he had a most vivid dream. He saw himself at the edge of the water, his son fishing beside him. The boy, running about, fell overboard. The man saw it, and tried to go to his aid, but he was helplessly drunk. And, in his dream, he saw his child drown before his eyes. He awoke with a cry of agony and, for a moment, believed that his dream was true. The boy was gone, but floating in the water nearby was his fishing pole. He screamed again, and the child, who was nearby, came running up to see if there was anything he could do for papa.

The man clasped the boy in his arms, and fervently thanked heaven that it was only a dream tragedy he had witnessed. The scales fell from his eyes, and he realized how pitifully weak and selfish he had been. He had gone on the theory that with the death of his wife his interest in life was gone, never thinking of the claims of his child.

The warning that came to him in his drunken sleep was stern but effective. He vowed that liquor should never pass his lips again, and noted with tenderness how his promise brought back the lost look of happiness to the face of his child.

SOLAX

SI'S SURPRISE PARTY (Oct. 2).—Silas Brown, a middle-aged farmer, prepares to go to the village store on his birthday. While his wife is subjecting him to the tortures of a collar and tie she notices the deplorable state of his clothing, and gives him forty dollars of her butter and egg money as a birthday present, with instructions to buy himself a new outfit from top to toe. At the store Silas meets an old crony and while they are buying the outfit he absorbs a few more glasses of hard cider than is good for him. The package containing the new suit is placed in the rear of the buggy and the new hat on the seat beside him, and after bidding the crony a hilarious farewell Silas drives away.

In the meantime Mrs. Brown has sent the hired man around to invite all the neighbors to a surprise party she has planned in her husband's honor.

On the way home Silas stops on a small bridge and tries on the new hat. The old one looks so shabby that he decides to throw it away and wear the new one. This done he concludes to put on the entire new suit and surprise his wife. The cider has made Silas a little reckless and he removes all his outer clothing and tosses them over the bridge after the hat, and when he reaches for the new duds they are nowhere to be seen.

At home the party has gathered and are anxiously waiting for Silas that the festivities may begin. His wife hears the wheels of the buggy, goes to the door, and after cautioning all the company to keep quiet, she flings the door open, and when Silas, attired in his underclothing, a foolish grin and a new hat, steps in the room, the surprise is complete.

THE RETREAT FROM EDEN (Oct. 4).—Bob Hendricks, a wealthy New York artist, comes to the Tennessee mountains to paint some of the rugged scenery. He obtains lodging with a rough old mountaineer, whose beautiful daughter, Nancy, wins Bob's heart at first sight. She is fascinated by the city man, forgetting her love for her childhood sweetheart, Jack Brown, a hard-working, honest mountaineer. Bob proposes and the girl accepts him, while the old sweetheart swears revenge. He comes upon Bob on the mountain trail and would shoot him until he finds what a brave spirit the artist possesses. He follows the city man, however, and is watching his chance for a covert shot, when Bob falls into a raging mountain torrent, as he crosses on a log bridge, with his painting kit. The mountaineer beholds his chance to let the other die—but his innate chivalry prompts him to throw his gun aside, doff his coat and boots, and dive for the drowning man. When Bob is saved he thanks the other, and they both realize that they are true men. Bob goes back to the house thoughtfully and finds Nancy weeping over some old mementoes of her childhood courtship and of Jack. Bob realizes that the girl really loves the other man and is only fascinated by himself. He ponders on the matter, and then decides on a big sacrifice to drive the girl to her surest happiness, at a bitter price to himself. He shows Nancy the worst possible character, is cross, ugly, and even pretends to be a coward to disgust her. She shows her sweetness of soul under the trial, but at last believes that he does not love her, and declares she will not wed him. She runs from the house to their old trysting place, the Eagle's Nest, high on the mountain crest, where she would kill herself but for the intercession of faithful Jack. She realizes that the old love is the best, and she returns home with the honest fellow. There she finds that Bob has paid his bill and gone back to the city. He has left a note, however, which on opening she finds to contain his letter of love and honest good wishes, with a gift of two hundred dollars to make her dowry. The last scene shows Bob sitting in his luxurious New York club, refusing to accompany his jolly friends, and musing over memories of his "mountain lassie," thinking "It is better to have loved and played square than to have never loved at all!"

MAJESTIC

BELLIGERENT BENJAMIN (Sept. 29).—Benjamin Benton, a quick-tempered bully, comes home and finds his wife in tears. She tells him that while out walking an unknown stranger kicked her beloved poodle, Toodles. On her resenting the kick the stranger was extremely rude. Benton is enraged by the story. Some weeks later the Bentons go for a walk. Mrs. Benton sees the unknown and points him out to Benjamin, who immediately accosts him. High words follow; Benjamin slaps the stranger, who then proceeds to beat Benjamin unmercifully. In a short time the latter is stretched on the ground unconscious. Stranger then takes a card out of his pocket, places it on Benjamin's chest and walks away. Mrs. Benton rushes to her prostrate husband, sees the card, and reads, "Jim Brannigan, lightweight champion." She lifts Benton's head and shows him the card, whereupon he looks about wildly and faints again.

A GARRISON JOKE.—Before his marriage Lieutenant Harris had been known as a somewhat wild young man. He feels sure that his wife knows nothing of his escapades, but in reality she knows all about them. It is announced in the papers that Miss Katharine Nielson, a former flame of the Lieutenant, is to play in the city where his post is located. Some of his brother officers, hearing of this, concoct a plan to have some fun at his expense. They beguile Mrs. Harris into the plot. She writes a letter, in a disguised hand, and sends it to her sister in Kansas City, so that she may mail it to Harris in time to have it delivered on the first of April. This letter is supposed to come from Katharine Nielson. The Lieutenant receives it and becomes very much excited. He informs his wife that he must be absent from the post for a few days, and that she must go to her sister in Kansas City. He helps her pack and rushes her to the depot. She gives him a note before she gets on the train. As the train pulls out he reads the note, which says: "I wrote the letter myself; April Fool!" He looks up to see his wife standing opposite him, where she alighted from the other side of the train. His brother officers appear from their hiding place in the depot and the joke is enjoyed by all but the unhappy victim.

THE CALL OF THE BLOOD (Oct. 1).—John Ford, chief of a party of civil engineers, woos and weds a gypsy girl whose tribe are encamped in nearby woods. After two years the chill of normal life palls upon her; with the arrival of Spring comes a longing for the woods. From her drawingroom window she sees the light of a campfire and, unable to resist its appeal, she answers the call of the blood. Forsaking husband and child she steals to the woods and sits upon the earth attired in her evening gown, and eats their gross food.

A year later a gypsy woman peddling her laces near the Ford home sees doctors coming from the house. She learns from a maid of the fatal illness of the child. Going into the woods she gathers herbs and brews a mystic medicine. Later that night she looks through a window of her former home and sees a despairing group gathered about the child's bedside. When the nurse dozes the gypsy steals in and administers her medicine. The child cries and the mother hides behind a portiere as the father and doctor enter the room. The doctor pronounces the fever broken and the crisis passed. The gypsy looks longingly at her husband and child, then steals away. Later she joins her gypsy band and, as they pass from the town, she looks back once toward her home and her child.

ECLAIR

THE OLD MAN'S HUMANITY (Oct. 1).—A young doctor arrives at a country town and hangs out his shingle. The old village doctor bids him welcome, saying, "There is room enough for both of us."

But the village is skeptical of the newcomer's ability. Through the old doctor he meets the village banker's daughter, which later brings him his first case, for when her little brother is ill she persuades her father to send for the young doctor.

In the nervousness over his first call, he makes a mistake in writing the prescription, which the village druggist detects and then proceeds to tell all the villagers about. So he ignominiously loses his first case.

He cures a village cripple by way of proving his ability, but none will give him credit or compliment except the old doctor. Then an epidemic of typhoid breaks out. The old doctor is receiving more calls than he can attend to and recommends the young fellow. But all refuse to have him. The older one's wife and daughter are stricken down and he sends for the younger to attend them.

The epidemic passes, the old doctor has lost several of his patients, while the younger one brings the other's wife and daughter through to a splendid recovery. Overworked, the old doctor collapses and takes to his bed.

The villagers, not knowing that the young doctor has taken care of the elder's family, conclude that their own sick had been neglected while the old doctor spent his time upon his own family. So they come to him bearing a letter of denunciation that he should allow their loved ones to die while he saved his own.

The commitee arrives just as the young doctor is bringing his beloved friend across the crisis. And so they see and learn, and in the sorrow of shame they turn and leave, victims of their own narrow minds.

THE LUCKY LOSER (Oct. 3).—All in one fair Summer's afternoon, Lily Worthing receives three proposals from three strictly eligible and desirable suitors. But Lily loves to play the kitten, craves attention and protestations, and refuses all that they will try again. For, as Lily decided, an engaged girl couldn't have any fun. But she had not yet talked to her mother.

Mother had seen the dejected expressions of the three highly esteemed young men as they passed her on the veranda. So mother walks in on Lily's reverie of conquest and broken hearts, and rudely awakened her glorious dream with the ultimatum that she, Lily Worthing, make up her mind to accept one of these three young men or go back to boarding school. Lily begs, then resists, but mother stands by her guns. So Lily must decide on a choice or a way to make a choice. And so follows how she did it.

She called the three lovers together and tells them that they are to race to Boston, there to find a bride waiting for the winner. All secure saddle horses, and Lily gives the word to "go," and herself starts off in the auto and soon passes them. She gets to the designated hotel and awaits the arrival of the husband-to-be.

Deep down in her heart of hearts Lily loves Will Ross the best of the trio, and rather instinctively the other two feel it. So before the start is made, the pair had tampered with Will's cinch strap. Nearing the end of the race, the cinch breaks and Will falls and badly sprains his ankle. A farmer picks him up and Will has him send a wire to Lily telling of his accident.

Lily receives the message and she discovers that she loves Will best. She hurries to his resting place and there promises to marry him. Remembering the other two contestants, who will be waiting for her at the hotel, she hurries back just as they arrive. She secures an old colored woman and, as the pair come to claim their bride, presents them to Topsy, as the bride she had meant them to have. Will recovers and takes Lily back to her mother as his wife.

THE LOCK OF HAIR (Oct. 6).—Away to war and sweethearts must part. John and Fair Franchon have said over and over again those many little things which lovers always tell. As John is leaving, Franchon gives him a lock of hair with the wish and hope that it will protect him should danger come.

John is away to war now. There are soldiers out on a forage. They enter a humble little home and soon come out with some meagre little parcels of food, while plainly can be heard the pleas of the one inside not to take his all. But the soldiers laugh and a profane answer is all that is made. Now John comes in sight and enters this same home and learns of the sickness and need which the foraging soldiers had taken from.

He returns to camp and denounces the meanness of those who stole from the helpless. A quarrel ensues and blows are struck. John falls and is dying when he begs the now conscience-stricken soldier to take the lock of hair to his Fair Franchon.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN

Or THE YELLOW PERIL

A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.

Exclusive Territory

NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST

The Cleveland Leader

Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 1817 1818 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD

YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.

We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.

Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

1000 PROGRAMS PRINTED 65c
5000 $2.50—ALL SENT PREPAID
Circulars, Passes, Salary Receipts, Special Announcements, Shipping Labels, Tickets, Ballots for Voting Contests, same price. Write for samples.
THE NEW IDEA CO., Dept. G,
2925 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PATENTS

promptly obtained OR NO FEE. Trade-Marks, Caveats, Copyrights and Labels registered. TWENTY YEARS' PRACTICE. Highest references. Send model, sketch or photo, for free report on patentability. All business confidential. HAND-BOOK FREE. Explains everything. Tells How to Obtain and Sell Patents, What Inventions Will Pay, How to Get a Partner, explains best mechanical movements, and contains 300 other subjects of importance to inventors. Address,

H. B. WILLSON & CO. Patent Attorneys
Box 202 Willson Bldg. WASHINGTON, D. C.

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS
PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc.,
248 WEST 35TH ST.,
NEW YORK.

FOR SALE—Films $2.50 to $5 per reel. Two and three reel features $25 up. Used machines $40. New underwriters models $99. Light reducers $15 to $25. Odd slides 5c. sets $1. Model B gas outfits $25. FOR RENT—12,000 feet films, any makes, class A, $12, one shipment songs and posters free.
Will buy tents, films, machines.
H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wisconsin.

WANTED—First-class Feature Film man for State Rights' business. Box K, Moving Picture News, 30 West 13th St., New York City

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF
The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.
Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.
Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.
Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING
The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.
Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.
"Das Lichtbild-Theater"
The most up-to-date and most comprehensive Journal of the Cinematograph Industry in Germany.
Editor-Proprietor: KARL NEWMANN
BERLIN SW 68 Fruchstr. Berlin O. 17.
Annual subscription abroad 12 sh. Write for specimen copy.

"La Cinematografia Italiana ed Estera"
IS ITALY'S LEADING PAPER FOR THE ANIMATED PICTURE BUSINESS,
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY.
28 Large Pages. Eight Shillings per annum.
Editor-Proprietor: Prof. GUALTIERO I. FABBRI, la, Via Cumiana, 31 (Barriera di S Paolo) (Italy)
"La Cinematografia Italiana" is the official organ of the Universal Exhibition of 1911 at Turin.

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

	Feet
June 28—The Actor's Test
June 28—Benares, the Sacred City
July 17—The Airman
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.)

AMERICAN

Sept. 11—Vengeance that Failed
Sept. 12—Geronimo's Last Raid (2 reels)
Sept 16—The Fear (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 18—Wun Lung's Strategy (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 19—The Foreclosure (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—White Treachery (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 25—Bad Pete's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—Calamity Anne's Ward	1000
Oct. 2—The Renegade	1000
Oct. 3—Father's Favorite	1000
Oct. 7—Jack of Diamonds	1000
Oct. 9—A Sister's Devotion	1000
Oct. 10—Reformation of Sierra Smith	1000

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Aug. 20—The Buffalo Hunt
Aug. 23—The Reckoning
Aug. 27—The Bandit's Gratitude
Aug. 30—The White Lie
Sept. 3—The Honor of the Tribe
Sept. 6—An Old Tune
Sept. 10—The Fugitive
Sept. 13—A Frontier Child (2 reels)
Sept. 17—The Penalty
Sept. 20—The Doctor's Double
Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Aug. 27—For Love, Life and Riches (Dr.)
Aug. 31—A Shot in the Dark (Dr.)
Sept. 10—A White Indian
Sept. 17—The Ranch Man's Awakening (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Massacre of the Santa Fe Trail (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Sheriff's Reward (W. Dr.)
Sept. 28—At Old Fort Dearborn (2 reel Hist. Dr.)

BRONCHO

Sept. 18—Sundered Ties
Sept. 25—His Better Self

CHAMPION

Aug. 19—The Bum and the Bomb (Com.)
Aug. 26—The Foundling
Sept. 2—The Maid and the Rocks
Sept. 9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.)
Sept. 16—The Dummy Director (Dr.)
Sept. 23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)
Sept. 30—Her Whole Story (Dr.)

COMET

Aug. 24—The Deputy's Duty (W. Dr.)
Aug. 26—A Divided House
Aug. 31—The Moonsbiner's Task (Dr.)
Sept. 2—The Dentist's Dilemma
Sept. 7—A Waif of the Mountains
Sept. 9—The Romantic Suicide
Sept. 14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune
Sept. 16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Mystery of Mule Ranch (W. Dr.)	1000

ECLAIR

Aug. 27—Dolls
Aug. 29—The Passing Parade
Sept. 1—Two Brave Little Hearts
Sept. 3—The Actress Pulls the Strings
Sept. 5—The Guest at the Parsonage
Sept. 8—The Kind Old Man
Sept. 10—The Marshal's Honeymoon (Com.)
Sept. 10—The Haunted Bachelor (Com.)
Sept. 12—The Rancher's Lottery (Com. Dr.)
Sept. 16—A Marriage of Convenience (Com.)
Sept. 16—Around Constantinople (Travel)
Sept. 17—My Wife's Away, Hurrah (Com.)
Sept. 19—Filial Love (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept. 22—A Frivolous Heart
Sept. 22—Through China
Sept. 24—The Word of Honor (Dr.)
Sept. 26—The Old Clock on the Stairs (Dr.)
Sept. 29—Love and Science
Oct. 1—The Old Doctor's Humanity (Dr.)
Oct. 3—The Lucky Loser (Com. Dr.)
Oct. 6—The Lock of Hair (Dr.)

GREAT NORTHERN

	Feet
Aug. 10—Thou Shalt Not Kill (Dr.)
Aug. 10—When the Cat's Away (Com.)
Aug. 17—The Prodigal's Return (Dr.)
Aug. 24—For Her Sister's Sake (Dr.)	944
Aug. 31—Love is Blind (Dr.)	943
Sept. 7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.)	496
Sept. 7—The Spring Lock (Com.)	457
Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—A Child of Genius (Com.)	679
Sept. 28—A Sly Servant (Com.)	314

GAUMONT

Sept. 3—Refugee's Casket (2 reels)
Sept. 5—A Midnight Encounter and The Launching of the Imperator
Sept. 10—Love's Serenade
Sept. 12—The Plague-Stricken City
Sept. 17—Queen Elizabeth's Token
Sept. 19—Kings in Exile (2 Reels)
Sept. 24—The Heart of a Redman
Sept. 26—The Stolen Cub
Sept. 28—Life in Caucasia
Oct. 1—The Convict's Band
Oct. 3—Nigoto to the Rescue
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive
Oct. 8—Love's Test
Oct. 10—A Domestic Treasure
Oct. 10—The Gorges of Alhuquerque

GEM

Aug. 13—Babette (Dr.)
Aug. 20—White Dove's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Aug. 27—Baby Fingers
Sept. 3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)
Sept. 10—A Turn of Fate
Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)
Oct. 1—The Convict's Return

CRYSTAL

Oct. 6—The Girl in the Next Room
Oct. 6—The Man from the North Pole

IMP

Sept. 7—Lem's Hot Chocolate
Sept. 7—Queenie and the Cannibal
Sept. 9—The Intrigue (Dr.)
Sept. 12—Human Hearts (Dr.) (2 reels)
Sept. 14—Dalby the Tomboy and Dick's Predicament
Sept. 16—The Millionaire Cop (Com.-Dr.)
Sept. 19—Sweet Alice Ben Bolt (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Blind Musician (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Exchange of Labels (Com.)
Sept. 23—Getting Mary Married (Com.)
Sept. 26—The Parson and the Moonshiner (Dr.)
Sept. 28—Lie Not to Your Wife (Com.)
Sept. 28—Curing Huhby (Com.)
Sept. 30—A Cruel Stepmother
Oct. 3—A Country Girl
Oct. 5—He Had But Fifty Cents
Oct. 5—A Day in an Infant Asylum

ITALA

Sept. 15—A Woman's Duplicity (Dr.)
Sept. 22—Toto's Talisman (Com.)
Sept. 22—A Naugbty Boy (Com.)
Sept. 29—His First Lawsuit (Com.)
Sept. 29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.)
Oct. 6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)

KEYSTONE

Sept. 23—Cohen Collects a Debt
Sept. 23—The Water Nymph
Sept. 30—Riley and Schultze
Sept. 30—The New Neighbor

LUX

By Prieur.

Aug. 23—Uncle's Favorite Pudding (Com.)	..	744
Aug. 23—Views of the Livran (Sc.)		239
Aug. 30—The Modern Child (Dr.)		990
Sept. 6—A Cripple's Folly (Dr.)		990
Sept. 13—Tommy's Playmate (Dr.)		980
Sept. 20—The Little Beggar Boy (Dr.)		963

MAJESTIC

Sept. 10—Lola's Sacrifice
Sept. 15—Cupid vs. Cigarettes
Sept. 17—Thorns of Success
Sept. 22—Mary's Chauffeur
Sept. 24—The Butterfly
Sept. 29—A Garrison Joke
Sept. 29—Belligerent Benjamin
Oct. 1—The Call of the Blood
Oct. 6—The Little Music Teacher
Oct. 8—The Winner of the Spoils
Sept. 29—Belligerent Benjamin
Sept. 29—A Garrison Joke
Oct. 1—The Call of the Blood

MILANO

	Feet
Sept. 14—The Wedding Gift
Sept. 21—The Two Overcoats
Sept. 21—Bonifacio in Society
Sept. 28—The Mysterious Auto
Sept. 28—Honesty Punished
Oct. 5—An Alpine Tragedy

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Aug. 21—The Alibi (Dr.)
Aug. 23—A Stubborn Cupid
Aug. 26—The Story of a Wallet
Aug. 28—Uncle Bill
Aug. 30—The Girls and the Chaperon
Sept. 2—On the Border Line
Sept. 4—The Evidence
Sept. 6—The Girls and the Chaperon
Sept. 9—In the San Fernando Valley (Dr.)
Sept. 11—The Men Within (Dr.)
Sept. 13—Those Lovesick Cowboys
Sept. 16—The Horse Thief's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept. 18—A Western Vacation (Com.)
Sept. 20—Won by a Call (Com.)
Sept. 23—Carl Von Gordon's Family (Com.)
Sept. 25—The Criminologist (Dr.)
Sept. 27—Percy, the Bandit (W. Com.)
Sept. 30—The Old Prospector (Dr.)
Oct. 4—Hearts and Skirts

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Sept. 11—His First and Last Appearance (Com.)
Sept. 13—The Supreme Power
Sept. 18—All on Account of a Widow (Com.)
Sept. 20—Fate's Way (Dr.)
Sept. 25—The Plan That Failed (Com.)
Sept. 25—Swat the Fly (Com.)
Sept. 27—Her Ambition (Dr.)
Oct. 2—Early's Awakening
Oct. 4—Two Women

RELIANCE

Aug. 31—Thelma (2 reels)
Sept 4—The Heart of a Cossack
Sept. 7—The Bully and the Shrimp
Sept. 11—Love Knows No Laws
Sept. 14—For Love of Her
Sept. 18—Caleb West (Dr.) (2 reels)
Sept. 21—The Redemption
Sept. 25—The Geranium
Sept. 28—The Cuckoo Clock
Oct. 2—Brothers Under the Skin

REPUBLIC

Aug. 5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice
Aug. 12—The Borrowing Simp
Aug. 19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.)
Aug. 26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons

REX

Sept. 5—From the Wilds
Sept. 8—The Ghost of a Bargain
Sept. 12—The Squatter's Rights (Dr.)
Sept. 15—Lost, a Husband (Com.)
Sept. 19—Far-Away Fields (Dr.)
Sept. 22—The Conflict's End (Dr.)
Sept. 26—The Old Organist (Dr.)
Sept. 29—The Hidden Bonds (Dr.)
Oct. 3—Bob's Deception
Oct. 6—The Winnings of Silas Pegg

SOLAX

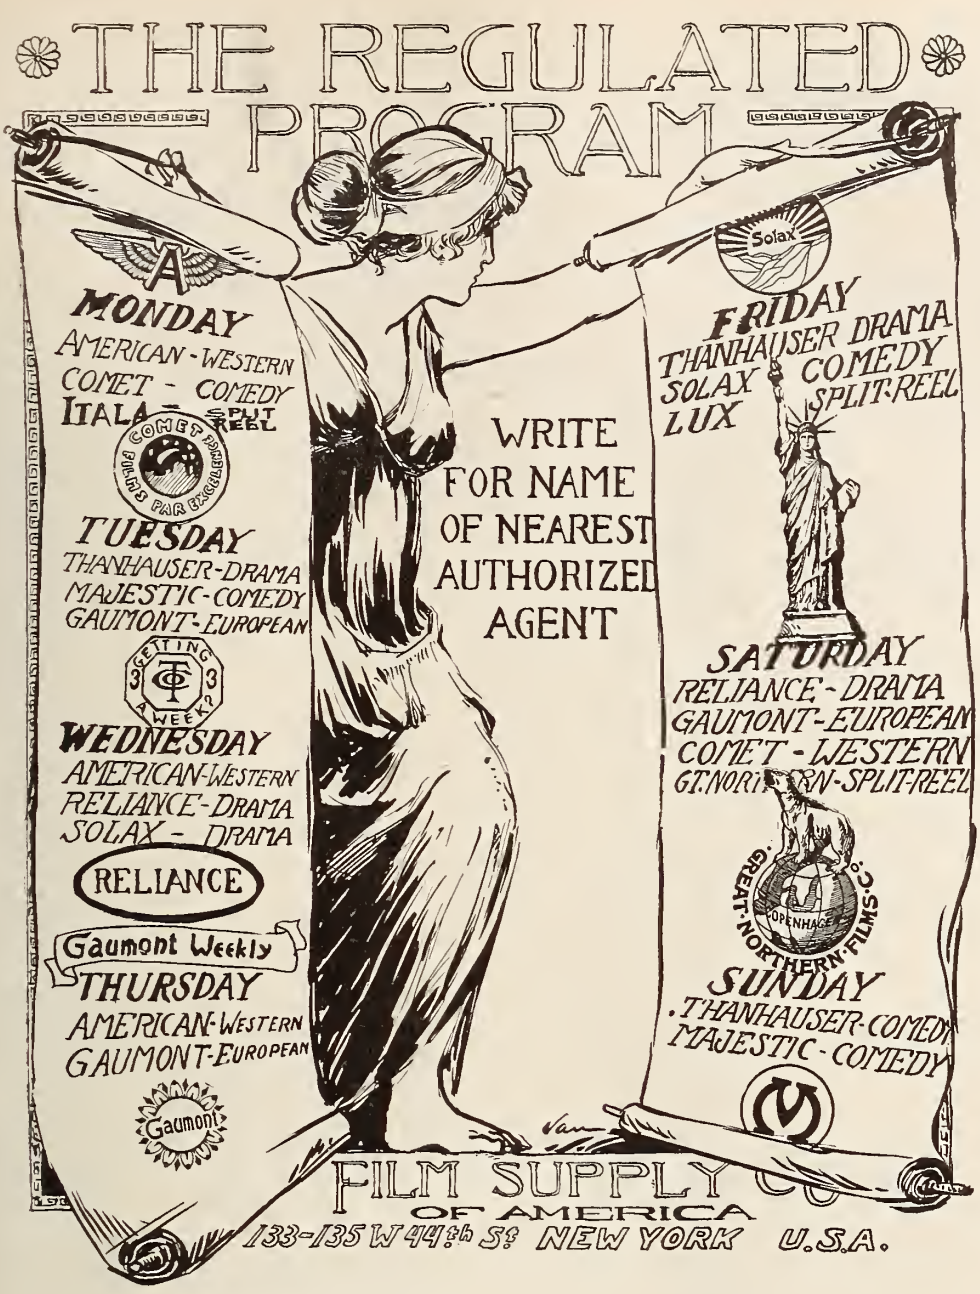
Sept. 12—Fra Diavolo (3 reels), States Rights Feature
Sept. 13—The Soul of the Violin
Sept. 25—Dublin Dan (3 reels)
Sept. 18—The Spry Spinsters
Sept. 25—For the Love of the Flag
Sept. 27—Si's Surprise Party
Oct. 2—The Fugitive
Sept. 27—The Fugitive
Oct. 2—Si's Surprise Party
Oct. 4—The Retreat from Eden

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 1—The Capture of New York
Sept. 3—The Voice of Conscience
Sept. 6—His Father's Son
Sept. 8—Don't Pinch My Pup
Sept. 10—A Star Reborn
Sept. 13—The Birth of the Lotus Blossom
Sept. 15—Orator, Knight and Cow Charmer
Sept. 17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation
Sept. 20—Two Souls
Sept. 29—Please Help the Pore
Oct. 1—Letters of a Lifetime
Oct. 4—The Warning

VICTOR

Sept. 13—All for Love
Sept. 20—Flo's Discipline (Com.)
Sept. 27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.)
Oct. 4—Tangled Relations



The Moving Picture News
RECOGNIZED AS THE OPERATORS' FRIEND
THE SCENARIO WRITERS' GUIDE
25c
SUBSCRIBE NOW
FOR BALANCE OF YEAR
25c

THE STOLEN CUB

(Gaumont, Sept. 26th.)

Another of the wild animal series of films upon which the Gaumont Company has been focusing a portion of its energy has come under our notice. This time it is the story of a mother bear and her stolen cub. The scene of the story is laid in the Canadian forests. A trapper in wandering through the woods, comes upon a young bear cub which he promptly takes possession of, carrying it home to his wife and children for a pet. The young cub becomes very much domesticated, and it is quite amusing to watch the children feeding it from a bottle.

The mother bear coming back to the spot where she left her baby, finding it gone, is consumed with grief and continues to hunt for the cub.

One day when the trapper is away on an important mission some distance from home, his wife grows anxious as to what may have befallen him. This scene shows she and her children awaiting the return of the trapper. All at once they hear a noise outside the door which they interpret as his approach to the cabin. The mother opens the door, and as quickly closes it again, her face depicting the utmost terror for without the door, instead of her returning husband, is the old mother bear, who proceeds to paw and press inward on the door, making it creek almost off its hinges.

In the meantime the trapper has been waylaid by robbers, who have shot at him, rolled him over an embankment and left him unconscious, rifling at the same time his pockets and taking all that he had.

However, on awakening from the unconscious condition in which they have left him, he makes his way home, arriving just in time to shoot the bear and save his family.

The film is an excellent study on the bear and worthy of the highest commendation.

ITALA FILMS TO BE RELEASED THROUGH FILM SUPPLY COMPANY OF AMERICA.

It has been announced that the Itala Films will in future be released through the Film Supply Company. This will in no way conflict with those which are still in the possession of the Mutual Film Corporation, and which will be released by them according to their dates of issue.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Aug. 15—An Interrupted Elopement (Com.)
Aug. 15—The Tragedy of a Dress Suit (Com.)
Aug. 19—With the Enemy's Help (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 22—A Change of Spirit (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 26—Mr. Grouch at the Seashore (Com.)
Aug. 26—Through Dumb Luck (Com.).....
Aug. 29—A Pueblo Legend.....
Sept. 2—In the North Woods (Dr.).....
Sept. 5—Getting Rid of Trouble (Com.)..
Sept. 5—He Must Have a Wife (Com.).....
Sept. 9—An Unseen Enemy (Dr.) .....
Sept. 12—Blind Love (Dr.) .....
Sept. 16—Stern Papa (Com.).....
Sept. 16—Love's Messenger (Com.).....
Sept. 19—Two Daughters of Eve (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Friends (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Disappointed Mamma (Com.)....
Sept. 26—A Mixed Affair (Com.).....

CINES

C. Kleine

Sept. 7—Picturesque Sardinia, Italy (Sc.).. 230
Sept. 10—Scenes Along Salerno Coast, Italy (Sc.) 140
Sept. 10—The Conspiracy of Catiline (Dr.).. 885
Sept. 14—Honors Divided (Dr.).....1075
Sept. 17—Amalfi, Italy (Scenic); and A Gun Factory (Ind.); and Traditional Customs in Southern Italy (Top.) 1005
Sept. 21—Betrayed for Love (Hist.-Dr.)....1000
Sept. 24—Castrovillari, So., Italy (Sc.).... 335
Sept. 24—A Cavalier's Romance (Dr.)..... 665
Sept. 28—Quaint Sights in Sardinia (Sc.).. 205
Sept. 28—Reuben and the Boys (Com.)....
Oct. 1—The Island of Malta (Sc.)..... 460
Oct. 1—How a Brave Man Died (Hist. Dr.) 540
Oct. 5—Laino, Southern Italy (Sc.)..... 300
Oct. 5—Trifle Not With Love (Com.)..... 700
Oct. 8—A Glimpse of Sicily (Sc.)..... 250
Oct. 8—Artistic Glass Work (Indust.).... 300
Oct. 8—The Wonder Powders (Com.)..... 450
Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)..1000

EDISON

Aug. 21—Mr. Pickwick's Predicament (Com.) 1000
Aug. 23—The Cub Reporter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 24—The War on the Mosquito (Edu.) 1000
Aug. 27—Alone in New York (Dr.)..... 1000
Aug. 28—Helping John (Com. Dr.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Simla (Sc.) 1000
Sept. 3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Sept. 4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)..1000
Sept. 7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912.. 400
Sept. 10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.) 1000
Sept. 11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.) 1000
Sept. 13—The Dam Builder (Dr.) 100
Sept. 14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies 1000
Sept. 23—Benares and Agra, India (Sc.).... 350
Sept. 23—How Bobby Joined the Circus (Com.) 650
Sept. 24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.).....1000
Sept. 27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.) 300
Oct. 2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.).. 700
Oct. 4—Cashmere (Sc.) 1000
Oct. 5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—A Curable Disease (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 8—Under False Colors (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.) 1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.) 1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)..1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.) 650

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Aug. 10—The Little Sheriff.....
Aug. 13—Broncho Billy's Last Hold-up (Dr.) 1000
Aug. 15—An Adamless Eden (Com.).....1000
Aug. 16—The Magic Wand (Juvenile).....1000
Aug. 23—Work in a U. S. Arsenal (Edu.)..
Aug. 23—A Water Fight (Com.).....
Aug. 24—The Government Test (Dr.).....
Aug. 17—On the Moonlight Trail (Dr.)....1000
Aug. 20—The Return of Becky (Dr.).....
Aug. 22—A Corner in Whiskers (Com.).....
Aug. 23—Her Adopted Father (Dr.).....
Aug. 24—Broncho Billy's Escapade (Dr.)....
Aug. 27—Alkali Ike Plays the Devil (W. Com.) 1000

Feet

Aug. 29—Three to One (Com.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Hermit (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Broncho Billy for Sheriff (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Wildman (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Twilight (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.) ....
Sept. 10—A Woman of Arizona (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Listener's Lesson (Com.).....1000
Sept. 13—Billy McGrath's Love Letters (Com.) 1000
Sept. 14—Broncho Billy Outwitted (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 17—Neptune's Daughter (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—The Mixed Sample Trunks (Com.)
Sept. 20—The Love Test (Com.) .....
Sept. 21—"Alkali" Ike's Pants (Com.).....

LUBIN

Sept. 5—The Smuggler (Com.).....
Sept. 6—A Romance of the Coast (Dr.)..
Sept. 7—Little Family Affair (Com. Dr.)..
Sept. 9—The Halfbreed's Sacrifice (Dr.)...
Sept. 11—A Redhot Courtship (Com.).....
Sept. 12—Betty and the Roses (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Never Again (Com.).....
Sept. 13—Buster and the Pirates.....
Sept. 14—A Trustee of the Law.....
Sept. 16—The Sleeper .....
Sept. 18—When Father Had His Way.....
Sept. 20—Turpentine Industry.....
Sept. 20—No Trespasssing.....
Sept. 21—His Pair of Pants.....
Sept. 23—A Gay Time in Quebec.....
Sept. 25—The Renegades .....
Sept. 26—Swimming and Life Saving.....
Sept. 26—Buster and the Gypsies.....
Sept. 27—Glued .....
Sept. 27—The Water Wagon.....
Sept. 28—The Doctor's Debt.....
Sept. 30—A Girl's Bravery (Dr.).....
Oct. 2—The Amateur Iceman High Class (Com.) .....
Oct. 3—The Physician of Silver Gulch (Dr.) .....
Oct. 4—Collection Day (Com.) .....
Oct. 4—Spoony Sam (Com.) .....
Oct. 5—His Life (Dr.).....

G. MELIES

Aug. 15—Romance at Catalina.....
Aug. 22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 29—His Partner's Share (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Obsession (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West .....

PATHE FRERES

Aug. 27—A Prince of Israel (Bib.).....
Aug. 28—The Live Wire (D .).....
Aug. 29—The Detective's Desperate Chance (W. Dr.) .....
Aug. 29—The Armless Wonder.....
Aug. 30—The Musketeer's Love (Hist. Dr.).
Aug. 31—An Aeroplane Love Affair (Com.).
Sept. 2—Pathe's Weekly No. 36.....
Sept. 3—Beat rix d'Este (Dr.).....
Sept. 4—Locked Out of Wedlock (Com.)
Sept. 5—The Penalty Paid (Dr.).....
Sept. 6—Whiffles and the Magic Wand (Com.); and The Bud, the Leaf and the Flower (Sci.).....
Sept. 7—Gee! My Pants! (Com.).....
Sept. 9—Pathe's Weekly No. 37.....
Sept. 9—The Blighted Son (Dr.).....
Sept. 10—Love's Progress (Dr. Com.).....
Sept. 10—A Little Journey in Tunis (Custom)
Sept. 11—Black Beauty (Dr.).....
Sept. 12—Anguished Hours (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—Ford Her Lord (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Late Harriet Quimby's Flight Across the English Channel.....
Sept. 14—Saved at the Altar (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—Pathe's Weekly No. 38.....
Sept. 17—The Elopement (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Gerone—the Venice of Spain (Tr.)
Sept. 18—The Bandit's Spur (W. Dr.)....
Sept. 19—The Desperado (W. Dr.) .....
Sept. 20—Max's Tragedy (Com.).....
Sept. 20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept. 21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Pathe's Weekly, No. 39.....
Sept. 25—Pals (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—Glacier National Park (Sc.).....
Sept. 26—The Andrew .....
Sept. 28—The Filibuster's Ship (Dr.).....
Sept. 30—Pathe's Weekly, No. 40.....
Sept. 30—The Man Hunt (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—A Well Washed House .....
Oct. 1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.) .....
Oct. 2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct. 3—Theodore Roosevelt .....
Oct. 3—Experiments with Liquid Air.....
Oct. 4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.).....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Sept. 7—The Darling of the C. S. A.....1000
Sept. 9—The Girl Reporter's Big Scoop (Dr.)1000
Sept. 11—Dr. Skinnem's Wonderful Invention (Com.) .....
Sept. 11—The Ancient Port of Jaffa (Sc.)
Sept. 13—The Street Singer (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 14—A Railroad Lochinvar (Com.-Dr.)..1000
Sept. 16—The Parasite (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 18—In Peril of Their Lives (Dr.)....
Sept. 20—Chips of the Old Block (Com.)....
Sept. 20—Tilley's Bird Farm (Edu.).....
Sept. 21—The Grit of the Girl Telegrapher (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—Fat Bill's Wooing (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Roost, the Kidder (Com.).....
Sept. 25—Queen of the Kitchen (Com.).....
Sept. 25—Along the River Nile (Sc.).....
Sept. 27—The Heart of John Grimm (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 28—The Apache Renegade (Dr.).....1000

SELIG

Aug. 30—Just His Luck (Farce-Comedy)....
Aug. 30—Frenzied Finance (W. Com.).....
Sept. 2—As the Fates Decree (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 3—An Equine Hero (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—Serg. Byrne of the N. W. M. P. (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 6—Circumstantial Evidence (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 9—The House of His Master (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 10—The Fighting Instinct (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Indelible Stain (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 13—The Trade Gun Bullet (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 16—The Substitute Model (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 17—The Brand Blotter (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—Into the Genuine (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 20—Life and Customs of the Winnebago Indians (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—A Detective's Strategy (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 24—The Cattle Rustlers (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 25—Partners (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Pity of It (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 27—The Borrowed Umbrella (Com.)..
Sept. 27—Harvesting Alfalfa in New Mexico (Ind.) .....

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Aug. 21—A Day in the German Navy (Top.). 400
Aug. 28—The Golden Curl (Dr.).....1020
Sept. 4—An Eccentric Sportsman (Com.).. 455
Sept. 4—Small Game at the Zoo (Sc.)..... 165
Sept. 4—From Lauterbrunnen to Murren, Switzerland (Sc.) 380
Sept. 11—Glimpses of St. Petersburg (Sc.) 360
Sept. 11—And Chemical Action (Ed.)..... 180
Sept. 11—And Winter Sports in Moritz.... (Topical) 485
Sept. 18—New Plymouth (Scenic); and A Country Holiday (Com.)..... 980
Sept. 25—The Sacrifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel) 500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.).... 500
Oct. 9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)... 300
Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)..... 700

VITAGRAPH

Aug. 12—Ingenuity 700
Aug. 13—The Heart of Esmeralda.....1000
Aug. 14—Vultures and Doves.....1000
Aug. 16—A Bogus Napolcon.....1000
Aug. 17—Two Battles 1000
Aug. 19—Her Grandchild 1050
Aug. 20—Lovesick Maidens of Cuddleton....1000
Aug. 21—The Ancient Bow.....1000
Aug. 23—Saving an Audience.....1000
Aug. 24—On Board Kaiser Wilhelm II..... 388
Aug. 24—The Party Dress 614
Aug. 27—Flirt or Heroine.....1000
Aug. 28—Two Cinders 555
Aug. 28—Bumps 477
Aug. 30—Written in the Sand.....1000
Aug. 31—The Bond of Music.....1000
Aug. 26—A Double Danger.....
Sept. 2—Tommy's Sister .....
Sept. 3—Coronets and Hearts.....
Sept. 4—Capt. Barnacle's Legacy.....
Sept. 6—Bunny's Suicide .....
Sept. 6—She Wanted a Boarder.....
Sept. 7—A Wasted Sacrifice .....
Sept. 9—Patio Days .....
Sept. 10—The Higher Mercy.....
Sept. 11—The Hindoo Curse.....
Sept. 13—The Loyalty of Sylvia.....
Sept. 14—Popular Betty.....
Sept. 14—Fortunes in a Teacup.....
Sept. 16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif.....
Sept. 17—The Troubled Trail.....
Sept. 18—A Vitagraph Romance.....
Sept. 20—The Indian Mutiny .....
Sept. 21—Adventure of the Italian Model..
Sept. 23—Bobby's Father .....
Sept. 24—His Lordship, the Valet .....
Sept. 25—Bill Wilson's Gal.....
Sept. 26—The Signal Fires.....
Sept. 27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville.....
Sept. 28—Irony of Fate .....
Sept. 30—Her Choice .....

EASTMAN
motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

"Agfa"
Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
NON-FLAM AND POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)
RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

Abonnement 1 fr. pour le monde entier
CINÉMA-REVUE
Journal indépendant d'Informations
Supplement mensuel à "Cinema"
Annuaire de la projection fixe et animée
Numéro spécimen sur demande
Bureau 118, rue d'Assas Paris

WRITE OR WIRE FOR INFORMATION ON
STATE RIGHTS
FOR THE BIG THREE REEL ALL-STAR FEATURE PRODUCTION HEAVILY ADVERTISED FROM COAST TO COAST
DUBLIN DAN
THE IRISH DETECTIVE
THE THRILLING AND SENSATIONAL MELODRAMA—A TENSE STORY OF CRIME, CONSPIRACY AND PUNISHMENT—AN EMPHATIC BOX-OFFICE ATTRACTION WITH THE INIMITABLE
BARNEY GILMORE
WRITE FOR SAMPLE COPIES OF ATTRACTIVE ADVERTISING MATTER WHICH INCLUDES THREE SHEETS, TWO KINDS OF ONE SHEET, HALF-SHEET LOBBY DISPLAY, ILLUSTRATED HERALDS AND COLORED SLIDES.

REGULAR ATTRACTIONS COMING
Si's Surprise Party
Released Wednesday, October 2nd
The Return from Eden
Released Friday, October 4th
Canned Harmony
Released Wednesday, October 9th
Darktown Aristocrats
Released Friday, October 11th
Solax Company
FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 29

"Please Help the Pore"

So read the placard on a toy hand-organ that a little girl played mournfully in the park. She wasn't poor at that, but she had heard her father speak of his need of a sum of money and decided to raise it for him! Instead she "raised" the miser who held her father's note—with the strains of the toy organ. She won his heart, too, the cute kiddie, and the day for her sorely-pressed parent.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1.

"Letters of a Lifetime"

A dying bachelor of wealth stumbles over some old letters, and they call back the happy days of the past. He knows he has every comfort that money can buy—except friends—but the recollections the letters bring prove there is still a void. He is reminded of his brother, who remained poor through marrying, but who found happiness in his poverty. His reflections make an unusual film.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 4.

"The Warning"

This story with the remarkable "twist" will work greater benefit for the temperance cause than an army of solemn lecturers. Be sure to let all the temperance, mission, reform and uplift societies roundabout know you have it. A man addicted to drink takes his motherless son with him on a fishing trip. What seems to be the child's actual adventure completely sobers the father and he renounces the "cup that cheers" for all time.

THANHOUSER CO. New Rochelle, New York

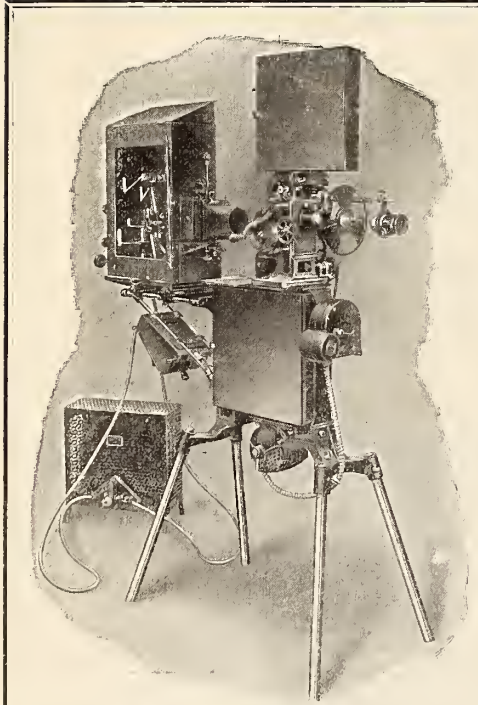
Film Supply Company Agents for U. S. and Canada

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



WORKING DAY AND NIGHT

TO MAKE DELIVERIES ON

Power's Cameragraph No. 6A

That's one thing—among many—that Power's Cameragraph does. It works "day and night," every day in the year. It stands up under wear and tear.

And because of the recognized superiority of this machine, we are now working "day and night" also to keep abreast of our orders.

Already possessed of the largest factory in the world producing moving picture machines, we have, this week, been compelled to greatly enlarge our quarters.

Business is wonderfully good with us, but we reassert this is no spurt. It is a healthy increase, and is due to the fact that the trade knows they must have the best and are realizing WHO MAKES IT.

In a word, our growth is the result of absolute merit which has kept Power's Cameragraph at the head for fifteen years.

Let us write you about our latest model No. 6A. Let us tell you of our many new improvements—our Loop Setter for one thing.

POWER'S DOES OVER 60 PER CENT OF THE MOVING PICTURE MACHINE BUSINESS. WHY? BECAUSE IT IS STAMPED WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE MOVING PICTURE INDUSTRY AS THE BEST MACHINE ON EARTH.

Write for catalogue D now.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

90 Gold Street, New York City

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

THE CITY OF NEW YORK.
DEPARTMENT OF WATER SUPPLY, GAS AND ELECTRICITY.
COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE.
13-21 PARK ROW.

HENRY S. THOMPSON,
COMMISSIONER
J. W. F. BENNETT,
DEPUTY COMMISSIONER
J. L. PULTZ,
SECRETARY

NEW YORK, July 24, 1912.

The Precision Machine Co.,
321-3 East 34th Street,
City.

Gentlemen:-

Upon recommendation of the Engineers I would notify you, in response to your letter of July 17th, that your Simplex Projector, a moving picture machine, designed for motor operation, is hereby approved for use in this city when installed in accordance with our general requirements for apparatus of this class.

Kindly forward five sets of illustrations and descriptive matter to this office for distribution to our various borough offices.

Very truly,

Commissioner.

Advisory Board of Engineers.

Secretary.

SENSATIONAL—COLOSSAL—HISTORICAL MILITARY PRODUCTION

"CUSTER'S LAST FIGHT"

OCTOBER 4th

IN THREE REELS

The Most Stupendous Production Ever Conceived, Costing the NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. a Fortune to Make

GENUINE "101" BISON

Reproduction of the Most Sensational Incident in the U. S. Army, in which

1000 INDIANS

AND

1000 SOLDIERS

Engaged in a Battle to the Death in which Custer's Troops Were Completely Annihilated

NOT ONE MAN ESCAPED FROM "THE CIRCLE OF DEATH"

ONE, THREE and EIGHT SHEET LITHOGRAPHS

SPECIAL EIGHT PAGE BOOK, PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED WITH HALF-TONE ENGRAVINGS. BOOK IT—BILL IT—AND GET IN ON THE GREATEST ATTRACTION EVER SEEN IN A THEATER

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

OCT 3 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 13

SEPTEMBER 28
1912

"GUY MANNERING"
Reliance (two reel) Release of October 9

PRICE TEN CENTS

THEODORE ROOSEVELT!

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

WONDERFUL PERSONALITY
OF GREAT HISTORY MAKER IN
2,000 FEET OF FILM
NOW READY—15c. per foot

Don't take time to write, wire your order!

POSTERS—HERALDS—CARDS

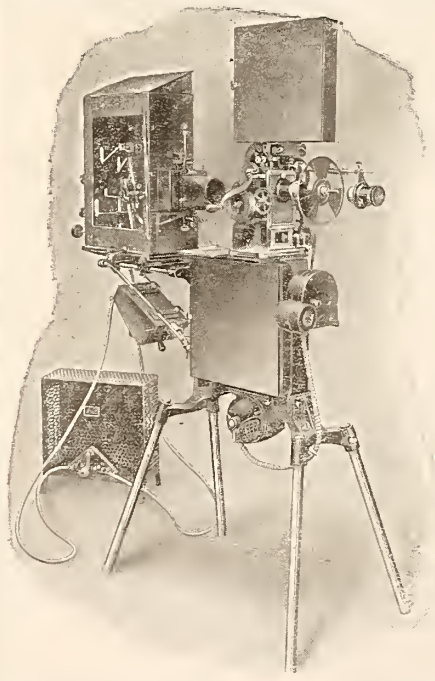
-: COMING :-

"THE BLACK CAT or IN A WOMAN'S GRIP"
Wonderful dramatic feature of underworld life.
Released Oct. 1st in Three Reels. (Vitascope Co. of Berlin)

"THE MIKADO'S FUNERAL"
A Gorgeous Spectacle.

"THE FATAL SHOT"
Sensational Vitascope Feature.

General Film Publicity & Sales Co.
145 West 45th Street, New York
H. A. SPANUTH, Pres.



CHOOSE RIGHT

THE SIGNBOARD TO SUCCESS IS

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A

Your machine points the way to prosperity or failure. It must be the best to meet competition and start you on the easy road to success.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has for fifteen years expressed the best in moving picture machines. We are too old to go backward, so we have advanced a few strides in our new equipment: No. 6A as follows:

ARC LAMP: 100 amp. capacity, 14 adjustments, will take ¾" carbon, 6" lower, 12" upper.

LAMP HOUSE: Excellent ventilation, large, roomy door each side; lamp more accessible.

STAND: All iron, 14" magazine built in.

This mentions a few improvements which make for greater efficiency.

POWER'S NOW BETTER THAN EVER.

Let us send you catalogue D with full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
90 Gold Street, New York City

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

SPARKLING COMEDY IN SPLIT REELS

KEYSTONE FILMS

"THE BEATING HE NEEDED"

OCT. 7

An amusing story of an effeminate college boy who was sent West to make a man of him. The plan failed till his father gave him the beating he needed.

"PEDRO'S DILEMMA"

OCT. 7

A clever comedy of Spanish life, involving an elopement. Papa tries to prevent it and follows the wrong couple, with comical results.

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY 150 E. 14th Street, New York City

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

"AN INDIAN LEGEND"

Released Wednesday, Oct. 9

A beautifully photographed subject, showing an Indian legend in which the son of an Indian agent carries on a courtship of a beautiful Indian girl. Later he transfers his affections, and the grief of the Indian girl over his marriage to her white rival leads the Indians to attack the whites, and wonderful scenes of battle are shown. The Indian girl's brother kills the man, and the Indian girl ends her life in the water. Every day her spirit comes forth from the lake and she weeps and wails, then disappears.

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE CO.

150 East 14th Street, New York City

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8th

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A RING"

and

"SURPRISING ELIZA"

Two gloom dispellers, or twenty minutes in Happy Land.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10th

"A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT"

A comedy drama properly balanced, at times uproariously funny, then tremendously dramatic.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13th

"THE WHITE BONNET"

There is not a man so hardened, not a woman so cruel nor a child so perverted but will give way to tears over this striking little Paris ECLAIR drama.

FILMS of QUALITY

ECLAIR FILM CO., 225 W. 42nd St., New York City, N.Y.

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative

AND

NON-FLAM POSITIVE

(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.

15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK

Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

SPECIAL—Send us 25 cents in Stamps or Coin and we will send you the Moving Picture News for balance of year (three months).

Abonnement 1 fr. pour le monde entier

CINÉMA-REVUE

Journal indépendant d'Informations
Supplement mensuel à "Cinema"
Annuaire de la projection fixe et animée
Numéro spécimen sur demande
Bureau 118, rue d'Assas Paris

MIATT PROCURES PATENTS

1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law

Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive.
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

THANHOUSER

FILM

"EVERYBODY'S BOOKING IT!"

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 6

A SIX-CYLINDER ELOPEMENT

A boy, a girl and a "red devil" are the features of this mile-a-minute comedy.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 8

MISS ROBINSON CRUSOE

Adventures of a girl who was shipwrecked in the tropics. Issued in two reels with (last half of last reel) the novelty

SPECIMENS FROM N. Y. ZOOLOGICAL PARK

No Friday release on the 11th because of two-reeler of of preceding Tuesday.

And Then: OCT. 29

"PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE," the great love story by Charles Reade.

And in November and December

"FOREST ROSE," an adaptation of Emerson Bennett's story of the early West.

"THE WOMAN IN WHITE," Wilkie Collins' story-classic reproduced in what will become a film-classic.

"THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM," a Thanhouser Masterpiece.

THANHOUSER CO.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

NOTHING TO BEAT IT AS AN EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY PROPOSITION

A FEW FERTILE AND RICH STATES STILL OPEN FOR THE BIG THREE REEL ALL-STAR FEATURE PRODUCTION HEAVILY ADVERTISED FROM COAST TO COAST.

DUBLIN DAN

THE IRISH DETECTIVE

THE THRILLING AND SENSATIONAL MELODRAMA—A TENSE STORY OF CRIME, CONSPIRACY AND PUNISHMENT—AN EMPHATIC BOX-OFFICE ATTRACTION WITH WELL-KNOWN

BARNEY GILMORE

ABUNDANCE OF ADVERTISING MATTER

TWO KINDS OF ONE-SHEETS, THREE-SHEETS, HALF-SHEET LOBBY DISPLAYS IN THREE COLORS—COLORED SLIDES AND ILLUSTRATED HERALDS. WRITE FOR SAMPLES.

REGULAR RELEASES

(Through Film Supply Company)

Canned Harmony

Released Wednesday, October 9th

A Fool and His Money

(The new title for darktown aristocrats)

Released Friday, October 11th

The Gold Brick

Released Wednesday, October 16th

Solax Company

FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

Genuine "101" BISON HEADLINERS

THE SERGEANT'S BOY

2 REELS OCT. 11 2 REELS

A cyclonic presentation of war and heroism, with scene upon scene of overwhelming spectacularism, unfolding a story of military life combining thrilling sensationalism and peerless dramatic rendition.

ORPHANED BY THE SAVAGE ATTACK OF THE INDIANS, LITTLE TOM IS SAVED FROM THE MAELSTROM OF DEATH AND ADOPTED BY THE SERGEANT. An attachment springs up between Tom and the Colonel's daughter, which embarrasses the parents when ten years later the Colonel wishes her to marry Captain Palmer. The romance is ended by fate, when, during a disastrous battle, the rivals fight side by side and Tom is killed. The finish of the picture is a solemn military funeral, witnessed by the heart-broken girl.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

150 EAST 14TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., SOLE AGENT FOR U. S. AND CANADA

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

C CI.B258964

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY.
Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI September 28, 1912 Number 13

OCT 5 1912

CINEMATOGRAPHY AS AN EDUCATOR

THE advances that are being made in the art are beginning to receive due notice from the press all over the country. It is hard to pick up a paper now without seeing some special mention made of some trade or science being exploited by Cinematography.

The moving picture will assist the National Mouth Hygiene Association in an educational campaign to be country wide. Through Cinematography better teeth, improved general health and increased efficiency for school children will be a reality. Score another point for Cinematography. It is an honor to be connected with such an industry that can impress temperance lessons—teach hygiene and promote increased efficiency among the children of our broad land. It only goes to prove what I have long asserted, both in writing and in speaking—namely, that the right kind of moving pictures will tend to uplift, educate and refine men, women and children. I am glad to see that the public press, lay and religious, is appreciating the fact. The story put out by the National Mouth Hygiene Association was written by William Lord Wright, of the News staff, and we are proud that the News is connected so closely with such an important undertaking.

With a view to establishing a free dental clinic and free dental inspection in the schools, similar to the German system, the Toledo Dental Association will have exhibited in several of the moving picture shows Mr. Wright's story picturing the trouble that toothache made in an hour in the Jones family. Serio-comic situations shown are followed on the film by others showing in detail how it is proposed to carry on the school dental inspection, how defective teeth of children of parents in poor circumstances will be treated at the free clinic and how a dental nurse will give instructions and see that the orders of the inspecting dentists are enforced.

In Washington this week union sessions were held of the National Dental Association, National Mouth Hygiene Association and District of Columbia Dental Society. The National Mouth Hygiene Association is composed of laymen as well as dentists and included on its board of governors are Horace Fletcher, of "Fletcherizing" fame, president; Dr. Eugene H. Porter, Commissioner of Health of New York State; Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Superintendent of the Chicago schools; Miss Martha Taylor, of the Department of Child Hygiene, Russell Sage Foundation; Dr. W. A. Evans, former Commissioner of Health in Chicago, who made his department famous for efficiency, and many other eminent men and women.

Dr. L. L. Zarbaugh, of Toledo, is chairman of the national committee that prepared the moving picture film. Dr. Zarbaugh, with Dr. W. G. Ebersole, of Cleveland, and other members of the committee, presented that phase of the work fully at the meetings in Washington Friday and Saturday of last week.

There will be fifty copies of the film made for presentation in as many different cities. The films will be given free to managers of picture shows and arrangements have already been made for their public presentation in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, in Cuba and the Philippine Islands and on United States battleships.

In Germany, dental inspection in the schools is compulsory. It has been demonstrated that the system not only promotes general health and efficiency, but that it is a wonderful preventive of tuberculosis, the germs of which find incubators in diseased and defective teeth.

Results are obtainable, also, nearer home. Dr. G. C. Ashmun, president of the Cleveland Board of Education, reports that 20,890 pupils received dental inspection in that city. Of that number 97 per cent. had faulty or diseased mouths. Reliably conducted psychological tests in a class of 27 children, selected as having the greatest oral defects in a school of 846 pupils, gave an average increase in their efficiency of 99.8 per cent.

In addition to the above, the cause of temperance is being exploited by the moving picture show. It is exceedingly interesting to read such editorials as the following in the New York Sun:

REAL AGENTS OF TEMPERANCE

The testimony of the liquor sellers of Schuylkill county, Pensylvania, that their trade has been seriously injured by the competition of moving picture shows comes from a source and with an authority particularly well informed and convincing. Moreover, the saloon proprietors are giving practical evidence of the truth of their complaints, for numbers of them are retiring from the business because they cannot make a living at it.

Every community that has provided a substitute for the barroom, and conducted it on a commercial basis without obtrusive philanthropic and religious annexes, has seen the traffic in liquor decrease, or so change in character as to result in noticeable improvement in conditions. Summer amusement parks attract family parties, the members of which, because of the environment and economic necessity, drink moderately as to each individual, though the gross amount of liquids consumed may be large. The half dollar or dollar that one man spent at the bar to his own injury and the injury of his family provides a ride in a trolley car, a glass or so of beer, a visits to the "movies" for wife and children, where the opportunity for such expenditure exists.

If the sensitive visitor to popular places of relaxation and entertainment can rid himself of the notion that every infraction of good manners is an offence against good morals, he will be impressed by the excellent order and creditable behavior of those who surround him. Drunkenness is rare. The managers of these enterprises neither encourage nor tolerate it. They realize that permanent success depends on the approval of women, and that the safer and pleasanter their theatres and parks are the greater will be the receipts at the box office. A decent sobriety among their patrons is an essential prerequisite of the continuance of their profits. The amusement park or cheap theatre that establishes a reputation of safety for unescorted women and children has laid a firm foundation for its future.

Not only in this country, but in other countries, the same conditions exist, and the advancement of Cinematography is the downfall of the saloon. A friend writing us from England a week ago said that in a little town well known to both of us, where there used to be thirty-two public houses, there are only eight. This reduction was made by high license and the moving picture combined. So much does the moving picture advance the thought of the people, that it is of greater importance now than is the daily newspaper, and I am more than pleased to see the great advances being made along these educational and temperance lines. In a little while I will be in a position to report the formation of two large companies, with a capital going into several millions of dollars, for the purpose of exploiting films of a strictly educational nature, and when once these companies are started there will scarcely be a high school, college or university without these subjects.

"PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE" GRIPS SPECTATOR

The writings of Charles Reade make rich moving picture materials, and Thanhouser Company have proved it. Never has a better human interest subject than the producer's "Put Yourself in His Place" been shown on a moving picture screen. You are put squarely in the hero's place and left to ponder on what you would do. You are really more than impressed. You feel the story as you would feel a raw November wind. The "Henry" of William Garwood and the "Grace" of Marguerite Snow grip you and grow on you as the picture progresses.

Jean Darnell's "Edith," her brother, as portrayed by William Russell, and the villainous "Coventry," as depicted by David Thompson, are in keeping with the standard established by the work of the two principals. The pictureplaying has the Thanhouser stamp right through, even to the minor roles, and so has general production. The details of some of the "big scenes," notably the exciting ones in and about the forge in the church, make ard established by the work of the two principals. The camera work is "Thanhouser," too, and will make every foot of the two reels shine out on your screen with unparallelled sharpness—which is the last but not least factor.

The subject is released—two reels, remember—Tuesday, October 29. Under the new rule of Thanhouser Company that every picture they issue in two reels or over be a "perfect publicity" proposition, there will be a varicty of one-sheets—some larger sizes—illustrated slides and cuts for newspaper and circular use. Charles Reade has readers in this country by the thousand, and the announcement of any of his books as a film will attract them to the picture theatre. Exhibitors are therefore advised to play up the author's name in advertising this subject to the public.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

This firm has sent out the following:

Circular Letter of September 23d to Dealers and Film Exchanges

Gentlemen:

After October 1st, 1912, we will not sell complete machines without lenses.

You may order a machine forwarded and the lenses held on back order, but the machine will be billed complete including lenses, which are your property, although remaining in our stock. We will forward them to you any time within three months from date of shipment of the machine. This will help you to avoid accumulating a stock of odd size lenses.

This action is necessary in order to maintain our claims for perfect projection.

We find it is the practice of many dealers to equip machines with cheap lenses, which is a real detriment to the results on the screen. After mature deliberation, we have decided upon the above course, which will be put into effect on the date specified.

Yours very truly,
NICHOLAS POWER CO.,
H. B. Coles, Sales Manager.

New York, N. Y.—The Metropolis Exchange Co., $10,000; A. B. Graham; A. E. Stevenson and H. R. Brown.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Plans for a $10,000 moving picture theatre to be erected at Smith and State streets were filed with the Building Bureau.

TIME AVENGES
Reliance release October 5th.

MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE OF AMERICA

SOMETHIN' DOIN' IN CLEVELAND

"Honey Boy" Evans Minstrels and Pathe's Camera Man Help Along the Fun

Cleveland Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. of America, "pulled off" their second picnic of the season on September 5th at Luna Park. The weather was ideal, good and hot, and some "hot stuff" was picturized by Pathe's camera man during the progress of events; in fact, the reel is about two-thirds comedy and should prove a hit, no matter where it is shown. The reel starts with George Evans ("Honey Boy") Minstrels leading the opening march through Luna's gateway, and right here it may be said that this feature added greatly to the interest in the affair, and several good comedy stunts are interspersed throughout the reel.

The various athletic events were "took" and will serve a good purpose in demonsrating that the Stockholm Olympic committee missed a bunch of good entries when they passed up Cleveland No. 1.

The reel also shows very forcibly that it is quite possible for men engaged in business where competition is "fierce" to meet in a social way and "forget it."

There are numerous reasons why the reel should be shown all over the country, and Secretary Anthony will attend to anyone promptly if they desire to show "How Moving Picture Managers Enjoy Themselves." It is a Pathe "special" from which Cleveland local No. 1 derives a revenue, and that is why we give no further details of the day's doings in this letter. As we say in our daily advertising, "see the pictures."

CINCINNATI, OHIO

Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met yesterday and the following committees reported:

Committee on Zoo Tickets, Coupons and Distribution, Mr. Emmert.

Committee on Slide Theatre Advertising and Distribution, Mr. Beeching.

Committee on Entertainment and Vaudeville, Messrs. Kitt, Horning, Shottmiller and Beeching.

Committee on Animal Arrangements at the Zoo, Messrs. Botts, Sternberger and Dinglestedt.

Committee on Dancing and Pavilion, Messrs. Glassmeyer and Bley.

Program Committee, Messrs. Brice and Neff.

Committee on Badges and Banners, Messrs. Huss and Luedeking.

Committee on Advertising Cards, Tickets and Windows, Messrs. Griffith and Brice.

Committee on Speakers, Mr. M. A. Neff.

Committee on Publicity, Messrs. Kitt, Neff and Glasmeyer.

Committee on Street Railway Advertising, Mr. Botts.

Automobile Committee, Messrs. Glassmeyer and Neff.

Every committee is working hard to make the outing on the 5th, which is to be held at the Zoo, the largest ever held in Cincinnati. The slides announcing the outing are being applauded in every theatre belonging to the League, and thousands of tickets were given out Saturday and Sunday. Every member of the League reports a big increase in business.

The Cincinnati Zoo is one of the largest and finest in the world and the exhibitors of Cincinnati expect to pack it to its limit and then see if they cannot find another space for a few more to stand. Congressman Cox, Gubernatorial candidate for Ohio, will be present, and Mayor Hunt of Cincinnati will deliver an address. M. A. Neff will introduce the speakers. Letters have been written to President Taft, Ex-President Roosevelt and Governor Wilson, inviting them to attend. This will be the biggest outing ever given in Southern Ohio by any political party or fraternal order.

Cincinnati Local No. 2 has rented the Zoo for October 5th and will have full charge . A member of the League will be stationed at the gate and the League will also have ticket sellers, and all those who did not receive tickets from the members of the League will be charged the regular admission, which is twenty-five cents. Motion pictures will be taken by the camera-men. Two of the largest snakes in the world will be fed while this picture is being taken, and in fact all of the animals will be rehearsed and ready for the picture.

Street-car arrangements to carry the big crowd to the Zoo—in fact every detail has been attended to. K. & C. Local of Covington and Newport, Ky., and other members in the vicinity of Cincinnati are working hard to assist in making the outing a big success; the members of the Chamber of Commerce, which numbers over fifteen hundred, will be in line with an automobile parade for this outing, and the city officials and all the city departments will be there and this will be a gala day for Cincinnati. In case of bad weather on the 5th, we will hold the outing on the 6th and all the program will be fully carried out.

On the 7th, 8th and 9th the Fire and Police Departments in full uniform giving their annual drill and parade, and the different departments of the city will be taken by the camera men; also the water works, university, public schools, inclines and parks; a big excursion on the river and the beautiful scenes around and about Cincinnati which surpass anything in beauty in the United States.

The meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Sinton Hotel was one of the most enthusiastic ever held. Every member was present and a large delegation was there from Newport and Covington.

General headquarters for the outing have been established at 1003 Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, O.

Letters are being received from many Texas exhibitors stating that they will be at the convention to be held at Dallas, Tex., on the 15th and 16th of October. The arrangement committee reports that they will entertain the visiting exhibitors with that splendid old Southern hospitality. Automobiles have already been arranged for and also arrangements have been made to entertain the laides, and every exhibitor in Texas is requested to bring as many of his family as he can.

This being State Fair Week in Dallas, it is confidently expected that there will be three or four hundred exhibit- present. The three film exchanges in Dallas write that no pains will be spared to make this one of the grandest state conventions ever held.

OUR BOOK SHELF

There have come to us from the publishers, Tennant & Ward, 103 Park avenue, New York, three very important little books on Photography which we can heartily recommend to our readers, both amateur and professional, for the hints that are written therein. These booklets are just "quality and not quantity," and the hints and information given are practical and up to date. The first we want to call attention to is "Photography Outdoors," and is called "practical suggestions for beginners in the choice and treatment of their outdoor subjects." The sequel to this is "Photography at Home." This is a handbook on the use of the camera in the home. Both these taken together will make, if their instructions are carried out, fairly good photographers of those just starting in the work. The last, but not least, of this series is "Darkroom Work." The equipment of a photographic dark room showing the working conveniences, the short-cuts to quick work, and the handy methods that can be used for making work in the dark room just as easy as it is possible to be made, and doing away with many of the inconveniences that seem to rise up against dark room workers. These three books are published, paper covers, 25 cents, and in cloth, gilt, with title, 60 cents each, and while this latter gives practically the price of 1 cent per page, there being 64 pages to each book. He is a poor tyro who cannot get at least ten times the value out of them that he paid. This has been our experience, and we think it should be of others. However, we heartily recommend these books to our readers and would say to Tennant & Ward—give us some more of like nature.

A VISIT TO THE EDISON STUDIO

By OUR "ROVING COMMISSIONER"

A visit to the studio of the Edison Film Co. is intensely interesting. The glamour of the fame of its founder has somehow cast its reflection over the big, busy place.

My first trip to the above-named was unsatisfactory in that I failed to make connections with the manager of the company, Mr. Horace G. Plimpton. However, it is worthy of mention that his affable secretary, Miss Bessie Bannon, did her noblest to fill in the gap, and dismissed me armed with abundance of interesting information, without in any way encroaching on the rights of those higher in authority than she.

EXTENSION OF BREWSTER AVE.

Since the days of the first kinetoscope introduced by Thomas Edison at the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893, where the magic nickel played such an important part in the performance, and since the days of the "Black Maria" which was worked overtime in the manufacture of kinetoscope films, the animated picture has loomed forth, full-fledged, borne forward on the wings of science and invention, and the onrush of the tide of progression.

To-day we find away out at what the downtown New Yorker would call, "the end of nowhere," in the neighborhood of Bedford Park, a tremendous affair in the shape of studio, offices, etc., belonging to the Edison Film Co. Here is a busy spot indeed—everything is hustle. The building echoes now and then with the far-off call of a stage-hand in distress, and Charlie, George or Harry answering back in a tone which tells the story of "full-up-to-the-guzzle-with-work-of-his-own." The stage director looks on at the setting of a rich interior scene, with now and then a word of approval, and sometimes one of disapproval as the work of preparing the set for the picture progresses. Light-limbed nymphs flit about among the confusion of props and things, their shimmering robes blending in harmony with the sunny landscape of France, or the more severe or hazy type of England, portrayed on the various back drops which alternately come to view from their places among the rafters, or in nonchalant pose against the walls of room.

FULL VIEW OF STUDIO

All these mere trifles in connection with a plant of such stupendous offerings as the Edison, soaked into my "disagreeable-weather-befuddled" brain while I lounged on a folding chair in the vicinity of the camera. And, moreover, I was devolving in my mind the fruits of an interview with Mr. Plimpton, and relaxing into my normal stupidity of the day, after twenty minutes of uninterrupted concentration.

Like many other busy men—men who are thinking more of what they are going to do, than of what they are going to say, Mr. Plimpton does not respond to the persuasions of the interviewer with the same flexibility as some others.

In reply to his query as to what he could do for me, I said: "Please tell me all that you care to about the business."

"That's just it, I don't know what I want to tell you, I'd rather you would ask me some questions."

Now as any interviewer of moving picture men knows,

REHEARSING A CHILDREN'S SCENE

DIRECTING AND PHOTOGRAPHING A SCENE

there are only a few conventional questions which one can ask, and one grows so tired of the same old thing. I plunked back into my shell, but as quickly protruded my stupid head again, pouncing at him the hackneyed question, "What's the weekly capacity of the studio?"

"We're making five reels a week now—5,000 feet in all," said he, and then shut up like a clam. I put my thinking cap on again.

"Of course you're doing something in the educational line?"

"Oh, of course, we're always doing something in that line. Althought I never think it well from a commercial standpoint to dwell too largely on the educational subject—the educational subject put on in a dry manner without any spice to it, will not go."

"But," said I, growing bolder at the prospect of hauling in something without offering too much bait, "You realize, do you not, that moving picture audiences are growing more intelligent every day?"

"That's very true," said he, "I realize that."

"Haven't you any hobby in connection with the making of pictures," I blurted out after an awkward silence, during which time the ground which I had gained seemed to be sinking beneath my feet.

"Well, now, I don't know that I have," said he, "unless it is with regard to the differentiation of theatres. To-day there is no differentiation in theatres. That is, they all show some good pictures and some poor ones—all kinds are mixed in together on the same program. I want to see the day when the picture houses will be classified just the same as the legitimate theatres; when we can manufacture different classes of pictures for different audiences. You will find that day is not so far away."

Just at this juncture a nicely-prepared lunch was brought into the room in which we sat—the private office of Mr. Plimpton, manager of the negative department of the Edison studio—a comfortable room of pictures, and books, solid furniture, pleasant rugs, and an air of general refinement.

I excused myself to look about the studio, and await the projection of some reels of pictures which I was to see.

By-and-by, a pleasant-faced young lady came to me and told me that the pictures were about to be shown downstairs. She escorted me down the said stairs and left me seated at a long table covered with black oilcloth, and extended on an equally long platform, facing the screen. Low above the table where I sat hung a shaded electric bulb, to keep my wayward pencil from wandering.

A moment more the electrician bustled in, with the same air of always being busy that characterizes all of the Edison studio people.

We started out with "The Charge of the Light Brigade." I was all set for solid concentration when the telephone rang in the darkness near me. I jumped. The electrician poked his head out and asked me if I would please answer it. I was flustered, and when I said "Hello!" and someone at the other end said "who is this?" always being truthful, I replied "Miss Flummer—um—er—in the projecting room—do you want to speak to the electrician?" Puff went the picture off the screen and in a jiffy more the electrician was at the 'phone in my place, and I was free—free to muse on the flustercatedness of interviewers, reviewers and "sich like," fixing my own designation among the latter class.

Now we must be serious, for the dignity of the productions shown me will not admit of revelry.

"The Charge of the Light Brigade" is a magnificent production; true in every particular to the poem from which it was taken. The sub-titles are as follows, and will give the reader some idea of the way in which the subject has been handled: "Leaving Home," "The Night Before the Battle of Balaklara," "The Morning of the 25th of Oct., 1854," "The Signal of the Enemy's Attack," "The Enemy Advancing," "Lord Cardigan Orders the Light Brigade forward," "Lord Raglan Gives an Order," "Another Order Given by Capt. Nolan," "Lord Lucan Fails to Understand Which Way Capt. Nolan Points, and the Terrible Blunder," "Lord Cardigan Foresees the Terrible Consequences, ('Those are your orders, sir,')," "Into the Valley of Death Rode the 600," "Cannons to Right of Them, Cannons to Left of Them Volleyed and Thundered," "Nolan While Trying to Correct the Error Which He Has Made Loses His Life," "Stormed at With Shot and Shell, Boldly They Rode, and Well," "Into the Jaws of Death, Into the Mouth of Hell Rode the 600," "Plunged in the Battery Smoke, Right Through the Line They Broke," "Then They Rode Back, But Not—Not the 600." "All That Was Left of the 600."

"The Usurer's Grip," a story written by Miss Theodora Huntington, in co-operation with the Russell Sage foundation, is a film which has more than the ordinary excuse for being. It is a good useful picture, and all who are fortunate enough to see it will leave the theatre wiser, a good deal, on matters pertaining to money-lending and loan sharks. The beautiful thing about this film is that the right method of borrowing is demonstrated.

"Cashmere," the chief health resort in India, famous in song and story, has even more educational value than is usual with a scenic. Some idea of the specially interesting nature of this film can be gathered from a perusal of the list of scenes show therein, such as "A three-rope bridge at Carhe," which is swung across from side to side of the raging torrent, "Native Athletes at Cashmere," "In the Gorge of the Jhelum River," "A One-Rope Bridge at Uri," "Panorama in the Vale of Cashmere," showing snow capped Himalayas, "The Jhelum River at Seringar, Capital of Cashmere," "A Vista of Poplars," "Seringar—Wood Carving, a Popular Industry," "Cashmere Spinners, "A Group of Natives," "Black-eyed Houris—Cashmere Beauties," "Native Women Shelling Rice," "Cashmere Shawl Weaving," "The River the Main Avenue of Trade," "The Marahja Arriving from His Winter Home from His Residence on the Plains," "Landing at the Palace."

In a later issue we will speak of the Edison Stock Company, a part of which is at present in England and part in the West.

SCENES FROM "DUBLIN DAN," SOLAX THREE-REEL FEATURE DETECTIVE PLAY

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

DOFF hats to the daily press! Sound the hurdy gurdy, beat the tom tom and twang the lyre! Let us hear no more of "newspaper discrimination against the moving picture." This cry has been too oft repeated. A year or so ago there might have been some foundation for the shrieks that arose in some quarters. However, it is now another story. With minor exceptions, perhaps, the newspapers of the United States have seen the light and within the past ten days the press associations and the newspapers turned a trick for Cinematography that will go a long way toward evening up any attacks made in the past upon our great and good industry.

* * * *

It has finally been impressed upon the minds of temperance workers that the moving picture will be the one important factor in temperance work. They had heard this argument promulgated previously but "seeing is believing." Over in the Keystone State it has been proven that the moving picture is the grogshop's greatest enemy. The daily newspapers of nearly every town of any importance west of New York carried all the whys and wherefores. The Associated Press, the United Press, the Hearst News Service, and other great news distributing associations sent the "boost" broadcast. The Kellogg and American Press Associations took it up and it appeared in plate form and in "patent insides" in the weekly journals of nearly every crossroads. The story was treated upon editorially by the metropolitan journals and last, but not least, those influential weekly and monthly journals catering to religious denominations gave prominence to the article. This, indeed, was a victory and a decided advance to the uplift of the moving picture.

* * * *

The theory that the great growth of the moving picture industry is calculated to have an injurious effect upon the saloon business has been frequently suggested in the Moving Picture News, but seldom has such good proof of this tendency been received as that which comes from Schuylkill County, Pa. The proof was so convincing that, notwithstanding many other instances have been pointed out in similar reform lines, a veritable gasp of pleasure and interest rippled through the daily press and eddied into the religious and temperance publications, where it will do the most good. The prominence given the story will result in coaxing many new patrons into the moving picture theatre, and the daily press is responsible for this delightful circumstance.

* * * *

Surprised at the falling off in the number of applications for saloon licenses, the Board of Judges of Schuylkill, Pa., instructed the clerk to institute an investigation. His report was what caused Cinematograph stock to soar in the estimation of hundreds of thousands heretofore chary of the moving picture world. That clerk dug up interesting facts concerning the antagonistic relations of the saloon and the moving picture theatre.

* * * *

Out of the total number of saloons in the county, only thirty per cent are making money. The owners of the other seventy per cent are anxious to abandon a business which is ceasing to be profitable, and of these, fifty per cent unhesitatingly place the blame for the decline in their profits almost entirely upon the moving pictures.

* * * *

It is not difficult to understand why nickels and dimes that formerly went over the bar are now exchanged for tickets to the moving picture theatre. Many men first frequent the saloon, not so much for love of drink as because they find there company and amusement. In many cities the church is dark and forbidding five evenings of the week while the saloon next door looks warm and bright to the laboring man. However, if the workingman is able to obtain even more pleasant amusement for less money elsewhere, it is not unnatural that he should abandon the costly gin palace for the instructive pleasures of the picture theatre. We quote one of the hundreds of editorials which have appeared during the past week: "Whatever may be their faults, of commission and perhaps omission also, the moving pictures unqestionably have their good points. They may not be intended to become factors in temperance work, but as they prove to be one, and a very important one at that, they should be given due credit."

* * * *

And another important use for the moving picture has been given wide publicity in the Middle West during the past week. The publicity committee of the Ohio State Medical Association has approved the motion picture method for instructing the public against the harm and spread of social diseases, and these, together with lectures, will be given in nearly every important Ohio city. The teaching of sex hygiene has long been considered by Indiana, Illinois and Michigan school authorities. It is a vitally important problem and prudishness has been an almost insurmountable obstacle, say the agitators. Now Ohio has opened the way for a method that it is believed will solve the problem. It is believed that by portraying hygienic instruction through the medium of Cinematography, to separated classes of high school boys and girls, that much can be accomplished on very important health topics often avoided by criminally negligent parents through motives of false modesty.

* * * *

President Taft planted a hickory tree at Beverly, Mass., while moving picture cameras whirred off hundreds of feet of film. A light shower helped to make the pictures rainy.

* * * *

New York exhibitors are already planning for the national convention of 1913. Expressions on the faces of willing script writers as they receive fifteen-dollar checks or returned manuscripts would make an enjoyable feature film.

* * * *

Our weekly hint: The Gem studio announces the early release of "The Woman in White." We congratulate the director in turning to Wilkie Collins. "The Moonstone" is another Collins story good for two or three reels.

* * * *

The pictureplay fan appeared downcast when we met him on the car this morning. "I was down to th' 'Idle Hour' last night and 'Everybody's Doin' It' was rendered again. I tell you, somethin's got to be done! Here's my sentiments," said the pictureplay fan as he handed us a sheet of touching verses and then alighted from the car. They are to be sung to the tune of "Old Hundred":

"I want to go
To a picture show
And hear a song
As in long ago;
A song without
Any ragtime rot,
Nor crazy shout
Of a turkey trot!"

"Ah, just to hear
A song of the dear
Old tuneful days,
It would make me cheer.
I'd get right up
And I'd shout aloud,
And so I think
Would the entire crowd!"

* * * *

What a pity that some of our more enterprising camera men were not on the scene when Nogi committed hara-kari.

* * * *

A. S. Growler conducts a picture theatre at Complaint, Ark. If there is anything in a name or environment, he's a pessimist.

* * * *

Armageddon seems also on the map for certain moving picture manufacturers.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

Reliance

"The Geranium" for September 25th is one of the most acceptable of the recent Reliance films. The love portion of the story may not have been worked out in quite a full enough manner, but we have this to say, there is not a spot in it that is not pure, and fresh and wholesome.

"Bedelia and Her Neighbor," on the same reel, is a good bit of fun and nonsense that will pass anywhere.

Majestic

"The Butterfly" for September 24th, shows Mabel Trunelle at her best. It is a cleverly constructed little play, and even more cleverly interpreted. The "Butterfly" is a foolish, frivolous mother, who when her child is taken sick, and she is told it may be smallpox, shuts herself away in her room, even though the child's cries of "Mother! Mother!" ring out incessantly. However, a vision of the result of her folly brings her to her senses.

Gaumont

"The Heart of a Red Man" for September 24, judging from a photographic standpoint, and as regards choice of location, all of which are distinctly beautiful, the film is good, but, on the other hand, as an accurate interpretation of the subject, it is very bad. All of those taking part in the production look like white people and act like white people. The name of the Gaumont Company is too well known as a thoroughly artistic firm to permit of its dabbling with a subject so tremendously difficult to portray as the character of the "Red Man."

Biograph

"Two Daughters of Eve," released September 19th, is a drama of considerable merit, strongly interpreted. It is the story of how a society woman to whom even the touch of a professional actress meant contamination, and of how, bereft of support, she was herself obliged to turn to the stage for a livelihood.

"Friends," released September 23, with Little Mary in the lead. This film, though listed as a drama, is quite effulgent with comedy lent it here and there by this clever little actress.

Kalem

"Tilley's Bird Farm," released September 20, is a very excellent film, which shows a great many different varieties of bird life, staged with the beautiful settings available on the Connecticut Bird Farm.

"Chips Off the Old Block" is an exceedingly clever comedy. The story is well worked out and affords many smooth comedy situations.

"Fat Bill's Wooing" and "Roost the Kidder" on one reel for September 23, are two passing good comedies. The former, however, surpasses the latter which is a negro comedy.

Vitagraph

"The Adventure of an Italian Model," released September 21, with Maurice Costello in the detective role, stands out strong and bold. It is good.

"His Lordship the Valet," released September 24, is a Vitagraph production to the finish. It's comedy is natural and not forced, and it is an altogether worthy production.

Majestic

"A Garrison Joke" and "Belligerent Benjamin" for September 29, though passing good, are not by any means what Majestic is capable of.

American

"The Renegade" for October 2, is not as strong as it might be, although it might hold plenty of interest for the ordinary observer.

"Jack of Diamonds" is good. The only fault we have to find is that Corrigan, so dear to our hearts as the hero of American films, in this instance plays the villain, and he does not make a good one.

Edison

"Hearts and Diamonds" is a story of diamond smuggling. The fact that a great deal of the story has been staged aboard an ocean liner gives it added interest.

Lubin

"A Child's Devotion" is a specially good offering. It shows the beautiful possibilities in the child nature.

"His Trade" is an eccentric comedy with some very funny camera tricks that excite laughter even apart from the story.

Gaumont

"Life in Caucasia" is a specially interesting film of an educational nature.

Reliance

"The Cuckoo Clock," for September 28, is a specially well acted bit—a most acceptable offering. We are sorry not to be able to give the names of the principal participants in the play, whose work was so thoroughly artistic.

Selig

"A Detective's Strategy" is a story splendidly produced, one of the kind that helps fill the theatres.

Solax

"The Fugitive," for September 27, fills the bill very well indeed. Miss Cornwall shows up to advantage in her role of the sheriff's daughter.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

On Friday of last week Kathlyn Williams, leading woman of the Selig Polyscope Company's eastern branch, took her life in her hands and made several thrilling flights in the Wright biplane of Mr. Max Lillie, the daring aviator who has won such prominence during the present air meet at Chicago. The flights were made before the Selig cameras and are to be used as part of a dramatic aviation story in which Miss Williams and Mr. Lillie will play the principal parts.

* * * *

Mr. Chauncy Herbert, one of the well-known members of the Selig producing staff, will sever his connection with that company this week in order to accompany his wife upon a long contemplated tour of the United States. Mrs. Herbert has been in ill health for some time past and the trip will be made with a view to refreshing her somewhat shattered nerves. Mr. Herbert intends to return to his production work some time within the next six months.

* * * *

The laboratories and studios of the American Film Company are being equipped with what is known as the best light equipment extant. The studio has a series of lights furnishing an aggregate of one hundred thousand candle power. This is particularly designed to enable them to produce special lighting effects, which will be eminent in some of the forthcoming releases. They employ a large motor generator to convert the alternating current into a direct current and the feed terminals outside of the building together with the accoutrements inside the premises give the appearance of quite a power plant. The laboratories are equipped with lighting systems for general requirements, of course, but in addition, the printing room is furnished with a series of storage batteries furnishing a steady and unwavering light that is largely accountable for the even lighting so noticeable in their work. These storage batteries are automatically recharged so that no time is lost nor the regular process of work interfered with. The company is to be congratulated on the efficiency of their equipment and the theatres can look forward to an absolutely unexcelled quality in American productions. The expense of the lighting equipment is, as one can readily imagine, considerable and is justified only by the company's desire to furnish the best possible results.

* * * *

The Lubin pictures, which have heretofore been released on Wednesday, will on and after September 24th be released on Tuesday.

* * * *

The Montreal Motion Pictures, Limited, capital $100,000, recently incorporated, has purchased the Colonial and Passe Temps houses in Montreal along with land in the northern part of the city upon which will be constructed a modern theatre.

MISS CHARLOTTE C. STILLMAN, OF KINEMACOLOR, AGAIN AT HER POST

We were sorry indeed to hear of the illness of Miss Charlotte C. Stillman, of Kinemacolor, so well known by her efficiency as telephone operator for that company.

Miss Stillman was taken ill over a week ago while on duty, and was conveyed in an ambulance to Bellevue Hospital, where she spent several days before being able to return to work.

HOW BOBBIE JOINED THE CIRCUS

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Edison Release)

DO you remember when you were a little boy—or maybe a little girl— and you saw a man pasting up wonderful posters telling of a wonderful circus that was coming to town? And didn't you stop every time you passed the bill boards to look at those wonderful lions and tigers and elephants and monkeys and snakes, all living together in the same jungle; and the beautiful ladies with fluffy skirts riding around on one toe and the other lovely ladies in pink tights leaping through the air? And wonder of wonders, the lady with the lots and lots of hair on her head and the grand, the beautiful snake around her neck! Don't you remember her?

Bobby Young was in this blissful state of excitement. For weeks he had been counting the days until the eventful one should arrive. Every day he was late to school, for he simply could not pass those pictures. The teacher scolded, warned and threatened, but without effect. All night long the contents of many menageries moved through Bobbie's dreams.

The night before the date printed in large blue figures on the posters, the boy slept little. At every little noise he awakened with a start. Was that the circus, he wondered. The fear of not being up in time to see the beginning of things made sound sleep impossible.

At the first ray of morning Bobbie was out of his bed and silently slipping into his clothes. Softly he crept down the back stairs and across the dimly lighted kitchen, his heart beating fast. Everything looked so queer and unfamiliar in that light. Bobby never saw things in the morning before seven o'clock. Once or twice he was almost tempted to go back to his bed, but the call of the circus was too great.

When Bobbie went around the house toward the street, he saw the most wonderful sight he had ever seen in all his seven years.

In the gray mist of the early morning there moved a long line of grey elephants and each huge beast held with his trunk the tail of the one in front of him. Slowly and patiently they walked along, and Bobby was thrilled with the big grayness and the mysterious silence of them.

And then the camels! The camels were wonderful, too. So soft-footed and queer and humpy. Bobby just lover the camels.

Then in the increasing light came the horses—dozens of them. More than Bobby could think of counting. They went much fasters and made more noise.

The boy crept closer and closer to the fence, but took great care that a tree or bush was always between him and the house in case anyone looked out a front window.

Behind the dozens and dozens of horses were more horses drawing the most delightfully mysterious looking wagons you can imagine. At least Bobby could imagine nothing more so—not even an enchanted castle.

With one quick look at the upper windows behind him, the little boy slipped through the gate and cautiously along the fences until he was out of sight of the house. Then he breathed freely.

He walked along by those marvelous wagons for—Oh, ever so far—miles and miles and miles, Bobby thought.

At last they arrived at the circus grounds. There was a fence all around, for it was a big meadow, except in several places where it had been torn down to let the horses and wagons in.

At the big entrance where Bobby was, there was terrible confusion. The horses reared and plunged, the wagons swung from side to side and the men yelled in several different languages. It was awful. Bobby was very frightened and it seemed to him the safest place was a tree. So he ran to the nearest one—which wasn't so very near—and went up as fast as his tired little legs and empty stomach would permit.

At last the topmost branches were reached and Bobby stuck his head through an opening. The sight took away his breath. Far, far over the meadow where he had gathered daisies and violets so many times, there was a constantly moving mass. Bobby couldn't tell just what things were at that distance, but they didn't look like anything he had ever seen before.

He looked with all his eyes, and now and then he thought he could distinguish an elephant or a camel.

Suddenly, in a clear space, a wonderful thing happened. A big thing that looked like a wheel with flashing silver spokes, began to revolve with such rapidity that Bobby had to hang onto the tree much tighter. He did want to know what it was so very much. But just as it stopped something queer began to happen to his head. It went round and round like the big wheel with the silver spokes. He looked away and waited a little while. "I guess a feller'd feel better if he had somethin' in his stomick," he thought, and slowly crawled and slid to the ground.

He felt better with his feet on the earth, and was soon on his way back to town. Maybe he could sneak in and not be seen.

Somehow the road seemed to grow longer as Bobby trudged along, but he finally covered it and reached his own front yard.

Horrors! There was father on the porch. The boy stopped in the middle of the walk and looked. Father looked, too. Five minutes before he had been told to waken the boy in a quarter of an hour. He was waiting for the minutes to pass so that Bobby should be deprived of no sleep due him, and here he was standing on the walk with a very queer expression on his face.

"Where have you been, son?"

Bobby swallowed hard. It didn't seem quite fair to put it to a fellow as plain as that.

Father's eyes remained on the boy's face.

Again he swallowed, and then said reluctantly: "I've been to the circus."

For a moment Bobby's father looked stern, but a picture came before him of another little boy, years ago, so he held out his hand and said: "Well, come get washed for breakfast and tell me all about it. Maybe if you think it is a good circus we might go this afternoon."

Bobby's eyes almost jumped from his head and he had to swallow again—very hard.

So that afternoon Bobby and his little sister and his father went to the circus. Father got side show tickets and everything.

There was the fat lady with the living skeleton beside her, and the snake charmer with the grand snakes all round her—everything just as it was on the posters.

And oh, the menagerie! Those elephants and camels—not looking so mysterious now that the sun was shining—and the lions and tigers and monkeys and snakes and—and just everything you could imagine and lots and lots that you couldn't.

But one thing disappointed Bobby very much. The animals were not altogether in a nice green place by some water as they showed them on the bill.

Well, they saw everything, of course, in the big tent. You remember very well—indeed you will never forget the lovely ladies and gentlemen flying through the air and the horseback riders and the funny, funny clowns and the performing animals and—you remember them all.

Bobby saw them all and was just too excited for anything—and so happy.

When it was all over little sister was very tired and father had to give all his attention to her. So Bobby took his time and looked at what he pleased.

Once he stopped to speak to one of the employees about some important matter, and when he turned to look for his father and sister they were swallowed up by the crowd.

Bobby looked and looked and looked, but they were nowhere to be seen. He wandered around for so long that he became very tired and sleepy. If he could just have a little nap, he felt perfectly sure he could find his father and all would be well. So he climbed into a nearby van which was full of canvas and things and was soon fast asleep.

Remember that Bobby was a very little boy and he had walked a long way in the early morning after getting almost no sleep at all the night before, and then he had walked out to the circus grounds again, besides walking round and round them many times. So you see he had every reason to be tired and sleepy and not to be ashamed of it.

When the little boy wakened he was very much surprised to find everything dark. And yet he saw little streaks of light. Oh, he knew, somebody had closed the van door.

Just then he heard loud voices and the door of the van came open with a jerk.

"Hey, you boy, how'd you git in there?" asked a rough voice, and a man caught hold of the boy none too gently.

"I—I just wanted to rest a little while."

"Well, rest outside then," and in a moment Bobby would have been pulled to the ground if another man had not appeared on the scene.

"Hello, boy," he said kindly, "What you doin' there?" Bobby told him.

"Where do you live?" was the next question.

"I live in town with my father and mother and little sister on Harris street."

Big Bill Haggerty, the boss canvasman—for that was his name—looked very wise and then he said:

"Sonny, what's the name of the town where you live?"

"Why, Brownsville. You know," answered Bobby, surprised that a man wouldn't know the name of the town he was in.

"Well, my boy," said Big Bill, "this town is Jackson and you're fifty miles from home."

Now, you would expect a little boy only eight years old cry upon hearing such news, wouldn't you? Well he didn't. What he did was to laugh and say, "Now I belong to the circus."

The other man was grumbling again so Big Bill picked Bobby up in his arms and away they went to see everything that Bobby hadn't yet seen.

All of a sudden Bobby stopped and cried "Now I know what it was." He was seeing the same silver wheel going round that he had seen the morning before. Now he knew what it was. What do you suppose? It was the sun shining on the big hammer as they hit a stake one after the other so fast that it made a wheel.

And do you know that circus folks eat just the same as everybody else—even the freaks? They all eat at long tables with seats along both sides. Bobby saw just everything until there wasn't anything else left—except the clows putting on their make-up. And then he saw them.

Bobby liked the clowns so much that they dressed him up and made him look just like one of them. Even his own papa and mamma and little sister wouldn't have known him

While Bobby was playing with the clowns Big Bill slipped off to town. He had found out what Bobby's father's name was and he sent him a telegram telling where his little boy was and that he was safe.

That afternoon, after the performance was over, Bobby's father appeared upon the scene and—would you believe it—Bobby was so glad to see him he just didn't know what to do. He hated to leave Big Bill and all the other nice people, but he just thought it was his duty to go home to see his mother and little sister. He would come back when he could.

So Bobby went back to Brownsville and the circus moved on to another town.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The motion picture has held quite an important place in the International Congress of Hygiene now in progress in the city. The exhibits are interesting, instructive, scientific, etc., many supplemented by lectures, slides and reels. There are two lecture halls in the building, each equipped with a projection machine, from which various motion pictures have told most comprehensive and impressive stories. Among the subjects thrown upon the screen in animated form were "The Red Cross Seal" and "The Awakening of John Bond," which are the work of the Edison Company under the auspices of the Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis; Hull House of Chicago, "Boil Your Water," a Pathe film; "Tooth Ache," an offering from the Mouth Hygiene Association; "On the Trail of the Germs," "Wedding Bells," "Pure Milk," and a number of educational films on various hygiene subjects, exercise, food values, health problems and disease prevention.

Several motion pictures have formed a part of the daily program and have been found highly entertainingg to the laiety as well as professional public. Perplexing problems and conditions that have been carelessly regarded in many households have been presented in a more convincing form than mere words of advice could have made them.

The officials of the congress readily acknowledged the aid the motion picture had been and will be in teaching sanitation. Many of the organizations showing exhibits have had motion films made especially for the exploitation of their work; others are arranging for reels to be taken under their special direction in order to bring out vital and practical conditions in the most natural and forceful manner. Few subjects lend themselves so readily to the motion picture as does hygiene, sanitation, germ conditions, etc., and when these situations are placed in the atmosphere of everyday life, no lesson can be brought home more deeply and strongly.

The Garden has been using a number of multi-reel productions among these, "The Garden of Allah" and "The Bohemian Girl," while Blanche Walsh in "The Resurrection" and Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth" and "La Tosca" are promised at an early date. "The Garden of Allah" is certainly a storehouse of information, of history, of geography, of social and economic life of North Africa; while its photography is beautiful. Produced as a Kinemacolor, it would be wonderful.

The Paul Rainey pictures of life in the African wilds have been entertaining the Washington public for the past two weeks at Belasco Theatre, of the Schubert circuit. The lack of artistic and dramatic pose of these scenes form a decided charm in these pictures.

W. H.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

The exhibition of the pictures taken of the opening of the Y. M. C. A. Island Playground at Lynchburg, which event took place early in June, attracted large crowds to the Belvedere Theatre during the week of September 9th. Although the film was only 400 feet in length it portrayed the opening exercises excellently, and showed what a valuable asset Lynchburg has in the plat of ground circled by James River. The picture was made by the Edison Company.

The Trenton Theatre, which discontinued vaudeville during the summer months, accommodated large crowds September 16th, when the booking acts was resumed and the initial bill presented. The Trenton gets "U. B. O." bookings and is very popular in Lynchburg.

Mr. James F. Jackson, who has held the management of the Trenton Theatre since it was opened early in September, 1911, has tendered his resignation, which becomes effective September 21st, and has accepted the management of the Alcazar and Savoy Theatres, in Atlanta.

Joe Combs, a lyric tenor, is making a big hit at the Belvedere Theatre, where he has just opened an engagement. Mr. Combs has a clear, sweet voice of unusual richness, and it is cultivated to a marked degree of excellence.

TREVELYAN BAKER.

Geneva, N. Y.—The Star Theatre has been opened.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Prince Theatre has opened.

Brigham City, Utah.—Work has commenced on the new Princess Theatre.

Amityville, N. Y.—Rudolph Rinas has opened his new moving picture theatre on Broadway.

Paxton, Ill.—E. E. Algers has sold his moving picture show to Verne Curley.

Hearne, Tex.—The Ayres Building on Post Office street is being remodeled into a moving picture show for Cliett & Bledsoe.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

The Deadly Triangle

HERE is an interesting contribution from Hal Reid, former head of the Universal Script Reading Bureau, 1 Union Square, New York City. It has to do with the "deadly triangle." Writes Mr. Reid in a manner that those who run may read:

"I am writing you in regard to the deadly triangle, so constantly used by scenario writers; namely, 'they love, they have trouble, they are reconciled.' I have kept a pad upon my desk the past week, and I find this proposition in one week, for consideration 109 times; the proposition of the two young men loving the same girl, and one of them becoming a villain and making reprisal upon the other in consequence, 96 times; the mortgage showed up 64 times; the locket, 58 times; the name on the egg-shell, 11 times; the address put on a pair of shoes in a shoe factory, twice; the name on the orange wrappers, 9 times; the spinster looking for a husband, 17 times; the sprained ankle that 'they might meet,' 24 times; the bookkeeper and the cashier placing stolen goods in the pocket of the hero, 19 times; the automobile causing the death of the drunken husband, and accidents of all kinds, 73 times. This is an accurate and absolutely truthful list during six days' time of scripts submitted to the Universal Film Mfg. Co. I do not write this in a spirit of levity, but from a genuine hope that these scenario writers who read it may, for their own benefit financially, get away from these old-set, worn out ideas, and get along new lines. There has been some considerable discussion in regard to the prices for scenarios. Scenarios on the above ideas have been so often produced that they have almost lost any market value whatever, and when in self-defense a manufacturer is compelled to accept stories built around these dear old corner stones, they do not feel inclined to pay very much for same. It might be well for me to state to you my idea of a scenario which is 'different.' I received one which is now in course of manufacture, which showed in the first scene a young mother bending over her dying child. The physician in attendance tells the mother that there is no hope. The mother's grief is so deep that the physician out of respect for it leaves her alone and in a dissolve the Angel of Death appears, white-robed and black-winged, to take the child away. The mother, inspired by that most sacred and everlasting of all things, mother-love, attacks the Angel of Death and three times drives her away from her young. The Angel of Death indicates a large mirror in the room, and in this mirror there is a series of dissolves which show what this child's life would have been had it lived. At the end of the dissolve, the mother of her own accord picks up her child and hands it to the Angel of Death, and with all gratitude, pleads with the Angel to take her child above. This, to my mind, gives the world another instance of mother-love, also a message of peace to those mothers who have lost their young. It is of the better class and so different, so very, very different from the lines of scenarios mentioned above. I sincerely trust that this may be of benefit to the scenario writers, and may help inaugurate a new line of life motion pictures. I should think the public would be tired to death of the eternal embrace of the lovers at the end of the usual picture. The Universal Film Mfg. Co. will gladly pay any reasonable price for new ideas and that price has no limit."

The Usual Ending

Mr. Reid's statement should be carefully read by every pictureplaywright either in the chart or senior classes. The deadly triangle has long been sadly overworked. It is the favorite stereotyped dope of certain "inside writers" so called, and there seems to be no breaking away from it. The average releases have suffered from the hackneyed themes, and the Universal Company has also had its share of "triangle" stories. Many months ago we made a plea for the unusual ending. We are pleased to see such an authority as Hal Reid now also advocating the unusual ending. "Something different" has long been our slogan, and we have argued that the lovers' embrace is not essential to a satisfactory ending of a picture, and that the "happy ending" can occasionally be relieved by a climax not so happy, providing it is consistent, of real power, and conveys a convincing lesson. Mr. Reid's assertion that the limit is off all prices for original ideas, will be received with interest by experienced writers among whom an impression has prevailed that prices had been cut during Reid's regime as editor of the Universal Company.

For the Love of Mike, Be Reasonable

For the love of Mike, be reasonable! We never wrote that Mr. Horace G. Pompton was associated with Kinemacolor even if it did convey that impression in type. We wrote: "Mr. Plimpton is in charge of the entire production work of the Edison Kinetograph Department." It blossomed forth in type, "Kinemacolor Department.' Since that error was made we have received 1,255 inquiries, suggestions, corrections, etc., etc., some readers even asking if Edison had purchased, invented or joined with Kinemacolor. The Kinemacolor and Edison companies are separate and distinct companies. Mr. Plimpton remains the energetic and versatile head of the Edison production department; we stand corrected; and we hope in so doing that all these wild rumors will be quieted.

Why, Here's Our Old Friend!

Why, here's our old friend, B. P. Schulberg, of Rex-Universal joining the Universal Script Reading Bureau! This will be interesting to many pictureplaywrights. Mr. Schulberg was formerly editor for Rex Company, and has the reputation of declining a script in such heart-touching language that the author would rather have the letter of declination than a check. He was among the first to institute the personal reply system instead of the regular return slip. Giles R. Warren, of the Victor Company, started the personal reply system who with Imp. Schulberg was a close second. His connection with the Universal should considerably increase the number of scripts submitted there.

Introducing Mr. J. Carroll

With characteristic energy and enterprise, Editor Lenendre, of the Photoplay Author, that bright monthly published at Chicopee, Mass., introduced to his many author-readers in the September number, Mr. J. Carroll. Mr. Carroll won first prize in the Powers Pictureplay Contest, originated and carried to successful conclusion by Editor C. B. Hoadley. Mr. Carroll gives some advice to writers in the September Photoplay Author. We are taking the liberty of reprinting a portion of his communication:

"To the beginner I would say:

"Begin right, with a clean mind and high ideals.

"Continue right. Do not harbor petty jealousies, and go around saying you can write better plays than those produced, and the 'other fellows.' Do not vilify the editor who returns your pictureplay—there is SOMETHING wrong with it, or he would not return it.

"Get out of the beaten path. Evolve an original theme, and clothe it right. Avoid the old moss-grown plots; shun the murders, salaciousness, prison scenes, barroom scenes, burglaries, etc., and give the 'eternal triangle' a nice long rest.

"Remember that every mortal has more or less of a burden to carry through the Vale of Life, and make it your endeavor to amuse, entertain, and uplift. My motto is: 'Lift up, Look up.'

"Many disappointments and discouragements have to be met and overcome. I have had many, and kept on. YOU can do the same.

"I keep a file of synopses of the plays released weekly, cross indexed, so that I can find any plot under a given head in a few minutes, then before I type my pictureplay, I consult this file, and, if I find that my idea has been done before, the scenario goes to the crematorium.

"I started to write about three years ago, and was very successful from the start. 'A Little Child Shall Lead Them' was one of my first efforts produced, and shortly after won a prize in the Melies Contest with 'For Sale—A Baby.' And I've had them come back, too! We all do. The remedy—don't sit down and cry—write a better one! That's what I tried to do. I had a serious illness last year, and did not get back to writing until a couple of months ago. Perhaps treading the border of Shadowland has broadened my vision. At all events I try to see the pure and spiritual side of things; everything has a beautiful side, try to bring that side out in your work.

"In pictureplaywriting there is a broad field for the author. All the companies are trying to help the writer, and there are great possibilities ahead.

"If you are a successful writer, you already know this. If you are not yet classified as 'successful,' or if you are contemplating entering the field, try to put the best that is in you, into all your work. Do not write with the idea that your trusty fountain pen, typewriter, et al., are machines to grind out ideas—sausages may be ground out that way, but not GOOD PICTUREPLAYS.

"Success is yours for the working, but—it must be hard work, and with an ideal in view. After all, it only depends on what is your idea of success. Mine is to sit down and see my picture on the screen, to watch the lights and shades of emotion play on the faces of the audience, then I—I, passing out, to think to myself that I have, with my little pictureplay, helped to make people think, to make the world better; or, with my little comedy helped to illumine the pathway of some weary fellow-traveler with a gleam of the sunshine of mirth."

Saying It Briefly

John, 10, son of Arthur Jones, farmer, of Oskosh, fell from a haymow Thursday, fractured his skull, and will die.

John Jones, who is aged 10 years, the son of Mr. Arthur Jones, a prominent farmer of Oskosh, while standing in a haymow on Thursday afternoon, slipped and fell from a window to the ground below. When aid reached the young man he was found to be unconscious. Dr. Johnson was hurriedly summoned and, after examination, found the unfortunate boy's skull fractured. His death is looked for at any time.

The first story tells it all in twenty words. The second story contains over three times twenty words. The first account is the best. Be brief and to the point in pictureplaywriting. Why take five hundred words to summarize a script when a good synopsis can be done in two hundred words? And then, Edison gives you fifty words for good measure!

The Successful Plot

..No plot is successful which arouses no original thought or an emotionalism on the part of the onlooker. A profound knowledge of the mind of the reader, the powers and capabilities of the audiences are of prime importance in pictureplaywriting. Lack of that knowledge, lack of studying the faces and the emotion of those who visit the picture theatre, are reasons for the failure of many who try to write the picture drama. The possession of that power of playing on the heart-strings of the onlooker accounts very often for the success of the superficial writer, who may know little else, but has an inherent talent of understanding so well how to play on the minds and hearts of picture show patrons and to make them think. Frank R. Stockton created an unusual ending and powerful climax simply by leading the way to two equally possible conclusions. There is nothing in his novel that presupposes the appearance at the door of the tiger any more than the appearance of the lady, or the lady any more than the tiger. The burden of solution is thrown wholly on the reader, and the reader is certain to solve the problem in the way his feelings dictate.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

NOTES BY THE WAY

By DE FACTO

New Kind of Boycott

Those who have an idea that the interest in moving pictures is dying out will have their minds disabused at least as far as one town is concerned by the following amusing circumstances: By agreement the two shows in a certain Florida town decided to close during the summer months, which was a wise move, but the townspeople took umbrage at this and threatened to boycott both shows when they opened in the fall, and in the meantime to build a new theatre if the owners of the existing theatres persisted in closing. The contention was that the people wanted to see the moving pictures right along during the hot weather even though it might be a losing proposition to the owners, the citizens reasoning that the shows ought to be kept open the year round for the accommodation of the public and that the owners made enough during the rush season to warrant an all the year opening. Such was the state of affairs when it was first announced that there would be no summer pictures, and feeling ran high, but cooler counsel prevailed, matters were discussed pro and con, and the threatened boycott was called off, so that all became serene and contented without the summer picture show. The name of this town will not be mentioned, as it would simply give some crazy or would-be exhibitor the idea that that town would be just the place to start another theatre and he would rush down there and simply spoil with a third show a business that hardly pays two.

Food for Thought

The foregoing leads one to remark that in no other line of business does there seem to be such a lack of exercise of good judgment as in the matter of selecting locations for moving picture theatres. In towns where only one can barely be supported, some wise guy comes along and starts another; where two can make a comfortable living, the same smart one drops into town, and with "I'll show 'em," starts a third, and so on all along the line, with the consequent result that in such places the theatres are conducted at a loss. "The survival of the fittest" is, of course, a very pretty, academic, and apparently wise answer to all this, but when one views the wrecks strewn over the moving picture field it certainly reflects most seriously upon the judgment of the many who have embarked in this business and "lost their wad." In other lines of commercial endeavor they act differently. If minded to set up a grocery store, a store, a hardware store, or any other, they will spot a town, size up the population, count the number of stores of the kind already there, and their common sense will tell them whether there is a good chance or not, and are guided accordingly. But when it comes to the moving picture proposition, then they seem to lose their heads, or are mislead by the bright lights, the showy exteriors, the occasional packed house, or the glamor that seems to surround the world of amusement, and rush in with a great hurrah, and with the declaration, "I'll put 'em out of business," only to find eventually that they themselves are the victims, and learn only too late that "all is not gold that glitters."

"Never Saw a Moving Picture Show!"

In this day of grace, Anno Domini 1912, De Facto has run across a public man who has never seen a moving picture show! But what makes it all the more astonishing is the fact that this party was formerly correspondent for a metropolitan newspaper and is now State Librarian in a certain northern State. When this admission was made the writer nearly fell through the floor, but, recovering, urged the party to hurry up and take in a show or else he would be classed with those who have never seen a steam car or who do not know that the war is over and who are still voting for Andrew Jackson. If he were not a personal friend the State of which he is librarian would be mentioned, but charity forbids it.

"Educate the Rubes"

An exhibitor in a small Georgia town recently wrote his exchange that when they got a letter from a certain traveling showman who put on pictures in towns near the aforesaid exhibitor, that the exchange should send the applicant as good service as possible, giving as the reason: "This man puts on pictures near our town, and that educates the rubes to seeing pictures, and so helps our show." That exhibitor has in him the making of a broad-gauge showman.

Suppress the Bake Shop Windows.

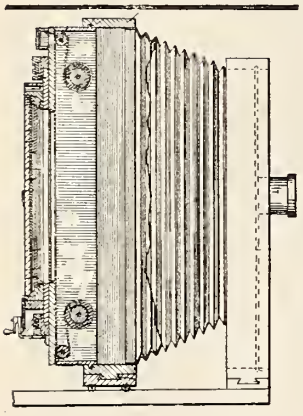
Not long since the newspapers contained an account of the case of a little boy in New York who had been arrested for stealing cakes from a bakery, and when brought before the magistrate gave as an excuse that the fine display in the shop window tempted him and so he went inside and pinched a few cookies. This is certainly a serious matter, and calls for immediate attention on the part of those defenders of the morals of the youth of the country—of those who are lambasting the picture shows because, as is alleged, they tempt boys and girls to do things that they ought not to do. Now to be logical and consistent, these same guardians of public morals should see to it that in all cities, towns and villages ordinances should be passed prohibiting the public display by bakeries of all pies, cakes, sweetmeats, etc., because, forsooth, such display to the young leads to the breaking of the eighth commandment.

INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

the most absurd idea generally prevalent, even among patentees, is that relating to the joint ownership of Letters Patent. The very first patent here considered is a case in point, the inventor assigning forty-nine one-hundredths thereof and retaining fifty-one one-hundredths under the evident belief that he thereby retained control. As a matter of fact, an undivided one-hundredth part of a patent is as good for many purposes as the other ninety and nine. The tail has even been known to wag the dog.

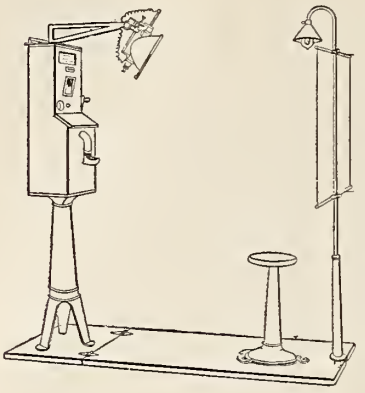
The patent referred to is No. 1,037,934, issued to Charles C. Lamb, of Joliet, Ill., and Willard M. McEwen, of Chicago, Ill., the latter being the assignee. It is for an attachment for cameras designed to provide improved focusing and plate holding mechanism. By way of extenuation the inventor refers to the fact that in ordinary photographic practice a camera is provided with a ground glass focusing plate which is first used to get the focus of the subject, whereafter a separate plate holder is inserted in the camera, usually by being slid into place in front of the ground glass holder, and then the exposure slide of the plate holder is withdrawn and the lens mechanism operated to take the picture. This procedure involves considerable time in the manipulation of the various separate parts, and furthermore this manipulation is apt to move the camera and to spoil the focus. Particularly where pictures are taken of living subjects, it is very desirable that the least time expire between focusing and operation of the lens mechanism. Also where different sized pictures of the same subject are to be taken considerable time is consumed in rearranging the various photographic parts.



Hence the object of the invention is to provide a common supporting structure for focusing mechanism, plate holder mechanism and size adjusting mechanism, which structure can be substituted in a camera frame for the ordinary single plate holder; to provide construction and arrangement which will enable the focusing mechanism, the plate holder mechanism and size adjusting mechanism to be quickly and accurately moved into the photographic field of the camera; to provide means for automatically accomplishing the withdrawal and reinsertion of the exposure slide upon adjustment of the plate holder mechanism into and out of the photographic field; to provide improved adjusting mechanism for determining the movement of the exposure slide relative to the plate holder frame; to provide means in the form of improved diaphragm mechanism for adjusting for the size of image, and improved mechanism for controlling such diaphragm mechanism; to provide improved mechanism for indicating the condition of various parts; to provide improved means for preventing entrance of light during photographis operation; and also to provide other improved and desirable features of construction and operation.

Registration (No. 88,163) has been granted Hugh J. Brady of Orange. N. J., for the mark "Artograph" for photographic goods generally, including apparatus. Used since May 6, 1902.

Patent No. 1 038,135 issued to John Herricht, of New York City, relates to the automatic class of photographic machines, coin released or otherwise, the object of the invention being to provide a machine of this kind with sundry improvements, including an arc light with means for automatically operating the same through mechanism from within the machine itself. It is conceded that coin-controlled photographic machines have been employed in connection with arc lights for instantaneous photographic productions but in all cases heretofore the arc light has been wholly separate, having no mechanical or other operative connection with the machine, and required an attendant for all its operations. The present apparatus is designed to be unitary as well as automatic, and to be operated either with or without coin-controlled mechanism.

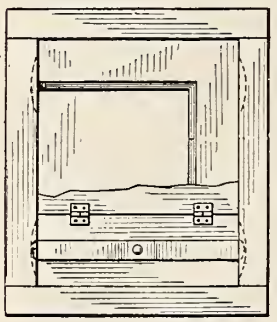


In the operation of the light it is planned to raise and lower the upper carbon sufficiently to completely break the electric connection when the machine is not being used, and to establish a temporary arc when it is in use and a brilliant light is required to produce a picture.

The inclination of the lamp and its carbons may be changed from that of a perfectly vertical position of the carbons to a more or less inclined position as may be found most desirable for focusing the light.

The seat is removable, but held by a segmental plate at one side of its flanged stand, and by a clamp opposite thereto, and thus when the platform is to be folded the seat can easily be detached by simply turning the clamp. In this way the seat to be occupied by the subject is definitely located with respect to the camera upon a portion of the apparatus itself and not on the floor, and thus the entire apparatus, including the seat, can be shifted from one position to another without altering the relative arrangement of the parts.

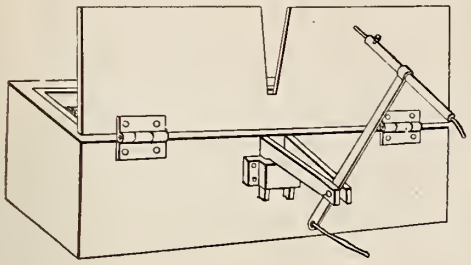
Etta S. McAdam, of Drummond, Chippewa County, Mich., has patented (No. 1,038,171) a photographic printing frame adapted for various sized plates, the object of the invention being the provision of supporting means which may be conveniently mounted in the frame or removed therefrom at the will of the operator.



The frame consists of side bars which are connected to each other by end bars. The said bars are rabbeted upon their inner faces to form a shoulder upon which the photographic plate may be mounted, and upon which may also be mounted the rabbeted edge portion of the improved removable plate supporting member. The frame is provided with the usual back member or compressing head which is provided with spring means adapted for engagement with the side bars of the frame so that a photographic plate when placed in its operative position in the frame can be effectively retained therein.

The reducing member consists of a plurality of right angularly disposed arms, the outer edge portion of the arms being formed with shoulders adapted to engage the shoulder of the frame bars. The inner edges of the arms are provided with plate seats and the terminals of said arms are provided with shoulders which are adapted to engage the shoulders of the side bars of the photographic frame.

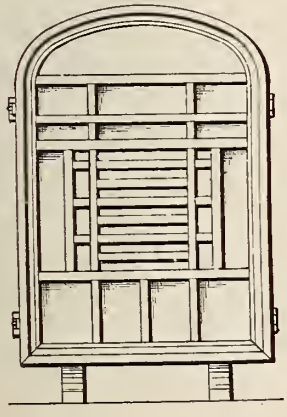
Patent No. 1,038,245, issued to Charles F. Waldeck, of Cantonsville, Maryland. This invention relates to a flashlight apparatus, the primary object of the invention being to provide an apparatus of this character which is simple, reliable and efficient in construction, and which embodies a receptacle to contain the flashlight charge and means for igniting the charge which may be operated at a distance from the receptacle, thereby enabling the operation to be carried out without danger to the operator.



A box or casing is provided having a hinged cover provided with a transverse slot or opening extending through its free edge and of tapering form longitudinally. The casing and lid may be made of steel, and provided with an interior bed of asbestos for the support of the fuse, cartridge or powder which is to be fired. The lid is held in vertical position by the frictional contact of the hinges. Secured to the rear wall of the casing is a retaining member adapted to support a bracket. The outer end of the bracket is slotted to receive an ignitor comprising a lever arm pivotally mounted on the bracket, to the lower and shorter end of which lever arm is connected an operating cord. The upper end of the lever arm carries a tubular holder adapted for the reception of a wax taper or equivalent.

Hydrazine and hydroxylamine derivatives have been added to sensitive films by an English manufacturer to render over-exposure impossible and this can be done, it is claimed, without affecting the speed of the plate. By this means it is possible to include the sun in a landscape without "fogging;" and to photograph a room including a brightly lighted window—long exposure for detail in shadow not being detrimental.

Letters Patent No. 1,038,416, issued to Thomas W. Mullaly of Forth Worth, Torrant County, Texas, relates to display advertising cabinets. The principal object of the invention is to provide a bulletin board which shall contain the names of the number of acts which are to take place at a theatre, for instance; a vaudeville program, giving the exact time that each act begins in both matinee and evening performances, and also the photographs of the different artists. The cabinet may also be used in connection with dramatic performances. The sections in the frame of the bulletin board are readily removable, so that the frame may be subdivided in any desired manner, according to the ideas of the management of each theatre. It will, of course, be understood that all the slides are semi-transparent, similar to the act slides, so that all the reading matter on the board will show up brightly at night. What is claimed is, a bulletin board comprising large frames hinged together, fastening means for holding the frames together, a small frame disposed in the center of each of said large frames, vertical and horizontal strips within the small frame, semi-transparent removable slides on the horizontal strips, pivoted members on the said strips for holding the slides, vertical and horizontal strips between the large and small frames, semi-transparent slides between the strips, pivoted members for holding the last-named slides, supporting means for the large frames, and a lighting means between the frames whereby the announcements may be read from either side of the board.



Time is proverbially precious in Pittsburgh. The latest economizer of time and space is a special car, on an electric interurban railway, designed for theatre parties, etc., and equipped with cinematographic apparatus to be operated during transit. Unquestionably a "moving" picture show, in any and every sense of the word.

The Eclair Film Co., of Fort Lee, N. J., have registered the word "Fame" as a mark for moving picture films. No. 88,171. Claims use since January 20, 1912.

The Stone Moving Picture Company, of Sapulpa, Okla., have applied for registration of this mark for moving picture films. Claims use since April 5, 1911.

Chas. Raleigh, of Paris, France, has applied for registration of the word "Biocolor" for kinematographic films, cameras, projectors, etc. Claims use since May, 1911.

The American Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, Ill., has made application for registration of this mark for moving picture films. Use is claimed since September 1, 1910. No claim is made to the initial "A," the mark consisting of the representation of a pair of outspread or flying wings in connection therewith.

Application has been made for the registration of "Tenax" as a mark for photographic supplies generally, in the name of Optische Anstalt C. P. Goerz Aktiengesellschaft, of Frienenau, near Berlin, Germany. It would seem superfluous to otherwise stamp these goods as "Made in Germany."

The Commissioner of Patents has decided re Trade Marks, that the words "Red Men" have come to be understood as the equivalent of "Indian," and registration of said words was refused on reference to prior registration for the same class of goods disclosing the picture of an Indian as a predominating feature. "Lo, the poor Indian." To what base uses, etc. In a somewhat analogous case the mark "Tika" was held unregisterable because of its similarity to the registered mark "Swastika" when obviously used as a contraction thereof. Hence, obviously it is not always expedient to monkey with luck, or the symbol thereof.

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the MOVING PICTURE NEWS.

Geo. Wm. Miatt

(Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

ART TO CONCEAL ART

Alec B. Francis of Eclair is wearing a most supremely confident smile these last few days for he has proven the adage of "Art to Conceal Art." It seems that a detachment of Eclairites were up in Connecticut to get a touch of County Fair color.

The fair president, treasurer, directors and ground police feeling highly honored and duly elated over the selection of "their fair" for pictures were lending their undivided efforts to Bill Haddock who was directing the picture.

Everything was moving nicely, the camera man was grinding away and the director called out, "On Alec," but no "Alec" appeared. Again Bill called out with a prefaced word of mild profanity. Still no "Alec."

Orders were given to stop scene and up comes a typical rural constable with Francis in tow and trying volubly to explain. The "officer of the law" had arrested him as a "rube" who was trying to interfere with "them movin' pitcher peepul from New York B'gosh."

Francis has a right to smile, we think. Nick Carter please take notice.

THE RIDGELYS WELL ON THEIR WAY ACROSS CONTINENT

Clad in simple Western riding costumes, and with sturdy little mustangs to carry them, Mr. and Mrs. Landon M. Ridgely started almost a month ago on the cross-continent trip which is destined to attract for them a great deal of attention and keep them in the limelight until at least January 1st, 1913, when they expect to arrive in San Francisco, all going well 'twixt now and then.

The couple are traveling in the interests of the Motion Picture Story Magazine; and it was from this office at 26 Court street, Brooklyn, N. Y., that they launched forth on their travels.

They expect to ride thirty or forty miles every day, passing through the states of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, New Meico, Arizona and California.

Mr. and Mrs. Ridgely are motion picture actors and will stop at towns on the way to put on films at the different theatres, and to lecture. They are expert riders, and although they have ridden across states before, no definite tour has been made by them. Mr. Ridgely was born at Cody, Wyo., and Mrs. Ridgely in Wisconsin, both, therefore, being brought up in the saddle.

On September 20th they arrived at Harrisburg, Pa. It is said that the attendance at the motion picture theatres which they have visited so far have been record-breakers.

ECLAIR TWO-REEL FEATURE

The two-reel feature habit can well be said to have arrived. For the Eclair Company announce another for October 17th, entitled "Caprices of Fortune."

This is another fruit of Mr. Arnaud's extended trip with the Eclair Stock Company and contains many scenes from various parts of the East. The steel mills of Homestead play an important part in the development of the story. Variety of local is abundant for the story moves throughout the entire United States and into Mexico with a suggestion of Honduras by way of a prize winning lottery ticket. More will be told in later issue.

MUTUAL MINNEAPOLIS GROWS RAPIDLY

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 22.—(Special to the News)—Several weeks ago it was announced in these columns that Dr. B. N. Judell, or rather "Benny," had left the Milwaukee office of the Western Film Exchange to assume the managership of the new exchange to be opened in Minneapolis by the Mutual Film Corporation. After several weeks of quiet, hard work, it has been observed that this new office had made great inroads into the business of its competitors.

Minnesota exhibitors have learned to their joy (and it must be confessed some have learned to their sorrow), that Mr. "Benny" Judell did not make an enviable reputation in Wisconsin as a booking agent on "hot air." They also have learned that with such an excellent booking agent taking care of the more excellent Mutual and Film Supply programs—well, results speak for themselves, and if one could see the business-looking offices of the Mutual Film Corporation in Minneapolis, and at the amount of business they are handling, one would be convinced that it was to be regretted that there never before was a Mutual office in Minneapolis. Mr. Judell, in a recent interview, states that the fact that he handles the only original "101 Bison," has been a great help in getting business for him. Recently Mr. Judell circulated a circular, by the immense size of 19x24 inches, under the heading "Thou Shalt Not Lie," in answer to a circular letter gotten out by his other independent competitor, which stated "that all those that were releasing '101 Bison' outside of that office were misrepresenting the truth, etc." By writing a strong editorial and prominently quoting the Moving Picture News, the Mutual office gained a sweeping victory among the Minnesota exhibitors.

All the Minnesota exhibitors are requested to send in their names and addresses to the Mutual Film Corporation, 445 Temple Court, Minneapolis, so that they can get on the latter's mammoth mailing list for interesting editorial matter, which will be sent out from time to time.

BRITISH-AMERICAN FILM CO. TRAIN INDIANS TO ACT

"In the heart of the virgin bush three miles above, the Indian village of Caughnawaga, says the Montreal Star, is situated a camp which constitutes the latest novelty in the production of animated pictures. Here are encamped over fifty Iroquois Indians, equipped with all the old-time, picturesque garb of their race, and, during the next few months they will be constantly posing for the busy cinematograph men.

The camp above Caughnawaga has been organized by a new combination, the British-American Film Co., who hit upon the idea of posing real Indians in their native scenery, so that there could be no possibility of the absurd incongruities springing up which so often occur when ordinary actors pose as redmen. The style of picture which will be taken, too, will be different from the average picture palace film.

Instead of imaginary conflicts between settlers and Indians, the British-American Film Company plan to depict the great battles of Canadian history, and they are taking the greatest care that the pictures shall be historically correct.

To Joe Whiteagle has been deputed the task of "beating up" the Indians, and of rehearsing them in their parts. Whiteagle himself is a native of Caughnawaga, where he is known as Mr. Joseph Monich, and is a pure Iroquois Indian. For the past eight years, however, he has been engaged in the production of films in New York, and is an expert in the posing of Indians.

Over fifty Indians have been engaged by him, and are busy rehearsing a representation of the Battle of Lake Champlain.

THANHOUSER NEWS AND MUTUAL OBSERVER CONSOLIDATE

News of the above comes to us in the shape of the following announcement: "After this issue The Thanhouser News becomes consolidated with The Mutual Observer. All persons now receiving The Thanhouser News will receive the combined Mutual Observer and Thanhouser News.

FRANCES CUMMINGS
Playing leading parts with Lubin Company.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM WINNIPEG

August 19, 1912.

My dear Mr. Saunders:

Having a few hours' leisure time while waiting for a train, I got in touch with a number of exhibitors here. Mr. Paul Marquard is president of a company owning a chain of picture shows in Western Canada. While in Chicago, during the last convention of the League he joined our ranks and was the first Canadian to join the Exhibitors League of America. One of the theatres of his company is located here at Winnipeg. I was sorry to find him out of town. However, it only took a short time to get the exhibitors together. They are a live, hustling bunch of practical men, and were enthusiastic about the organization. They are going to apply to the Exhibitors League of America for a charter for the Western Canadian Division to comprise the Provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Yukon. This shows the progress the Exhibitors League of America is making. However, it is no greater than the movement deserves. If each exhibitor understood its work everyone would be enrolled in its ranks.

Cordially,
TOBIAS O. KEPPLER.

Mr. Charles E. Nixon, who wrote the scenario of "The Coming of Columbus," "Daughter of the Confederacy," etc., and adapted Randall Parish's story "When Wilderness Was King" for the Selig Polyscope Company, is now a regular member of the Selig Company's scenario department and will write exclusively for the Selig Company in the future.

The following was duly incorporated at Albany, N. Y.: The International Feature Film Company of Manhattan, realty and theatricals, $100,000. Herbert Miles, William Steiner, and R. W. Daly.

1,500-FOOT THANHOUSER STORY

What is perhaps the first 1,500-foot Independent film ever issued is found on the Thanhouser release scheduled for Tuesday, October 8th, under the title "Miss Robinson Crusoe." Heretofore regular release features have always completely filled one or two, or more, reels according to the particular subject, and no maker has been known to stop midway in a reel, as in the case of the present Thanhouser subject. On this, Mr. Thanhouser says:

"It was a matter of being artistic. The market is supposed to want feature stories that occupy full reels. But the producer turned in a little over sixteen hundred feet, all 'live' stuff. With titles and 'padding,' the picture could have been stretched to cover two full reels, but I decided to use the 'live' stuff as it stood. With 'cut-outs' there were fifteen hundred feet of it. So we stopped the story there. Then we chopped a thousand-foot negative showing specimens from the New York Zoological Park, down to 500 feet, added it to the No. 2 reel, and so supplied the missing length of film.

"It seems too bad that a producer must tell a story in a given length. It means too short films or too long films; it means the padding evil. It would be splendid if the manufacturers would make up their minds to let a story just run along naturally, to not only start right but stop right. The story-action would be helped a lot, and if good stories are the salvation of the business, we may all yet get around to natural length subjects."

FILM FAVORITE STOCK STAR "BY PERMISSION."

Miss Carey L. Hastings, who plays character leads for Thanhouser Company, received a call from the Prospect Theatre in New York City to play the star role in "Mother," which their stock company was to produce for a short run. The fact of her film work didn't seem to matter with the theatre management, as picture engagements have "mattered" with players in the past, and the film company, on the other hand, courteously agreed to release Miss Hastings for the term of the theatrical engagement. Which is just some of the proof that the theatrical interests and the picture interests have come to the realization that theirs is a common cause, in which foolish bans and prohibitions have been wiped off the slate.

Miss Kathryn Williams, the beautiful and talented leading woman of the Selig Polyscope Company's Chicago studio, acted as fairy godmother to a party of some two hundred children last week, when she gave the slum kiddies a theatre party at the Stevenson Theatre, Evanston, avenue and Irving Park Boulevard, Chicago. The children were those who took part in the recent tuberculosis pictures at the Selig studios, and were recruited from the Hull House district, Chicago's most congested foreign quarter.

THE CALL OF THE BLOOD
Majestic Release, October 1

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION NO. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Corresponding Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

Office of the Union
Telephone, Stuyvesant 572 13 Third Ave, N. Y. City

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 1 of Greater New York and vicinity held their regular meeting Monday, September 24, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York City. The meeting was called to order by President Robert Goldblatt at 12:45 a.m. The attendance numbered 200 members. Several speakers appeared. Prominent among them were Mr. Alfred H. Saunders, editor of Moving Picture News, and Mr. W. Hollander, also others too numerous to mention.

The address by Mr. Saunders, covering points of organized labor and the conditions of the mental, moral and social standing of the moving picture operator in the various phases was delivered in a most masterly manner. It was, beyond a doubt, the most pleasant event and treat that has ever been the good fortune of any member of the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1 to participate in.

At the conclusion of Mr. Saunders' address the applause clearly demonstrated that a home run hit had been made in the hearts and minds of the men by the masterly manner in which the subject so important to the interests of the members of our local had been dwelt upon.

Brother Ralph Knaster made a motion to offer a vote of thanks and also moved that the eminent speaker be made an honorary member of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, No. 1, which was carried by a standing unanimous vote.

Mr. Hollander made a forcible address to the boys, imploring the continued steadfastness shown by the members of No. 1 in their efforts to better their conditions. His address made a deep impression on all, and no doubt will bring forth practical results. Mr. Hollander no doubt will feel proud of the reception his remarks received.

After several addresses made by various members, the regular routine of business was taken up. Obligations of new members were five in number, and twenty-five new applications for membership were laid before the body for consideration. In addition to these applicants the delegate reported seventeen new enrollments during the past week.

It is evident that the hint conveyed in the last week chat regarding the enrollment of new members is having a good effect, for many are availing themselves of the low entrance fee now in force until October 15, 1912, when the fee will be raised to $5.00. The following nominations for permanent offices were made:

For President—Robert Goldblatt.
For Vice-President—James Daisie and Bert Leroy.
For Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
For Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
For Sergeants-at-Arms—Eddie Sponalo, Max Much, Jack Garlick.
For Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.
For Trustees—Al Harrison, Max Feinberg, Alex. Polin, Sam Citron, Robert Saunders, Mike Berkowitz.

A motion was made that the organization No. 1 should give an entertainment and ball in the near future. The motion was unanimously adopted.

A committee on arrangements was appointed.

The meeting was closed at 4 a.m.

NOTICE—In the future the regular meetings will be held on the first and third Monday of the month. The next regular meeting will be held on October 7, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York City, at 12 midnight. A full attendance is requested.

OPERATORS' QUESTION BOX

By R. J. Kay

Mr. R. J. Kay,

Editor of the Operators' Question Box department.

I am operating a picture machine on the road and carry a double dissolver. This is my first road job, and I had some trouble on reaching a certain town where there was direct current, 110 volts. I always understood that the positive wire must be connected with the top jaw of the burner. When I put up my double dissolver, I placed the positive wire on the top jaws of both lamps or burners. This I thought was all right, but when I put on my switch and struck a light my bottom lamp was burning upside down. Please explain the cause and how to remedy the trouble.

Yours truly,

A. K.,
Columbus, O.

To the Brother from Ohio.—When you encountered your trouble, you should have changed your wire, which I am positive you must have done in order to have your lamps burning right on the double dissolver.

The positive wire was all right on the top for the upper lamp house, but you should have your negative on the top on your lower lamp, to be burning right, if the both lamps are connected from a three-wire system. The current flowing one way and returning the other causes the polarity to change, and that is the reason for your trouble.

* * * *

My Dear Mr. Kay:

I was informed by a friend that you are answering the Question Box department, and you are ready to come to the assistance of your brother operators. I was working on a job where there was an iron booth and the trouble I had caused my discharge. When all was ready for the show to begin, I put on my switch to strike a light and my fuses blew. I had 30 amp. fuses, and I put in other fuses, blowing out my fuses three times. The audience got restless and the boss scolded. I tried to locate my trouble. I pulled off the switch and I got a big flash when I did this. I then saw that I had juice or current and put in fuses again and they blew out also, and on pulling off my switch, I again saw that big flash.

Kindly explain what I should have done, as the boss discharged me and put on another man before I could remedy the trouble.

J. B.

To Brother Operator J. B.—I am very sorry to learn that you have had trouble which caused you to be discharged, and no doubt competent men have the right over others, but trust that you will succeed in the future.

Your trouble was a very simple one, which you could have remedied in a very few minutes. The stand of your machine was grounded, likewise the upper jaw of your lamp was grounded, and in order to give the show immediately, you could or should, have placed any non-conductor beneath the legs of your stand, so the circuit which was formed by aforementioned ground would have been broken and your fuses would not blow.

* * * *

NOTICE to all brother operators: An operators' hand-book is being prepared and will be ready in a short time. This book is to be called "The Operators' Companion," and I advise all operators who want a near and dear friend to call or write to the Question Box department for moving picture operators, of the Moving Picture News, and get on the list for the Operators' Companion, by R. J. Kay.

H. A. SPANUTH AND J. W. STROUSE DISSOLVE PARTNERSHIP

It has been formally announced that H. A. Spanuth, of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, and his partner, Joseph W. Strouse, have dissolved partnership.

We learn that Spanuth has bought out Strouse and that he is now alone in the prosperous enterprise.

LEON GAUMONT SAILS FOR EUROPE

Leon Gaumont, head of the motion picture house of that name, sailed for Europe last week on board the "Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse." Mr. Gaumont's stay was of but short duration, urgent business at the plant in Paris necessitating his immediate presence.

The accompanying illustration shows Robt. Frazer in the chief role of the Eclair release for October 8th, "All on Account of a Ring."

It is understood that Mr. Frazier is leaving the photoplay to take the name part in "The Millionaire," which will soon take to the road. Mr. Frazier has won a host of admirers during his connection with Eclair and there are many who will be loathe to see him leave the screen. But it is a case of a previous contract for he had signed with Mr. Savage before going with Eclair.

Eclair's "A Choice by Accident," contains one scene wherein every article of a well-set parlor is utterly demolished in a struggle between a bold, bad tramp and a supposed old grandmother, who is none other than Geo. Larkin, the picture dare-devil. Richard Sterling as the tramp and Larkin perform about as sensational fight as could be imagined. It makes the reviewer even suspect bad blood between them, though we hope and believe that this suspicion arises solely from the perfection of their acting.

FIRST SERIES OF CHILDREN'S PLAYS FOR CHILDREN'S THEATRE

At the Kinemacolor projecting room a very interesting little pictureplay was exhibited on Wednesday of the past week for the benefit of the press. This play, which was shown in two reels and entitled "Other People's Children," is one of a series of children's plays that are to be presented at the Children's Theatre, which is already in preparation on the roof of the Century Theatre. When this is ready the kids and kidlets will have "no kick coming," for there they can go and be entertained as children should be.

The Kinemacolor pictures are to be a feature of this little theatre, and judging from the quality of pictures exhibited on Wednesday, such as "Bee Culture," a very remarkable picture, and "A Tulip Study," it will be a boon to children, and mothers as well.

MR. E. ARNAUD, OF ECLAIR, SAILS FOR PARIS

The clever young director of the Eclair pictures left New York for Paris on Thursday by the French line.

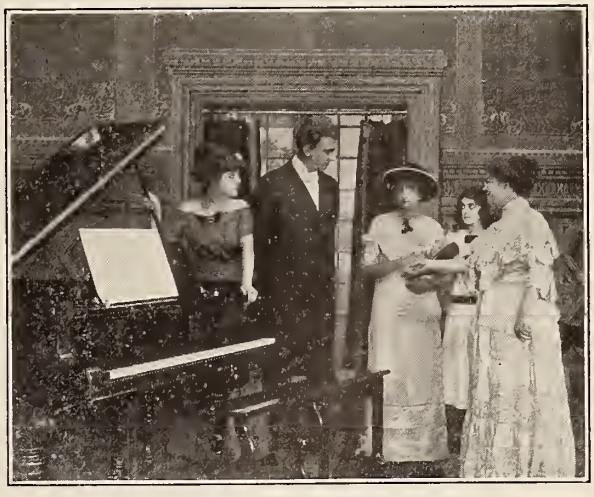
Mr. Arnaud will remain in France for six weeks, bringing back with him on his return trip Mrs. Arnaud, who has been spending some time in Paris.

The employees and entire company were at the pier to bid Mr. Arnaud "bon voyage," and pictures under the direction of Mr. Haddock were taken by the Eclair camera man.

A serviceable Alaskan traveling coat was presented to him before he embarked.

Portland, Me.—Santo Domingo Amusement Co. incorporated, capital $50,000. President, E. E. Noble; treasurer, E. V. Mann.

Rockville, Ind.—The Lyric moving picture theatre has been sold to the International Film Co.



THE LITTLE MUSIC TEACHER
Majestic release October 6th.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

ECLAIR

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A RING (Oct 8).—It is the evening of Jack's wedding. He has loitered downtown to have the customary farewell drink with bachelor friends and is late in getting dressed for the big event of a fellow's life. He rips his trousers and tries to mend them. All this is now happening while the bride and guests are awaiting his past due time for arrival.

At last he appears and the ceremony starts, then Jack misses the necessary ring and, with a running explanation, bolts out of the house to go to his quarters to get it. But since he left his room a burglar has entered it and found the ring. After many adventures with the police, janitor and fire escape he discovers its theft. He returns to his bride and sadly explains his predicament. It looks like no wedding till Mrs. Jones inspiredly thinks of loaning Jack her wedding ring. So follows the ceremony and then happiness.

SURPRISING ELIZA.—Silas Hobbs, farmer, purchases a new suit while at the same time a woman customer is buying a bedspread. In wrapping up the parcels the clerks get mixed up and Silas gets the bedspread in the confusion.

He is riding on horseback when the idea strikes him to put on his new suit and surprise Eliza. So he pulls up behind a clump of bushes and takes off his old suit, putting it over the saddle. While he unties his bundle the old borse wanders down to the stream for a drink, and as he bends over, Silas' clothes fall in the stream and drift away.

Silas has now opened his package and discovered the bedspread. His horse returns minus his clothes, so he is forced to walk home wrapped in the bedspread, and he does truthfully surprise Eliza.

A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT (Oct. 10).—Caleb Jones, guardian to Tess and Trixie, discovers they are being wooed by the two fortune hunters, Clarence and Percy. So he writes a letter to his country nephew to come on and woo one of them and keep the money in the family. Tess and Trixie chance to see the letter he is writing and, to protect themselves against their guardian's scheme, they write their grandmother to come to their assistance.

Both the grandmother and the country nephew chance to arrive on the same train. They get their suitcases mixed in the depot and eacb set off to the bome of Caleb Jones. The nephew comes to a stream and, being hot and dusty, decides to have a bath and swim. He does, and while in the water a tramp steals his clothes, so in coming out of the water the nephew is forced to put on the suit he thinks is in the suitcase. Opening it he discovers it is filled with feminine articles, a dress, from whicb assortment he is forced to don in preference to his state of nudity. Having to wear the dress he decides to affect the whole attire, bonnet, glasses and all, and be is soon a perfect counterpart of grandma.

He arrives at his uncle's and is welcomed by the girls as their grandmother, for they hadn't seen her for years. Then the same tramp who stole the clothes enters the home and holds up the crowd. The two fortune-hunters flee in fear while the supposed grandma turns in and captures and ropes the hold-up tramp. Finally the real grandparent arrives and all is straigbtened out.

THE WHITE BONNET (Oct. 13).—George Hardy and Paul Dawn, reporters for the Daily News, are both in love with pretty Miss Walton, daughter of the publisher. In order to decide between them, the publisher determines to put the two suitors to a test. "Let your mothers come and ask for my daughter's hand for you" is his plan of selection. Accordingly, both young men write to their mothers.

George writes his mother an affectionate letter, asking her to come and help him to attain his life's happiness, while Paul pens a very formal sort of note requesting his mother to visit him and help advance him in certain interests. Now both mothers are but plain country women, so that when they arrive immediately is shown the difference in the two men by the reception the respective mothers are accorded.

George is proud of his mother and her old white bonnet, while Paul plainly shows his shame of his mother because she, too, wears one. Paul at once sets about to make his old-fashioned mother into a seeming aristocrat. But she cannot pretend to be what she is not and Paul, ashamed to introduce her, writes that she is detained at her country estate but begs for the daughter's hand in his behalf. How different did George act, for proudly did he bring his mother to the home of the publisher.

The old publisher read between the lines of Paul's letter and was pleased by the pride George exhibited in his mother. He made his choice as he said, "He who is ashamed of his mother cannot make a good husband."

RELIANCE

TIME AVENGES (Oct 5).—Jim, a sturdy life-saver, in love with Jane, daughter of the captain of the life-savers, is thrown over for Baxter, a Summer visitor, who persuades Jane to elope.

A mock marriage, a year's unhappiness, and Jane returns to her father and Jim. She is forgiven. She sees the error of her ways and realizes Jim's great abiding love.

During a terrific storm off the coast Baxter's yacht goes ashore near the life-saving station, and Baxter tries to reach the beach in a small boat. Jim, on watch, through the glasses sees and recognizes Baxter clinging to the upturned boat. The captain and Jane also look through the glass and recognize Baxter.

Jim refuses to go to the rescue. The captain orders the life boat out. Jim seizes a revolver and threatens the captain and crew, preventing them going. Jane pleads with Jim, but, the devll of jealousy aroused, Jim refuses. Jane finally prevails; Jim's true nature asserts itself and he heads the rescue party. After a hard fought battle Jim reaches the nearly drowned man and succeeds in bringing him to shore. Jane, through the glass, watches the heroic fight of Jim, and her heart goes out to him.

On the beach, Baxter lingers long enough to ask forgiveness, which is granted, and he expires in Jane's arms. Jim and Jane are reunited after passing through the furnace of suffering, chastened in spirit, for time has avenged their wrongs—proving the truth of the text: "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

GUY MANNERING (Oct. 9) (two reels).—Guy Mannering is present at the birth of Harry Bertram, the heir to the Bertram estate. Meg Merriles, queen of the gypsies living on the Bertram estate, is also present, and by consulting with the stars they cast the young heir's horoscope. This shows he will have much trouble and misfortune during his life, holding forth until he is twentv-one years old. Several years pass. The elder Bertram is made justice of the peace. With this new authority he at once takes action against the gypsies, who have lived for centuries on his estate. Meg Merriles, who has long been a friend of the house of Ellangowan, takes this as a personal insult and calls down the curse of her race upon the home of Bertram. In taking action against the smugglers who infest the coast, Bertram employs Inspector Kennedy to rout them out. Young Harry, now five years old, and his tutor, are walking about the shore. They pass Kennedy, who places the child on his horse before him. The smugglers, in the meantime, recognize Kennedy as their arch enemy. They attack him and throw him over the cliff. The boy, being a witness to this, is taken away to their cave. Meg, who has seen this, begs for the boy's release, but Lawyer Glossin, a silent friend of the smugglers, prevails upon them to kidnap the boy, for without an heir the house of Bertram, by his clever manipulation, will easily pass into his hands. Sixteen years later, young Bertram, now known as Brown, becomes an officer in Col. Mannering's regiment in India. He is very much in love with Mannering's daughter, Julia, whose mother, fearing the Colonel's anger, encourages the young lovers in their secret meetings. This is misinterpreted by the Colonel, who thinks that Bertram is paying attention to his wife. This situation leads to a duel in which Bertram is shot and supposed by Mannering to be dead. In reality he is taken prisoner by the Sepoys and held captive till he manages to escape. Learning the Colonel has returned to England, he follows and finds him living in Scotland, a widower, with his daughter, near the Bertram estate. He sees his sweetheart again. Old Meg recognizes him as the heir and the smugglers also recognize him and informs Glossin, who, upon the death of the young man's father, acquires the estate at very small cost, leaving Miss Bertram, the daughter of his old master, penniless. Glossin at once takes action with the smugglers, who, to protect themselves from the charge of the murder of Kennedy, is a willing tool of Glossin and agrees to get the young man out of the way, employing murder if necessary. This plot, fortunately, is overheard by one of Meg's trusty men, who immediately informs her. Realizing that she owes many a favor to the house of Ellangowan she sends word to the Colonel that if he would see the heir to the house of Bertram still alive, to come at once to the smugglers cave with help. She tells Bertram who he is and bids him be at the smugglers' cave that she may prove what she says. She leads him into the cave. Here she confronts Glossin and Hatterick and promises that her prophecy shall be fullled. A struggle ensues which, by the timely arrival of Col. Mannering and his help, terminates in the capture of Blossin and Hatterick. Meg has been shot during the affray and, with her dying breath announces to all that Bertram is the long-lost beir to the house of Ellangowan. The Colonel recognizes in young Bertram, Brown. His daughter Julia arrives and the loverlike attiture of the young couple explains to him his error, and he consents to their speedy marriage. Bertram meets for the first time his sister Lucy, in whom Col. Mannering has shown an interest more than brotherly. They all repair to the castle, where Bertram is formally proclaimed its master.

THE PEDDLER'S FIND (Oct. 12).—A Jewish peddler finds a blind Gentile baby girl in the woods. He takes her home and brings ber up with his own children, though his wife at first protests. Jake, his son, in time learns to love Jenny, the waif. While sbe is dearly beloved by all, yet the matter of religion prevents a union between a Jew and a Gentile. Jenny overhears a family council, and rather than come between father and son determines to run away. Jake, the lover, is distracted, and goes to find her. Learning her whereabouts from a friendly newsboy, he goes to the old trysting place and finds Jenny kissing the rose he gave her years ago, now dried and withered. Jake declares his love, and they plan to be married at once. Seeking a nearby Justice the knot is tied and they begin housekeeping and are happy.

Later, father and mother, unable to longer endure the separation and heart-hunger to see the young couple and the baby, visit Jake and Jenny at their new home, at Yom Kipper, and are joyously received. It marks a new era, for the family are at last reconciled.

MAJESTIC

THE LITTLE MUSIC TEACHER (Oct. 6).—The little music teacher has a hard time making enough money to pay her bills. A month's rent is due and the world seems cold and cheerless. Riding on tbe car she discovers that she has forgotten her pocketbook and is forced to borrow five cents from a handsome man sitting next to her.

They exchange cards so that she can return the borrowed nickel. The man becomes interested in her and, although a great musician, pretends not to know the first rudiments of music so that he can take lessons from the little music teacher.

After she has given bim several lessons, she discovers a newspaper article about his wonderful piano recital given before a large audience the night following one of her lessons, in which she has had great trouble teaching him some five-finger exercises. Thoroughly angry and humiliated, she refuses to see him again and it is only after he has declared his love and given it as the reason for his deception that she puts a lighted lamp in her window as a signal that he is forgiven.

THE WINNER AND THE SPOILS (Oct. 8).—Gaspard, Count de Castany, in the French army, has gambled away all obtainable money and his friends and comrades refuse to accept any more of his I. O. U.'s. He goes to his sister Marie and demands that she help him. She refuses, and while imploring her brother to keep away from his fast friends, one of them, the young Marquis de Fornay, is announced. Marie receives him distantly and, while Gaspard is out of the room preparing to accompany the Marquis to the club, Marie upbraids him for his evil influence over her brother. After their departure Marie calls her maid and, hastily enveloping herself in a cloak, they follow them. At the door of the club the Marquis comes down as she draws near to get the number. He recognizes her and offers to escort her home. She repulses him haughtily and hurries away with her maid. The Marquis re-enters the club, joins the table where Gaspard is playing, refuses his I. O. U.'s and so he is forced from the game. The next day Gaspard again begs Marie for money and she refuses. Then he threatens to risk the family jewels and flaunts the case in her face as he does so. He goes out and Marie is at first overwhelmed, then she thinks of a plan to circumvent him. She calls her maid, Nichette, and sends her to Gaspard's valet, of whom she demands one of Gaspard's best suits. Jean at first demurs, but Nichette beats him until he brings out the very best. She dresses her mistress and together they start out, making Jean accompany them. Marie enters the club and calls for Gaspard. He refuses to let her come in, but she threatens to make a scene and he finally takes her in, introducing her as his friend, the Count de Thirs. The Marquis recognizes her at once but says nothing. The playing is resumed. Gaspard plays more recklessly than ever and finally stakes the family jewels. The Marquis plays hard to win and finally succeeds. As the jewels are handed to him, Marie denounces him as a thief and a card shark. The greatest confusion prevails and the friends of the Marquis insist that he challenge her at once. Marie is horror-stricken and her brother insists upon fighting for his young friend. The Marquis will not listen to this and insists upon fighting with the Count. He says "to the winner shall belong the spoils," and draws up a paper to this effect. Beneath his name he writes "not transferable."

Marie is terribly frightened and her knees shake so that she drops her sword. But when the word is given she nerves herself and plunges again and again at the Marquis, finally wounding him slightly. His second hands Marie the jewels. When she gets home she locks them safely away. Next day Gaspard asks for them again. As she refuses the Marquis is announced. He says Gaspard can never have the jewels again and points to the "not transferable" clause in the contract. Then Marie understands it all. The Marquis has brought orders sending Gaspard out to join a regiment in Algeria. This will take him away from his present comrades and put him in action. The Marquis then offers Marie the balance of the "spoils," himself, and the estates of the de Fornays.

VITAGRAPH

THE IRONY OF FATE (Sept. 28).—This is a reverie of what might have been. Virginia Jameson, a girl of lovely disposition, is wooed by a man much older than herself, whom she very much dislikes, but who stands very high in the favor of her parents. She might have married another man had not fate decreed otherwise. She meets and accidentally escapes the man she could have loved and would have married; she stooped to tie her shoestrings, diverting her attention from him. Had their eyes met, both their lives would have been different.

Leroy Farley, the man favored by her parents, prevails and she marries him. Her life is unhappy, notwithstanding his great riches and social prominence. One day, out for a stroll, she meets some little children, her heart goes out to them as she thinks of the comfort they might be to her were they her own. As she stoops to kiss one of them, Harry Weston, the man whom she could have loved and who would have loved her with all his heart, happens by, gazing with admiration on her and the scene before him. As a married woman, she naturally repulses his stare and passes on to her home, where in meditation and loneliness, she thinks of her unsatisfied life and the irony of fate.

While she is thus engaged, Harry Weston, in his bachelor apartments, pictures, in his revery, life and what it might have been to him had he married the woman he met and could have loved.

MAJESTIC

A REGULAR RELEASE WELL WORTH FEATURING

"The Call of the Blood"

THIS BEAUTIFUL PICTURE PRODUCTION IS RELEASED TUESDAY, OCT. 1st.

HERE IS A PROGRAM THAT WILL BRING BOX OFFICE RESULTS

Oct. 6—"The Little Music Teacher."
Oct. 8—"The Winner and the Spoils."
Oct. 13—"The Simpler Life."
Oct. 15—"All for Jim."
Oct. 20—"Capt. Ben's Yarn."
Oct. 22—"Love and War."

The Majestic Studios, 540 W. 21st St., New York

HER CHOICE (Sept. 30).—Without an heir, Mrs. Letitia Summers, the principal and proprietress of a most fashionable and exclusive boarding school, decides to give her two nieces, daughters of her deceased brothers, an education, and at the same time select one of them as her heir. Without letting them know who she is, she writes each a letter, stating that a lady of means has provided for their education at Mrs. Summers' Seminary.

Edith, who is a very sensible and lovable girl, receives the announcement with joy and assures her mother that she will be able to take advantage of the opportunity without any additional expense to her, for she knows that her mother cannot afford to send her there with any pretension or style.

May, the other niece, who lives in another part of the country, is delighted with the news, giving her entrance to so fashionable a school. Immediately she demands of her mother a lot of new things in order to satisfy her vanity and desire to make an impression. May, with her new clothes and outfit, attracts considerable atention when she arrives at the school. Edith, in her modest wardrobe and old-fashioned carpet-bag, is received with disparaging remarks, and even her own cousin, May, snubs her. May is very popular with the girls, while Edith has to content herself with their toleration, spending most of her time with the younger pupils of the school, with whom she is a great favorite on account of her sweet disposition and kindness.

At the end of the school course, the two girls graduate with creditable showing in their studies. In addition, Edith is crowned with a crown of daisies and a chain of them placed about her neck by the children in acknowledgment of their love for her. After the graduating exercises, Mrs. Summers calls the two girls into her private office and tells them that she is their aunt and she has chosen Edith as her heir in recognition of her kindness and thoughtfulness for others. May cannot restrain her temper, abruptly and haughtily leaving the room.

EDISON

THE GIRL FROM THE COUNTRY (Oct. 1).—The general advice of to-day is against the "Lure of the City" for our country folks, and we have prepared a film that will do much toward convincing country mothers that their daughters should not be sent to the city without a protector.

Ambitious little Aellie is preparing herself for a stenographer's position by diligent study and application in her home town. As her proficiency increases she begins to hear the call of the city—and when Jennie, an old school chum, comes home from the city on a visit, her smart clothes and independent air are more than Nellie can withstand. She learns from Jennie that it is easy to secure a position in the city and wins her mother's consent to go with her.

Her sweetheart, Tom, a pigeon farmer, realizes that Jennie is not the kind of a girl she was before she left the old town, but forbears to speak of it even when Nellie refuses to marry him. He believes in Nellie and her ability to stand the test of the crucible. He is willing to wait.

Nellie's slender purse permits of only a hallroom on the top floor of a typical city rooming house. It does not occur to her to inquire how Jennie can afford the big room on the first floor front, but time is a wonderful teacher. One night, having accepted an invitation to supper with two of Jennie's men friends, she realizes the truth and understands Jennie's easy life. The horror of it appals her and she flees to the little hall room to think. She has lost her position because of the unwelcome attentions of her employer. Her funds are getting low and the future is dark.

In the meantime no word from Nellie has reached home for some period and Tom, fearing that she is in trouble, has expressed her his favorite homing pigeon. It arrives in the darkest hour of her trials. Dear old Tom! She understands. Swiftwing is intended as her messenger to him if she needs help. A moment decides her and Swiftwing takes the air with a bit of ribbon as her message to Tom.

Tom's timely arrival prevents Nellie's being dispossessed by a brutal landlord, and Nellie learns that, after all, there is no place like home.

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER (Oct. 2).—Two hungry tramps approach the rear of Mrs. Weston's house with the intention of begging for food. As soon as they reach within earshot they overhear a spirited war of words between Mr. and Mrs. Weston, who appear to be insanely jealous of each other, and when the eavesdropping tramps appear on the threshhold they are promptly kicked out by the quarreling pair.

This rude treatment so angers the tramps that they decide on a plan to get even and procure a square meal, too; accordingly they write an anonymous letter to Mr. Weston telling him of his wife's infatuation for a portrait artist, in whose studio she can be found at twelve o'clock. Mrs. Weston also receives an anonymous letter stating that her husband has an appointment in a dressmaker's establishment at the same hour.

The green-eyed monster is so firmly embedded in this loving couple that they take this bait beautifully and are promptly on hand at the places indicated in the letters, with the result that the misinformed couple become entangled in some unexpected complications, making them ridiculous and highly amusing to the spectator. Thoroughly disgusted, but still suspicious, they rush for home, where they both meet at the front door and demand to know where the other has been.

Still quarreling they enter the house, where they find the kitchen in great disorder, the refrigerator and larder having been robbed of every morsel of food, with the following note from the tramps:

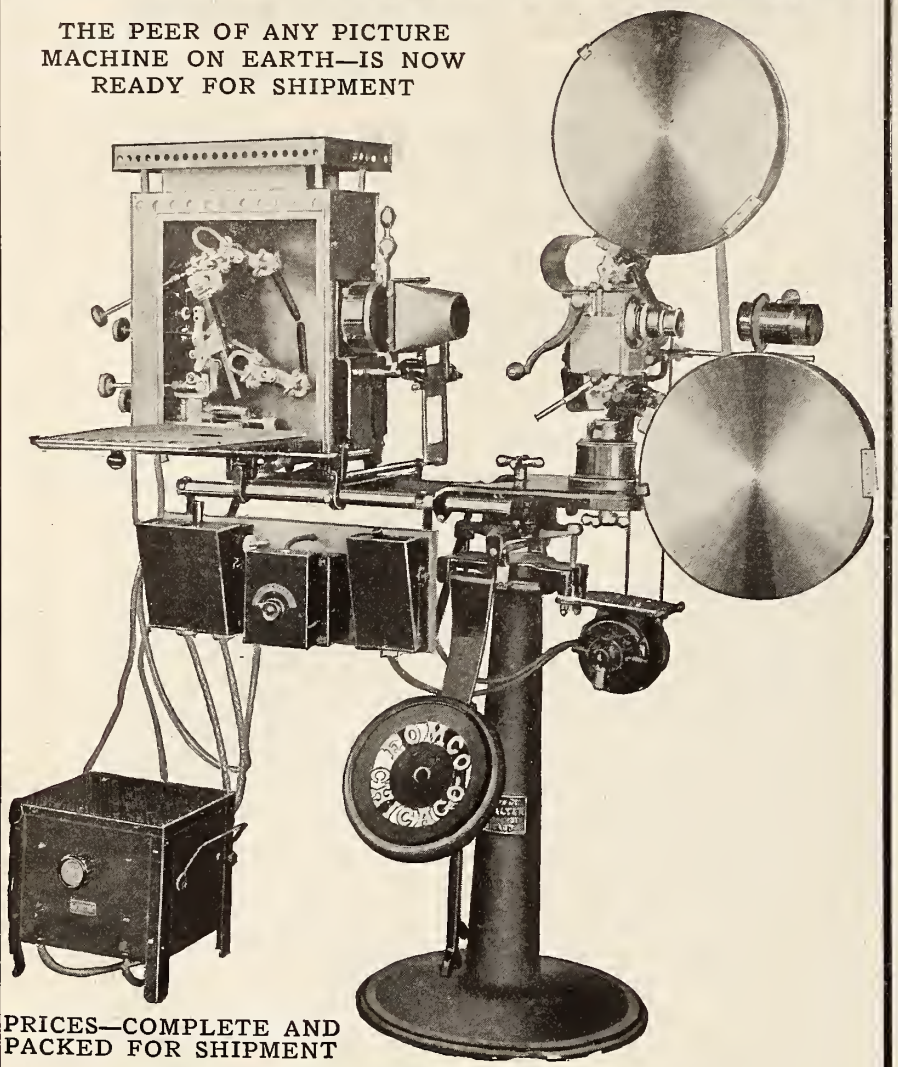
"Sorry to have caused any hard feeling between you but we needed a square meal. Kiss and make up. Weary and Pal.

"P. S.—The pie was surc bum."

They now see their folly and take the tramps' advice.

THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

THE PEER OF ANY PICTURE MACHINE ON EARTH—IS NOW READY FOR SHIPMENT



PRICES—COMPLETE AND PACKED FOR SHIPMENT

$250.00 without motor, switchboard or seat.
$285.00 with motor (any voltage), switchboard and seat.
$300.00 special Massachusetts, with motor, switchboard and seat.
THE PRICE HAS GONE UP FOR THREE REASONS:
1st: Because of the advance in Material and Labor Cost.
2nd: Because we furnish a complete metal equipment.
3rd: Because the introduction of the Motiograph is complete.

OUR GUARANTEE

FREE UPKEEP FOR ONE YEAR COVERING PARTS of the 1913 model Motiograph mechanism, THAT MAY BECOME WORN OUT IN SERVICE, or WHICH MAY SHOW DEFECT IN MATERIAL OR WORKMANSHIP, with the understanding that the part be sent to us, charges prepaid, for examination.

Manufactured by THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
564-572 W. Randolph Street CHICAGO, ILL.
For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

On the same reel:

OLYMPIC GAMES, PITTSBURGH, Y. M. C. A.—Everybody likes to see athletic games and here we witness an exhibition of them which is every bit as good as being on the grounds themselves. These games are held by the Y. M. C. A. of Pittsburgh, and are remarkable for the great number of nationalities represented among the contestants. Races, discus throwing, calisthenics, pole vaulting—all are interesting and some are sensational. The film will be a pleasure to all and should stimulate an interest in healthy sport.

AMERICAN

CALAMITY ANNE'S WARD (Sept. 30).—Calamity Anne lived a dangerous life among the bandits that infested the lower border of the Sierras. But Calamity Anne didn't care for she was a certain shot, smokes pipe or cigarette with equal ease and possessed some forty summers of experience to guide her. Calamity Anne cooked for the bandit gang and did other menial tasks befitting her station in life with phlegmatic regularity.

Over a Sierra ridge came Jim Williams and his pretty sister, with household effects carefully spread over the broad back of a mountain burro. They stopped to rest. Over another ridge rode Rogers, leader of that bandit gang. Rogers made short work of poor Jim and took the unwilling girl back with him to the camp. There was but one other woman in camp beside Mabel and that was Calamity Anne. Imagine Anne's surprise to find this pretty girl suddenly throw her arms about her neck and beg for protection. Calamity Anne dropped her clay pipe in amazement and suddenly discovered the first tears in thirty years. Thereafter she drew her gun and played guard over Mabel.

Over that same ridge came handsome Bob Harding. He examined traces of a struggle and followed them painstakingly to the bandit camp. He easily joined them and saw the pretty Mabel. Love sprang up between them at once. Rogers, watching jealously, determined to make way with Bob. Calamity Anne heard of it that night. So she stationed the pair in a nearby tent, lit her pipe and, figuratively, rested on her arms. At midnight the gang came, led by Rogers. Calamity Anne leveled two six shooters at the surprised bandits and asked Bob and Mabel to step out. This they did in something of a hurry and next moment were speeding away toward safety, Calamity Anne holding a somewhat painful poise and fully determined that death should follow the first movement of any of the men. They all laughed finally and went away, whereat Calamity Anne sat herself down and had the second luxurious cry in thirty years.

THE RENEGADE (Oct. 2).—When Lew Sommers deserted his pretty wife he proved that he wasn't right. The kindness shown him by the country sheriff, who gave him aid when he was injured by a fall from his horse, was rewarded by his trying to make love to the sheriff's sweetheart, again proved he wasn't right. The appearance of his wife on the scene put him in a very embarrassing position and he concluded to again pull stakes, but not without purloining some properties not his own. This proved his undoing, and he soon found the strong arm of the law out after him.

Just how the sheriff came to be suspected of crime and his vindication, makes this picture the more interesting. A story with a good plot, well acted and excellent settings throughout.

FATHER'S FAVORITE (Oct. 3).—"Idleness is the root of all evil." Never a truer word was uttered, and in this photo-play the veracity of this old maxim is brought home with telling effect.

John Allen was a prosperous ranchman, but was of the idea that his oldest son, Tim, was especially built for work and that John, Jr., his youngest son, was better adapted to play the part of a "gentleman." John, Jr., was not slow to take advantage of conditions, but little did he appreciate that he was playing the culprit and that his brother, although he had but few of the pleasures of life, was possessed of a much nobler character. When John, Jr., fell into evil ways and was in a fair way to spend a term at the workhouse it was Tim who spared his father from what would have been a bitter disappointment and paid his brother's penalty, and when his sentence had been expiated he again bore the burden of responsibility for his brother's weakness, for which he was cast from his home by the unjust mandate of an irate father.

This subject teems with interest and even the most fastidious will not fail to appreciate it.

COMET

THE WORTH-WHILE WEDDING (Sept. 30).—At the opening of this interesting and rather unique photo-play everybody is discussing the approaching nuptials of Sarah While and Jimmy Worth. They are a typical rural pair and have been keeping company for some time. Both prospective bridegroom and bride have planned to make the marriage a real event. Sarah is attired like a veritable "queen," while Jimmy wears a highly polished high hat, a chrysanthemum in his buttonhole, patent leather shoes, gloves, cane, a nicely laundered shirt and an air of hope and happiness. It is some distance from his home to the church, so Jimmy elects to make a short cut so as to be on time for the ceremony to proceed.

There is a saying that man proposes and God disposes. Now at this crisis of the tale Jimmy has the misfortune to meet a band of unfeeling tramps. It has been some time since they have seen anybody togged up in the fashion presented by Jimmy and naturally they immediately become possessed of an insatiable desire to get Jimmy's clothes. They pounce on him and after they finish their cruel design all that is left are his underclothes and a frown. What shall he do? That seems to be the most perplexing question. He must get to the church and marry Sarah or perhaps lose her forever. So he finds a barrel, steps into it and hies himself to the church, where he almost paralyzes the guests, who laugh and yell as Jimmy enters. Sarah has a fright, a half faint and a semi-collapse. But she recovers and musters up sufficient strength to insist that the minister marry her to Jimmy then and there. The interrupted ceremony then goes on and the pair are made man and wife. On the way home the tramps are found and punished.

THE MYSTERY OF MULE RANCH (Oct. 5).—From the moment this engrossing and sensational story opens until the tale is told there is not a dull period. It is a photo-play replete with thrilling and exciting incidents and demonstrates to a nicety that honesty is the best policy after all. Just because Nona Brandon, the pretty daughter of James Brandon, a wealthy ranch owner and mule owner, elects to accept the attentions of Harry Gordon, Mr. Brandon's tried and trusted confidential man, Steve Matteson, foreman of the ranch, displays unwonted emnity toward him. Matteson is bent on doing Harry irreparable harm and his opportunity arrives when he secures, through an accident, the combination to the safe where Mr. Bandon had placed a large sum of money. Gordon has been entrusted with this money and it is to be used to defray the expenses of a large shipment of mules. One morning while Harry and Nona are out driving, Steve robs the safe. He has an accomplice in Miquel, a half-breed, and the two make off with the spoils. On the way they quarrel over who is to get the lion's share. Steve strikes Miquel over the head with the butt of his revolver and leaves his accomplice for dead. Taking the entire proceeds of the robbery Steve mounts his horse and rides off. In the meantime the theft has been discovered and Harry is accused, although insisting upon his innocence. He is thrust into jail. When Miquel regains consciousness and realizes Steve's perfidy he goes forthwith to Mr. Brandon and confides to him the true account of the robbery. The sheriff then starts in pursuit of Steve, who is wending his way through the dense woods. There is an exchange of shots and Matteson is swept from his horse by a limb of a tree and killed. The sheriff restores the money and Harry is promptly vindicated. There is only one thing left for Mr. Brandon to do, and that is to apologize to the young man. He does this and more, too. He insists that he marry Nona and, what is more, he makes him a full partner in the ranch.

CINES—George Kleine

HOW A BRAVE MAN DIED (Oct. 1).—His fearless spirit undaunted by many adversities, Murat, a former dashing leader of Napoleon's cavalry, and later King of Naples, lands with his followers at Calabria, in southern Italy, in an attempt to regain his kingdom.

Although anticipating a rousing welcome by the people, Murat's expedition proves a complete fiasco. He and his friends are fiercely attacked by the coast guards, overwhelmed by force of numbers and put to rout. Most of his followers escape in their ships but Murat is captured and imprisoned in the castle of Pizzo, where he is subjected to all sorts of indignities.

After a mock trial he is condemned to death and is allowed only a half hour for religious consolation.

At the appointed time the brave man is led out and forced to face a file of soldiers with leveled muskets. "Aim at my heart!" are his last words.

THE ISLAND OF MALTA.—Lying fifty miles directly south of Sicily, Malta is an important possession of the British Empire, especially as a naval base. The film shows the town of Valetta, its splendid harbor, the great underground storehouses for grain, the Governor's palace and many other interesting sights of the city.

ECLIPSE—George Kleine

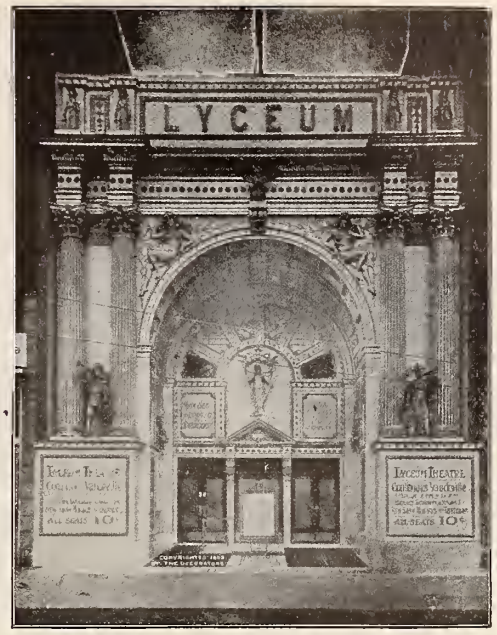
A FOE TO RACE SUICIDE (Oct. 2).—Percy is a reckless youth, leading a gay and extravagant life, much to the disgust of his wealthy father. He returns home one night in a rather doubtful condition and is met by his parent who, after some angry words, turns him out.

Percy leaves the house very much depressed and attempts to end his life by jumping into the river, but is rescued by a girl, to whom he immediately proposes matrimony and is married.

Ten years later the old father still mourns for his lost son. One day he receives a letter which, after praising his many charitable deeds, requests his assistance for a young couple who are overburdened with the care of ten children.

He hurries off to investigate and, to his amazement, finds his own son surrounded by a crowd of noisy youngsters. The old man is satisfied that Percy has "paid the penalty" for his past shortcomings and determines to let bygones be bygones.

A TRIP THROUGH BELGIUM.—This small but densely populated country offers an endless number of interesting sights for tourists. We are shown scenes in the cities of Brussels, Bruges, Liege and Ostend and a remarkable exhibition of shrimp fishing on horseback.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

LUBIN

THE AMATEUR ICEMAN (Oct. 2).—James Westcott and John Baxter are two business acquaintances. Baxter has a daughter, Betty, whose indolent habits are a source of displeasure. One day, after he has remonstrated with her, she dresses herself as a maid and determines to demonstrate that she can be useful. Westcott has a son, Roy, who is busily engaged in sowing wild oats. Westcott's patience finally becomes exhausted, and he demands that Roy shall go to work to learn his father's business and, furthermore, that he shall begin at the bottom by driving one of the ice wagons. Roy consents, and with the determination to make good. Among the houses where Roy delivers ice is Baxter's. He sees Betty, in her rôle of maid in the kitchen, falls in love with her, and determines to win her. That night he calls on her, in his character of iceman. The young people soon forget their respective masquerades in their talk and manner and become lovers. The romance progresses until one hot day when Baxter meets Westcott and invites him to his front porch to have a cool drink. Betty, in her rôle of maid, goes to prepare it. Finding the icebox empty she steps out on the rear porch to see if the iceman is coming. Roy appears with a great cake of ice and the young people stop to chat. They soon become engrossed. The cake of ice slowly dwindles away under the hot sun, while Baxter and Westcott swelter and fume on the front porch. The delay finally becomes unbearable and Baxter decides to investigate. He reaches the rear porch just as Roy is about to kiss Betty. He orders Betty into the house, and turns on Roy and indignantly orders him off. Baxter rejoins Westcott on the porch, where they discuss the impudent iceman, while Ellen, the cook, serves them a warm drink containing the little piece of ice Roy has left. Roy cannot understand Baxter's action. Thoroughly angry, he determines to go back and get Betty and elope with her. He finds her in the kitchen, and after some hesitation she consents to go. Just as they are leaving Ellen enters the kitchen and, horrified at the turn of affairs, hurries out and tells Baxter and Westcott that the iceman has stolen Betty, and the three set out in pursuit. Hard pressed, Roy places Betty in the ice wagon and drives off. The pursuers are being distanced when the help of a passing automobile enables them to overtake the fugitives. Betty sits on the back step of the wagon and weeps while Baxter heaps abuse on Roy. Westcott discovers the identity of the iceman and, taking exception to Baxter's language, indignantly asks if his son is not good enough for Baxter's maid. Baxter reports that Betty is his daughter. Baxter and Westcott are not adverse to such an alliance. They see the humor of the situation and everyone is satisfied.

THE PHYSICIAN OF SILVER GULCH (Oct. 3).—Dr. Ralph Jones settled in Silver Basin, a mining town, and huilt up a practice. Everything went well until his practice fell off badly. His accounts accumulated and hills were hard to collect. One day Royce, the sheriff, called Jones to attend his child; that same day he received a message to guard the payroll of gold for the Bonnie Claire Mining Company until the morning stage picked it up. Royce goes to attend to his duty, and Jones returned to his office. He finds himself short of cash and the necessities of life. Thinking of the large shipment of gold, he is seized with a desire to steal it and yields to the temptation. He steals in through the hank window and tries to open the door of the room where the gold is temporarily stored, only to find his hand seized from the other side. Not knowing who was in the other room he endeavors to pull his hand out of the hole in the door, hut in vain, as the sheriff has it tied to the door latch. While tying the hand the sheriff receives a 'phone call from his wife telling him to hurry with the doctor as the haby is very ill again. With a supreme effort Jones manages to release his hand, hut not in time to escape a shot fired hy the sheriff. Jones escapes and the sheriff endeavors to follow the robher, hut finds that the outer crosshar has been securely fastened. He finally manages to release it, hut too late to see or catch his man. A posse is organized and start on the hunt. Royce rushes to the doctor's house. Jones is tempted to run away, hut decides to hrave it out. Quickly covering bis wounded hand with a glove he opens the door. The sheriff rushes in and Jones is summoned to attend the child. The men go together and soon reach the house. After patient watching the child passes the critical point and gains a new lease of life. The physician has done his work. In an effort to thank him the little mother grasps the wounded hand, the sheriff hears the cry of pain and learns that a guilty man stands before him. The doctor admits his guilt, but the wife pleads with her hushand not to arrest him. Considering that he saved the life of his child, he permits him to go, to hegin a new life elsewhere.

ESSANAY

GHOSTS (Oct. 1).—Colonel De Valpeau, an aged French gentleman, lives alone with his faithful negro servant, Zeno, in the wonderful mansion that has passed through generation after generation. Being pressed for ready funds, the Colonel is refused a loan on the hereditary estate, and is threatened with eviction. Zeno now decides upon a plan wherehy his master may remain in the great house without his presence heing discovered, and shows the Colonel a sliding panel in the dining room wall that leads to a small garret inside. The Dixons, wealthy social climhers, now purchase the place, but firmly helieve it is haunted when they find the tahle has heen used for mysterious company during the night and catch sight of the sliding panel shutting hehind old Zeno as he goes to his master. Therefore, they leave in a fright and refuse to purchase the place, which is now bought hy Dr. Trueman, a rich physician. One evening, as the doctor and his friends are chatting, they catch Zeno coming through the panel and force him to disclose the secret. Upon learning of the Colonel's identity the doctor writes him a note saying the old estate is his as long as he lives and that his presence is desired that evening. Finding the old-fashioned costume of one of his French ancestors in a trunk, the Colonel dons it and is presented to the gentlemen in the great dining room. However, the strain of proposing a toast to his king is too much for the aged man, and he dies, while the faithful Zeno sobs out his grief across the wasted body.

WELL MATCHED (Oct. 2).—Tom West and "Cutey" Gray, old sweethearts who have not seen each other for five years, have grown enormously stout. So they write each other letters saying they despise fleshy people and prevaricate charmingly about their real weights, then arrange to come on to the city and meet each other. Naturally the first thought each has is to find some method of reducing flesh, and both see Dr. Thin's advertisement in the paper, telling of his wonderful methods of reducing, etc. So each, unknown to the other, starts in training at the ohesity "cure." Without discovering identities they find a way to slip written notes back and forth under the partition that separates the two departments, exchanging compliments and confessing why they have to reduce. This is kept up at some length and the complications are highly amusing, as they tell each other their real weights and laugh at "tbemselves" in general without once knowing it. Finally they discover they are heavier than when they started, and agree to quit and go out and have lunch together. Of course it is not until they are taking leave of Dr. Thin that they come face to face and recognize each other. Mutual explanations are forthcoming and, deciding they like fat people hest, they make haste to the nearest caharet restaurant and enjoy a good square meal to the tantalizing strains of catchy music.

A Big Two Reel Sensation
Sir Walter Scott's "GUY MANNERING"
Released Wed., Oct. 9. A sparkling good story of Scotch Smugglers, Gypsies, and a Lost Heir.

RELIANCE

Photoplays "Hold the Mirror up to Nature." Make a note of our Advance Releases: "Bedelia and Her Neighbors," Wed., Sept. 25. "The Cuckoo Clock," Sat., Sept. 28. "Brothers Under the Skin," Wed., Oct. 2. "Time Avenges," Sat., Oct. 5. "Guy Mannering" (Two Reels), Wed., Oct. 9. "The Peddler's Find," Sat, Oct. 12.

SOLAX

CANNED HARMONY (Oct. 9).—Evelyn hrings Jack, her sweetheart, to her father's studio and introduces Jack to the musical professor. The professor, long having cherished the plan to unite his daughter with a celehrated musician, dissents to the match. Although the father ohjects tbe pair meet clandestinely and have considerahle trouhle in keeping out of the old man's reach. One day the father finds them together and he makes it plain in a forcible way that Jack is not wanted around the house.

Jack goes home in a rather surly mood. He enters his room and finds his roommate, Dick, playing on his violin imitating a phonograph. He takes his roommate into his confidence and Dick then proposes a plan. He urges Jack to disguise himself as Signor Tremelo and as that famous musician pay his respects to the girl's father. At the same time they will take a phonograph to Evelyn's home and when the Signor hegins to give a private concert on his violin, she sets off the phonograph. Evelyn approves of the plan. With the aid of a friendly newspaper man the plan works out heautifully. When the Signor offers his hand the old professor gives his consent. He finds out the joke only after everything is over with.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY (Oct. 11).—This is a satiric comedy dealing with the pretensions of colored folks. Sam Jones is a lahorer—a wielder of the whitewash hrush. He is in love with Lindy Williams. Having saved up quite a little money Sam huys some swell second-hand clothes and temporarily discarding his overalls goes to Lindy's home. Lindy's people are quite prosperous—her father having retired from his job as "public porter" or "scalper."

Lindy is a coquettish ebony beauty and trifles with Sam's affections. She plays Sam against Bill Johnson and finally, in despair, Sam retires from the field. Walking along the road, heaten and despondent, Sam finds a lot of money. Now, he vows, he will show them! He huys full dress clothes and other swell duds, an automohile and jewelry. Like a peacock he begins spreading himself before Lindy and his rival and, as can he expected, coquettish Lindy transfers her affections to him. Sam makes hay while the sun shines and proposes to Lindy and hasks in her smiles. After his acceptance he sends out invitations to a reception, on which occasion he plans to announce his engagement.

During the reception Bill Johnson and his pal, slick Mr. Tighe, concoct a scheme to break Sam. They invite him to a poker game and, by cleverly stacking tbe cards and passing aces under the tahle with tbeir naked toes Sam is relieved of his fortune.

When Lindy is apprised of tbis she gives Sam the cold shoulder and offers her arm to slick Mr. Tighe, the possessor of all of Sam's wealth.

The play is replete with whimsical scenes showing the negro in an environment he often aspires to hut never reaches.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 40—1912 (Sept. 30).

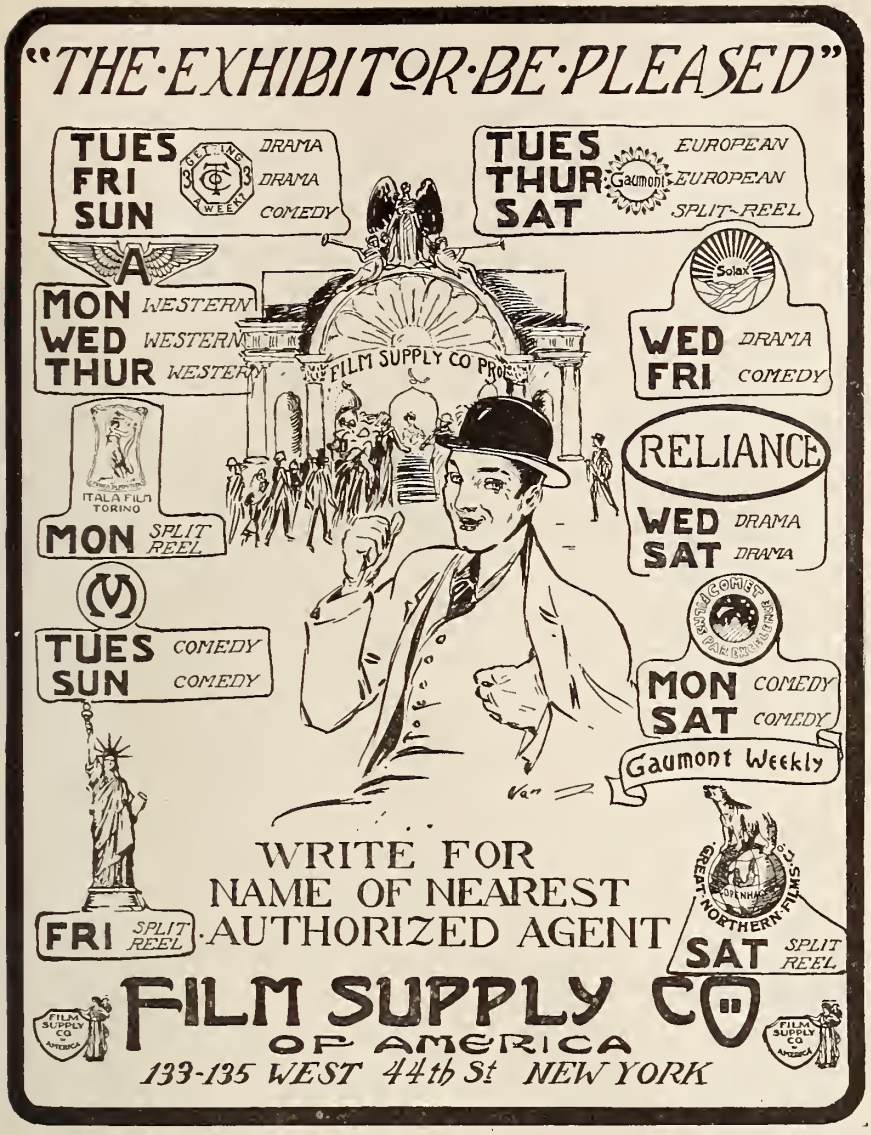
A WELL-WASHED HOUSE (Oct. 1).—Two mischievous children steal the gardener's hose, turn on the water and hegin washing a house. When the outside is clean they turn their attention to cleaning the inside, and the results prove that this mirth-provoker is a winner.

On the same reel:

THE EVOLUTION AND LIFE OF A SILK WORM.—A little worm which weaves the finest fahric known. The manner in which it does its work is clearly set forth by means of excellent photography and heautiful coloring.

AT THE BURGLAR'S COMMAND (Oct. 2).—Midnight Bill, entering a fashionahle house for the purpose of pursuing his illegitimate trade, comes upon Gwendoline Smith witb a pistol in her hand contemplating suicide because of a lover's quarrel. He forces her at the pistol point to call her lover, Philip Sawyer, on the 'phone and ask him to come to the house. He next summons a minister and acts as a witness to the ceremony. He also supplies a wedding ring from the loot he carries. When the couple embrace at his command, they forget their differences and Midnight Bill withdraws, well satisfied that he has done at least one good turn in his life.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT (Oct. 3).—With Sagamore Hill as a hackground, Theodore Roosevelt was the target for our camera during one entire day. The camera man followed him through the day's various activities, which hegan with a ride on his favorite horse, included an interview with a newspaper man, the answering of the morning mail and later, the more strenuous exercise of cbopping down a tree. This picture gives one an intimate acquaintance with a man who loves the open country, and who, although perhaps the husiest man in the land, still finds time to exercise sufficiently to keep himself in superh physical condition. When you book this film, announce that Colonel Roosevelt will positively appear, and your house will be crowded to the doors.



"THE EXHIBITOR BE PLEASED"
TUES FRI SUN DRAMA DRAMA COMEDY
TUES THUR SAT EUROPEAN EUROPEAN SPLIT-REEL
MON WED THUR WESTERN WESTERN WESTERN WED FRI DRAMA COMEDY
RELIANCE
WED SAT DRAMA DRAMA
MON SPLIT REEL
TUES SUN COMEDY COMEDY
MON SAT COMEDY COMEDY
Gaumont Weekly
FRI SPLIT REEL
SAT SPLIT REEL
WRITE FOR NAME OF NEAREST AUTHORIZED AGENT
FILM SUPPLY CO OF AMERICA
133-135 WEST 44th St NEW YORK

A SHIP BOY'S GRIT (Oct. 4).—The story of a cabinboy's pluck, acted by the star company which played the "Fire at Sea" feature film.

Little Franz Leuder, an orphan, ships on an unseaworthy schooner. While the captain and mate are in a stupor from liquor, the vessel springs a leak and the boy with his hand and arm keeps the water out all through the long night. When morning comes the captain and mate find him unconscious. Realizing the boy's bravery, they resolve to be better men and volunteer to act as the lad's protectors.

A REDMAN'S LOYALTY (Oct. 5).—Bull Moose, an Indian guide is accompanying Mrs. Hawkins and her little daughter, who are traveling west to join Dan Hawkins, over the broken trail. Crossing the Arizona desert the little party is attacked by a band of savages and forced to flee. The strain of the chase and the lack of water soon tell on Mrs. Hawkins and in the midst of the wild desert she passes away. As the Indians are crowding him, Bull Moose directs the girl to ride straight ahead. He staggers after her for a few paces and then drops exhausted in the sand. In the meantime Hawkins, uneasy when his little family fails to arrive on time, suspects Bull Moose of killing them for the gold they carried. He gathers a few friends and they start a search for the party. Hawkins finds the Indian stretched out in the sand. There is no trace of his wife and child and Hawkins is with difficulty restrained from killing the Indian. One of his friends finds the little girl riding aimlessly about and brings her to Hawkins. She explains the manner of her mother's death, and as Bull Moose breathes his last, she offers a prayer for a brave and loyal soul.

GAUMONT

THE CONVICT'S BRAND .(Oct. 1).—An officer in the army of the first Napoleon joins the enemies of the great Corsican and influences others to do the same. Napoleon is shown a picture of himself mutilated by the cuts of many knives, which insult had been done at a meeting of the conspirators at which Count Champert had presided. The latter is at once outlawed. Dodging arrest he seeks refuge in the house of a blacksmith, who recognizes in him the son of the blacksmith's former master. There he has asylum. The blacksmith's wife, a young, comely creature, happened to have been the one-time sweetheart of Maximilian, the Count, who proceeds to bring the romance up to date. The blacksmith husband, outraged at this breach of hospitality, intimidates both the wife and Maximilian with a revolver and binds the latter. The blacksmith, during his mental quest for revenge appropriate, reads about the old-fashioned custom of branding French criminals with the mark of the fleur de lys. He brands Maximilian and ejects him from the house. Maximilian is found unconscious in the street, weak from the pain of the branding. The mark is discovered on his shoulder. He is taken to prison. There he languishes for nine years, finally escaping with fellow prisoners on a raft which launches forth upon the moonlit ocean. Desperately they propel the improvised craft, pursued by the better equipped jailers. One by one the fleeing convicts are picked off by the sharpshooting guards until Maximilian is the lone survivor. He dives overboard and escapes to shore by swimming. The years have wrought change in his countenance and when he arrives in the neighborhood of the blacksmith's house the very persons who had arrested him knew him not. He is on his way to join the ruling King for whom he had plotted against Napoleon. when he perceives that the blacksmith's house is afire. Into the flames he goes to bring forth the unconscious occupant. Veritably heaping coals of fire. To the hospital where Maximilian is taken to recover from the burns attendant upon his rescue at the fire, comes the blacksmith, who was little injured. Maximilian forgives him.

MELIES

JUDGMENT OF THE SEA (Oct. 17).—Captain Dixon receiving a message from the custom office that there is a band of smugglers operating on the islands off the coast, bids his wife good-bye and goes on the assignment.

At the island wharf he inquires of an old sailor for the most quiet lodgings in the place and is led to a hut where lives an elderly man, supposedly a fisherman, and his pretty daughter Bess. The old man does not at first want to admit the stranger but the sight of handsome board money quickly changes his mind. Bess leads him to his room.

That night Dixon is still unpacking when a noise downstairs arouses his suspicions. He goes down and discovers the old man leaving the house stealthily with several rough-looking strangers. He follows them and learns that they are the smugglers for whom he was sent in quest and Bess' father the leader of them. Hurrying back to the house the Captain discovers Bess waving a red lantern in the window —the secret danger signal—for she had heard him depart and suspected his mission. She had also learned that he was married, through a photograph in his room.

Dixon attempts to remove the light, but is forced by Bess at the point of a revolver to wave it. The smuggler and Ned, Bess' lover, heed the signal and, returning, put Dixon out of the house. The latter, however, has formed a wild desire for Bess and, meeting her on the beach, attempts to force his love on her. Failing in this he sends her a note to the purport that if she does not meet him on the pier at once he will expose her father.

Bess' love for her aged father is stronger than anything else, so she sadly decides to sacrifice herself to save his life. She had not left the house long, however, when her father and Ned find Dixon's vile note. They hurry to the pier in time to frustrate the Captain's designs, but in the melee the officer falls into the sea. Earnest attempts are made to save his life, but to no avail, and when later his body is washed ashore, all proclaim the accident "The Judgment of the Sea."

FREE
Christmas Dinners
FOR 300,000
POOR PEOPLE
Will be supplied by The Salvation Army
Throughout the United States
Will you help by sending a donation, no matter how small
TO COMMANDER
MISS BOOTH

118 W. 14th St., New York City
Western States, Comm. Estill, 669 S. State St., Chicago

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

	Feet
June 28—The Actor's Test
June 28—Benares, the Sacred City
July 17—The Airman
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.)

AMERICAN

Sept. 11—Vengeance that Failed
Sept. 12—Geronimo's Last Raid (2 reels)
Sept 16—The Fear (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 18—Wun Lung's Strategy (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 19—The Foreclosure (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—White Treachery (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 25—Bad Pete's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—Calamity Anne's Ward	1000
Oct. 2—The Renegade	1000
Oct. 3—Father's Favorite	1000
Oct. 7—Jack of Diamonds	1000
Oct. 9—A Sister's Devotion	1000
Oct. 10—Reformation of Sierra Smith	1000

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept. 3—The Honor of the Tribe
Sept. 6—An Old Tune
Sept. 10—The Fugitive
Sept. 13—A Frontier Child (2 reels)
Sept. 17—The Penalty
Sept. 20—The Doctor's Double
Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line
Oct. 4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct. 11—The Sergeant's Boy

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Sept. 10—A White Indian
Sept. 17—The Ranch Man's Awakening (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Massacre of the Santa Fe Trail (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Sheriff's Reward (W. Dr.)
Sept. 28—At Old Fort Dearborn (2 reel Hist. Dr.)
Oct. 8—Indian Raiders (W. Dr.)
Oct. 12—The Tattoo (W. Dr.)

BRONCHO

Sept. 18—Sundered Ties
Sept. 25—His Better Self
Oct. 2—For the Honor of the 7th (Mil.)

CHAMPION

Sept. 2—The Maid and the Rocks
Sept. 9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.)
Sept. 16—The Dummy Director (Dr.)
Sept. 23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)
Sept. 30—Her Whole Story (Dr.)
Oct. 7—To Err is Human (Dr.)

COMET

Sept. 7—A Waif of the Mountains
Sept. 9—The Romantic Suicide
Sept. 14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune
Sept. 16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Mystery of Mule Ranch (W. Dr.)	1000
Oct. 7—'Ostler Joe (Dr.)
Oct. 12—The Moccasin Print (Western)
Oct. 14—Love Will Find a Way (Dr.)

ECLAIR

Sept. 16—Around Constantinople (Travel)
Sept. 17—My Wife's Away, Hurrah (Com.)
Sept. 19—Filial Love (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept. 22—A Frivolous Heart
Sept. 22—Through China
Sept. 24—The Word of Honor (Dr.)
Sept. 26—The Old Clock on the Stairs (Dr.)
Sept. 29—Love and Science
Oct. 1—The Old Doctor's Humanity (Dr.)
Oct. 3—The Lucky Loser (Com. Dr.)
Oct. 6—The Lock of Hair (Dr.)
Oct. 8—All on Account of a Ring (Com.)
Oct. 8—Surprising Eliza (Com.)
Oct. 10—A Choice by Accident (Com. Dr.)
Oct. 13—The White Bonnet (Dr.)
Oct. 15—The Hoodoo Letter (Com.)
Oct. 15—One on Jones (Com.)
Oct. 17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)
Oct. 20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)
Oct. 22—The Home Coming
Oct. 24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)
Oct. 27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)
Oct. 27—Brusia (Travel)

GREAT NORTHERN

	Feet
Aug. 10—Thou Shalt Not Kill (Dr.)	585
Aug. 10—When the Cat's Away (Com.)	308
Aug. 17—The Prodigal's Return (Dr.)	997
Aug. 24—For Her Sister's Sake (Dr.)	944
Aug. 31—Love is Blind (Dr.)	943
Sept. 7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.)	496
Sept. 7—The Spring Lock (Com.)	457
Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)	1000
Sept. 21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.)	989
Sept. 28—A Child of Genius (Com.)	679
Sept. 28—A Sly Servant (Com.)	314
Oct. 5—I Am Going Out for a Shave (Com.)	726
Oct. 5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)	253

GAUMONT

Sept. 17—Queen Elizabeth's Token
Sept. 19—Kings in Exile (2 Reels)
Sept. 24—The Heart of a Redman
Sept. 26—The Stolen Cub
Sept. 28—Life in Caucasia
Oct. 1—The Convict's Band
Oct. 3—Nigoto to the Rescue
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive
Oct. 8—Love's Test
Oct. 10—The Tie Eeternal
Oct. 12—The Cotton Industry
Oct. 15—Beethoven

GEM

Aug. 20—White Dove's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Aug. 27—Baby Fingers
Sept. 3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)
Sept. 10—A Turn of Fate
Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)
Oct. 1—The Convict's Return
Oct. 8—Orphans (Dr.)

CRYSTAL

Oct. 6—The Girl in the Next Room
Oct. 6—The Man from the North Pole
Oct. 13—Her Dressmaker's Bill (Com.)
Oct. 13—McQuirk the Sleuth (Com.)

IMP

Sept. 16—The Millionaire Cop (Com.-Dr.)
Sept. 19—Sweet Alice Ben Bolt (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Blind Musician (Dr.)
Sept. 21—The Exchange of Labels (Com.)
Sept. 23—Getting Mary Married (Com.)
Sept. 26—The Parson and the Moonshiner (Dr.)
Sept. 28—Lie Not to Your Wife (Com.)
Sept. 28—Curing Hubby (Com.)
Sept. 30—A Cruel Stepmother
Oct. 3—A Country Girl
Oct. 5—He Had But Fifty Cents
Oct. 5—A Day in an Infant Asylum
Oct. 7—The Wreckers (Dr.)
Oct. 10—The Bridal Room (Dr.)
Oct. 12—A Bronx Cocktail (Com.)
Oct. 12—A Bad Tangle (Com.)

ITALA

Sept. 15—A Woman's Duplicity (Dr.)
Sept. 22—Toto's Talisman (Com.)
Sept. 22—A Naughty Boy (Com.)
Sept. 29—His First Lawsuit (Com.)
Sept. 29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.)
Oct. 6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)

KEYSTONE

Sept. 23—Cohen Collects a Debt
Sept. 23—The Water Nymph
Sept. 30—Riley and Schultze
Sept. 30—The New Neighbor

LUX
By Prieur.

Aug. 23—Views of the Livran (Sc.)	239
Aug. 30—The Modern Child (Dr.)	990
Sept. 6—A Cripple's Folly (Dr.)	990
Sept. 13—Tommy's Playmate (Dr.)	980
Sept. 20—The Little Beggar Boy (Dr.)	963
Sept. 27—Only a Private (Dr.)	970
Oct. 4—The Medallion (Dr.)	983

MAJESTIC

Sept. 29—Belligerent Benjamin
Sept. 29—A Garrison Joke
Oct. 1—The Call of the Blood
Oct. 6—The Little Music Teacher
Oct. 8—The Winner and the Spoils
Oct. 13—The Simple Life
Oct. 15—All for Jim
Oct. 20—Captain Ben's Yarn
Oct. 22—Love and War

MILANO

	Feet
Sept. 14—The Wedding Gift
Sept. 21—The Two Overcoats
Sept. 21—Bonifacio in Society
Sept. 28—The Mysterious Auto
Sept. 28—Honesty Punished
Oct. 5—An Alpine Tragedy
Oct. 12—The Gypsy Spy (2 reels) (Dr.)

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Sept. 2—On the Border Line
Sept. 4—The Evidence
Sept. 6—The Girls and the Chaperon
Sept. 9—In the San Fernando Valley (Dr.)
Sept. 11—The Men Within (Dr.)
Sept. 13—Those Lovesick Cowboys
Sept. 16—The Horse Thief's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept. 18—A Western Vacation (Com.)
Sept. 20—Won by a Call (Com.)
Sept. 23—Carl Von Gordon's Family (Com.)
Sept. 25—The Criminologist (Dr.)
Sept. 27—Percy, the Bandit (W. Com.)
Sept. 30—The Old Prospector (Dr.)
Oct. 4—Hearts and Skirts
Oct. 7—Romance and Reality (Dr.)
Oct. 9—His Only Son (Dr.)
Oct. 11—Love and a Lemon (Com.)

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Sept. 13—The Supreme Power
Sept. 18—All on Account of a Widow (Com.)
Sept. 20—Fate's Way (Dr.)
Sept. 25—The Plan That Failed (Com.)
Sept. 25—Swat the Fly (Com.)
Sept. 27—Her Ambition (Dr.)
Oct. 2—Early's Awakening
Oct. 4—Two Women
Oct. 9—Good Snuff (Com.)
Oct. 11—On the Danger Line (Dr.)

RELIANCE

Sept. 11—Love Knows No Laws
Sept. 14—For Love of Her
Sept. 18—Caleb West (Dr.) (2 reels)
Sept. 21—The Redemption
Sept. 25—The Geranium
Sept. 28—The Cuckoo Clock
Oct. 2—Brothers Under the Skin
Oct. 5—Time Avenges (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 9—Guy Mannering (2 reels) (Dr.)	2000
Oct. 12—Peddler's Find (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 16—On Account of a Handkerchief (Com.)	500
Oct. 16—The Bug and the Count (Com.)	500

REPUBLIC

Aug. 5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice
Aug. 12—The Borrowing Simp
Aug. 19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.)
Aug. 26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons

REX

Sept. 12—The Squatter's Rights (Dr.)
Sept. 15—Lost, a Husband (Com.)
Sept. 19—Far-Away Fields (Dr.)
Sept. 22—The Conflict's End (Dr.)
Sept. 26—The Old Organist (Dr.)
Sept. 29—The Hidden Bonds (Dr.)
Oct. 3—Bob's Deception
Oct. 6—The Winnings of Silas Pegg
Oct. 10—If Dreams Came True (Dr.)
Oct. 13—When Twenty Is in Love

SOLAX

Sept. 12—Fra Diavolo (3 reels), States Rights Feature
Sept. 13—The Soul of the Violin
Sept. 25—Dublin Dan (3 reels)
Sept. 18—The Spry Spinsters
Sept. 25—For the Love of the Flag
Sept. 27—The Fugitive
Oct. 2—Si's Surprise Party
Oct. 4—The Retreat from Eden

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 3—The Voice of Conscience
Sept. 6—His Father's Son
Sept. 8—Don't Pinch My Pup
Sept. 10—A Star Reborn
Sept. 13—The Birth of the Lotus Blossom
Sept. 15—Orator, Knight and Cow Charmer
Sept. 17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation
Sept. 20—Two Souls
Sept. 29—Please Help the Pore
Oct. 1—Letters of a Lifetime
Oct. 4—The Warning

VICTOR

Sept. 13—All for Love
Sept. 20—Flo's Discipline (Com.)
Sept. 27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.)
Oct. 4—Tangled Relations
Oct. 11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.)

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE

Hot Springs, Ark., September 11.

New Theatres Almost Ready

Within the next ten days one new theatre in this city will open for business, and it will be a beauty in every respect. The New Royal, which is the old Photo Play, is about completed and this is one house that will continue to pin its faith to Independent material. The management made enough coin on Independent pictures to erect one of the best theatres in the city, and they are going to continue to feature the anti-trust product, playing up strong all the "101" ranch specials, as well as other material.

The New Lyric, which will also run three acts of the Hodkins' vaudeville, will be open by October 1, and this, like the New Royal, will be a beauty.

Rube Marquard and Alice Joyce were the prime favorites here the past week, and Kalem put over a good one when he turned that reel out. It was a winner and the New Central Theatre wasn't big enough to hold the crowd. "Rameses" will be the feature at this theatre later on, while "The Equine Spy" will demand attention at the summer theatre in Whittington Park. Feature reels are all the rage now, and the people wait for them like directors of the Standard Oil await dividends.

Just a Few Reviews

We have had quite a number of good pictures here the past week and a few that were as inconsistent as an old maid at some other woman's wedding. For instance, there was "Willey," who passed the custom officials and came over in the steerage from the Great Northern factory. What excuse Willey had to breath the pure fresh air of Ellis Island we haven't as yet determined, but if some kind-hearted official of Uncle Sam will rope Willey and "hog tie" him, as we say here in the West, we will sure be some tickled.

Now, "Phillip Steele," the two-reel special by the Majestic Company, wasn't so bad, although the skull gave the fair ones a little shock, for Phillip handled it as if it was the most ordinary thing in the world. I would suggest, however, that the charming little leading lady of the Majestic Company, who, according to "The Lady in the Baths," is the most winsome of all the feminine stars in the "movies," learn to ride.

The Lyceum played up the past week "The Vultures and the Doves," and having just written thousands of words for several New York papers when Sam Schepps was captured in this city, the detective element in the film demanded close attention. The story, to begin with, was a good one and the audience enjoyed it very much. The "willin" was handsome and clever, and there's very few have anything on Julia when it comes to awakening the "sob sisters" when she is before the camera.

Essanay and Others

When Essanay announced its "Magic Wand" and we saw one-sheets of a little tot holding a "dope stick," we came to the conclusion that the fairies were going to dance and sing. The picture was well received by the ladies, but what kind of all night establishments do they have in Chicago, anyway? Remember, she came home late at night after the show—and all those sub-titles were poetically perfect—yet when the manager, leading man and the other "gent" trailed her to her shack, it didn't take the latter long to find a store open, past midnight now, where he obtained chicken and other delicacies of the vegetable and dessert field. It could have rained stage money with the same good effect.

"The Martyrs" was the Cinese hit of the week, and they followed it by "The Inventive Genius." The press agent of the New Central noted in the announcement that this was a story where a vampire was mixed up in the case, so he penned this realistic announcement:

"This Jane just naturally 'vamps' rings around the Kipling vampire, for the New Central's exhibit to-day is 'The Female of the Species' and has it on Mrs. Kipling right from the draw."

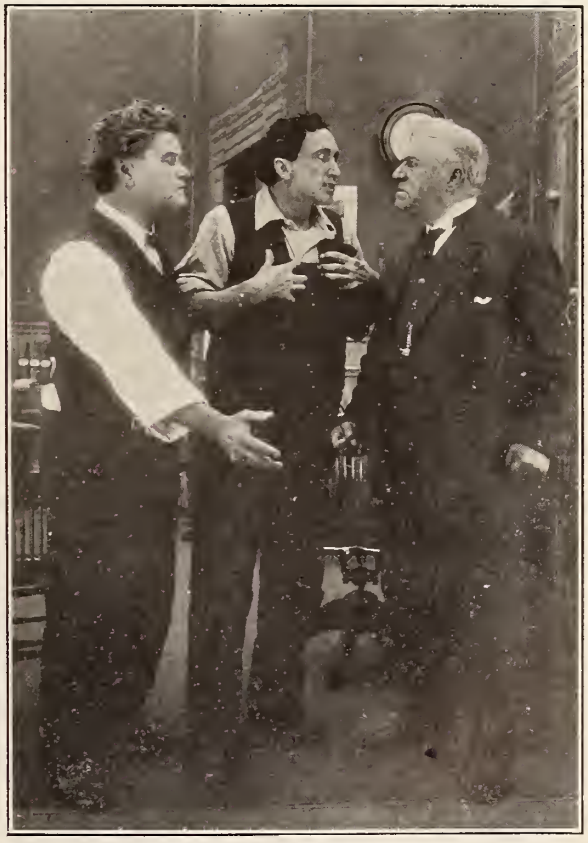
When you want a real breeze we guarantee to hand it out, whether from the mountains or the world of letters.

Thanhouser sent us "As Others See Us" and it was most refreshingly novel. The crowd in the big summer theatre in the Park enjoyed it, but the title in their waxwork picture fooled us. We expected the Paris exhibition to be duplicated, you see. Gaumont's Animated Weekly, with Governor Wilson and other features, as well as the Pathe weekly with the same array of distinguished gentlemen, were one grand hit, and all of us took a good squint at the next president of the United States. Biograph's reel, "The Dress Suit," was funny for the Lyceum patrons, especially the finish, but Lubin rather went too far in his "House Cleaning" story. All the juice would have been gone out of that battery.

Essanay has sent us a good many pictures, some of which were good and others with numerous faults, but for genuine interest—the kind that makes one rise in their seat and render the tribute of applause—I want to mention "The Moonlit Trail," which was at the Lyceum this week. That was a "humminger!" We have seen reckless and daring riding from those of mature years, but when the "kiddie" got busy, bridled her own horse and went like the wind, and the baby put the "lid" on the fifty thousand dollars—gee wiz, how they yelled. But, Essanay, why in the name of consistency, after making such a fine picture of great interest and many thrills, did you gown the poor sick mother in a magnificent nightgown, when she was an ordinary woman of the West in humble circumstances? Also, if you please, good lady, why was it necessary for the hair to hang over the left shoulder? Is it absolutely imperative for sick ladies of unquestioned talent and virtue to always remain in the alfalfa with their hair, curls or braids drooping over the shoulder? In real life they look "frowsy," and moving pictures should be consistent, even if beauty is sacrificed.

Biograph sent a "Grouch to the Seashore" and we got his number here, which was good enough to coax a few laughs, while their "Dumb Luck" was featured with lots of action and good comedy. Vitagraph fought "Two Battles" for us and the fair one had another opportunity to admire the gallant Maurice Costello. Just between us, Mr. Costello, you have quite a following among the maids and matrons fair of this bustling resort, and your smiling countenance is a guarantee of increased box-office receipts.

THE MAN IN THE BATHS.



BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN
Reliance Release, October 2

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

	Feet
Aug. 29—A Pueblo Legend
Sept. 2—In the North Woods (Dr.)
Sept. 5—Getting Rid of Trouble (Com.)
Sept. 5—He Must Have a Wife (Com.)
Sept. 9—An Unseen Enemy (Dr.)
Sept. 12—Blind Love (Dr.)
Sept. 16—Stern Papa (Com.)
Sept. 16—Love's Messenger (Com.)
Sept. 19—Two Daughters of Eve (Dr.)
Sept. 23—Friends (Dr.)
Sept. 26—A Disappointed Mamma (Com.)
Sept. 26—A Mixed Affair (Com.)
Sept. 30—So Near Yet So Far (Dr.)
Oct. 3—A Feud in the Kentucky Hills (Dr.)

CINES

C. Kleine

	Feet
Sept. 21—Betrayed for Love (Hist.-Dr.)	1000
Sept. 24—Castrovillari, So., Italy (Sc.)	335
Sept. 24—A Cavalier's Romance (Dr.)	665
Sept. 28—Quaint Sights in Sardinia (Sc.)	205
Sept. 28—Reuben and the Boys (Com.)
Oct. 1—The Island of Malta (Sc.)	460
Oct. 1—How a Brave Man Died (Hist. Dr.)	540
Oct. 5—Laino, Southern Italy (Sc.)	300
Oct. 5—Trifle Not With Love (Com.)	700
Oct. 8—A Glimpse of Sicily (Sc.)	250
Oct. 8—Artistic Glass Work (Indust.)	300
Oct. 8—The Wonder Powders (Com.)	450
Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 15—The Adventure of the Scarecrow (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 19—Among the Mountains of Calabria (Scenic)	400
Oct. 19—An Abbreviated Honeymoon (Com.)	600
Oct. 22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.)	250
Oct. 22—The Invited Guest (Com.)	750
Oct. 26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.)	1005
Oct. 29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.)	400
Oct. 29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.)	450
Oct. 29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.)	150

EDISON

	Feet
Aug. 21—Mr. Pickwick's Predicament (Com.)	1000
Aug. 23—The Cub Reporter (Dr.)	1000
Aug. 24—The War on the Mosquito (Edu.)	1000
Aug. 27—Alone in New York (Dr.)	1000
Aug. 28—Helping John (Com. Dr.)	1000
Aug. 30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.)	1000
Aug. 31—Simla (Sc.)	1000
Sept. 3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.)	1000
Sept. 4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.)	1000
Sept. 6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)	1000
Sept. 7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912	400
Sept. 10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.)	1000
Sept. 11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.)	1000
Sept. 13—The Dam Builder (Dr.)	100
Sept. 14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies	1000
Sept. 23—Benares and Agra, India (Sc.)	350
Sept. 23—How Bobby Joined the Circus (Com.)	650
Sept. 24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.)	1000
Sept. 27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.)	300
Oct. 2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.)	700
Oct. 4—Cashmere (Sc.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 7—A Curable Disease (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 8—Under False Colors (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.)	1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.)	1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)	1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)	350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.)	650

ESSANAY FILM CO.

	Feet
Aug. 22—A Corner in Whiskers (Com.)
Aug. 23—Her Adopted Father (Dr.)
Aug. 24—Broncho Billy's Escapade (Dr.)
Aug. 27—Alkali Ike Plays the Devil (W. Com.)	1000
Aug. 29—Three to One (Com.)	1000
Aug. 30—The Hermit (Com.-Dr.)	1000
Aug. 31—Broncho Billy for Sheriff (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 5—The Wildman (Com.)	1000
Sept. 6—Twilight (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.)
Sept. 10—A Woman of Arizona (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 12—The Listener's Lesson (Com.)	1000
Sept. 13—Billy McGrath's Love Letters (Com.)	1000
Sept. 14—Broncho Billy Outwitted (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 17—Neptune's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept. 19—The Mixed Sample Trunks (Com.)
Sept. 20—The Love Test (Com.)
Sept. 21—"Alkali" Ike's Pants (Com.)
Sept. 24—Across the Broad Pacific
Sept. 25—The Adventure of the Button (Com. Dr.)
Sept. 26—A Little Louder, Please (Com.)
Sept. 27—The Voice of Conscience (Dr.)
Sept. 28—An Indian Sunbeam (Dr.)
Oct. 1—Ghosts (Dr.)
Oct. 2—Well Matched (Com.)
Oct. 3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)

LUBIN

	Feet
Sept. 9—The Halfbreed's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Sept. 11—A Redhot Courtship (Com.)
Sept. 12—Betty and the Roses (Dr.)
Sept. 13—Never Again (Com.)
Sept. 13—Buster and the Pirates
Sept. 14—A Trustee of the Law
Sept. 16—The Sleeper
Sept. 18—When Father Had His Way
Sept. 20—Turpentine Industry
Sept. 20—No Trespasssing
Sept. 21—His Pair of Pants
Sept. 23—A Gay Time in Quebec
Sept. 25—The Renegades
Sept. 26—Swimming and Life Saving
Sept. 26—Buster and the Gypsies
Sept. 27—Glued
Sept. 27—The Water Wagon
Sept. 28—The Doctor's Debt
Sept. 30—A Girl's Bravery (Dr.)
Oct. 2—The Amateur Iceman High Class (Com.)
Oct. 3—The Physician of Silver Gulch (Dr.)
Oct. 4—Collection Day (Com.)
Oct. 4—Spoony Sam (Com.)
Oct. 5—His Life (Dr.)
Oct. 7—The Last Rose of Summer	1062
Oct. 8—The Moonshiner's Daughter
Oct. 10—The Players

G. MELIES

	Feet
Aug. 15—Romance at Catalina
Aug. 22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)	1000
Aug. 29—His Partner's Share (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 5—The Obsession (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.)
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West
Oct. 10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 24—A Son's Example (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.)	1000

PATHE FRERES

	Feet
Sept. 6—Whiffles and the Magic Wand (Com.); and The Bud, the Leaf and the Flower (Sci.)
Sept. 7—Gee! My Pants! (Com.)
Sept. 9—Pathe's Weekly No. 37
Sept. 9—The Blighted Son (Dr.)
Sept. 10—Love's Progress (Dr. Com.)
Sept. 10—A Little Journey in Tunis (Custom)
Sept. 11—Black Beauty (Dr.)
Sept. 12—Anguished Hours (Dr.)
Sept. 13—Ford Her Lord (Dr.)
Sept. 13—The Late Harriet Quimby's Flight Across the English Channel
Sept. 14—Saved at the Altar (Dr.)
Sept. 16—Pathe's Weekly No. 38
Sept. 17—The Elopement (Com.)
Sept. 17—Gerone—the Venice of Spain (Tr.)
Sept. 18—The Bandit's Spur (W. Dr.)
Sept. 19—The Desperado (W. Dr.)
Sept. 20—Max's Tragedy (Com.)
Sept. 20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept. 21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.)
Sept. 23—Pathe's Weekly, No. 39
Sept. 25—Pals (Dr.)
Sept. 26—Glacier National Park (Sc.)
Sept. 26—The Andrew
Sept. 28—The Filibuster's Ship (Dr.)
Sept. 30—Pathe's Weekly, No. 40
Sept. 30—The Man Hunt (Dr.)
Oct. 1—A Well-Washed House
Oct. 1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.)
Oct. 2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct. 3—Theodore Roosevelt
Oct. 3—Experiments with Liquid Air
Oct. 4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.)
Oct. 5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.)
Oct. 7—Pathe's Weekly No. 41
Oct. 8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.)
Oct. 8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)
Oct. 9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.)
Oct. 10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.)
Oct. 11—His Country Before All (Dr.)
Oct. 12—Naughty Marietta (Com.)

KALEM CO.

	Feet
Sept. 13—The Street Singer (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 14—A Railroad Lochinvar (Com.-Dr.)	1000
Sept. 16—The Parasite (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 18—In Peril of Their Lives (Dr.)
Sept. 20—Chips of the Old Block (Com.)
Sept. 20—Tilley's Bird Farm (Edu.)
Sept. 21—The Grit of the Girl Telegrapher (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—Fat Bill's Wooing (Com.)
Sept. 23—Roost, the Kidder (Com.)
Sept. 25—Queen of the Kitchen (Com.)
Sept. 25—Along the River Nile (Sc.)
Sept. 27—The Heart of John Grimm (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 28—The Apache Renegade (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 30—The Poacher's Pardon (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 2—A Hospital Hoax (Com.)
Oct. 2—Ancient Temples of Egypt (Sc.)
Oct. 4—The Village Vixen (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Confederate Ironclad (Dr.)	1000

SELIG

	Feet
Sept. 6—Circumstantial Evidence (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 9—The House of His Master (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 10—The Fighting Instinct (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 12—The Indelible Stain (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 13—The Trade Gun Bullet (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 16—The Substitute Model (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 17—The Brand Blotter (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 19—Into the Genuine (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 20—Life and Customs of the Winnebago Indians (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 23—A Detective's Strategy (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 24—The Cattle Rustlers (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 25—Partners (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 26—The Pity of It (Dr.)	1000
Sept. 27—The Borrowed Umbrella (Com.)
Sept. 27—Harvesting Alfalfa in New Mexico (Ind.)
Sept. 30—Bread Upon the Waters (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 1—Why Jim Reformed (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 2—The Pirate's Daughter (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 3—The Great Drought (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 4—An Assisted Elopement (Com.)	1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

	Feet
Sept. 11—Glimpses of St. Petersburg (Sc.)	360
Sept. 11—And Chemical Action (Ed.)	180
Sept. 11—And Winter Sports in Moritz (Topical)	485
Sept. 18—New Plymouth (Scenic); and A Country Holiday (Com.)	980
Sept. 25—The Sacrifice (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel)	500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.)	500
Oct. 9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)	300
Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)	700
Oct. 16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)	995
Oct. 16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic)	300
Oct. 23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)	400
Oct. 23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)	300
Oct. 30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)	975

VITAGRAPH

	Feet
Aug. 21—The Ancient Bow	1000
Aug. 23—Saving an Audience	1000
Aug. 24—On Board Kaiser Wilhelm II	388
Aug. 24—The Party Dress	614
Aug. 27—Flirt or Heroine	1000
Aug. 28—Two Cinders	555
Aug. 28—Bumps	477
Aug. 30—Written in the Sand	1000
Aug. 31—The Bond of Music	1000
Aug. 26—A Double Danger
Sept. 2—Tommy's Sister
Sept. 3—Coronets and Hearts
Sept. 4—Capt. Barnacle's Legacy
Sept. 6—Bunny's Suicide
Sept. 6—She Wanted a Boarder
Sept. 7—A Wasted Sacrifice
Sept. 9—Patio Days
Sept. 10—The Higher Mercy
Sept. 11—The Hindoo Curse
Sept. 13—The Loyalty of Sylvia
Sept. 14—Popular Betty
Sept. 14—Fortunes in a Teacup
Sept. 16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif
Sept. 17—The Troubled Trail
Sept. 18—A Vitagraph Romance
Sept. 20—The Indian Mutiny
Sept. 21—Adventure of the Italian Model
Sept. 23—Bobby's Father
Sept. 24—His Lordship, the Valet
Sept. 25—Bill Wilson's Gal
Sept. 26—The Signal Fires
Sept. 27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville
Sept. 28—Irony of Fate
Sept. 30—Her Choice
Sept. 20—Burning of a Match Factory (Top.)	500
Oct. 1—Adventures of the Smelling Salts (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 2—Bachelors' Buttons (Com.)
Oct. 2—Diana's Legacy (Com.)
Oct. 3—She Cried (Com.)	1000
Oct. 4—Her Spoiled Boy (Dr.)	1000
Oct. 5—The Red Barrier (Dr.)	1000

SPLENDID RESULTS OBTAINED BY CAMERA MAN ON "BULL MOOSE" FILMS

The camera man of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company is reported as "pluggin' away to beat the band" on the Bull Moose films; and 'tis said that the most splendid results have been obtained through his strict attention to business. There is not an available moment during all the private social and political proceedings of the Roosevelt campaign party that has seen him absent from his post, and those who have had the privilege of seeing the first instalment of films are most enthusiastic in their praises of them. They are said to be not only clear and distinct as regards photography but also contain the most interesting and important incidents along the trip.

Mr. Spanuth is also releasing on October 1st, a wonderful dramatic feature film, produced by the Vitascope Company of Berlin, entitled "The Black Cat, or, In a Woman's Grip," in which the principal role is a beautiful Apache girl, who comes between a young physician and his fiancé. This will be followed by "The Fatal Shot" from the same company.

White Plains, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1912.

Mr. A. H. Saunders,
Editor of Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth St., New York City.

Dear Sir:

At this time words seem to fail me to express my appreciation to you for the noble step you have taken in behalf of the moving picture operators of Greater New York, who have been so wrongfully dealt with by the Executive Board of the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and C. and Local No. 35 of I. A. T. S. E. Personally in my past experience with you, and your News, I have found you to be the best friend the operators ever had. And I regret to say that they don't seem to be aware of that fact.

But I do know this much—that it will take but little time to learn the value of such an honorable man as you. I would strongly urge every operator to read the "Operators' Chat" in the Moving Picture News, so as to become more familiar with the general conditions of their craft.

I thank you in advance for all future assistance you might render in bringing about settlement in favor of all concerned.

Respectfully yours,
ROBERT GOLDBLATT,
President of the Independent Moving Picture Operators' Union of Greater New York.

Beloit, Wis.—Harry La Mont has purchased the Orpheum.

New York, N. Y.—David Goldberg will build a moving picture theatre at 11 and 13 West 116th street.

SLIDES

Thinking of slides has made us wonder if any of our readers have had occasion to see the live wire ones, made by the Niagara Slide Company, Lockport, New York. If not we would advise every reader of this paper interested in slides to get at least a sample of their product, as we know from personal knowledge that they stand in the front ranks of slide makers in this country, and further, the territory which they cover is not confined to this country alone, but they are shipping slides to every English-speaking nation on the globe.

KLEINE RELEASES

"How a Brave Man Died," for October 1st, with beautiful views of the historic and little known "Island of Malta" to complete the reel from the Cines studio; "A Foe to Race Suicide" from Eclipse, for October 2d, with "A Trip through Belgium" completing it; and another Cines, "Trifle Not With Love" for October 5th, and George Kleine presents one of the finest programs that his well-ordered agency has ever handled.

SELIG MASTERPIECE "MONTE CRISTO" TO BE RELEASED IN OCTOBER

Word has been received from the Chicago offices of the Selig Polyscope Company to the effect that their great melodramatic masterpiece in three reels, "Monte Cristo," will, in all probability, be released on October 14th.

A most complete advertising and publicity campaign is being prepared for the use of exhibitors who exhibit this excellent feature. A great deal has been said and written lately about the story and its visualization.

SENT TO JAIL FOR SMUGGLING

George B. Graff, exchange man of Philadelphia; Sidney Reddington, chief steward of the American liner New York; Burt Lainson, James Odell, Ernest Platt and James Crocker, members of the liner's crew, pleaded guilty September 23, 1912, before Judge Hough in the criminal branch of the Federal Court to conspiring to smuggle into this country two moving picture films. Graff and Reddington were sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the Blackwell's Island penitentiary, but the sailors were discharged. They have been locked up for ten days in the Tombs, and Judge Hough said they had been punished enough.

"EXCHANGE VALUE OF FARM PRODUCTS"

is the title of a speech made by U. S. Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, August 26, 1912. This speech has been issued in document form by the American Protective Tariff League as document No. 99. Send postal card request for free copy to W. F. Wakeman, Sec., 339 Broadway, New York.

SLIDES

¶ Announcement - Advertising, something that pleases the eye. Slides like you can't buy without you follow the crowd to

Niagara Slide Company
Lockport, N. Y.
Catalog Free Box N

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL

A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.

Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST

The Cleveland Leader

Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 817 & 818 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD

YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

1000 PROGRAMS PRINTED 65c

5000 $2.50—ALL SENT PREPAID
Circulars, Passes, Salary Receipts, Special Announcements, Shipping Labels, Tickets, Ballots for Voting Contests, same price. Write for samples.
THE NEW IDEA CO., Dept. G, 2925 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FOR SALE—Films $2.50 to $5 per reel. Two and three reel features $25 up. Used machines $40. New underwriters models $99. Light reducers $15 to $25. Odd slides 5c, sets $1. Model B gas outfits $25. FOR RENT—12,000 feet films, any makes, class A, $12, one shipment songs and posters free.
Will buy tents, films, machines.
H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wisconsin.

FILM PROJECTORS
FOR SALE

One new Newman & Sinclair latest model; never used; one rotary wheel perforator, in good condition. Can be seen at this office. Apply ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, 30 W. 13th St., New York.

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc., 248 WEST 35TH ST., NEW YORK.

BE UP-TO-DATE

Subscribe for the Leading Moving Picture Trade Publication
Moving Picture News

DER KINEMATOGRAPH, DUSSELDORF
The leading Organ for the Motion Picture Trade in Germany.
Special Supplement for Talking Machines, &c.
Published every Wednesday. Annual Subscription 11/- Post Free.
Advertisements (4 columns to page); 2s. 6d. per inch. Situations Wanted, 1½d. per line.
Reduced Price for a Series of Insertions.
Publisher—ED. LINTZ. Chief Editor—EMIL PERLMANN.

NORDISK FILM TIDNING
The first trade paper in Scandinavia.
Best advertising medium in North Europe.
Subscription 6 shillings.
Sample copy free upon request.
Editor, A. SEABURY, Post Box 163, Stockholm, Sweden.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.
"Das Lichtbild-Theater"
The most up-to-date and most comprehensive Journal of the Cinematograph Industry in Germany.
Editor-Proprietor: KARL NEWMANN
BERLIN SW 68 Fruchstr. Berlin O. 17.
Annual subscription abroad 12 sh. Write for specimen copy.

"La Cinematografia Italiana ed Estera"
IS ITALY'S LEADING PAPER FOR THE ANIMATED PICTURE BUSINESS,
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY.
28 Large Pages. Eight Shillings per annum.
Editor-Proprietor: Prof. GUALTIERO I. FABBRI, la, Via Cumiana, 31 (Barriera di S Paolo) (Italy)
"La Cinematografia Italiana" is the official organ of the Universal Exhibition of 1911 at Turin.

EASTMAN
motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

To Writers:
THE EDITOR

(The Journal of Information for Literary Workers) published in your interest for eighteen years, is the magazine of which Jack London said: "I may not tell a hundredth part of what I learned from THE EDITOR, but I may say that it taught me how to solve the stamp and landlord problems." It is a monthly stimulus to the production and sale of more and better manuscripts. Besides articles of concrete, practical worth by editors or by writers successful or about to be successful, each number contains in "The Literary Market" all the news of all the magazines, new and old, that pay for manuscripts.

THE EDITOR is especially helpful to the scenario writer. It publishes from time to time helpful articles by those who are successful producers of photoplays. A copy of the current number will be sent for 15 cents. The yearly subscription is one dollar.

The Editor
Box 830, Ridgewood, New Jersey.

The Art of Scenario Writing
By Wm. Lord Wright

The original work from which all schools and writers are copying ideas.
Given as a premium with the Moving Picture News.
Send $2.00 and the "News" will be sent for one year and the above will be mailed to you at once. Save School (?) Fees. All you need for $2.00.
Another offer to amateur writers:—
Send $2.00, one year's subscription to "News," and a script which will be criticised and revised by a competent authority. These two offers will save you money.

CINEMATOGRAPH PUB. CO.,
30 W. 13th Street. New York

Educate Your Patrons

It will pay you well to teach your patrons all about Moving Pictures.
The more they know about the picture players, their likes and personalities, and the more they know about the stories of the films the more frequently they will come to your theatre.
The Purpose of the Motion Picture Story Magazine is to educate people in regard to Motion Pictures and it is doing its work well.
Its increases of circulation for the month of October on orders already received is 20,000 and we expect a further equal increase for the month of November.
Why not send $1.00 for trial order of ten copies? We will take back unsold copies and refund their cost. All we ask is a trial. You will be surprised at the result.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine
26 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

GAUMONT

"PICTURES FOR MEMORY'S GALLERIES"

ON YOUR ORDER BOOK PRINT

THE CONVICT'S BRAND

IT WILL INDELIBLY IMPRESS ITS MERIT ON YOUR PATRONS' MINDS

RELEASE DATE TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1

GAUMONT GAUMONT

A revenge sinister in the days of the first Napoleon—Over precipitous prison walls to liberty nine years deferred—On the wave tossed raft, death by bullet above, death by water below—Coals of fire heaped upon the head of the archenemy saved from the flames of his burning home.

ZIGOTO TO THE RESCUE

RELEASE DATE THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3rd

Cinematographic Smiles which will rescue laughs imprisoned in the most serious countenances.

SATURDAY, OCT. 5
ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE, and HARVESTING WHEAT in the NORTHWEST

TUESDAY, OCT. 8
LOVE'S TEST

THURSDAY, OCT. 10
THE TIE ETERNAL

SATURDAY, OCT. 12
THE COTTON INDUSTRY and SPECIAL

TUESDAY, OCT. 15
BEETHOVEN

THURSDAY, OCT. 17
The LEGEND of CAGLIOSTRO

COPYRIGHT PROTECTS ALL OUR FILMS. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

GAUMONT CO., Flushing, N. Y.

FILM SUPPLY CO. OF AMERICA, sole distributors.

GAUMONT

OCT 8 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 14

OCTOBER 5
1912

PERIODICAL

PRICE
TEN
CENTS

"CAPRICES OF FORTUNE"
Eclair Release October 17th

THRILLING

CINES-KLEINE

SPECIAL!

THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE

(IN TWO REELS)

Copyright, 1912, by GEORGE KLEINE

Licensed by Motion Picture Patents Company.

A gripping story of the love, jealousy, and fiendish revenge of a lion tamer.

TWENTY LIONS IN THE TRAGEDY

See the hero, an army officer, in a desperate struggle for his life in the cage with the lions.

RELEASED OCTOBER 21st, 1912

COPYRIGHT: THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE was Copyrighted by me September 21st, 1912. It is therefore protected in the United States, its territories, dependencies, and possessions, including the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Philippine Islands, Guam, Tutuila Group-Samoa, and the Isthmian Canal Zone.

A REWARD OF FIFTY DOLLARS ($50.00) will be paid for the first bona fide information by wire, or letter, of any print of THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE not bearing my name and Copyright mark, which appears either in a Film Exchange or Theatre in the United States; informant must state where it is being shown or stored.

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS ($500.00) will be paid for the information which will lead to an injunction and confiscation of the first infringing film, and the successful prosecution of the party, or parties, in whose possession it is found; and the informant will receive one-half of the damages that may be assessed in my favor by the Courts against the infringer.

Geo. Kleine

166 North State Street, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Heavy Penalties for Infringers of Copyrights and Smugglers of Films

The "NEW YORK SUN" under date of September 11, 1912., publishes an account of the arrest by Federal officers in New York City of six men charged with smuggling two Moving Picture Films into this country.

One of the films seized was an URBAN ECLIPSE FEATURE.

After giving an account of this case of smuggling in which a number of the crew of the American liner "NEW YORK" and a representative of a Philadelphia Motion Picture concern are alleged to have been the principals, the "SUN" says:

> "This is the second charge of smuggling brought against employees of the American Liner within two years. Wm. Rind, formerly first officer on board the steamship "St. Paul," is now serving a year's sentence for smuggling."

The sequel is given in "THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS" of September 28, 1912, as follows:

> "George B. Graff, exchange man of Philadelphia; Sidney Reddington, chief steward of the American Liner "New York"; Burt Lainson, James Odell, Ernest Platt and James Crocker, members of the liner's crew, pleaded guilty September 23, 1912, before Judge Hough in the criminal branch of the Federal Court to conspiring to smuggle into this country two moving picture films. Graff and Reddington were sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the Blackwell's Island penitentiary." . . .

I am the exclusive distributor of CINES and URBAN-ECLIPSE films within the United States, its dependencies, and possessions; and Canada. I own and control American and Canadian copyrights on the URBAN-ECLIPSE and CINES product. Infringements and clandestine importations will be prosecuted to the full extent of the Law, and immediate steps will be taken to seize all films that are infringements or that have been brought into this country through illicit agencies.

The following is existing law in the matter of Copyright. From the Copyright Law in force July 1, 1909:

Sec. 30. That the importation into the United States . . . of any piratical copies of any work copyrighted in the United States, is prohibited.

Sec. 32. That any and all articles prohibited importation by this Act which are brought into the United States from any foreign country . . . shall be seized and forfeited by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and condemnation of property imported into the United States in violation of the customs revenue laws. . . .

The United States Government imposes additional penalties for infringement of copyright in the United States, its territories, dependencies, and possessions, including the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Guam, Tutuila Group-Samoa, and the Isthmian Canal Zone, as follows.

Amended copyright law in force July 1, 1909:

Sec. 28. Any person who wilfully and for profit shall infringe any copyright secured by this act or who shall knowingly and wilfully aid or abet such infringement shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding one year or by a fine of not less than $100.00 nor more than $1,000.00, or both, in the discretion of the Court. . . .

In addition to the penalties imposed by the Government of the United States for infringement there is provided indemnity to the copyright owner as follows:

Sec. 25. Amended Copyright Act of August 24, 1912:

(a) The Courts will issue injunctions against all parties using an infringing film.

(b) The Courts will grant damages in favor of the copyright owner of $100.00 for the first performance and $50.00 for each subsequent performance.

The iniunction will hold against the owner, renter, or exhibitor. An exhibitor showing an infringing film, say ten times in one day, becomes liable for $550.00 to the owner of the copyright.

The great popularity of CINES and URBAN-ECLIPSE films may tempt dishonest men to break the law, but their activities will be checked by prompt and effective action under the Laws of the United States. Our agents in the Philippines, Porto Rico, Alaska, and other distant places, are instructed to take immediate action locally in case infringements of our films appear.

The purpose of this advertisement is to make it impossible for any one to plead ignorance of the law or the facts.

CINES and URBAN-ECLIPSE films are licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company, and may be obtained from licensed film exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

Geo. Kleine

166 North State Street, Chicago.

Sole owner of American Copyrights on CINES and URBAN-ECLIPSE films covering the United States, its territories, dependencies, and possessions, including the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Philippine Islands, Guam, Tutuila Group-Samoa, and the Isthmian Canal Zone.

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15th

"THE HOODOO LETTER"

and

"ONE ON JONES"

A twenty-minute "split" perpetuity of that greatest human tonic—laughter.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17th

The feature of the month

"CAPRICES OF FORTUNE"

In Two Supremely Interesting Parts

The eternal desires for love and fortune, with their many persistent disappointments, swing this drama from city to factory, to Western plains—and at last—Success.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 20th

"THE OLD PROFESSOR"

A Paris ECLAIR, which is sufficient endorsement for any release.

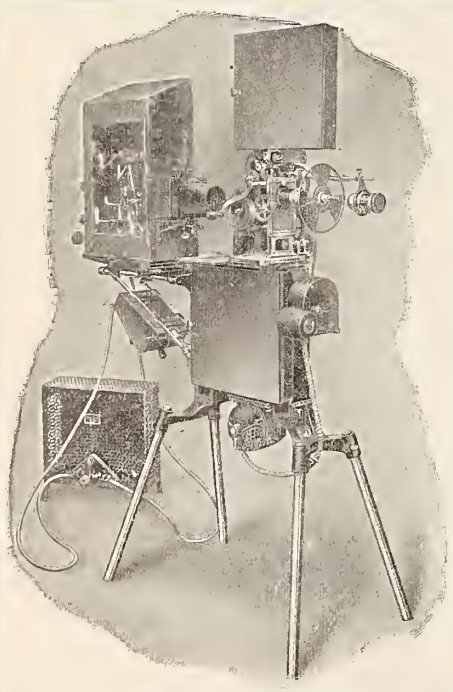
ECLAIR FILM COMPANY, 225 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

ECLAIR FILMS PARIS

STANDARD FILMS

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

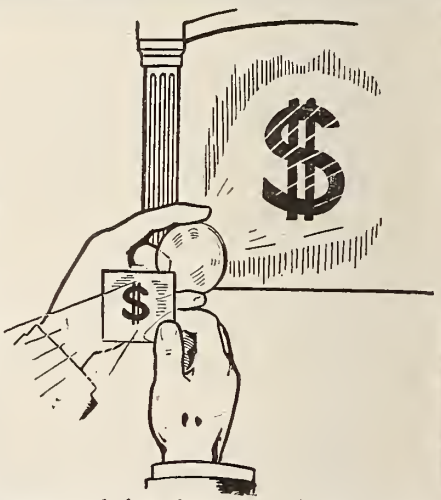
FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



How To Make the $ Grow

PUT IN A

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A



This is a subject of great importance—how to add to the pile which you have acquired through years of hard labor—that your declining days may be passed in comfort.

You are in the moving picture business, competition is keen, you must have the best or you won't hold your trade.

THE SUCCESS OF YOUR BUSINESS CENTERS IN YOUR MACHINE. It must project flickerless, clear, sharp pictures, be easy of operation, noiseless in motion, with parts exposed and get-at-able when needed, and built to stand wear and tear.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6A possesses all these features. It is the product of 15 years' scientific knowledge and research.

It is in most of the houses of America and Europe. Put it in yours and see it make the $ grow.

Catalogue D gives full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

90 Gold Street, New York City

For 15 years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

GENUINE "101" BISON HEADLINER

"The Vengeance of Fate"

IN TWO REELS——RELEASED OCTOBER 18

SENSATIONAL PIONEER MILITARY SUBJECT

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT FORD STERLING
MABEL NORMAND FRED MACE

Supported by a Strong Company

"Stolen Glory"

The funniest film ever made. Big battle Scenes. RELEASED OCTOBER 14

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"The Sheriff's Adopted Child"

RELEASED OCTOBER 16

Thrilling western subject, with sensational pursuit and capture
Marvelous acting by a boy

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

After Months of Preparation

NOW READY

KINEMACOLOR

(NATURAL COLOR MOTION PICTURES)

FILM SERVICE

PROGRAMME

Includes An Unlimited Supply and Variety of

AMERICAN ACTED

DRAMAS AND COMEDIES

Also

EDUCATIONAL NATURE STUDIES
SCENIC SCIENTIFIC TRAVEL
TOPICAL

Each One a Headliner

KINEMACOLOR COMPANY OF AMERICA

1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Write or Wire for Exclusive Rights for Your Town

© Cl.B259130

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI October 5, 1912 Number 14

MOVING PICTURES AND VAUDEVILLE

I HAVE often wondered, when on my visit to some of the high-class picture houses in New York City and elsewhere, why vaudeville is used. There is such an unlimited supply of good pictures that vaudeville—especially the present-day class of vaudeville—should take a back number. In some of the houses in Chicago the very lowest grade of vaudeville is exhibited. In New York City the larger theatres have a fairly good selection. Some that I have seen I have made special mention concerning, have praised where praise is due, while the worst elements I have said nothing about.

I fully believe it is the wish of practically nine-tenths of the moving picture exhibitors, members of the National League, to see the elimination of vaudeville, and to put in place of the vaudeville a travelogue or short lecture. In several instances the story which appears in the News each week has been read by the elocutionist to the audience previous to the exhibition of the film, and on a recent Sunday we were agreeably surprised at the great attention paid by a large audience to the reading of a typical story; then when the film followed the applause showed full appreciation to both the reader and the film.

There is another point I want to touch upon, and that is, while some of the vaudeville stunts and the amateur nights are provocative of laughter, how few these are, and how far between, the managers know to their cost, compared to the many items regarded by them as being paltry and easily dispensed with. It is my contention that a moving picture theatre, under whatever name it is called, should be a theatre where only moving pictures are exhibited. Another point that can be forcibly brought to the attention of the exhibitors is the fact that many of the stunts put on by the vaudevillians are, to say the least, vile and are such that the proprietors of the houses themselves will not let their own children of tender years be present in the house when they are put on. I know of several instances of this nature, and when managers have to cater to the children the pictures are much better aids to their education of purity than are some of the vaudeville stunts that I have witnessed. Vaudeville and the legitimate drama is all very well in its way, and should be kept entirely separate from the moving picture.

Another strong point in favor of pictures alone is that, if vaudeville is part of the program, it only adds additional expense to the house, and if this additional expense was put into the better quality of pictures better audiences would result and where 5 cents is good enough for some of the vaudeville and pictures I have seen, by the elimination of the vaudeville people would not object to seeing the good pictures and pay 10 cents admission for seeing them. The day of the nickelodeon is almost past, and with the educational lecturette, the high-class song, better moving pictures accompanied by high-class music, which should be arranged into a program intelligent to the audience, and a credit to both the musician and the house, taking the place of vaudeville, I am more than convinced that the exhibitors would benefit by the better class of audience they attract.

Alfred H. Saunders.

Gianni Bettini, an Italian inventor, has recently perfected a new device which makes it possible for almost any amateur photographer to make his own moving pictures. Not only does the new mechanism bring the cost within the means of the average amateur, but the resulting pictures are actually clearer and sharper than those produced in the ordinary way by the use of a moving picture film of celluloid.

In accomplishing these astonishing results Bettini has exactly reversed the principle of the usual moving picture machine, in which the film travels back of the lens from spool to spool. His photographs are made in series on a glass plate, which is held rigid, while the lense itself moves.

The plates used in the Bettini machine measure eight and one-half inches in length by five and one-half inches wide. The photographs taken in series on this plate are only five-sixteenths of an inch in width by one-quarter inch in depth. In this way 16 consecutive pictures appear in a line, and on each plate there are 36 lines, making a total of 576 images. The photographs are taken at the rate of 12 or more a second as the lense travels to and fro.—Technical World.

PRODUCERS, EXHIBITORS AND MUSICIANS TAKE NOTE!

As a man with some worth while ideas to give the public, we welcome Mr. Ernst J. Luz among the efficient staff of writers in the columns of our magazine.

Mr. Luz has spent a great deal of time and thought on the music of the picture theatre. Realizing the great necessity of a method by which all and any musician can make a success of playing for the pictures, he has labored, and is now in a position to show us the fruits of his labors in the shape of plots or set-ups so lucidly arranged that the meanest musician, by adherence to the plan mapped out for him, can accompany any picture by the exercise of a little intelligence and thought.

ERNST J. LUZ

Mr. Luz proposes, and very wisely, that the manufacturers employ intelligent musicians to work in conjunction with the scenario department, laying out an appropriate music plot for every picture that is released, a copy of which should be furnished every exhibitor along with the picture.

The laying out of these plots is an art in itself; an art which is destined to become, before long, an essential part of picture production. It, therefore, will require the employment of intelligent musicians in the manufactories to properly carry out this suggestion. The trick in playing for pictures, as Mr. Luz has put it, "lies in the anticipation of scenes and not in their accompaniment."

Mr. Luz is himself an accomplished musician, and his articles will commence with next week's issue and should be carefully perused, and the suggestion acted upon, be of great value to the trade.

Milwaukee, Wis.—A brick picture theatre will be erected on Holton and Centre streets for Edward Geiger.

Syracuse, N. Y.—The Rex Photo Play Co. is having plans prepared for a fireproof motion picture theatre in N. Salina street near Butternut street.

ROOSEVELT FILMS WONDERFUL SPECTACLE

One of our staff, according to the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, seems to have a "sneaking propensity." The other day when the firm was having a private exhibition of the Roosevelt films for their own special benefit, the president of the firm glancing backward, was startled to find that, all unknown to him, a member of the formidable moving picture press had in some unaccountable manner become present in the body. And since it happened so, it's up to us to tell you what he saw.

Two reels of one of the most interesting spectacles of modern history unrolled upon the screen. It was Roosevelt in almost every situation afforded in that whirlwind tour through the West. Mr. Cummins, the clever young camera man of the General Film Publicity Company, is deserving of the highest praise for the manner in which he handled, single-handed, the motion picture photographic work of this remarkable tour. He has even worked in a little art on the side, for some of the scenes, unlike the usual stereotyped picture of this class, have a touch of beauty. The scenes where Roosevelt is addressing the Indians are picturesque. Also where the cowboys, mounted on restless mustangs, vie with each other for a shake of the hand from the ex-president are full of interest and life.

The pictures are clear and splendid living photographs. Even the faces in the vast crowds always in the wake of the political leader are so clear and distinct that we have no doubt many will be startled by seeing their own faces on the film as clear and distinct as that of Roosevelt.

KINEMACOLOR

It will be noticed in our advertising columns that the Kinemacolor Company of America are now advertising their American produced and staged films. We have watched the production of these films for some little time, not only as they have been acted in their studio at Whitestone, but also the projected result, and the public will soon be able to criticize and eulogize the dramatized stories in Kinemacolor.

While touching on Kinemacolor, we asked what David Belasco had to do with Kinemacolor, as a theatrical paper published a pretty lengthy canard on the subject of Belasco giving his time and energy and investing $175,000 in Kinemacolor. This is absolutely false, and we were requested to state in strong denial that Belasco had anything whatever to do in the product of Kinemacolor, either as director or otherwise, and that he is not by any means a large stockholder in the Kinemacolor Company. Will the papers which have given publicity to the incorrect statement set afloat kindly contradict, by stating that it was merely a press agent's story to bring forth more prominently in the eye of the public a theatrical manager's name.

SPRING THEATRE, W. HOBOKEN, N. J., SHORTLY TO OPEN

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that the West Hoboken Amusement Co. will soon open their new Spring Theatre in West Hoboken, N. J. They purchased from him two Powers No. 6A motor driven machines, two Hallberg A. C. Economizers, and a full line of supplies. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of a Simplex moving picture machine to S. Cirrination, South Bethlehem, Pa., together with 60 opera chairs and full line of supplies, Hallberg A. C. Economizers, etc. Also an Edison Model B moving picture machine with Hallberg A. C. Economizer to the Edisonia Theatre, Durham, N. C.

Hale Joins Majestic Forces

Albert Hale, formerly a director for Thanhouser and producer of some of their successful dramas, including "Letters of a Lifetime," "The Birth of a Lotos Blossom," etc., has severed his connection with them and joined the Majestic Co. in a like capacity. Mr. Hale leaves the Thanhouser Co. with the best wishes of the entire organization.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

General Headquarters
703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio

OFFICERS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

President, M. A. Neff, Lock Box 15, Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Vice-Presidents, S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; Wm. J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; B. L. Converse, Owassa, Mich.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; E. W. Waugh, Huntington, W. Va.; Orene Parker, Covington, Ky.; Geo. H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.; Chas. Rothschild, San Francisco, Calif.; Sidney Asher, New York, N. Y.; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City, N. J.; H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; E. V. Richards, Shreveport, La.; F. W. Young, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; W. H. Wassman, Nashville, Tenn.; Anthony J. Xydias, Houston, Tex.; Carl Gregg, Tulsa, Okla.; Paul LeMarquand, Winnipeg, Can.; M. C. Everstein, Jacksonville, Fla.; Geo. Osborn, St. Paul, Minn.

From the number of letters that are coming into Mr. Neff's office, Texas is going to have one of the largest State conventions that has ever been held. Mr. Neff has received eighty-six (86) letters from the exhibitors in Texas stating that they will attend the Dallas Convention, which is to be held on the 15th and 16th of October. Mr. E. T. Peter, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, 1807 Main street, Dallas, Tex., has arranged with the Chamber of Commerce to hold the convention in their hall. Ned Depinet, of the Texas Film Exchange, 1310 Elm street, Dallas, Tex., and Mr. Peter are co-operating together and are arranging a splendid entertainment for the visiting exhibitors.

* * *

The exhibitors of Dallas, Tex., held a meeting and elected Mr. T. P. Finnegan, manager of the Hippodrome Amusement Company, as chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and he will have charge of all arrangements and will cooperate with the motion picture exhibitors of Dallas as well as the film exchanges. From the way Mr. Finnegan has taken hold of the matter the exhibitors of Texas can rest assured that they will receive a splendid reception and will be royally entertained.

* * *

Letters received from Mr. Anthony Xydias, national vice-president from Texas, state that the Texas exhibitors are enthusiastic over the convention and a large convention is expected. Miss Bulah Allred writes that either she or her partner will attend the convention. Mr. L. C. Ross, of Catulla, Texas, writes that he cannot be there, but that he will send in his initiation fee and application. L. S. Trammell, manager of the Jewell Amusement Company, Houston, Tex., will be there. E. C. Thumm, of the Thumm Bros. Amusement Company, of Del Rio, Tex., writes that one of them will be at the convention, they are with the movement and want to do all they can to assist. John C. Penn, proprietor of the Picture Palace, McKinney, Tex., states that he will be on hand at the convention; they are with the movement and want to do all they can to assist. Mr. B. Orzeck, of Marland, Tex., writes that it is possible that he cannot be there, but that he will have his application and initiation fee there, as he wants to join the organization. W. R. Fairman, of the Dixie Theatre, Bryan, Tex., states that he will be there and is anxious to assist in the organization. J. J. Hegman, of Temple, Tex., is coming. Crawford Thomes, of the Colonial Theatre, Post City, Tex., writes that they will be there, "Johnnie on the spot." John Morris, Jr., manager of the Airdrome Theatre, Jackson, Tex., states that he is very glad to know that we are going to hold a convention and that he will be there, and that he will do all in his power to make the convention a success. Bell & Engles, of the Gem Picture Palace, 208 Oak street, Palestine, Tex., states that the organization is what they want; both gentlemen will be there and will assist in forming a permanent organization. J. C. Clemmons, Imperial Theatre Company, Beaumont, Tex., writes that he is very much pleased to know that the Texas exhibitors have finally awakened and that he is very much pleased at the enthusiasm manifested and that the convention will be a big one and he will be there to do his part. Messrs. Harrison & Ward, owners of the Royal Theatre, Abilene, Tex., write that they are heart and soul with the movement, and that they will be present at the convention. Mr. G. L. Wallace writes that he has been a motion picture exhibitor since 1907; he is interested in fourteen theatres in western Texas, and it is expected that all fourteen theatres will be represented at Dallas. There are many others from whom letters have been received.

* * *

Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will leave Cincinnati about the 12th of October, arriving in Dallas on the 14th or early on the morning of the 15th, and will be ready to organize the State into a thorough, permanent organization. Mr. Neff has many personal friends in the motion picture business, and also in the mercantile business in Texas, as he has been through the State several times from the standpoint of a traveling man. Week by week new States are being added to the organization and by the time the big convention is held in New York City, on July 7, 1913, the national president and secretary positively expect every State in the Union to be organized. In the last week letters have been received by the president from Moscow, Russia, Berlin, Germany, and Melbourne and Sydney, Australia.

* * *

TWO IMPORTANT LETTERS

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America,
New York State Branch, No. 11.

Dear Sir: New York, Sept. 30, 1912.

By an act of the Board of Directors the annual dues of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York have been reduced to $20, beginning from October 1, 1912, and for the current quarter the initiation fee will be waived and all those paying $5 now will be given full membership, including initiation and other assessments.

This action was taken by reason of the fact that the organization is in a prosperous and self-sustaining condition and is no longer in a position where it requires a large membership fee to create a great fund, but is seeking to create a large membership, thus gaining the moral support of every exhibitor in the city. This support is absolutely essential to the welfare of the business in this city.

It is our intention to place before the various law-making bodies of this State certain bills which will greatly benefit our business, and we realize more than ever that we must have strength of numbers; that we must have behind us the support of every man who owns a moving picture theatre.

We therefore urge you to enroll your name on our books.

Yours very truly,
SIDNEY ASCHER, Secretary.

* * * *

New York, Sept. 27, 1912.

Dear Mr. Exhibitor:

Now read this carefully. Remember the power of the screen.

Within a very short time you will without a doubt receive slides from candidates of various political offices. Do not promise that you will exhibit these slides, but tell these candidates that the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York will investigate whether or not such candidate will, if elected, support the movement of such laws as will benefit the motion picture houses and the public in general.

We desire to call your attention to the fact that a specially appointed committee will carefully and sincerely investigate the character and reliability of every candidate regardless of his political affiliations and you will be informed which candidate will be worthy of the support of the motion picture screen.

Remember, the motion picture houses carry on a respectable and legitimate business and are entitled to the most courteous treatment of all the City and State officials, and we will not submit any longer to the dictations and whims of any individual hereafter. Whether you are a member of this association or not, in justice to yourself and all the exhibitors at large, you must show your power by assisting this committee as much as the committee will assist you.

As soon as you receive a request of such a nature, kindly refer the candidate to the committee in charge or you may personally confer with the committee at our headquarters, No. 136 Third avenue.

Respectfully yours,
A. BAUERENFREUND, Chairman.

The Colorgraph Process of Animated Natural Color Photography as Applied to Moving Pictures

By ARTURO HERNANDEZ-MEJIA

In order to understand the principles underlying the production of my animated colorgraphs, which are produced without the aid of any painting, brush work, stenciling or similar devices, using simply the agency of light to secure the negative record, and to project the positive on the screen, it is necessary to refer to the well-known theories and practices of color photography, as applied to films, transparencies, lantern slides, and their projection. This, however, can be condensed into very few words.

Light, emanating from luminous bodies, like the sun and the electric arc, is believed to be originated in the form of infinitesimally small vibrations of the atoms of matter, very much like the waves of sound. These vibrations or waves have been scientifically measured, ranging from 395 billions to 768 billions a second, according to the rapidity with which they are excited by the heat generated. About 760 billions of waves gives the retina of the eye the impression of red, and in a like manner, through orange, yellow, green, blue, to the violet sensation around 390 to 430 billions per second. This enables us to manufacture screens or absorbent surfaces which, when placed in front of the rays of white light, extract, so to speak, those color sensations which are not intended to pass through. Light on striking a body is either reflected, absorbed, or it will pass right through unmolested. This enables us to build cameras which will, at one exposure, give us two distinct records of the objects or landscapes before it, separating the white light reflected by the composite lens through suitable screens into two negatives. One containing a photograph or image of all the blue-green and part of the yellow found in nature, and the other containing the red-orange and part of the yellow of the original.

Having secured these two records or negatives, by accurate mechanical means, we turn to the Young theory, modified by Helmholtz, that there are three primary color sensations, red, green and violet, and that with the aid of those colors and combinations of them, practically all the hues of nature can be reproduced. Other researchers have since shown that while colored lights respond to the Young-Helmholtz theory, colored pigments or opacities require red, blue and yellow, as the primary colors. Thus Sanger-Shepherd produces beautiful lantern slides in the colors of nature by superposing three sheets containing colored red, blue and yellow records taken from suitable screen negatives. Ives, by reproducing similar records upon etched blocks, enabled us to look upon beautiful three-colored reproductions such as we see in the magazines and elsewhere.

Friese-Green, and later Smith & Urban, most successfully produced colored pictures thrown upon the screen by persistence of vision (first one colored image and then another) so rapidly, so highly illuminated, and in auditoriums so darkened that the impression of the observer is that of the most brilliantly colored image in motion, particularly those subjects which originally were an orange or a green color. Lumiere has lately given us the grain-starch process, which, while satisfying in its results, has its photographic limitations, one of which only has to do with this article—that it is impossible to apply starch grains or fine rulings to transparent ribbons in suitable lengths, nor is it a reproducible process, at least not commercially.

It is obvious that the ideal plan for animated color records, suitable for motion pictures, would be a modification of the results obtained by kinemacolor, whereby the films would give the same or better color values on the screen, but without requiring any conditions that are not to be found in modern moving picture houses whether they be on Broadway or in far Alaska.

Such was the state of the color moving picture situation when my colorgraph process was announced. I will now proceed to show where it meets the requirements outlined above, why and how.

While I realized that green and red light, mixed at the time of projection after passing photographic screen records, would give good results under certain and specific conditions, it was obvious that to make the plan a commercial success, it would be necessary to operate a number of theatres where those special conditions could be created and maintained, and that other theatres would be barred from the benefits of color projection by that method. It became apparent that the solution must be found along the lines of any process which did all the preparation in the manufacturing studio, and turned out the finished product ready to use by the moving picture theatre operator, interchangeably with any other film he was using, without in the slightest altering either his light, his machine, his screen or furnishing the audience with any appliances or putting them to any inconveniences.

Experiments and observations of three-color-letter-press printing showed me that the image was recorded principally on the blue and on the red plates, and that the yellow plate, unless the subject was entirely composed of white figures and bodies, was devoid of detail, and for practical purposes might just as well be a solid color. This is more marked when applied to projecting three-color transparencies by light in which the violet rays predominate.

Thus I hold the theory, that given proper screen separation, and three transparent sheets, one containing the blue record and another the red record, and another a solid complementary color, say, lemon-canary yellow, upon superposing them in the path of violet-white light, we will have a reproduction on a suitable screen of an image which the human eye will accept as the true colors of nature—more particularly so, when these color records are presented for inspection with the rapidity of sixteen to the second, as is the case in ordinary moving pictures. I further improved upon this principle, making it commercially practical, by inventing the coating of transparent substances, on both sides, with sensitive emulsions, for the purposes of receiving, on each side, an impression of one of two negatives which are taken by the aid of specially made screens, spectroscopically tested, representing separate portions of the spectrum.

The experiments carried on during the period of my long stay on the Island of Cuba were conducted under very favorable conditions of light, enabling me to secure negatives at the rate of twenty to the second, which showed complete separation of colors, but unfortunately the facilities there for double coating the positive stock were very meagre, so that the films made, so far, have been of still subjects, although cinematographically projected. Improvements in the sensitizing of the negative films have lately enabled me to obtain fair negative records right here in New York under the very unfavorable weather conditions prevailing, and I am now preparing an educational feature picture play entitled, "CONSCIENCE?" which I hope to have ready for public trial by the end of October or early in November.

The process consists of taking, with a specially constructed camera, two negatives, each through a different screen placed in the divided (reflected and refracted) paths of the light, and from these two negatives I print on both sides of a positive lemon-yellow colored film, a separate record of the image. I then color each record on each side of the positive film with a dye complementary to the screen through which the picture was taken, and when dry, the colorgraph film is ready for the projecting lantern. Nothing can be more simple, and nothing as yet presented is more effective.

The accompanying illustrations are self-explanatory. The one marked "red negative" is taken through the red-orange-yellow screen, which lets through (does not absorb) red light or rays of the A line, (768 uu) orange rays, C line, (656 uu) and yellow, D line, (589 uu) but neglects or retards the portions of the spectrum not covered by that region. The one marked "green negative" is taken through the green-blue-violet screen, which lets through (does not absorb) greenish-blue light rays, F line, (486 uu) deep blue IG line, (431 uu) and violet, H line, (397 uu). In practice these negatives are quite distinguishable as you can see in the illustration, which was taken at the rate of two turns, or sixteen pictures, or one foot of film to the second, indoors, the illumination being two photo-engraver's arc lamps with solid carbons. On a title board, which was covered with black velvet, a white card is pinned together with a blue handkerchief and a pink ribbon bow as a background for two bunches of grapes, green (malagas) in dark blue (catabas). Below were placed several other fruit, red-yellow apples, oranges, peaches, pears, bluish-purple plums and some bananas, all these on top of a silk handkerchief of a lighter blue color. A glance at the negative compared with the positive is sufficient to appreciate how well the screens have done their work. Upon coloring the "green" positive (taken from the red negative) with a dye of the malachite character, and the "red" positive (printed from the green negative) with a dye of the fuchsine or rhodamine solubilities and superimposing them up to a yellow light the wonderful results of colorgraphy are immediately evident. If, instead of superimposing two positives we print them on each side of a lemon-yellow-colored film of celluloid or similar material, which has been coated with a sensitizing emulsion on both sides of the film, we will find that we secure perfect and permanent register, and that the blue-green color on one side, the lemon-yellow in the centre, and the orange-red on the other will supply the full range of colors of the original object, with a degree of correctness that is truly astonishing. Not only the colors are correct, but the black of the velvet and the white of the card are rendered cinematographically correct. Naturally, the objection will be made, and very properly, that if the yellow is a solid color, there can be no true white, and there is not. The eye will, however, accept the lemon-yellow as white, when projected by a light, strong violet ray, simply by comparison with other yellows in the picture, those of the oranges, pears and bananas, for instance, just as the eye accepts newspaper as white when printed on with black ink, and would designate it as dark gray if it were laid on clean snow by comparison. There is a further reason for tinting or coloring the transparent film, and that is, to furnish a non-actinic color between the emulsions of the positive at the time of printing. The double light printer now being built under my direction is so constructed that each light is far enough from the emulsion of each side, so that in the rapid printing of continuous film with the light shut down to 1, 2½ to 3 points, according to the intensity of the negative, does not penetrate through the film, even when perfectly clear such as we have been experimentally using, and if any should through error in judging the negative, it is negligible, since the two prints have, of necessity, to be in register, and once the first tests of each scene are made the proper correction in the lights can be adjusted. In this printer, the perforations are taken up by the claws, every fifth hole, thus insuring absolute precision of register, as any possible difference occurring, by the shrinkage of the stock, either negative or positive, is equalized by the take-up at each succeeding picture, as the three films are run through the printer. By three, I mean, the two negatives on opposite sides with the double coated positive in between.

COLORGRAPH GREEN NEGATIVE | COLORGRAPH RED NEGATIVE | COLORGRAPH GREEN POSITIVE | COLORGRAPH RED POSITIVE

I have limited this article to a simple explanation of the principle in colorgraphy, reserving for some future time, the details of the construction of the camera, which is rather ingenious although a little complicated, the double printer, the drying drums, racks and frames, which are made with shouldered studs to keep the double coated film from touching the wood parts, and swiveled to take up the shrinkage in drying. Also, as soon as my colorgraphs are on the market, I shall be pleased to make public the process for rapidly coloring the image on the film without coloring the gelatine, which I am sure will be applied to other uses successfully as it is quite a departure from any methods I have as yet seen in any published work, and my library of color photography is rather extensive. Sufficient for the present is the assertion, that with basic dyes, the operation of toning (bleaching and coloring simultaneously) is complete within five to ten minutes, and the samples accompanying this article are the result of this process. Not only is it rapid, but it is inexpensive, as an 80 gallon tank of solution for either color costs less than $4 to $5, and it is sufficient for over 3,000 film before being exhausted. The panchromatizing of the negative film has so far been done by myself with new sensitive dyes on ordinary orthochromatic fast film, but both an English and German manufacturer are now making several thousand feet of both positive and negative stock for my requirements, as the American manufacturer, is, unfortunately, as yet too elementary in his knowledge of color photography.

Those interested in public entertainment, the moving picture manufacturers, the picture play actors and the scientific students, are expressing unqualified wonderment at the colorgraph pictures so far projected on the screen, as it is realized that the present films, handmade, with crude apparatus and limited facilities already excel anything so far accomplished by other methods. They all comment principally on the total absence of frill or fringe, meaning the edge of green and red so noticeable in other processes. There can be no fringe in colorgraphy, if there is register, and if there is no register, the printer will not operate; it clogs and stops. It must register, or there is no picture. The explanation is simple. On processes which depend on successive or alternate color pictures, any motion is recorded in different places in each succeeding picture, hence the fringe when superimposed on the screen. The fact that you project them thirty-two or more times to the second, partly but never wholly overcomes this defect—experience has shown it. In the colorgraphs each picture is taken by the simultaneous principle, hence they must be alike and cannot fringe or frill. Another noticeable feature is the strong blues and purples and the correct blacks, which I have not seen so far in any other form or process of color moving pictures.

The Colorgraph Company, which has been formed for the purpose of holding my patents, issued and pending, has temporary offices in the Exchange Building, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, and it is now at work on the negatives of the first film which will be put out for public trial. The double coated positive stock has arrived from Germany, so that the feasibility of this double coating is now commercially established, and we may now soon be able to see projected, in one of the New York theatres, the first colored pictures by this colorgraph process which have ever been shown anywhere, on an ordinary projector, interchangeably with ordinary black and white films.

SOLAX

The Maverick, October 18

Bessie Vale is a poor, homeless girl. She is about to be arrested for vagrancy when two confidence men step up and intercede for her, by telling the policeman that she is a sister of theirs. The confidence men take her to their boarding house, and confide her to the mercy of a not over-scrupulous boarding house mistress. The girl suspects nothing wrong until the two confidence men take her to a cabaret show, and then introduce her to Billy Taylor, a wealthy Western cattle man on a visit, trying "to do" New York.

They urged her to be friendly with the stranger, and while the stranger is attractive and genial, the surrounding circumstances arouse her distrust. However, urged by the menacing glances of the confidence men, the girl encourages the Westerner, and in compliance with their silent urging invites him to her home. He is sitting, talking and listening to her play the piano, when the two swindlers break into the room waving revolvers. One of the men declares that the girl is his wife and he will have Bill arrested unless he pays a thousand dollars to him. Bessie begins to cry and Bill—tender-hearted, big fellow—decides to give up his money to save her from publicity. He gives all he has. She demands that they give him back his money. They offer her a third, but she throws it in their faces. They sneer and pocket the money and leave her jeeringly. The girl hurries out of the room and down the steps, trying to find Bill. At last she discovers the Westerner. She approaches and confesses poverty had forced her into the trap of the rascals. He at first starts to call a policeman, then he relents and forgives. He asks where the men can be found, and she tells him at a saloon where the gang meets. She takes him there—and he marches in the side door—to discover them dividing their spoils and gambling with the dice. Bill draws his enormous revolver, in triumph. The girl is sobbing and tearful. She says the gang will kill her. Bill draws out his return ticket and then he has an idea. He turns to her and says: "Little gal, you are a maverick, as I was. We're both in the wrong herd of cattle. Come out and share my ranch—in God's country."

ECLAIR PERFECTION

The accompanying illustration from Eclair's "The Old Professor" suggests a good paragraph of praise to one of their Paris directors, whose name we do not chance to know. In the past year we have noticed many of their productions which have apparently been done under the direction of the same man. This gentleman, whosoever he may be, seems about to have founded a decided school of the picture play.

To the writer it has always been extremely aggravating to be compelled to witness screen-characters literally talking their heads off, when not a word of it could be understood. It is the absence of this fault which makes this director's work stand forth so boldly. He has mastered the art of directing his artists to an almost perfect pantomimic expression of thought. He seems to have surrounded himself with a certain established company of artists who work better with each succeeding picture. Their mastery of thought expression is approaching perfection. Would that there were more directors following this director's school.

Philadelphia, Pa.—John I. Bright is planning a moving picture theatre to be built at Sixty-second street and Woodland avenue.

Bayonne, N. J.—Work on the new Broadway Theatre, Broadway, between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth streets, is progressing rapidly.

Trenton, N. J.—Eldorado Amusement Co., $50,000 capital. Incorporators: Benjamin A. Rosen, Samuel Petofsky and Morris Rosenfeld.

Houston, Tex.—A new high-class moving picture show house will open its doors in time to entertain carnival crowds this fall.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

THE moving picture play director is becoming more and more intelligent in production. Progress is swift in the staging and directing of our playlets, and we are seeing more and more attempts—successful ones, too—at applying real art to the fabric, stimulating our imagination by the suggestion of new beauties and harmonies. The new motion picture stagecraft that touches the soul with artistic design, simpleness and naturalness, is becoming more and more dominant. With certain exceptions, the manufacturers are doing away with trade-marks plastered on trees, mantelpieces and sidewalls. Stage settings, glaringly artificial, are being banished and, best of all, characters without feet are becoming fewer. Dramas staged by the Victor Company are the very latest to meet with the commendation of critics and filmland devotees.

* * *

Some of the old, old farces, trimmed up with tunes modern and ancient, are being utilized by some directors. If the dearth of comedy continues we may confidently look forward to the filming of such old standbys as "Box and Cox," "My Wife's Family," "Slasher and Crasher," etc. By the way, while some editors are bewailing "the lack of comedy" other editors are seemingly having no trouble, whatever, in releasing convincing stuff and drawing that unaffected laughter so much desired by the exhibitor for his playhouse. Edison is notable in this respect. We saw an audience rise up and shout in merriment the other evening at Edison's "His Spoiled Family." The action hit off table manners and parlor etiquette. It was a burlesque on what might be the attitude of many a rural community to the higher forms of social etiquette. There was the brother who ate pie with a knife, the "Old Man" who drank his coffee from a saucer, etc. There was no plot to speak of, but there was that "something" that tickled the risibles. The fact should be impressed upon some editors and directors that "slap-sticks," poker games, spinsters, mother-in-laws, and Irish policemen are no longer considered "funmakers" by intelligent audiences. A few quiet take-offs on every-day human nature and rural characterizations are sincerely recommended to those crying for comic stories.

* * *

THESE BUSY MEN

"Away, away!"
Said William Bix;
"I have no time
For politics."
He purchased tickets
By the ream
And stayed around
The photo screen!

"Away, away!"
Said Joseph Gates;
"I have no time
For candidates."
So pressed for time
Was busy Joe
He went to see
A picture show.

"Away, away!"
Said Henry Pate;
"I have no time
To celebrate."
And then to prove
That he was right,
He took in every
Play in sight!

* * *

Picture plays that talk are promised by the Wizard of Orange, N. J. If Edison perfects such an invention it will revolutionize the industry. Many Thespians who now disport on the screen will act no more, and others not now gracing the moving picture theatre by their presence will be attracted thereby. The talking picture play will also mean a rush of playwrights, novelists and short-story writers into the scenario field. Some of them are long on dialogue and short on action. It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good.

* * *

To the energetic picture playwright who persists in sending in stories requiring a cast of characters as long as the moral law we recommend a visit to Pathe's "Her Son's Ingratitude." Just four characters in the thousand feet of tense, convincing action. The film is running S. R. O. in the Middle West. Solax, both comedy and drama, Gaumont and Victor releases are also becoming headliners in that great territory.

* * *

NURSERY JINGLES

Jack Spratt would eat no fat,
His wife would eat no lean;
But they didn't care
For the bill of fare,
They loved the picture screen!

There was a girl in our town
And she was rather fat;
We couldn't view our favorite films—
She wore a picture hat.

* * *

Now is the proper season to release political stories. The country is being traversed from the Atlantic to the Pacific by spellbinders and political films are timely. A number of exhibitors have written to us urging the release of political films having a comic trend. There is much material for such stories and they would be a relief from the political-boss-governor's-private-secretary dope that has been inflicted upon a long-suffering electorate in the past. The straw votes, political debates in the rural post-offices, etc., could well be woven into political comedy.

* * *

We predict a mild winter. The corn husks are thin, the fuzz on the hats is shorter than it was last fall, and hardly a moving picture theatre manager has removed the electric fans.

* * *

The camera man missed a great opportunity by not being ready when Mayor Gaynor, of New York, took that chew of scrap tobacco.

* * *

Truth crushed to the earth will rise again. And rumor, clubbed off Cinematography's backyard fence, will come back.

* * *

What has become of the old-fashioned director who used to have Claud Fearnot, a diamond in the rough, open a can of cove oysters in the Western picture play?

* * *

Picture play fans can have the choice of two things this winter—go to the picture theatre or buy an egg.

* * *

In some picture plays we have viewed recently courtship seems to be a lingering disease.

* * *

"Long hat pins could be forgiven," remarked the man on the car, "if they were used now and then to induce people to step forward, please, in moving picture shows."

* * *

We wrote a letter to Hal Reid last week requesting some more details concerning the advertisement he drew up offering to edit and criticise script free of charge. "The advertisement means just exactly what it says," he wrote back. Thanks, Hal.

* * *

There are four hundred and seventy-five pieces in an ordinary automobile. The count, of course, has reference to the machine as it leaves the factory. After it comes in contact with an immovable object in a picture play there are more.

* * *

A moving picture manufacturer asserts "That he is going to show the people just what a fly is." Better wait until next summer, Old Scout!

INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Wagner Electric & Mfg. Co.) states finally and emphatically that "Where the infringer has sold and used a patented article, the plaintiff is entitled to recover all of the profits."

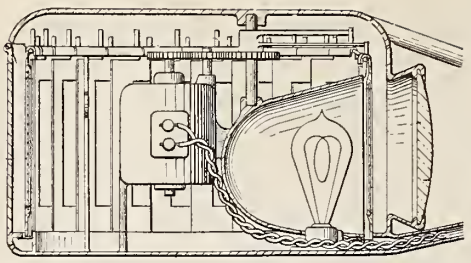
Patent No. 1,038,349, to Elmer W. Goodrich, of Boston, Mass. The objects of the invention are to provide a novel projection apparatus which is comparatively simple and which can be readily adapted either for opaque or transparent projection work; and which can also be used for microscopic projection work; and to provide an apparatus by which the image of either the transparent or the opaque object may be projected onto the screen with the apparatus in any one of several positions.

When the device is to be used for transparent projection work the housing is turned relative to the lamp house so as to bring the objective into a vertical position, as shown, and the reflector is then thrown down so that it will reflect the collimated beam of light upwardly into the objective. Said objective has a reflector associated therewith which reflects the projected image onto the screen. The reflector may be swung from one position to the other by any suitable means, as, for instance, by a thumb-piece which is secured to the shaft on which the reflector is sustained, and a rest or stop is provided to support it at the proper angle. When the reflector is not in use it may be swung into inoperative position against the side of the light hood and held there by any suitable catch. When the apparatus is to be used for opaque projection work the light hood is turned through an angle of 90 degrees to bring one objective into a horizontal position and the other objective into a vertical position, and then the lamp house and light hood are tipped up into the angular position so as to bring the open side of the light hood into horizontal position. The mirror or reflector is swung into inoperative position against the side of the light hood, where it is retained by a catch. The beam of light collimated by the condensing lenses is thrown through the open side of the light hood onto an opaque object supported on a table, and the light rays reflected from this illuminated object pass through the objective and are reflected by the mirror or reflector onto the screen.

To use the apparatus for microscopic projection work the lamp is swung into its horizontal position and a support for the projecting microscope is provided which is adapted to sustain said microscope in line with the open side of the light hood so that the collimated beam of light will be projected through said open side and directed to the projecting microscope.

By swiveling the light hood to the lamp house it is possible to use the device for both opaque and transparent projection work with the light hood in different relative positions. The device can be used for transparent projection work, however, if the light hood is turned around through 90 degrees so that the objective will stand horizontally.

In this connection it may be noted that a "projector-microscope" has recently been successfully installed in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London. The apparatus consists of an inverted high-power microscope arranged in connection with a powerful arc light, by means of which an enlarged image of a specimen under investigation is projected on a white screen.

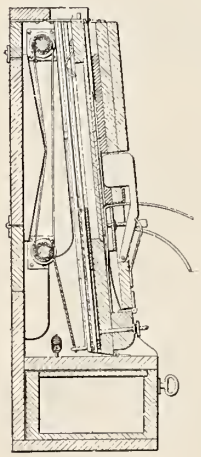


See who's here! Kihei Koike, a subject of the Emperor of Japan, residing at Seattle, Washington, (assignor to Kanischi Takahashi, of same place), is responsible for the electric display projecting apparatus set forth in Letters Patent No. 1,038,899. Banzai!

The invention has for its primary object the provision of novel mechanism through the medium of which a series of transparent or semi-transparent slides are successfully moved for the display of their contents at a predetermined point. It has particular reference to apparatus for projecting upon a suitable receiving surface a light beam in such manner as to effectually attract the attention of passers-by, and consists essentially in the provision of a durable, simple and comparatively inexpensive construction for supporting a series of slides or objects which permits of a comparatively large number of such slides or objects being employed; further, in actuator means associated therewith by which the said slides are advanced; and further, in novel means whereby connection between said actuator and slides is effected, and a release subsequently effected.

Thus the "Yankees of the East" are at last in evidence as originators in the field of invention. Heretofore they have been known therein mainly as adapters and assimilators, being abnormally absorbent in such respects, to put it mildly.

By building a submerged concrete compartment with suitable window facilities Dr. Francis Ward, of Ipswich, Scotland, has been able to procure interesting aquatic moving pictures, showing otter engaged in a fish hunt, herons, penguins, gull and water hen. The pictures disclosed clearly show the penguin uses his wings as oars both on the surface and under water. Fish are shown swimming unsuspiciously around the legs of a heron, indicating that the latter do not have to work very hard for a living; they can "stand pat," and do not even have to hustle while they wait.



Patent No. 1,038,771, issued to Roy R. Loving, of Center, Texas, is for a photographic printing machine, the object being the provision of means adapted to the convenient and accurate placing of the glass or film negative in fixed position to print from, and the accurate positioning of the printing paper and bringing the same in printing contact with the negative. For the purpose mentioned, use is made of a casing provided with a frame, carrying a transparent plate for the negative to rest on, a platen mounted to swing on the frame and adapted to carry the sensitized printing paper into contact with the negative, and a clamp for holding the negative in position on the said transparent plate, the clamp having a handled extension forming a rest for the printing paper while the latter is carried by the platen to and from the negative. The invention consists essentially in the specific construction and arrangement of parts shown and described, comprising primarily a transparent plate for the negative to rest against, a platen mounted to swing toward and from the said plate, and adapted to carry the printing paper into contact with the negative, a clamping device for clamping the negative in place on the said plate, the clamping device having a handled extension for controlling the clamping device and for forming a bottom rest for the lower edge of the printing paper to rest on while being carried to the negative, manually-controlled means for adjusting the tension of the said clamping device; and secondarily, including numerous other details set forth in numerous other claims.

Patent No. 1,038,586, Albert S. Howell, of Chicago, Ill., assignor to Bell & Howell Co., a corporation of Illinois, is for a motion-picture machine, but relates particularly to the film feeding mechanism proper, the object being the provision of a simple and effective mechanism for feeding the film intermittently, or step by step, which shall have a high degree of accuracy so that the film will be moved exactly the required distance each time.

Through the medium of a vibratory flexible plate the perforated film is made to engage alternately with fixed pins which effectually prevent any movement or slipping between the feed strokes or steps, and with reciprocating pins which forward the film. Hence the main claim is for film feed mechanism comprising a film guide way, means for shifting said guide way transversely to its direction, reciprocating pins adapted to extend into said guide way and engage the film therein in one position of said guide way, and fixed pins adapted to extend into said guide way and engage said film in the other position. Also, specifically a flexible film guide way and means for flexing said guide way to bring it into and out of the path of the reciprocating pins. The adjoining figure represents an elevation of one side of a moving picture camera partially in section, in which the invention is embodied, showing the manner of actuating the feeding mechanism.

amendment to the Copyright Law, approved August 24, 1912, is essentially a supplementary act relating specifically to moving pictures, adding two new classes of registration, namely, "Motion picture photoplays" and "Motion pictures other than photoplays," and requires the deposit of a title and description, with one print taken from each scene or act, if the work is a motion picture photoplay: of a title and description, with not less than two prints taken from different sections of a complete motion picture, if the work is a motion picture other than a photoplay. The amendment also stipulates that in the case of the infringement of an undramatized or non-dramatic work by means of motion pictures, where the infringer shall show that he was not aware that he was infringing, and that such infringement could not have been reasonably foreseen, damages shall not exceed the sum of one hundred dollars; and in the case of an infringement of a copyrighted dramatic or dramatico-musical work by a maker of motion pictures and his agencies for distribution thereof to exhibitors, where such infringer shows that he was not aware that he was infringing a copyrighted work, and that such infringements could not reasonably have been foreseen, the entire sum of damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from such infringing maker and his agencies for the distribution to exhibitors of such infringing motion picture shall not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars nor be less than two hundred and fifty dollars. But the foregoing exceptions shall not deprive the copyright proprietor of any other remedy given him under this law, nor shall the limitation as to the amount of recovery apply to infringements occurring after the actual notice to a defendant, either by service of process in a suit or other written notice served upon him.

A series of motion pictures has recently been made for the Government on the Engle Dam, at Elephant Butte, New Mexico. These pictures are to be exhibited generally throughout the United States, and in Europe, following the policy of publicity through motion pictures of important works undertaken by the Government. The most interesting of the series was taken from a basket suspended from a cableway across the Rio Grande. The operator was lowered into the foundation pit at the west bank thereof, and with the basket 400 feet above the bottom of the pit took operative pictures while three heavy blasts were fired. With his active camera he was then moved over the river and lowered nearly to the surface thereof, the camera during the descent being made to describe a circle, taking in the entire work.

The Campagnie Generale de Phonographes, Cinematographs et Appareils de Precision, of Paris, France, has registered "KOK" as a mark for Kinematographic films, used since July 1, 1912. No. 62,310.

The Societe Anonyme Utocolor La Garenne Colombes, France, has registered "UTOCOLOR" as a trade-mark for sensitive tapers for photography. Used since September 28, 1911. No. 87,672.

Application has been made by the Societe Francaise des Films et Cinematographs Eclair, New York City, for registration of the word "UNIVERSAL" for moving picture films. Claims use since July 1, 1912.

It has been decided by the Patent Office that the words "GOLDEN STATE" are not registerable as a technical trade-mark, since they constitute a name or term applied to California, and are therefore geographical, and public property. This is in line with a former decision in which registration of the words "BAY STATE" was refused on the ground that these words indicated the State of Massachusetts. Query: How about "NUTMEG?"

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the Moving Picture News.

Geo. Wm. Meiatt

(Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

"THE MAN FROM THE NORTH POLE"
Crystal Films, October 6th.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

THE ELUSIVE IDEA

WE wrote a little essay a week or so ago on "The Elusive Idea" and endeavored to suggest to the aspiring picture playwright how, when and where to snare the original idea for the moving picture plot. We are now going to hand out a dissertation on the Idea-Not-So-Elusive—namely the stolen idea. Edison, we believe, was the first concern to employ a magazine and book reader. The plan is no longer an innovation. Other editorial departments, sad to relate, have found a magazine reader of prime necessity. In other words, this personage is to be known as the "Detector of Stolen Ideas." There are more idea thieves writing picture plays right now than at any time in the history of the profession. True, 'tis a pity, pity 'tis 'tis true. The writer who would ponder long before he abstracted an idea from one magazine story, re-dressed it and sent it along to another magazine editor, will happily "swipe" the central idea or plot from a magazine or book, revamp it and send it along to the picture play editor and brazenly label it "original." There is no propriety in using copyrighted stories as foundations for picture plays. It is as dishonest a proccdure as if you should rob your neighbor of his silverware. The scenario editors have been deceived upon a number of occasions, but never more than once by the same writer. That picture playwright (if he deserves the name) is immediately blacklisted, and measures are taken to see that he does not receive consideration from other editorial departments. Not only does the Idea Thief ruin a market for his own work, but he is responsible for a growing tendency in many editorial departments to deal with certain writers in whom the editor has learned to put faith. The open market will invariably be more or less open to the honest, hardworking picture playwright who digs for his ideas and presents them painstakingly, but such efforts are impaired by the conscienceless individual who persists in cribbing stuff from copyrighted stories and sending in ever-increasing numbers to the vigilant script editor.

The Universal Film Company Editorial Department is the latest to take measures of precaution against the Idea Thief. All the leading periodicals, magazines, novels and weeklies are now read in the editorial department of the Universal Company. Not only late issues but back files are being closely scanned, and it will go hard with idea thieves who try to impose hereafter on the Universal editors. Other editors are rapidly coming to the same plan. It is to be regretted that this action is deemed necessary.

* * *

NOW A CHAMPION DIRECTOR

Hal Reid, erstwhile editor of the Universal, is now a Champion director. He got $150 weekly salary when he was editor.

* * *

KEEP A STIFF UPPER LIP

Leavenworth, Kan., writes as follows:

> "While it is not necessary to go into the harrowing details, I must confess that I have been properly 'stung' and regret the delay a correspondence school course had caused me. Your articles are not exactly inspiring to a green, would-be picture playwright, but they have not succeeded in entirely destroying the conviction I have that, with proper training, in time, I can succeed in putting over a successful scenario and I do not look for any golden returns, either. It seems to be a very poorly paid profession. I get so interested in watching the development of the play at the theatre that I forget to take notes. Is the accepted length of a scenario limited to three typewritten pages? Is it permissible to use a theme suggested by a poem?"

The delay caused by toiling through a course of "college" sprouts is time that could well be utilized in studying how to succeed as a picture playwright. Much time must also be utilized in unlearning many of the "no-education-necessary" recipes drilled into the student by the "college" "professor." We feel that it is a case of love's labor lost if our department is not inspiring to a certain extent to the beginner. We have endeavored to preach optimism, perseverance, honesty, and study to the picture playwright. With these qualifications, an ounce or two of originality and a typewriter, there is no reason why the beginner should not scale the ladder to successful authorship. The editor of this department wrote his first script five times before it sold. In those days the would-be picture playwright had little or no encouragement and no trade journal or textbook was published to hasten his plodding footsteps. We studied the picture plays, studied our rejected scripts in an endeavor to try and perceive why they were not available; continued writing, undiscouraged by repeated rejections, and, in time, perseverance conquered and we gained a measure of success. Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well. The profession of script writing is not for the easily discouraged. The script editor of to-day was the tyro of yesterday. What he has done you may do, if you are willing to work hard and remain optimistic. By hundreds of personal letters, and in this department, we have endeavored to encourage the worthy beginner. But to a certain extent, the Lord helps those who help themselves. The department editor and script editor can suggest, but they cannot supply certain qualifications that are essential to picture-play writing.

There seems to be a widespread misunderstanding anent the three-page script. What we meant to convey was that three pages of proper MS. paper should be sufficient for the present-day script. Remember, there is no dialogue and brevity is more often the soul of wit. With a short cast of characters, and a 250-word synopsis, the additional pages typewritten single-space, should be sufficient to describe the action of an ordinary length script of twenty scenes. The director may shoot your action into thirty-three and one-third scenes. But so long as you get your idea over briefly and convincingly your part of the work is ended.

* * *

TALE OF A COMET

An authoress writes in from Colorado Springs, Colo., stating that, despite the fact that she enclosed a stamped self-addressed envelope with her script, "The Minister's Wife," last May and has queried for its return, it is impossible for her to get a report from the Comet Film Company. Cheer up! Last winter we submitted a script to the Comet Company and got it back last week. It was found reposing in a drawer underneath a lot of old papers. On the back, in dirty lead-pencil, was scribbled "Very good comedy, indeed." A number have written complaining of scripts submitted to the Comet Company before the Universal merger. Comet is a part of the Universal Film Company, and all scripts, excepting those sent Victor and Eclair, should be sent to 1 Union Square, New York City. The Universal Editorial Department is not responsible for scripts submitted to Comet before the merger. Maybe the ancient scripts will come back ultimately, like ours. However, we advise you to kiss them good-bye and rewrite them from carbon copies.

* * *

HUMAN INTEREST

If you can write a human-interest story you should be able to write a picture play. Any "Sob Sister," so called in newspaper parlance, is an adept at human-interest yarns. They are the kind of stories you read in the daily newspaper about the little newsboy falling under the street-car and having a leg crushed, etc. The human-interest story is full of color and heart-throbs. So should be the moving picture play of the pathetic or emotional variety. Let us endeavor to ensnare the heart-throb story from the daily newspaper where so many picture playwrights look for emotional inspiration and seldom capture it. We'll just write one and term it "The Officer Who Weakened."

> Officer Mark Bosworth has taken his life in his hands on many occasions to uphold the law. As a faithful policeman, he has always remembered that the first and last requisite of men in his position is to perform his duties without fear or question, and to obey orders. But Officer Mark Bosworth flatly disobeyed an order from his chief! When it came to shooting a pair of beautiful Irish setter puppies, Officer Bosworth's heart and hand failed him. The puppies were in a collection that had been taken off the street by the dog catchers. He had been told to shoot them all by his Chief of Police, that being the city's way of getting rid of its homeless canines. Officer Bosworth went into the dog pound. His revolver was loaded and cocked. The two puppies had been taught something, young as they were. They dropped to the ground and looked complacently into the officer's face. One licked his hand. They knew he was a friend—he must be! Whereupon, Officer Bosworth lowered his revolver, let the hammer down gently, put the weapon back into its holster, and went back to the police station. "I can't do it," he said to the chief. "They haven't hurt anyone; fire me, if you want to!" That officer should know that sentiment must play no part in carrying out lawful orders. Certainly not! His chief knew it; had often expressed such ideas. And yet—well, Officer Bosworth is still on the police force!

Can you find the human-interest touch? It may be somewhere in the above story. See if you can discover it and cause a picture-play director to welcome it, too. When the human-interest touch is discovered and written by the author, appreciated and fostered by the director, there results one of those rare picture plays, the kind, professionally speaking, that "go over."

A Change in Order

Effective this week, the script reading department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is a thing of the past, according to statements of officers of the company. Messrs. Hoadley, Schulberg, Roach and Hall, who have done yeoman service, will be assigned to the scenario departments of various companies. Hereafter writers will send their scripts to the different Universal concerns, as was the custom before the central reading bureau was inaugurated. It is said that the idea was unsatisfactory in many ways. WM. LORD WRIGHT.

CHICAGO SCREEN CLUB BEING FORMED

Following the good example set by their brethren in New York recently, a movement has been started in Chicago by those interested in various phases of the moving picture industry toward the formation of a Chicago Screen Club. About eighteen men connected with different branches of the industry met on Wednesday of last week and formed themselves into a temporary committee. Organization plans were discussed and arrangements were perfected for a general meeting of all those interested at an early date. Some time this week a call will be issued to all eligibles, and at the first regular meeting of those answering the invitation the temporary committee will be dissolved and a permanent organization effected. It is expected that this movement will meet with hearty indorsement of all Chicago motion picture men.

Mr. E. J. Cugnet, expert camera man with the Eclair Company, returned Saturday, September 28th, from Altoona, Pa. There he cinematographed, "by appointment," the Semi-Centennial "Loyal War Governor's Conference," held Sept. 24th to 26th. It is not to be a public release, but it is to be kept by their society in their historical archives. Score another for the moving pictures.

Wichita, Kan.—The Colonial Theatre, owned by A. P. Mackey, of Denver, was sold Tuesday to D. H. Spitzer & Co. Mr. Cunningham, who has been manager of the theatre for the past eighteen months, severed his connection, and Mr. Spitzer assumed the management on August 1. Mr. Cunningham will remain in Wichita. The Spitzer company runs moving picture shows in Missouri, Colorado and Kansas. It will have its headquarters in Wichita. The Colonial Theatre was opened in 1910.

Educate Your Patrons

It will pay you well to teach your patrons all about Moving Pictures.

The more they know about the picture players, their likes and personalities, and the more they know about the stories of the films the more frequently they will come to your theatre.

The Purpose of the Motion Picture Story Magazine is to educate people in regard to Motion Pictures and it is doing its work well.

Its increases of circulation for the month of October on orders already received is 20,000 and we expect a further equal increase for the month of November.

Why not send $1.00 for trial order of ten copies? We will take back unsold copies and refund their cost. All we ask is a trial. You will be surprised at the result.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

26 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ON ACCOUNT OF A HANDKERCHIEF
Reliance release, October 16th

THE ORGAN GRINDER'S WARD
Reliance release October 19th.

LETTERS OF A LIFETIME

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Thanhouser Release)

JOHN LANGDON opened and closed the front door slowly, turned on the electric light and stood looking around him as he took off his gloves.

On the table lay some letters. He took them up and began to open them one by one: bills, invitations, begging letters, and finally a personal letter from Dr. Craddock, Mr. Langdon's physician.

For a moment his heart beat a little faster. He hesitated a moment, and then with a slight shrug he drew out the letter and read it. His face paled, but his step was steady as he walked into the library. He sat at his desk and gave himself up to thought.

For some time John Langdon had been troubled by an affection of the heart. His physician had been unable to help him and had frankly said so. Then, about two weeks before the writing of the letter, a consultation of specialists was held to decide upon the case. The letter stated that Langdon could not live more than a month.

So it was of this and the past that he was thinking as he sat at the desk staring at the crowded pigeonholes.

After all, he thought, who cared whether he died? He could not think of a single person to whom it would make any difference. His funeral would be well attended, no doubt, because he was well known, but no one would grieve for him.

Never until now, when he sat face to face with himself, did he realize his utter lack of friends.

It was after midnight and he felt as though sleep were impossible. He would look over some papers, he thought, for they must be looked over some time.

Package after package he looked through almost mechanically. Then he drew out a package of letters and sat staring at them.

All was silence as the old man sat there thinking over the past years.

The clock in the hall struck two and startled him from his reverie. He sighed and cut the string that bound the package of letters. Then he looked at the dates on them and arranged them accordingly. The first letter was from a lawyer, now long dead:

"Mr. John Langdon:

"Dear Sir:—I am writing to inform you that your uncle, Mr. Hubert Langdon, has left his entire fortune to you and your brother Charles, provided you remain bachelors. If either of you marry, his portion goes to the other.

"Kindly communicate with me as soon as possible.

"Very truly yours,
"Henry Haynes,
"Attorney at Law."

How well John Langdon remembered the receipt of that letter. He and his brother were both in love with the same girl, but neither of them were engaged to her.

The old uncle was a woman-hater of the bitterest kind. He had determined that no woman should have any of his money as far as he could help it.

"Well, Charlie, what are you going to do about it?" John Langdon had said to his brother.

How well he remembered Charles' look as he said: "There is but one thing to do. I love Anna and I shall not give her up for all the money in the world if I can help it."

The old man felt the blood rise to his wrinkled cheeks as his answer came back to his memory: "All right," he had said, laughing, "you take the girl and I'll take the money. I wouldn't give it up for any woman in the world. I'm going to New York to-night."

He had gone to New York and had made it his home ever since.

The city was waiting for him, ready to give him what he wished to take. With a fortune at his command he plunged into the kind of life that asked money as the only recommendation.

He took up the second letter. It ran:

"Dear John:—I have won the consent of Anna to become my wife and am supremely happy. I hope the money is making you as happy."

There was more to the letter, but nothing of importance. The old man smiled slightly and took up the third. It was dated two years later:

"Dear John:—Things have gone rather badly in business this winter and I am writing to ask you for a loan; $500 will do, and I feel sure I shall be able to return it very soon."

Several other notes, each date a little later, showed plainly that the money had never been sent.

The old man sat still, thinking deeply. His brows were drawn together and his lips set in a thin line. He looked at the date of the letter he had just read. Yes, he was sure that was written when he was preparing for a cruise in his yacht and he had not had time to attend to the letter.

Then came another written a few months after:

"I am writing to tell you that we have lost our youngest boy. If he had had the comforts that only money can buy he would not have died. You could have saved him, John, and you never lifted a hand to do it. Money seems to have taken away your heart."

Many years had passed since that was written, but now the words seemed to burn into the man's soul. "Am I like that?" he asked himself. "Has my money taken away my heart?"

Men usually look at things very differently when death is staring them in the face. John Langdon sat now, his memory bringing before his eyes pictures that he would rather forget. He had enjoyed those things then—or thought he did, but after all what real pleasure did he get out of them? It was empty, and now he had nothing but money and all of that would not buy a friend.

It had been many years since the two brothers had communicated with each other. But what the one had gained in wealth the other one had gained in the love of his wife and children and grand-children.

A step sounded in the hall and the old man came back from the past with a start. In a moment a servant laid a letter on the desk. Mechanically it was opened and slowly read. It ran as follows:

"Dear Brother:—It has been many years since we have written to one another, but we are still brothers. I have just heard of your illness and we all want you to come to us. We are very far from rich, but we are comfortable and will welcome you gladly if you care to come.

"Your affectionate brother, "Charles."

The letter trembled in the wrinkled hand.

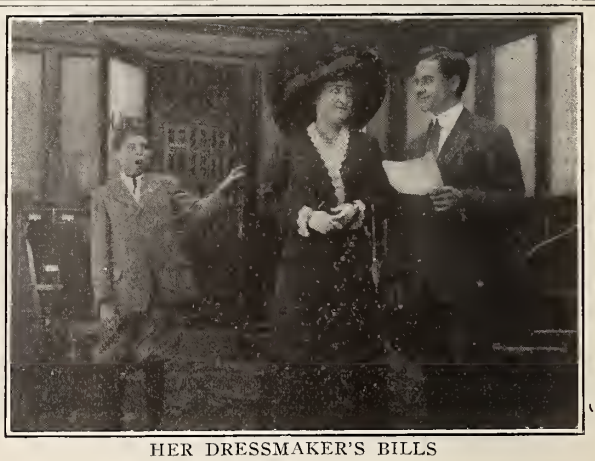
"Open the shutters, William," he said to the servant, rising slowly from his chair.

In a moment the sunshine flooded the room.

"The sun," he said weakly.

"Yes, sir, it is late," answered the servant.

"Too late, I fear, too late," muttered the old man as he fell back into his chair.



HER DRESSMAKER'S BILLS
Crystal Films—October 13th.

MANUFACTURERS NOTES

'Tis said that nothing more breezy has been seen on the screen in natural tints than the ocean surf-bathing at Manly Beach, nor anything more charming than a female beauty competition held at Melbourne—a pictorial record which strongly establishes the Victorian damsels' claim to rank with the fairest women in the world. Both of these interesting subjects have been included in the Scala Theatre, London, programme. These scenes have but recently been received by Mr. Charles Urban, of Kinemacolor, from his traveling operators in Australasia.

* * * *

Your bally Lawrence D'Orsay, English buffoon, had been seen in film plays invariably dancing to the time of the bad man's .44 for the edification of the cowboys gathered about Dynamite Dan's bar, but not until now has he been given a sufficiently serious part to enable him to prove that he possessed brains without going to the bother of exhibiting same, b'Jove! In the "Flying A" release for Wednesday, October 16, however, the monocled individual with the weeping willow on his upper lip turns the tables in an exciting sleuthing story entitled "The Border Detective." He happens to know that in this day of wheels within wheels, the trail of the law-breaker is likely to lead to the door of the law-maker, so when the border customs officials call upon his detective talent to solve the opium smuggling mysteries, he comes upon the trail of one of the very custom officials employed by the Government to help prevent smuggling. Of course, the customs men have tried to track the culprit, and one of them, whose sweetheart is his aid, bids fair to capture the smuggler. But just when success seems in his grasp, the crafty villain turns the tables and the customs man lands in his toils. The cockney individual gets his grand opportunity for a display of genuine nerve when he utilizes the opportunity to rescue the honest official from a burning cabin. This also leads to the capture of the smuggler, after which it is definitely proven that the blooming deuced cut-up with the broad accent is not at all a Londoner, but a border detective in disguise! Which might also explain how it comes that so appearing a personage can have brains.

* * * *

Mr. Stanley Twist, publicity man of the Selig Polyscope Co., narrowly escaped death recently by a fall from the hydroaeroplane of Beckwith Havens. Mr. Twist volunteered to make an ascent with Havens for the sake of getting a picture. The machine turned a complete somersault on the surface of the lake, above which it had been manoeuvering, and Twist was thrown through the air about fifteen feet before he struck the water. Attempting to swim in his heavy clothing, he was soon swamped, and was rescued through the presence of mind of Miss Kathlyn Williams, who, putting the motorboat in which she had witnessed the accident to full speed, reached him as he was sinking.

* * * *

October 14 has been announced by the Selig Polyscope Company as the release date for their long-looked-for and much-heralded masterpiece, "Monte Christo." The release, in three reels, will be handled exclusively by the General Film Co., and bids fair to outrival anything that this ambitious company has yet accomplished. A splendid array of publicity aids are being prepared for the exhibitor.

* * * *

Mr. W. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., has returned to Chicago from a prolonged business trip to his Western studios. While in Los Angeles, Mr. Selig made preparations to establish several separate stock companies in the Edendale Studios. He plans to have a separate company for each producer's individual use. Each company is to be fully equipped and under the direct charge of the producer selecting the players. As there are now five working producers at the Los Angeles studios, it follows that there will undoubtedly be five complete companies at this studio alone. If the experiment works out well Mr. Selig may decide to place the same system in effect at the Chicago and Colorado studios.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

Broncho

"For the Honor of the 7th" is a rather interesting military drama, with no particular individuality attached.

Kalem

"The Queen of the Kitchen," a snappy comedy with plenty of good fun.

"Along the River Nile" is more than ordinarily interesting. It shows the natives at work at the different industries of the soil which are practised along that historic stream.

Vitagraph

"Old Bill Wilson's Gal" is a very excellent drama of more than ordinary strength.

"The Irony of Fate" is an ambitious production of more than ordinary merit. It is a story of what was and what might have been, presented in splendid dramatic fashion.

Biograph

"So Near and Yet So Far" is where "Little Mary" shines again. It is light comedy and very good.

Lubin

"The Doctor's Debt," though not specially startling, is still very interesting and well produced.

Thanhouser

"A Six-Cylinder Elopement" is a fairly good comedy.

Comet

"Love Will Find a Way" is not by any means Comet's best.

"Miss Robinson Crusoe" is a rather remarkable film in two parts, in which Miss Flo La Badie, a Thanhouser favorite of frail dimensions, handles a formidable snake in a most startling manner.

Majestic

"The Little Music Teacher" is very acceptable and sweet in outline.

American

"A Sister's Devotion" is very good. The moral of the story is not, however, brought out as strongly as it could be.

"The Reformation of Sierra Smith" is one of American's best.

"The Promise" in quality follows the lead of the last mentioned, and shows some splendid dramatic work.

Reliance

"Time Avenges" is a very nicely produced drama, although a little more distinctness of plot would have been an improvement.

Gaumont Weekly

shows the following interesting subjects: "Climbing the Alps," "A Girl from Wyoming," "An Antwerp Anniversary," "Tempest on French Coast," "Pittsburgh Auto Races," "Tearing Down Santa Monica," "Military Review at Dresden," "Aviator in Aerial Masquerade," "Beckwith Haven's Machine Falls in Lake," "A French Freight Wreck," "Exhibition of Toy Aerohydroplanes," "Japs Select Site for Buildings at Panama Exhibition," "Gowns for Autumn Hunts," "Deepening a Russian Harbor."

Pathe's Weekly

"'Perseus' strikes rock and sinks after being docked at Astoria," "Burial of General Booth," "A tornado does considerable damage at Syracuse," "Woodmen of the World parade at Muskogee, Okla.," "Chadd's Ford, Pa., famous battlefield of Brandywine, is now a farm," "Bonar Law speaks to 30,000 Unionists at London," "Mardi Gras Parade at Coney Island," "Fernglen, Mo., a Pacific Missouri train leaves rails going at 70 miles an hour and killed two trainmen," "Amiot of Paris exhibits objects made with 80,000 matches," "Baseball—Giants and Cubs."

Nutley, N. J.—The first moving picture show was opened on Franklin avenue opposite New street, Mr. Dickinson having charge.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster and James Girvan

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION NO. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Recording Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1, of G. N. Y., will hold their next regular meeting on Monday, October 7, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York, at 12 o'clock midnight. This meeting will be one of importance to the members and a full attendance is requested. One of the main features will be election and installation of officers. There will be some prominent speakers to explain to the boys many interesting things that will assist them in their efforts to bring about practical results and better their conditions, which beyond a doubt must come, owing to the steadfastness shown up to the present time.

Greater progress could not be made in any organization of longer standing than that made by the M. P. Machine Operators Union No. 1, of New York, after being dealt with so undeservingly by Local No. 35, which was the parent Local to this Union, which was formerly called the Auxiliary.

When this organization was a part of No. 35 the members had to pay dues and other tax, and were to be protected by the so-called Mother Local; but if a mother would protect her child as this local protected their Auxiliary, the parent would be haled to court to answer the charge lodged against them by a protecting society, and the child would be taken away and justice would be served.

Can you imagine a mother living on the fat of the land and allowing her child to gradually starve, by taking every penny that the child had and then saying go out and get another hundred dollars to fatten up the mother a little more, but when the child cried and pleaded for assistance and protection, the wretched parent tried to choke it to death? But there are laws in the land that punish the guilty and give justice to the oppressed.

These are real facts, for Local No. 35 adopted the Auxiliary five years ago, took the dues and tax all these years, and when justice and protection was asked, tried to deal a death blow by thrusting the (child) Auxiliary out into the cold; but the blow was not strong enough to cause death. Thanks to the officers and members who were the organizers of the independent movement, for the great work they have undertaken and accomplished in building up a strong organization that has come to the rescue of their fellow craftsmen and are assisting them in their demand for justice, and trust that the A. F. of L., through their worthy president, the Honorable Samuel Gompers, will render a decision that will be fair and just to the M. P. Machine Operators Union No. 1 of New York. The progress which is being made by the independent movement is causing quite a commotion in the rank of the newly-formed Branch No. 35.

The membership has grown so strong during the two months of the existence of No. 1 that the entrance fee is being raised to $5 in spite of the fact that the opposing local is giving and has offered men Union cards with a month's dues paid up, to entice them to become members of their new branch, but it did not meet with success, as the men remain loyal to No. 1 and cannot forget the mean tactics used upon them when they were in the old Auxiliary. One of the mean tactics used was the breaking of the schedule, which did not allow an Auxiliary man to carry the reels to and from film exchanges, but the men of the mother local did carry them. Now No. 35 is breaking its own wage scale and offers to work for any price from $15 per week up, but the exhibitors are well satisfied to pay the schedule and more to the independent Union members.

The delegate of No. 1 received word from a brother employed in a Brooklyn theatre that one of the new No. 35 Branch members approached his boss and offered to work for $18 a week, carry the reels and pay car fare. When the delegate went to settle the trouble, the exhibitor told him he was well satisfied with the Independent Union man, was paying him $24, not carrying reels, and was going to keep him with the same salary and condition as in the past. Another theatre on the Bowery, New York City, had a new Branch No. 35 man employed at $16. The operator was a relative of the Branch delegate.

This is No. 35's version of a Union. You might as well compare a dog's kennel to the Hotel Waldorf. Nevertheless, the members of No. 1 forgive the ignorant, for 'tis folly to be wise where ignorance is bliss, and trust that the weak-minded members of that organization who are opposed to see justice served, may soon realize the grave mistake they have made. The above statement can be verified on demand.

NOTICE: Operators wishing to make applications for membership in the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1 of Greater New York can do so at the office of the Union, 133 Third avenue, top floor, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 5.30 p. m. every day. The old entrance fee will remain in force until the next meeting.

A word to the wise is sufficient.

Be a Yankee, or at least a thorough American. Demand representation or don't pay taxation.

Any person desiring to subscribe for the M. P. News will receive full particulars, and may call at the office of the News, No. 30 West 13th street, near 6th avenue, or to Ralph J. Knaster, office, 133 Third avenue, New York City, or by mail to the above addresses.

A letter was received by the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1. The letter was sent from Atlanta, Ga., and addressed to the treasurer, Robert Levy, and referred to President Goldblatt to be answered.

A Copy of Original Letter Sent to the M. P. M. Operators Union No. 1, of New York, N. Y.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 23, 1912.

Mr. Robt. Levy,
M. P. M. O. Union No. 1.,
New York, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—Please send me such information as you can concerning the Independent Operators' Union, as I would like to get in closer touch with your organization. Atlanta has an I. A. T. S. E. Operators' Local, but the members seem to be dissatisfied. Such information as you can give will be appreciated.

Yours truly,
J. H. O., Operator.

Copy of Answer Sent to the Writer of Above Letter

White Plains, N. Y.,
September 28, 1912.

Mr. J. H. O., Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:—I appreciate your being interested in our Independent Organization. In spite of the fact that we are doing so well I would not care to encourage the M. P. Operators of your city to form an Independent Union in opposition to the I. A. T. S. E.

I have been delegate to the last Convention at Peoria, Ill., and don't remember hearing the delegate of Atlanta Local of Operators complain, but something might have sprung up in the meantime; if so, I would suggest to take their grievance to the next Convention, and I guarantee that they will get satisfaction. It is by no means our aim to remain independent of the I. A. T. S. E. All we ask for is a direct charter. Inclosed find a circular letter, copy of original, we sent to President Gompers, that will make you familiar with our situation.

Permit me to advise you to join the Atlanta Local of Operators, as it appears to me from your letter that you are not a member. I dare say that you will make a good one.

Trusting to hear from you,
Yours respectfully,
Robt. Goldblatt, President.

QUESTION BOX

By Mr. R. J. Kay

September 24, 1912.

Mr. Alfred H. Saunders:

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly settle a dispute between another operator and me? I always use my condensers, the 7½ to the light and the 6½ to the film sides. The other gentleman does the reverse. Using a Powers No. 6 complete outfit on D. C. at a throw from 50 to 65 feet, and having a picture varying from 12 x 16 to 16 x 20, which setting of condensers will give better results, and which way is the right way?

I have tried the others, but don't feel satisfied. Thanking you in advance, I am

Sincerely yours,
Elias Monason.

Kindly print this and your reply in your M. P. News.

To the Brother Operator, E. Monason:

In reply to your query, I advise you under conditions stated in yours of the 24th inst., that you get better results by placing your 6½ condenser toward the arc and the 7½ condenser toward the head or front of the mount, which is also the proper way.

* * * *

Roanoke, Va.,
September 20, 1912.

Friend Mr. Kay:

I take the liberty of asking you to kindly inform me through your columns what you think can remedy my trouble. I have had a good light on my screen until this week, when one of my lugs burned off. I put in new No. 6 wire, asbestos-covered, and new lugs, and since then I am troubled with a poor light; am using A. C. current.

Thanking you in advance for your favor,

Respectfully yours,
J. S. Operator.

To Brother J. S., Roanoke, Va.:

If you will take the trouble of looking over your lugs and connections you no doubt will find a loose connection, as that has been the trouble of a good many operators.

* * * *

Passaic, N. J.,
September 29, 1912.

Dear Mr. R. J. Kay:

I have noticed that you have taken up the trouble, or so-called Question Box, which should prove a boon to all brother operators, as being published by an actual operator with a vast experience. I have placed a new machine with motor in our theatre and all connections are new; in fact everything in my booth is new from the factory; but I have a lot of trouble with fuse-blowing and receive a shock every time I put on my table switch. Have looked everything over, but cannot locate the trouble. Kindly explain, if you can, to help me out of my predicament.

Yours truly,
S. B., Passaic, N. J.

To S. B., Passaic, N. J.:

Your troubles are very simple. You have a ground in your table switch. You may have a new outfit, but a brother recently had the same trouble and I visited him in his booth and located the same, owing to the fibre tubing in his table switch box, which was damp and the lug was touching, made a short. This I am sure you will find is your trouble.

* * * *

Brooklyn, N. Y.,
September 30, 1912.

Mr. Editor of the Question Box:

I am working in Brooklyn at a certain theatre on Myrtle avenue and I have trouble in getting a clear picture, no matter how I try to focus my lense. I have a good clear spot, but can't get results on the screen.

Yours,
Isaac M., Operator.

Mr. Isaac M.:

If you will invest five cents at the nearest drug store for wood alcohol and clean your condenser and lens you will find your troubles remedied.

FIRST CALIFORNIA KEYSTONE RELEASE

The first of the California Keystone films is the release of October 14, "Stolen Glory." This is one of the most unique pictures ever seen upon a screen, combining the most laughable comedy with a topical subject, in which are introduced magnificent and sensational battle scenes.

The Keystone Company took advantage of the fact that there was to be a parade of the old Civil War veterans at Los Angeles to work in a very clever story. The permission of the Government was obtained to secure the services of the old soldiers who reside in the big home at Santa Monica, and these old heroes, whose ranks are being decimated at an alarming rate (some of them being more than one hundred years old) took childish delight in the moving pictures being made of them. The leading parts, of course, are played by the Keystone actors, including Fred Mace, Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling and Mrs. Davenport (the mother of Dorothy Davenport).

KLEINE RELEASES

The Kleine schedule for this week contains two absorbing dramas of widely divergent theme and character, and both splendidly staged and grippingly portrayed.

The first, "A Roman's Conversion," by the Eclipse Company, is laid in the period of the early days of Christianity and depicts with vividness and realism the sufferings of the early martyrs and their oppression by the luxurious pleasure-loving and mythological god-worshipping Romans. To complete the reel a picturesque and delightful series of views, typical of English rural life and of what may be seen on a jaunt through the romantic and historic Derbyshire Dales of England, makes an acceptable finale.

The second, "Trailing the Counterfeiters," by the Cines Company, is in the nature of a melodrama and is replete with exciting scenes and thrilling situations.

A comedy is also on the list and in the Cines farce, "The Wonder Powders."

An industrial subject by Cines and two scenics round out a very complete and admirable programme to select from. "Artistic Glass Work" shows us clearly and very entertainingly the processes involved in blowing glass into the various delicate and beautiful vases and objects of art with which we delight to ornament our homes.

Magnificent panoramic views of Palermo, Sicily, its bay and surroundings as seen from the top of Mount Pellegrino, are shown in the Cines travel subject, "A Glimpse of Sicily."

"Agfa"
Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)
RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

MOTION PICTURE SCENARIOS
WANTED
SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO COMEDIES
KINEMACOLOR CO. OF AMERICA
Dept. T Mecca Bldg., New York, N. Y.

THE WINNER AND THE SPOILS
Majestic release Oct. 8th.

N. Y. MOTION PICTURE CO. VS. UNIVERSAL

Justice Delany Declines to Grant Application During Pendency of Action

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company won a point in the New York Supreme Court in a lengthy decision given by Justice Delany on a motion made by the New York Motion Picture Company.

The court recites the probable effect of the granting of the motion on either party to the suit and adds: "If the plaintiff's ultimate success appears to be doubtful the court is constrained to deny such a motion." Justice Delany then reviews the history of the two contending parties prior to the agreement to consolidate their business in order to improve the trade, prevent waste and generally solidify their interests, which it is claimed were needed for profit and standing.

After an exhaustive statement of the negotiations and agreements entered into by the two parties, Justice Delany concludes:

"The most striking feature of the moving papers and exhibits is that not a question, as it seems to me, can be raised as to the sufficiency or the regularity of these transactions so far as set forth in the documentary exhibits, and they of themselves are ample to tell the entire story of the course pursued by the parties. The only transactions which might be considered as vitiating the contract depend on statements of Bauman without the support of any writing incidental to the matter. It must be observed, although it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of it now, that there are several defendants who, it is claimed, were similarly with the plaintiff interested in the undertaking, and who had invested their entire businesses in it, and I do not see that any action on the part of the plaintiff has been taken to do the equities which might be necessary to minimize their damage if the plaintiff is entitled to change his position in this transaction."

The opinion treats at length of the contention of the New York Motion Picture Company that the merger was in restraint of trade. "It is contended that the contracts are void because their tendency is to monopolize and restrain trade," says Justice Delany. "The papers of the moving party referring to the defendant and these transactions frequently use the terms 'combination,' 'scheme,' 'conspiracy,' 'fraudulent arrangement,' and the like, but I have scarched for specific allegations which would justify the sinister meaning evidently intended to be given to them without avail."

The Justice concludes: "There appears to be no further need to discuss this motion. It is plain to me that apart from other considerations plaintiff has not shown in its moving papers such a clear right to the relief sought pendente lite as would warrant this court to intervene in behalf with injunctions which would in all likelihood do irreparable injury to the defendant. Motion denied, with $10 costs."

Mr. Charles Kessel, of the N. Y. Motion Picture Co., Makes Statement

The decision recently handed down by Justice Delany was in an action commenced by the New York Motion Picture Company against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and others, to have certain agreements delivered up and cancelled, and for an injunction restraining the Universal Company from instituting litigation against it pending the agreement.

An injunction has been in force against the Universal Company for upward of six weeks, and the decision of the court was to the effect that it did not feel reasonably certain that the New York Motion Picture Company has asked for the proper relief in that action, and could not continue the injunction before the trial. This decision constitutes the opinion of one judge, and the New York Motion Picture Company will promptly appeal to the Appellate Division, where it will seek to have the higher court reverse the decision of the lower court.

This action has no direct bearing upon the general merits of the question whether or not the Universal Company can interfere with the business of the New York Motion Picture Company, but only whether or not the New York Motion Picture Company can restrain the Universal Company from commencing any further lawsuits.

The real question between the parties was decided in the recent suit started in the Supreme Court of this State by the Universal Company against the New York Motion Picture Company, wherein its motion for restraining order against the New York Motion Picture Company was denied.

The New York Motion Picture Company is now prepared as it has ever been to meet the Universal Company in any litigation that it may see fit to commence, if the Universal Company prefers that method of warfare to competing with the New York Motion Picture Company on the basis of quality, which, after all, must be the real test among makers of motion pictures.

Lawsuits do not benefit the exhibitor, and the New York Motion Picture Company considers the quarrel instituted by the Universal Company a subordinate issue.

CHAS. KESSEL.

JURY DISAGREES ON EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGE

Harry A. Durst, a moving picture show promoter and vice-president and superintendent of the Gem Kinematograph Company, at 2235 Vine street, Phila., was placed on trial on a charge of embezzlement, but the jury in Quarter Sessions Court could not reach a verdict and the defendant was permitted by Judge Martin to re-enter bail in $1,000 until he is again summoned for trial.

George Corbian, the president of the concern, testified that Durst took theatrical properties valued at $2,300 from the Gem Company last November.

Attorney C. S. Patterson, Jr., counsel for Durst, contended that the company was not legally a corporation and further produced evidence to prove that Durst took about $1,200 worth of property to which he believed he was entitled after having a dispute with Corbian.

A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT
Eclair release Oct. 10th.

CAPRICES OF FORTUNE—IN TWO PARTS

(Eclair Film Company, October 17th)

The Germans have a saying which fits perfectly to this story. It is in effect something like this: Why wander far from home and over seas to fickle mountain sides in search of gold when most likely a fortune is at your door?

This production is another fruit of the recent trip the Eclair Company made throughout the East. In it are presented some striking and interesting views of the great steel mills at Homestead, Pa. Another praiseworthy scene is the Mexican Cabaret. In this scene appear a number of specially engaged dancers led by Mlle. Lilly Lenore, the famous European premiere.

Mr. Lamar Johnstone gives one of the best interpretations which he has presented among a long list of many previous good ones. There is always a conviction of sincerity in everything Mr. Johnstone does, and while almost a newcomer to the picture play he is fast approaching the very top; also might be mentioned the accomplished work of Miss Goodstadt. Her face is new to the writer, but from her work in this picture he would like to see much more of her in the future.

The following is an outline of the story as it runs:

Will Steadman, a hopeful but meagerly endowed young man, was madly in love with his wealthy second cousin, Bertha Steadman. He has asked her mother for her hand and she reminds him that his present station forbids such a union. Thereupon he asks, "Auntie, if I make my fortune, may I hope to marry Bertha?" Auntie makes a very noncommittal reply, but with that Will starts out to seek his fortune.

As Dame Fortune is capricious, so is Dan Cupid sometimes fiendishly tantalizing. For Clara, a maid at the Steadmans', has long been secretly in love with Will. She is nearby and cannot help but hear Will as he asks for the hand of Bertha. Her hope of months turns to havoc in her heart. Desire is mastered by fear till she hears the aunt reply. And though it means that her secret idol is going away, at least he will not be promised to another, and her "hope eternal" is born again.

Will is away now and Clara steals to the room which once was his, there to dream of his phantom presence, to fondle the things he had touched and gather little souvenirs he had left behind. It was thus she came to find a bit of a torn-up portrait of Will and an old lottery ticket which he in his throes of love had clean forgotten.

Will goes first to Homestead, in Pennsylvania, hoping to find something there where millionaires have been made in a day. But nothing of so fabulous a happening meets his arrival there. Quite to the contrary of his hopes, he meets an affable stranger who garners in every penny the poor fellow possesses. He leaves the land of steel (with the ironical pun of it in his heart) and journeys South among the supremely supine Knights of the Road. Then he heads West, where after one of his ejections from the freight he was riding he meets with a crazy old prospector who interests him with his talk of gold that is going to rot. But the truth is soon learned, and visions of the girl he can't forget push him on into Mexico.

He turns cowboy and his adventures are many, till one day a letter is handed him from home. It is from Clara, telling him a lottery ticket which she had found in his room has won the capital prize. To Will this means he has now the fortune by which he can sue again for the hand of Bertha. But in his absence she has married.

He arrives back home, eager to see his aunt and tell of his fortune. Then he is told that Bertha now belongs to another. Then he comes to Clara to receive his lottery fortune and she, unable to withhold her feelings, breaks down in tears. So Dan Cupid lifts the veil which had hung before his eyes, and shames him. Dame Fortune presents him with what she had already left at his door. One man takes one little true-hearted girl in his arms, nothing is said, but everything is realized. And the greatest little god and the funniest old dame go marching off to continue their eternal labors.

Musical Suggestions for "Caprices of Fortune"

BY WALTER C. SIMON

PART I

Lively Waltz until—

"Auntie! I have an avowal to make to you," then play "She is only a cousin of mine" until "Hope is born in the heart of the lady's companion." Then play "Can't you see I'm lonesome?" until "En Route." Then play "Railroad Rag" until "Awaiting the return of the one she loves." Then play "Bring back my loving Man" until "Near Homestead, the City of Steel." Then play ""Anvil Chorus" until "Your hands are too white to work here." Then play a few measures of "A Waltz" and "Ain't that a shame" until "You are seeking for work? Come with me." Then play "I'm all in, down and out" until "Nine o'clock to-night." Then play "Anvil Chorus" and make a rumbling sound with bass notes to imitate mills as he looks out the window until "The train for the penniless," then play an imitation of a train by striking G. C. E. with the right hand, and making a rumbling sound with the left hand until "Towards the South." Then play a slow two-fourths movement where castinets are used for garden scene, until "William acquires the craze of the prospectors." Then play a "Tremolo" until end of reel.

PART II.

Play a Tremolo until "At the Mexican Cabaret." Then play "Spanish Waltz" and lively 2/4 dances until man starts to kiss woman, then play a "Dramatic Hurry" until "Out West William becomes a cowboy." Then play "Pony Boy" until "He experiences the thrills of an adventurous life." Then play "Indian Music" and a "Galop" until "Fortune still refuses to come." Then play "All I want is 50 million dollars" until "Six months later, while he was sleeping." Then play "Please go 'way and let me sleep" until letter appears, then play "I'll be welcome in my home town" until "William comes to remind his aunt of her promise." Then play "It's Somebody Else" until "I leave to-morrow." Then play a few measures of "Good-bye, little girl, good-bye." "Give my regards to Broadway," and "I won't be back till August" until "My ticket, please." Then play "My heart has learned to love you so do not say good-bye" until "The heart breaks, Truth must out." Then play "Any little girl that's a nice little girl is the right little girl for me," and "Sweetest story ever told" until "And together they took the road to happiness." Then play "It's a long lane that has no turning" until end of picture.

Mr. McGowan, cashier of the Eclair Company, showed the writer one of the most peculiar coincidences which could possibly occur in the moving picture industry by way of bookkeeping figures. The total cost of production of the two plays, "Running for Congress" and "The Governor's Daughter" chances to be identical to the very penny, although there isn't a coincidence in the figures of any single item of expense. In glancing over the figures, as did the writer, it is safe to say that never again in the bookkeeping history of the industry can this peculiar coincidence recur.

Bovey, Minn.—James Barlow will rebuild his moving picture theatre, which was recently destroyed by fire.

Onalaska, Wis.—Earl R. Dunlap will open a motion picture theatre here.

AN EXCITING TIME FOR H. OBROCK, JR.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 12, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Saunders:

I have intended to write you for some time, but have been so busy, traveling around, and have gone through so many exciting experiences, that every duty and pleasure seems to have gone by the board. However, it is not too late, and it is with great pleasure that I am now writing to you. One of the experiences of which I speak happened down in Mexico. I crossed the border, intending to go into the interior, taking moving pictures of more or less well-known spots, and nothing of consequence happened until I had proceeded about one hundred miles. Then things did happen, and they happened mighty fast.

I was ignorant of the hatred held by the Mexicans toward Americans, or at least I had never given it credence, but I soon learned it to my sorrow. We had a hard travel, as we went by automobile, and the roads should not be dignified by such a name. I took a few things along the way, although nothing very interesting, until we came to a small clearing, which boasted of a few huts and two old ramshackle barns, the latter having about one foot of earthen breastworks surrounding them. Also a few soldiers loafed in the doorway of one of the barns. I got out a little further below, preparatory to taking a few feet of the place, and no one paid much attention to me. The chauffeur said he thought the two barns with the breastworks were meant for the inhabitants in case of attack from the Insurgents.

I remember we both laughed at this, as the two barns could not possibly afford much protection to anyone against any kind of an enemy. But I thought I might as well take it, as I was there to take everything that looked the least bit interesting, so without moving my camera from the spot I had first placed it, I was grinding away when I noticed several men coming out of the smallest barn, and after standing in a group a few minutes, talking, one of them broke away and started on a run toward me. I kept right on grinding and, having finished, started back to the machine. The fellow came up with me as I reached the automobile, and although he could not speak one word of English, he made violent motions that I was to go with him. I refused and he took hold of me. Then ensued some sort of a scramble, I hardly know what to call it, and don't know how it would have ended if the chauffeur hadn't noticed several more coming from the barn toward us. He said he thought we were in some kind of trouble and that I had better go and see what they wanted, anyway, as discretion is sometimes the better part of valor.

And I went. I found I was under martial arrest, as one old villainous looking fellow could speak a little English, and so informed me. He further enlightened me by telling me they had decided that I was a spy, otherwise why was I taking a picture of their fort? What with their hatred of Americans and their fear of the rebels, they were not going to take any chances, and he added he had told them he personally thought I was guilty.

By this time I was worried, as there was no time to get word to anyone, and under their martial law all spies are shot at sunrise. At this juncture the rest of the little band came up, and when they heard of my predicament, we all took counsel together. The chauffeur had a happy thought. "Give them the camera," he said, but even in the face of death I couldn't bring myself to give it up, so I suggested to the old fellow to ask the general if he wanted to see my camera. He did. The chauffeur brought it from the car, and I opened it up in their presence, and will you believe it, they all became so interested that they seemed to forget that I was under arrest.

You may be sure I went to great lengths to explain everything, hoping against hope that I would get out of the scrape. At this point of the proceedings a greaser drove up and stopped to see what was the matter. We found he could speak English, and furthermore, that he had seen a moving picture machine before, as some company had taken several scenes of his shack when he lived on the other side of the border, and he argued my cause with the general, with whom he seemed to be on good terms. Afterward he told me how he explained to the general, who is a good friend of his, that it is a common thing to see cameras, such as I have, taking pictures all over the United States, and that I didn't know that I was photographing a fort even.

So after confiscating all of my film, about 800 feet, I was allowed to return to the United States, with the advice to return "quickly," which you may be sure I followed, without further delay. And I can tell you that I thank my lucky stars I am here to tell the tale. I certainly intend to give that part of the country a wide range in the future, and advise any other moving picture man to do the same. I am enclosing a picture of myself, which I promised to you a long time ago. Hoping this finds you in the best of health, I remain, yours,

H. OBROCK, Jr.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Star Theatre will be remodeled for the Saxe Brothers.

"SURPRISING ELIZA"
Eclair, October 8th

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

BIOGRAPH

SO NEAR, YET SO FAR (Sept. 30).—The world may love the lover, but it often tantalizingly throws obstacles in his way. Howard saw the girl and was transfixed with admiration for her. Being of a backward nature, he misses the opportunity to be introduced. The girl is amused at his embarrassment, and when in his fluster he drops his fraternity pin, she picks it up, unobserved by him, and keeps it as a souvenir of their first near-meeting. On several other occasions he almost succeeds in being introduced to her, but always when he is nearest the goal of his desire he is hurled into the depths of despair. Still he persists, until finally his perseverance is rewarded through a most unique trick of fate.

A FEUD IN THE KENTUCKY HILLS (Oct. 3).—The two brothers and the little adopted daughter of the household grew up from childhood together. The girl and the younger brother were childhood sweethearts, he being so different in nature from his elder brother, who was considered the bad man and dead shot of the hills. The younger brother has been living in the valley for a long time and returns to his home at the time the story opens. He is quite a contrast to his elder brother, in fact to the whole family—refined, educated and, of course, a revelation to the little girl, who, though betrothed to the elder brother, is strongly attracted to him. Hence there is a renewal of childhood's affection. This the elder brother ferociously objects to, making it understood that the girl is engaged to him, so the younger boy, for the sake of peace, decides to leave the place. However, fate decrees it otherwise, for an old feud is reawakened and he joins his brother to fight the common enemy. This incident reverses conditions.

RELIANCE

THE BUG AND THE COUNT (Oct. 16).—Simpson, a bug, who has been in jail all his life, is a victim of wonderful dreams. One day he escapes from prison. In the meantime Count Derinsky, who is traveling in America incog. takes a taxi in which the bug had secreted himself. The Count has several letters of introduction to different clubs which the bug relieves him of, also changes clothes with him. The Count is arrested as an escaped convict while the bug takes advantage of the Count's cards and letters and proceeds to enjoy himself until caught cheating at cards. He is thrown out the window. He wanders down the street and some mischievous boys place roller skates on his feet. The bug finds he cannot control the skates and the skates take him back to jail. He awakes to find it all was a dream.

On the same reel:

ON ACCOUNT OF A HANDKERCHIEF.—Jack and Kitty, newlyweds, takes an apartment uptown. Soon after, they meet in front of their house Miss Inwood, who is an old friend of Jack's. Kitty has a very jealous disposition. A day or two later Miss Inwood, putting her initials on her handkerchief by the window, leaves the room and the handkerchief blows out into the court and the draft takes it into Jack and Kitty's apartment. Kitty comes home and finds the handkerchief and, thinking her husband has had Miss Inwood in the apartment, trouble starts. Kitty accuses Jack and Miss Inwood, but everything is explained in the end by Nora, a servant girl, who saw the handkerchief blow out of one window into the other.

THE ORGAN GRINDER'S WARD (Oct. 19).—Pietro, an old Italian organ grinder, is attracted to Betty, a beautiful, kindhearted little girl of twelve, in the poorer section of the city. She brings him a glass of water on a hot day, and later, when she finds him overcome on her doorstep, has her chums help him home with his organ.

Pietro, an Italian nobleman, has adopted the organ grinder's disguise in order to find a villainous Italian Count who has ruined his home and, rumor says, fled to America. Pietro has Betty taught music. Later, showing promise, he sends her and her mother to Paris to complete her music. There she meets an Italian Count, an old roue, who thinks she is an American heiress, and makes love to her. Betty returns to America. The Count follows. At a Bohemian restaurant, where Pietro is giving a supper in honor of Betty, Pietro and the man he seeks come face to face. The Count escapes.

The Count, failing in his money-making schemes, plans to rob Pietro and escape the country.

Tom, Betty's lover, is on hand to foil the Count. The officers arrive in time to prevent murder and the Count is led off to his fate.

ECLAIR

THE HOODOO LETTER (Oct. 15).—Weary Willie, the target of this story, noting the ease of a crippled street-beggar in obtaining alms of passers-by, by the aid of a letter, decides that he, too, shall secure one of these sesames to fortune without work.

He chances to pass an office window where inside he sees a man busily writing. He enters the office and asks the man to write him a note, for Weary is what is called illiterate. Now, the man at the desk is none other than the health officer of the town and a bit of an absent-minded man is he.

When Weary makes his strange request, he laughs and proceeds with his work at hand. This finished, he, in his absent-mindedness, hands it to Weary, though he had meant it for another person.

Weary reaches the street and, in the keenest anticipation of a silver shower, hands his letter to the first passerby. The man reads it, fear flashes into his face as he shoves the letter back into Weary's hand and runs down the street yelling for the police. As the cry of "police" has ever been the cue for Weary to disappear, he does.

Everyone he displays the letter to either runs from him or pounds him and chases him out of sight. All this is most mysterious to him till at last he is cornered by the village braves and driven ahead to the village pest house.

The letter he had received read as follows:

"Admit bearer to Pest House as small-pox suspect.

"Henry Saxe, M.D.,
"Dept. of Infectious Diseases."

On the same reel:

ONE ON JONES.—Another corking little comedy of snappy action which puts over a screaming story.

THE OLD PROFESSOR (Oct. 20).—George Dervil, a young medical student, rescues the granddaughter of an old professor of his college from the path of a runaway team. Being most modest, he does not wait to be congratulated or identified by any of the crowd which gathers around.

A few days later he chances to meet the old professor in a book store. There is just one left of a certain book which each desires to buy and their rivalry ends in mean words.

The days of George's final examination are at hand and a friend gives him a letter to the professor which asks that the old gentleman extend George such favors as he can. The old professor recognizes George as the young man with whom he had the altercation in the bookstore and answers that he may expect fairness but no favors.

Dejectedly the young fellow prepares to leave when the little granddaughter happens to enter the room and recognizes George as her rescuer. She tells her grandfather of his heroic act and the heart of the professor softens.

The day of final examination arrives. George is seated before the old teacher, who assumes an air of severity which seems to signify to the student that hard, impossible questions are ahead. Though discouraged, he does not lose hope.

That evening the granddaughter and her governess visit him. He thinks they mean to thank him for his stopping the runaway, but the child hands him a letter, a notice that he passed his examination with honors. And then the old professor pays him a visit to both thank and congratulate him.

On the same reel:

THE SULPHUR INDUSTRY IN SICILY.—Shows how these richest of all sulphur mines are worked and by the still primitive means it is done. Illustrates how it is run into trenches, then burned to a liquid state, which takes weeks of time. It is then run into moulds and in that shape is carried by mule-packs to the steamship docks.

CRYSTAL

HER DRESSMAKER'S BILLS (Oct. 13).—Mrs. Owing is fond of dress but she cannot pay her bills. The dressmakers, failing to collect from her, annoy Mr. Owing at his office. Determined to teach his wife a lesson, Mr. Owing disguises himself as a constable and hires two toughs to impersonate bailiffs. Meanwhile a boy has delivered Mr. Owing's new dress suit to his house.

Mr. Owing enters with his fake bailiffs, scares his wife, takes away her clothes and exits, laughing. Later, wifey penitent, promises to be less extravagant, and fond hubby forgives her. Then he learns that he has given away not only her dresses but his own dress suit. The joke is on him.

Miss Pearl White as the wife and Mr. Chester Barnett as the husband are happily fitted in rôles and situations that are very funny.

On the same reel:

McGUIRK THE SLEUTH.—McGuirk joins a fake detective agency and starts out to detect a crime. Percy Gay loves Byrdie May, whose angry father says him "nay." McGuirk, finding Percy swearing vengeance, follows him, believing he is on the track of an awful criminal. Percy gives McGuirk an awful throw-down from his automobile.

That night, when Percy brings a ladder with which to carry away the imprisoned Byrdie, McGuirk is on. He follows Percy up the ladder to Byrdie's room and is promptly knocked unconscious by Percy, who escapes with the girl. Papa May hears the rumpus and, revolver in hand, captures McGuirk, whom he accuses of abduction of his daughter. Marching McGuirk through the streets at the point of a pistol, angry papa confronts Byrdie and Percy, who have just been married. They are forgiven and McGuirk gets his.

CINES—GEORGE KLEINE

THE WONDER POWDERS (Oct. 8).—Alas! Leah is lazy. One day her father sees a traveling quack selling a wonderful powder guaranteed to put energy into a log of wood. He buys a package and goes off, confident that at last he has something to rouse his daughter.

Unfortunately, however, Leah sees him make the purchase, and also buys a powder that has the contrary effect. Upon reaching home the clever girl manages to get possession of her father's purchase, and places the contents in the cups of her father and mother.

The tea is poured and the innocent victims are soon rushing about in an extraordinary manner. At last Leah takes pity upon them and administers a dose of the other powder which causes them to sink down exhausted. It is sad to relate that Leah is still lazy, but her parents let her entirely alone.

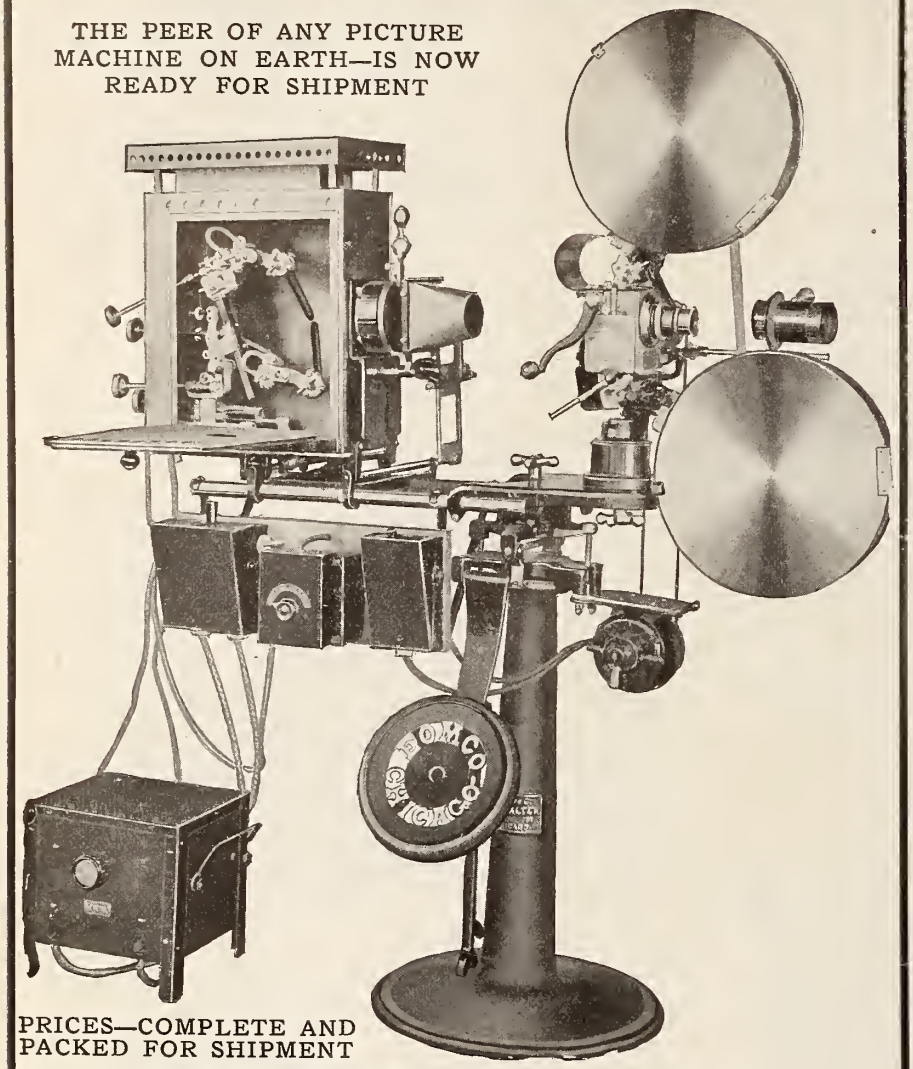
ARTISTIC GLASS WORK.—The process of glass blowing is always very interesting and instructive to witness. In the film we are shown expert workmen making some of the most delicate and beautiful designs in vases, dishes and ornaments of all kinds.

A GLIMPSE OF SICILY.—A beautiful travelogue subject spreading before us some of the delightful mountain scenery of Sicily. We are taken on a trip up Mount Pellegrino, from where we are able to get many entrancing panoramic views of the city of Palermo and the bay.

A ROMAN'S CONVERSION (Oct. 9).—In the days of ancient Rome, her mighty armies were commanded by leaders brave and powerful, but also cruel and relentless to the conquered.

THE 1913 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH

THE PEER OF ANY PICTURE MACHINE ON EARTH—IS NOW READY FOR SHIPMENT



PRICES—COMPLETE AND PACKED FOR SHIPMENT

$250.00 without motor, switchboard or seat.
$285.00 with motor (any voltage), switchboard and seat.
$300.00 special Massachusetts, with motor, switchboard and seat.
THE PRICE HAS GONE UP FOR THREE REASONS:
1st: Because of the advance in Material and Labor Cost.
2nd: Because we furnish a complete metal equipment.
3rd: Because the introduction of the Motiograph is complete.

OUR GUARANTEE

FREE UPKEEP FOR ONE YEAR COVERING PARTS of the 1913 model Motiograph mechanism, THAT MAY BECOME WORN OUT IN SERVICE, or WHICH MAY SHOW DEFECT IN MATERIAL OR WORKMANSHIP, with the understanding that the part be sent to us, charges prepaid, for examination.

Manufactured by THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
564-572 W. Randolph Street CHICAGO, ILL.
For Sale by Live Dealers Everywhere

Titus, one of these fearless generals, becomes infatuated with the beauty of Cecilia, a Christian slave, and endeavors in every way to win her love, but she steadfastly refuses him.

One day a messenger informs Titus that the Christians are holding secret meetings nightly, in the quarries situated east of the city. In great wrath, he orders that they be arrested and brought before him. When they enter his presence he notices Cecilia among them, and asks her to renounce her faith, promising to spare her life. Upon her refusal, he orders them to be cast into a dungeon, to await execution.

That night, however, the Roman general has a terrible dream, in which he sees the victims put to death by his order, and amongst them Cecilia. Frantic at what he has done, he awakes, and orders that they again be brought before him.

After testing their faith, and devotion to their belief, he acknowledges that his proud spirit is not equal to theirs, and is converted. He then orders their release and they depart rejoicing.

THROUGH DERBYSHIRE DALES.—We are taken on a trip through this delightful country, located in the central part of England and are thus able to gain many impressions of typical English rural life.

LUBIN

THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER (Oct. 7).—Wild roses are the joy of Ethel Borsden's life. The pretty little fisher maid delights in spending her time among the numerous clumps that surround Pond Cove. She had two suitors, Harry Myers and Charley Gunner. She is a capricious miss, teases them and laughs at both. One day Ethel, in her daily search, discovers a bush bearing two roses on the top of a steep precipice that rises from the sea. On the same day Harry and Charley sit beside her. Ethel is struck with an idea. She points out the cliff and jokingly declares that she will favor the one who secures for her one of the white roses at the top. The men take her seriously. Myers climbs the face of the rock, reaching the top after a dangerous ascent. Gunner happens to know a secret path, he reaching the top ahead of Harry. Just as his arm is stretched forth to grasp the rose, Harry's hand extends over the edge of the cliff, and a moment later he is facing his rival on the brink. They quarrel and a desperate struggle is precipitated. Myers loses his foothold and plunges over the cliff, his hand grasps one of the roses, and he takes it down with him. Gunner, panic-stricken at the accident, yields to a cowardly instinct, leaves Harry to his fate and returns to Ethel. He presents the rose to her and claims her love. But there is something in his look that strikes Ethel strangely. She asks where Harry is. Gunner says he does not know. Then she catches sight of a splotch of blood, staining the white petals of the flower. Her suspicions are aroused. She demands an explanation. Gunner averts his gaze. Ethel forces the truth from him and rushes wildly towards the village to find men to go to the rescue. She reaches a number of fishermen at work, and they hasten to Harry's rescue. They find him stunned, bleeding, lying on a ledge half way up the face of the precipice. One of the sturdy fishermen ascends the cliff, ties a rope under Harry's shoulders and lowers him into the eager hands below. Left alone by Ethel, Gunner, in a frenzy of fear, determines to kill himself. He pulls a revolver from his pocket, places it to his temple. At that moment he sees the party returning and rushes to Harry's house, where he learns that he is not fatally hurt. Harry extends his hand in forgiveness. Later when Harry is convalescent, he carries the white rose, now faded, to Ethel. He claims her as his wife and this time the little maid accepts him.

MOONSHINER'S DAUGHTER (Oct. 8).—Life flows along in an uneventful way in the hillside district of lower Virginia. Zeb Roth, a sprightly young Virginia beau, of the country type, divides his time between making moonshine whiskey and love to Lucy, the pretty daughter of "Mom" and "Pop" Blackwell. Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky the placid order of existence is changed by the arrival of a letter from a rich cousin of the Blackwells, inviting Lucy to pay them a visit in their city home. When Zeb hears of it he is "powfully" opposed to his sweetheart going, but little attention is paid to him and Lucy, wild with delight at the prospect, departs. She has a splendid time during the visit and, in addition, manages to fall in love with Harold Noyes, a wealthy young artist, who is a visitor at her cousin's house. She returns to her little country home engaged to Harold. But she had reckoned without the jealous Zeb. The day after Lucy's return, Zeb comes to see her and in the interview which follows learns of her engagement. Wild with rage, Zeb declares that if Harold ever comes within his reach he will kill him. A week later Harold does come to see his little country lassie and is seen by Zeb. Plotting revenge, Zeb hastens to the nearby still and tells the illicit operators that a revenue officer has come to the country. Heading the reckless band, Zeb comes upon Harold as he is returning to the hotel where he is stopping, accompanied by Lucy, who has walked part way home with him. Despite Lucy's wild protests, they tie her to a tree and depart with Harold. The whistle of an oncoming train suggests a fiendish means of getting rid of their supposed enemy to the moonshiners. Harold is bound to the railroad track and left to his fate. By a mighty effort Lucy frees herself and, rushing to Harold's rescue, tears him from underneath the wheels of the onrushing monster. At their quiet and simple wedding, which follows a week later, there is one uninvited guest, Zeb, who unexpectedly and greatly to his surprise departs from the scene in the hands of a sheriff.

EDISON

A CURABLE DISEASE (Oct. 7).—This strong dramatic story deals with the "White Plague," showing the conditions that arise in the life of a young linotype operator who contracts tuberculosis while working on a New York daily. We are shown his deep love for a young girl and eventually his engagement and preparations for marriage. All goes merry as a marriage hell until within a few days of his wedding, when he hears from the doctor that he has become a victim of this dread disease. In a moment all his bright plans for the future are torn from him and with the solemn words of his medical adviser in his ears, "You have no right to marry until you are cured," he staggers blindly to the home of his fiancee and there is enacted that pitiful scene where two young lives stand upon the brink of separation, forced apart by the cruel hands of the disease. Fond eyes look into eyes for the last time, perhaps, and dear hands clasp dear hands and the victim goes pathetically to his little hall bedroom to face the black future with only one gleam of hope, the Union Printers' Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.

He travels westward and arrives at the institution founded for these sad victims, of whom he has become one. Being a member of the International Typographical Union he presents his card of admission to the home and after a careful examination by the physician he is introduced to his nurse and assigned to his tent, which is either to become his salvation or the scene of his death. The strong, willing hands of the hospital nurses slowly but surely push back the impending doom and bring him back from the edge of the grave into the bright future of happy, healthy life.

During these hours of patient watching something steals in unexpectedly, and that something is the love of a woman for a man. But the sad part of it all is that the eyes of the man never see the beauty of the woman who saves his life but look far from the gray mountains towards the East, where waits and watches the woman he loves and longs to marry. The nobility of the woman who saved his life is brought forth when she learns of the dear one far away, writes to her and bids her come and claim the man who loves her. And when the victim, no longer a victim, steps forth into the world again he is clasped in the arms of the woman he loves.

Hand and hand they go forth, happy—while the other one looks sadly on, then turns back to carry out her great and ennobling work of saving the lives of those poor victims who are still under her care.

This story is simple and sweet and contains that tender element that reaches the heart chords and lives in the memory of the spectator who witnesses it.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE (Oct. 11).

"When can their glory fade?
Oh! the wild charge they made!
All the world wondered.
Honor the charge they made!
Honor the Light Brigade,
Noble Six Hundred!"

There are eighteen short minutes in the history of Great Britain that will live as long as the war drum is sounded and the shrill trumpet calls to arms. These historical moments are recorded in the annals of time on October 25th, in the year 1854, at the hour of ten o'clock on the blood-stained field of Balaklava where England strewed for over a mile the lifeblood of heroes. Over four hundred soldiers gave up their lives to the everlasting glory and honor of England's military discipline, and all within this short space of time. Think of them, wonder at them, honor them all, you who love the heroic and brave, for it was only eighteen minutes from the moment Lord Cardigan gave the command, "Forward the Light Brigade," and the brilliant band of England's best blood made their never-to-be-forgotten charge, and then this torn, bloody, battle-stained, broken and shattered regiment, the pride of England's army, came back from the valley of death. All that was left of the six hundred, only one hundred and ninety-nine, answered the roll call.

"Some one had blundered,
Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die:
Into the valley of death
Rode the six hundred."

The Edison Company had for a long time previous carefully studied the subject of the charge and in a wonderfully realistic picture has now given to the motion picture public the full and complete details that brought about this awful mistake and take the observer tearfully step by step from the dawn of October 25, 1854, when Lord Lucan and his staff saw the double standards flying over the Turkish redouhts as the signal of the beginning of the Battle of Balaklava, through all the incidents of the charge of the Light Brigade up to the return and all that was left of the famous Six Hundred.

The complete costumes for this picture were made to order from authentic military authorities in London. Tennyson has immortalized the "Charge of the Light Brigade" in poetry and it has remained for the Edison Company to record it upon the motion picture screen. That it will be a feature film wherever shown goes without saying.

COMET

'OSTLER JOE (Oct. 7).—Moving picture films have been made from various subjects, but it has remained for the Comet Film Company to immortalize that enduring and always interesting poem of George R. Simms in a pictureplay. The story of the poem is probably known to all lovers of good verse. It has survived many decades, but the moral it teaches is just as effective apparently at this late day as it was when it was first written. It lays bare human frailty and hopes deferred, it reflects things that might have been and life in its most humble, yet tragic form. Joe was a hostler. He worked at the "Magpie" and he was seemingly satisfied with his lot. But one day a beautiful girl came into his dreams and when he met her in all the reality of her natural charms he at once became her worshipper and slave. If he could only make her his wife? How she would grace his home and make him happy? The gods who watch over honest fellows and who pilot our destinies were kind to him in this respect, for it soon came to pass that the fair Annie would bear his name. They were wed, and when baby came there were no more blissful pair in the universe than the hostler and his helpmate.

But soon the tempter arrives. He sees baby and compliments Annie, who, susceptible to flattery, resigns to the snake's artifices and commits her first sin. She leaves Joe, the baby and her home. Fortune smiles on her for a time. She becomes a great actress and her fame spreads all over the land. But, like all lanes, there is an end, and we soon find her a faded flower, torn from the stem of destiny and cast upon fate's highway to wither and die. There are no kind and loving hearts near her now, except Joe, whose search—a long and weary one—has been rewarded. He finds her and she allows her emaciated form to be encircled by his arms. Grim death soon claims her, but Joe never forgets that she was once his wife, for this inscription finds its way on the tombstone marking her last resting place.

GAUMONT

ZIGOTO TO THE RESCUE (Oct. 3).—The daughter of a wealthy banker, on the eve of marriage, is abducted and held for ransom. Zigoto, the versatile, is employed to rescue her. He traces the kidnappers and scales the wall of their stronghold, only to roll into the chimney and then into their very presence. After a hand-to-hand and foot-to-foot combat, Zigoto is bound. A veritable eel of elusiveness, he liberates himself and, overpowering a woman member of the band, he takes her clothing and gains entrance to the weeping girl. She escapes by an improvised rope to a horse which waits in the grounds below. Zigoto follows her and vanquishes the chauffeur of the bandits' automobile. Acting as their driver he pursues the fleeing girl, who, deserting her mount, launches forth upon a river in a rowboat. Zigoto and the two kidnappers follow in a motorboat. They overtake the girl and drag her to their craft. Then Zigoto shows his master hand. He throws the two kidnappers into the water and batters them lustily with an oar. Zigoto restores the girl to her father and is properly rewarded.

ZIGOTO DRIVES A LOCOMOTIVE (Oct. 5).—The employees of a railroad go on strike and the distracted station master, unable to run his train, engages Zigoto. Zigoto's many arts do not contain that of an engineer, but he goes ahead valiantly. Taking liberties with the lever, he starts at express speed and the locomotive leaves the straight and narrow path of its rails and runs through the village, toppling over various impediments in its path, leaving a wake of destruction. After doing a good day's damage, Zigoto is finally confronted by the station master and the repentant employees, who then resume their labors, after having vented their anger upon Zigoto.

LOVE'S TEST (Oct. 8).—Elsie's wealthy father is ever picking out candidates for the lucrative position of Elsie's husband. Elsie views them as fortune hunters and hands them all the mitten. In the search for the husband who will love Elsie for Elsie's sake, without the trimmings of riches, she goes to the city in the guise of a poor girl and obtains a position in a banking house. An employee shows admiration for her, which is reciprocated. As a test she has her father write the lover a letter, telling him of a bequest of $100,000. Unmoved by this flash of fortune, he still woos her. She then presents the lover to her father, who repudiates him as a candidate for son-in-law honors and tells Elsie that if she marries him he will disinherit her. Elsie sticks to her lover and the father finally comes to see her and her beloved and tells her that his attitude was merely a test of her affection and that she will continue to be his heiress.

THANHOUSER

DOTTY THE DANCER (Oct. 13).—A young singer in a musical comedy company attended a reception at a rich man's house as one of the "talent" and fell deeply in love with the daughter of the house. His affection was reciprocated, but the girl's father firmly opposed any alliance between his daughter and the actor.

The star of the young man's company, a celebrated dancer, was a creature of moods. She became violently angry when the young singer mimicked her steps, and left the theatre in a rage just as the opening performance was about to begin. The manager was in despair, but the young man volunteered as a substitute and won approval by his excellent dancing and superb makeup.

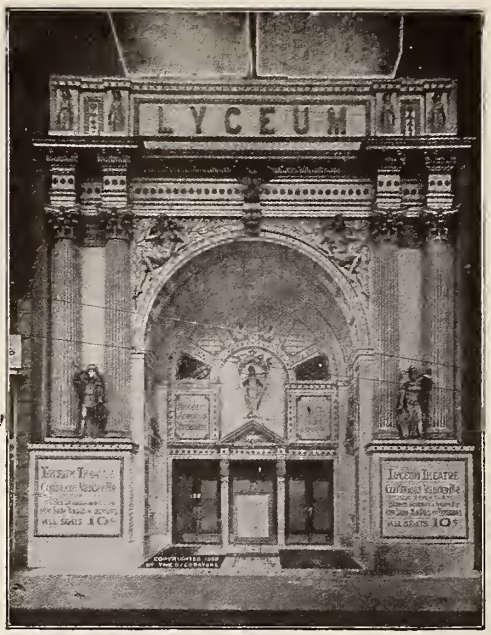
Among those favorably impressed with his talent was the father of the girl he loved. He witnessed the performance from the orchestra and later sent his card to the dancer. The latter invited him to call, carried out the joke, assisted by several of his friends, and soon the foolish old man was convinced he was deeply in love.

So he wrote to the "Divine Cleo," saying, "I am determined that you must become a member of my family. May I hope?" To which the dancer coyly replied that she was willing to be married if the old man's daughter consented. When the father arrived with the minister and his daughter there was a wedding, but he only figured as a spectator. He couldn't object, for he didn't dare to go back on his note.

WHEN MERCY TEMPERS JUSTICE (Oct. 15).—The Judge had a long calendar; he was weary and inclined to be short in his answers to those who came before him. He brightened up for a moment when a well-known banker was brought before him. This man was an old clubmate, and the charge of crooked dealing, brought by some ragged depositors, seemed to the court ridiculous. He said so, and fixed the bail at a trifling figure, and at that almost apologized to the dignified prisoner.

The next in line was a wretched-looking man who had stolen a bottle of milk from a dairy wagon. He did not deny his guilt, but stated that his wife and children were starving. Many times before had the Judge heard that excuse, and it only wearied him now. Impatiently he ordered the wife to cease pleading for the man, and he sent the self-confessed thief to Blackwell's Island.

That night the Judge sat in his well-furnished dining room, smoking a cigar after dinner. Idly his thoughts went to the court room, and he lightly remembered the statue of Justice which adorned the chamber.



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

"I wonder," he mused—"I wonder what that figure thinks of my decisions, and what it would do in my place."

Then it seemed that the courtroom was right there in front of him, and that the figure of Justice was alive. It came down from its pedestal, and in a moment was in the dining room opposite him.

Justice did NOT like his court rulings. That was clear at once, and the Judge found that Justice was a most unpleasant companion, who insisted on taking the jurist out to see the victims of the decisions.

It was a most uncomfortable night. The Judge was not interested and politely hinted so. Then the anger of Justice was aroused and the unfortunate Judge found himself alone in the streets, his fine clothing rags, and he himself as friendless as many of the unfortunates who had appeared before him. When he tried to re-enter his house he was rudely turned away. After wandering around for many hours the pangs of hunger assailed him, and he stole some rolls which he saw left at an areaway. He was promptly arrested, taken before a Judge who looked and acted as he had done himself on the bench and, despite his pleas for mercy, he was sent to Blackwell's Island.

In his misfortune he learned humility and found one friend, the poor man he had sent away for stealing for his starving family. Soon the Judge realized that strict, unswerving justice is sometimes as bad as injustice, and that only when justice is tempered with mercy can it be rightly entitled to that name. Then—he found himself back in his dining room again, a kinder, better, less arrogant judge; one who had learned the lesson all judges should know. He secured a pardon for the man who had stolen food, and from that time was more careful in his decisions, more thoughtful of the unfortunates who came before him. That is why, in the course of years, he won the title of "The Poor Man's Judge," and bore it with honor during his career on the bench.

FOR THE MIKADO (Oct. 18).—A Japanese nobleman was highly honored by the Mikado by being sent on a secret mission to obtain information concerning the plans of a foreign foe. Accompanied by his pretty young wife, he went to the enemy's country, where he hired a residence, and expressed his intention of making his home there.

The information he sought was to be secured from a soldier of the enemy who, for a large sum of money, had agreed to furnish data and papers which the Mikado desired. The envoy met with unexpected success at the outset and, flushed with his victory, began to dissipate, despite the remonstrances of his meek little wife.

An appointment had been made for him to meet the traitor outside the fort at midnight, when the Japanese was to exchange a bag of gold for the papers. The Jap was not able to be there at the appointed time, being sodden with drink, and his wife, who found him helpless in the library of their home, realized that the Mikado's mission was in danger of becoming a failure at the last moment.

The woman, although usually meek and timid, determined to take his place. She disguised herself in a suit of her husband's clothes, and kept the appointment. Unfortunately for her, they were discovered, and as she escaped she was shot and mortally wounded by a sentry. The importance of her mission nerved her on, however, and she managed to elude her pursuers and reach home.

There she aroused her drunken husband, told him she had been successful but that the searchers were close on her track, and urged him to flee while she would remain and delay the enemy. The man, startled into sobriety, did as she suggested, while the woman, discarding her disguise, arrayed herself in her native garb, and calmly waited for the soldiers to appear.

They questioned her without result, although they knew the man they sought lived there, for the traitor had made full confession. She laughingly told them that her husband "was out," and she did not know when he would return. Finally, the officer in charge, enraged because a search of the house had revealed nothing, seized her roughly by the shoulder and threatened to lock her up. He felt something warm and sticky on his hand; he looked at it and saw it was blood. Then he realized that the person he sought stood before him.

The woman made no effort now to conceal the truth. She knew that death was only a matter of a few minutes, but she did not regret it. Her last moments were made happy by a realization that the mission had been a success, and she died happy because she had been able to lay down her life for the Mikado.

AMERICAN

JACK OF DIAMONDS (Oct. 7).—Matrimony is an all-absorbing topic and one does not need to travel any great distance but what this subject, or something akin to it, can be overheard being discussed. The two fairies in this story assure themselves with the warmest sincerity that they never will get married and both reject their respective suitors. But circumstances alter cases, and so when handsome "Jack of Diamonds" arrives at the gulch and in his silken manner shows his interest in the girls, each in turn promptly falls in love with him, to the extreme dissatisfaction of their erstwhile suitors. With their hearts full of malice for the newcomer the two men lay plans for the undoing of their adversary. Opportunity presents itself when, in a game of cards, he is caught cheating. After the smoke of battle has subsided one of the fairies has the chance to reconsider but the other has lost her chance forever.

Excellent photography, beautiful natural settings and an abundance of heart throbs.

A SISTER'S DEVOTION (Oct. 9).—To help one another is our divine mission on earth. Aside from the natural devotion, such as only a sister can display for a wayward brother, the heroine in this human interest story not only helps her brother when he is in need of funds but also displays a marked capability of guiding his destiny in an hour of greatest peril. Her mind operates instinctively and like a flash. A most novel and all absorbing tale that will fascinate you completely. You are bound to enjoy it.

VITAGRAPH

THE GODMOTHER (Oct. 8).—Everything is arranged by Dick and his college chums to have their sweethearts from the city, with their chaperon, visit them to spend the day. At the eleventh hour the boys receive a telephone message from the girls informing them that their chaperon has disappointed them and they will not be able to come. The boys are disconsolate. While they are deploring the matter their tailor enters. Struck with a sudden idea, they seize him and compel him to impersonate Dick's godmother. His protests are useless. Dick calls up the girls and tells them his godmother has kindly consented to chaperon the party and they can come with perfect propriety to the dinner which they have prepared for them. The young rascals then instruct the tailor to pretend he is deaf and dumb. The girls come at the expected hour, but are very much surprised when they see Dick's funny little godmother. In order to give the young people a chance to enjoy themselves, the godmother begs to be excused for a few minutes. The tailor goes into Dick's bedroom, takes off his disguise, stuffing the dress with pillows, making a dummy which he sets on the bed. He then hides and waits results. The girls grow impatient when the godmother does not return, and they all go to look for her. Entering Dick's room they see her, as they think, sitting on the bed. On nearing the dummy the girls discover the boys' deception, and indignantly leave them and start for home. At the railroad station the girls begin to grasp the humor of the whole affair, their hearts soften and they 'phone the boys their forgiveness.

The little tailor, outside the room, witnessed all the doings, greatly amused and highly elated at putting one over on the boys.

AS FATE WOULD HAVE IT (Oct. 10).—While working his way through college, George Reynolds meets Edith Pond. There are other young men of wealthy families at the college, but Edith admires George for his ambition and perseverance, as well as his other manly characteristics. Their acquaintance ripens into love, and at all the social affairs in the college town Edith and George are always together. He tells her that on her account, if for no other reason, he is determined to succeed. At the end of his college days George returns home, with a promise from Edith that she will marry him.

Shortly after their parting Edith's father is taken suddenly sick, and on his death-bed he implores Edith to marry Ralph Leslie, for whom he has great regard and who is very much in love with Edith. To please her father she consents. She writes George, telling him of her engagement and asking him to forgive and forget her. Heartbroken, he suddenly makes up his mind to leave his home town and establish himself in a large city where he will be forgotten and engrossed with his profession. Just after he leaves home a telegram comes from Edith, in which she states that she has broken her engagement with Leslie, and requesting George to come to her at once. His parents, not knowing where he has gone, put the telegram aside until his return, which is five years later. His father and mother have almost given him up as dead. They are overjoyed to see him again and to learn that he is a successful and prominent lawyer in the metropolis. When his father hands him the telegram which has been awaiting him, George loses no time in calling upon Edith. Imagine his surprise and delight in finding her unmarried, like himself, still awaiting his coming.

Absence has made their hearts grow fonder, and there is no mistaking it in the loving embrace with which they welcome each other.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 41 (Oct. 7).

AMONGST MANY LOVES (Oct. 8).—Wiffles, the noted comedian, is employed as bookkeeper in a millinery shop owned by the Fright sisters. He immediately falls in love with all the pretty girls in the shop, but, alas, he is pestered almost to death by his two female employers, both of whom are madly in love with him, and his efforts to avoid their attentions make this film a real comedy.

On the same reel:

THE TRIANONS — VERSAILLES.—Beautifully colored views of the little palace in which the famous Marie Antoinette made her home.

PASSING GYPSIES (Oct. 9).—Wild though her life may be, a gypsy girl has the seed of mother-love in her heart. This is proven by the case of Mariola, who refuses to marry one of her tribesmen, because she is in love with a young farmer. The farmer is already married, but that makes no difference to Mariola, and, using all the wiles of her romantic nature, she soon leads him to urge an elopement. The following day, on her way to meet him, a baby crosses her path. She pauses and her heart melts as she watches his tiny hands clutching at the air. Taking him in her arms she walks on with him until she meets the man with whom she is going to elope. The baby she holds is his son, and when the farmer sees him he grows pale. Mariola realizes the situation and her determination to have the father for a lover fades instantly. She sends the father back to his wife with the baby in his arms.

THE HORSE THIEVES (Oct. 10).—Two men who steal a rancher's horse sell the animal to Black Hawk. The original owner of the horse notifies Captain Brandon, in charge of the government troops, of the theft, and a squad is sent out to find the thief. Of course they find the animal in Black Hawk's possession, and his vow that he purchased it is not believed. They take him to the barracks, where he is imprisoned to await trial. Black Hawk's tribe is determined to be revenged for the outrage against one of their warriors and they kidnap Captain Brandon's daughter, a girl of nineteen. The whole garrison is then turned out to rescue the girl, which they do after a bitter fight. When she learns the reason why the redmen carried her away she clears Black Hawk with the information that she was a witness to the theft of the horse.

HIS COUNTRY BEFORE ALL (Oct. 11).—Although representatives of a foreign power offer Arthur Herbert five times more for his invention than his own government will give, he refuses the better offer. The father of the girl he loves has been acting as the foreign government's agent, and the young fellow's patriotism so impresses him that he gives his consent to his daughter's marrying Herbert. This film is splendidly acted and touches the spring of patriotism in every heart in fine style.

(Continued on page 31.)

MAJESTIC

INSIST UPON BOTH RELEASES!!

DRAMA
Tuesday, Oct. 8th
"THE WINNER and the SPOILS"
A Powerful 17th Century Play.

COMEDY
Sunday, Oct. 13th
"THE SIMPLE LIFE"
A Clever Up-to-the-Minute Comedy Hit

COMING
Oct. 15—"All for Jim"
Oct. 20—"Capt. Ben's Yarn"
Oct. 22—"Love and War"
Oct. 27—"The Tree Imp"
Oct. 29—"A Woman Alone"
Nov. 3—"The Scarecrow's Secret"

The Majestic Motion Picture Co., 540 West 21st Street, New York City

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc.,
248 WEST 35TH ST.,
NEW YORK.

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

		Feet
June	28—The Actor's Test
June	28—Benares, the Sacred City
July	17—The Airman
July	17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept.	25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.)
Oct.	2—The Bowstring (Dr.)

AMERICAN

Sept.	30—Calamity Anne's Ward	1000
Oct.	2—The Renegade	1000
Oct.	3—Father's Favorite	1000
Oct.	7—Jack of Diamonds	1000
Oct.	9—A Sister's Devotion	1000
Oct.	10—Reformation of Sierra Smith	1000
Sept.	26—The Hero Son	1000
Oct.	14—The Promise (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—The Border Detective (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	17—The New Cowpuncher (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	21—The Best Man Wins (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	23—The Way of the Transgressor (Dr)	1000
Oct.	24—The Wooers of Mountain Kate (Dr.)	1000

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept.	3—The Honor of the Tribe
Sept.	6—An Old Tune
Sept.	10—The Fugitive
Sept.	13—A Frontier Child (2 reels)
Sept.	17—The Penalty
Sept.	20—The Doctor's Double
Sept.	24—The Hidden Trail
Sept.	27—On the Firing Line
Oct.	4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct.	11—The Sergeant's Boy

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Sept.	21—The Massacre of the Santa Fe Trail (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept.	24—The Sheriff's Reward (W. Dr.)
Sept.	28—At Old Fort Dearborn (2 reel Hist. Dr.)
Oct.	8—Indian Raiders (W. Dr.)
Oct.	12—The Tattoo (W. Dr.)
Oct.	15—Star-Eyes Strategy (Dr.)
Oct.	19—Early Days in the West (2 reel Dr.)

BRONCHO

Sept.	18—Sundered Ties
Sept.	25—His Better Self
Oct.	2—For the Honor of the 7th (Mil.)
Oct.	9—An Indian Legend

CHAMPION

Sept.	2—The Maid and the Rocks
Sept.	9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.)
Sept.	16—The Dummy Director (Dr.)
Sept.	23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)
Sept.	30—Her Whole Story (Dr.)
Oct.	7—To Err is Human (Dr.)
Oct.	14—The Girl in the Gingham Gown (Dr.)

COMET

Sept.	7—A Waif of the Mountains
Sept.	9—The Romantic Suicide
Sept.	14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune
Sept.	16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.) 1000
Sept.	21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000
Sept.	23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.) 1000
Sept.	28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.) 1000
Sept.	30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.) 1000
Oct.	5—Love Will Find a Way (Dr.) 1000
Oct.	7—"'Ostler Joe" (Dr.) 1000
Oct.	12—The Double Debt (Dr.) 1000
Oct.	14—Taming a Bachelor (Com.) 1000
Oct.	19—A Romance of the Rockies (Dr.) 1000

CRYSTAL

Oct.	6—The Girl in the Next Room
Oct.	6—The Man from the North Pole
Oct.	13—Her Dressmaker's Bill (Com.)
Oct.	13—McQuirk the Sleuth (Com.)
Oct.	20—Bella's Beaux (Com.)
Oct.	20—The Only Woman in Town (Com.)

ECLAIR

Sept.	16—Around Constantinople (Travel)
Sept.	17—My Wife's Away, Hurrah (Com.)
Sept.	19—Filial Love (2 reels; Dr.)
Sept.	22—A Frivolous Heart
Sept.	22—Through China
Sept.	24—The Word of Honor (Dr.)
Sept.	26—The Old Clock on the Stairs (Dr.)
Sept.	29—Love and Science
Oct.	1—The Old Doctor's Humanity (Dr.)
Oct.	3—The Lucky Loser (Com. Dr.)
Oct.	6—The Lock of Hair (Dr.)
Oct.	8—All on Account of a Ring (Com.)
Oct.	8—Surprising Eliza (Com.)
Oct.	10—A Choice by Accident (Com. Dr.)
Oct.	13—The White Bonnet (Dr.)
Oct.	15—The Hoodoo Letter (Com.)
Oct.	15—One on Jones (Com.)
Oct.	17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct.	20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)
Oct.	20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)
Oct.	22—The Home Coming
Oct.	24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)
Oct.	27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)
Oct.	27—Brusia (Travel)

GREAT NORTHERN

		Feet
Aug.	10—Thou Shalt Not Kill (Dr.)	585
Aug.	10—When the Cat's Away (Com.)	308
Aug.	17—The Prodigal's Return (Dr.)	997
Aug.	24—For Her Sister's Sake (Dr.)	944
Aug.	31—Love is Blind (Dr.)	943
Sept.	7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.)	496
Sept.	7—The Spring Lock (Com.)	457
Sept.	14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)	1000
Sept.	21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.)	989
Sept.	28—A Child of Genius (Com.)	679
Sept.	28—A Sly Servant (Com.)	314
Oct.	5—I Am Going Out for a Shave (Com.)	726
Oct.	5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)	253

GAUMONT

Sept.	17—Queen Elizabeth's Token
Sept.	19—Kings in Exile (2 Reels)
Sept.	24—The Heart of a Redman
Sept.	26—The Stolen Cub
Sept.	28—Life in Caucasia
Oct.	1—The Convict's Band
Oct.	3—Nigoto to the Rescue
Oct.	5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive
Oct.	8—Love's Test
Oct.	10—The Tie Eeternal
Oct.	12—The Cotton Industry
Oct.	15—Beethoven

GEM

Aug.	20—White Dove's Sacrifice (Dr.)
Aug.	27—Baby Fingers
Sept.	3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)
Sept.	10—A Turn of Fate
Sept.	17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept.	24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)
Oct.	1—The Convict's Return
Oct.	8—Orphans (Dr.)
Oct.	15—What the Bell Told (Dr.)

IMP

Sept.	21—The Exchange of Labels (Com.)
Sept.	23—Getting Mary Married (Com.)
Sept.	26—The Parson and the Moonshiner (Dr.)
Sept.	28—Lie Not to Your Wife (Com.)
Sept.	28—Curing Hubby (Com.)
Sept.	30—A Cruel Stepmother
Oct.	3—A Country Girl
Oct.	5—He Had But Fifty Cents
Oct.	5—A Day in an Infant Asylum
Oct.	7—The Wreckers (Dr.)
Oct.	10—The Bridal Room (Dr.)
Oct.	12—A Bronx Cocktail (Com.)
Oct.	12—A Bad Tangle (Com.)
Oct.	14—The Old Sweetheart (Dr.)
Oct.	17—The Fugitives (Dr.)
Oct.	19—The Postman
Oct.	19—Eventful Bargain Day

ITALA

Sept.	15—A Woman's Duplicity (Dr.)
Sept.	22—Toto's Talisman (Com.)
Sept.	22—A Naughty Boy (Com.)
Sept.	29—His First Lawsuit (Com.)
Sept.	29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.)
Oct.	6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)

KEYSTONE

Sept.	30—Riley and Schultze
Sept.	30—The New Neighbor
Oct.	7—The Beating He Needed
Oct.	7—Pedro's Dilemma (Com.)

LUX
By Prieur.

Sept.	13—Tommy's Playmate (Dr.)	980
Sept.	20—The Little Beggar Boy (Dr.)	963
Sept.	27—Only a Private (Dr.)	970
Oct.	4—The Medallion (Dr.)	983
Oct.	11—Evading Justice (Dr.)

MAJESTIC

Sept.	29—Belligerent Benjamin
Sept.	29—A Garrison Joke
Oct.	1—The Call of the Blood
Oct.	6—The Little Music Teacher
Oct.	8—The Winner and the Spoils
Oct.	13—The Simple Life
Oct.	15—All for Jim
Oct.	20—Captain Ben's Yarn
Oct.	22—Love and War

MILANO

		Feet
Sept.	21—The Two Overcoats
Sept.	21—Bonifacio in Society
Sept.	28—The Mysterious Auto
Sept.	28—Honesty Punished
Oct.	5—An Alpine Tragedy
Oct.	12—The Gypsy Spy (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct.	19—The Blind Man's Dog (Dr.)

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Sept.	9—In the San Fernando Valley (Dr.)
Sept.	11—The Men Within (Dr.)
Sept.	13—Those Lovesick Cowboys
Sept.	16—The Horse Thief's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept.	18—A Western Vacation (Com.)
Sept.	20—Won by a Call (Com.)
Sept.	23—Carl Von Gordon's Family (Com.)
Sept.	25—The Criminologist (Dr.)
Sept.	27—Percy, the Bandit (W. Com.)
Sept.	30—The Old Prospector (Dr.)
Oct.	4—Hearts and Skirts
Oct.	7—Romance and Reality (Dr.)
Oct.	9—His Only Son (Dr.)
Oct.	11—Love and a Lemon (Com.)
Oct.	14—I Owe You $10.00 (Com.)
Oct.	16—Patsy's Mistake (Com.)
Oct.	18—Her Friend, The Doctor (Com.)

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Sept.	25—The Plan That Failed (Com.)
Sept.	25—Swat the Fly (Com.)
Sept.	27—Her Ambition (Dr.)
Oct.	2—Early's Awakening
Oct.	4—Two Women
Oct.	9—Good Snuff (Com.)
Oct.	11—On the Danger Line (Dr.)
Oct.	16—The Golden Rod
Oct.	16—Does It Pay
Oct.	18—The Sealed Envelope (Dr.)

RELIANCE

Sept.	25—The Geranium
Sept.	28—The Cuckoo Clock
Oct.	2—Brothers Under the Skin
Oct.	5—Time Avenges (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—Guy Mannering (2 reels) (Dr.)	2000
Oct.	12—Peddler's Find (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—On Account of a Handkerchief (Com.)	500
Oct.	16—The Bug and the Count (Com.)	500
Oct.	19—The Organ Grinder's Ward (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	23—Johnny on the Spot (Com.)	500
Oct.	23—How Jack Won Out (Com.)	500
Oct.	26—A Wireless Miracle (Dr.)	1000

REPUBLIC

Aug.	5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice
Aug.	12—The Borrowing Simp
Aug.	19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.)
Aug.	26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons

REX

Sept.	19—Far-Away Fields (Dr.)
Sept.	22—The Conflict's End (Dr.)
Sept.	26—The Old Organist (Dr.)
Sept.	29—The Hidden Bonds (Dr.)
Oct.	3—Bob's Deception
Oct.	6—The Winnings of Silas Pegg
Oct.	10—If Dreams Came True (Dr.)
Oct.	13—When Twenty Is in Love
Oct.	17—The Wedding March (Dr.)
Oct.	20—Leaves in the Storm (Dr.)

SOLAX

Sept.	25—For the Love of the Flag
Sept.	27—The Fugitive
Oct.	2—Si's Surprise Party
Oct.	4—The Retreat from Eden
Oct.	9—Canned Harmony (Com.)
Oct.	11—A Fool and His Money (Com.)
Oct.	16—The Gold Brick (Com.)
Oct.	18—The Maverick (Dr.)
Oct.	23—The High Cost of Living

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept.	10—A Star Reborn
Sept.	13—The Birth of the Lotus Blossom
Sept.	15—Orator, Knight and Cow Charmer
Sept.	17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation
Sept.	20—Two Souls
Sept.	29—Please Help the Pore
Oct.	1—Letters of a Lifetime
Oct.	4—The Warning
Oct.	13—Dotty the Dancer
Oct.	15—When Mercy Tempers Justice (Dr.)
Oct.	18—For the Mikado (Dr.)

VICTOR

Sept.	13—All for Love
Sept.	20—Flo's Discipline (Com.)
Sept.	27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.)
Oct.	4—Tangled Relations
Oct.	11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.)
Oct.	18—The Cross-roads (Dr.)

(Continued from page 29.)

NAUGHTY MARIETTA (Oct. 12).—Marietta, out for a lark, masquerades as a chauffeur, and, in her father's automobile she drives to one of the principal avenues in town, hanging a sign on the machine reading: "For Hire."

A young man appears and asks to he driven to the railroad. On the road the inexperienced chauffeur upsets a cart and the passenger pays the damage. Marietta's father by this time is ready to take a spin in his car and is astounded when he cannot find the machine. A motorcycle policeman is called and informed that a thief has heen at work. After a hrief search the officer discovers the car, hut when he orders the driver to halt the car shoots ahead at terrific speed, and the chase is on. Luck is with the law, however, and the machine is hrought to a standstill. The policeman escorts the chauffeur (and the passenger) hack to the girl's father. When Marietta removes her goggles the joke is on father.

SOLAX

THE GOLD BRICK (Oct. 16).—Snakey Snodgrass, a wily Westerner, conceives a scheme with which to defraud the crooks of New York. He has made a good sum of money with which he can huy "stock." So he purchases enough gold to make a hrick of the pure metal—worth ahout fifteen thousand dollars. With this he comes to New York City, opens an office as a "Gold Expert" and sends out word to the crooks and swindlers that he has discovered a new metal which will pass for gold. He uses the real gold brick with which to make all the jeweler's tests, with chemicals, etc. Then he has an assistant in a different place gilding bricks and preparing them for sale to the swindlers. (Snakey Snodgrass explains that with his new metal the crooks can purchase for $100 each a gold brick which could be sold to a farmer, or even a jeweler as the genuine thing for a thousand dollars. They try out the hrick, using their own chemicals, so successfully that they are convinced. Then he wraps up the brick and suhstitutes for it one of the gilded hricks which he has had hrought in hy his assistant. Thus he swindles the swindlers, always keeping the real good one, which he can tell hy a little double crossmark on one end. The police, however, learn of his activity and they raid his office. He grahs up a brick, which he hclieves to he the one of pure gold, and is a victim of his trickery, leaving the real one lying on the floor. After Snakey leaves in the custody of the officers his assistant comes out of hiding and hunts around for the loose change and any other valuables. He looks with disgust at the bricks and starts dumping them out of the window, in a poor aim at the fleeing one. The brick lands in a dump back of the house. Some small boys are playing there and they amuse themselves hy throwing the brick around. Then they decide to put it under a silk hat, leaving it on the pavement. Various people kick the hat and hurt their toes, and then laugh when they see the gold brick. At last a hrokendown, raggedlooking swindler comes out of a saloon door and discovers the gold brick. He snatches it up after straining his own foot in trying to kick it. He takes up his position on a street corner to wait for some greenhorn or rube. Meanwhile, old Silas Perkins, of Pumpkin Center, has sold his farm for a thousand dollars and come into town to live with his daughter and her hushand, who is a young chemist. Silas, in town, comes swinging along the street, and is accosted hy the swindler, who eventually sells him the real gold hrick for his thousand dollars. Silas proceeds to his daughter's house, where he tells them of his purchase. They are heartbroken, and when he learns that he has fallen victim to a simple fraud the old man is so overcome by the loss of his money that he takes to his bed. His son-in-law, in order to cheer him up and bring him back to health, calls the doctor. The old fellow goes into a fever, raving ahout the gold brick. The doctor orders them to tell him that the brick is real gold, in order to cheer him up and hring him hack to health.

So the son-in-law goes to get some of his chemicals. hrings them to the tahle hy the bedside and starts on his tests, planning to "jolly" the old man. His eyes hulge when he discovers that it is real gold. The old fellow sits up and dons his clothes in a jiffy when he learns that it is true—and the son-in-law, the daughter and the old man hastily call a taxicah and hustle for the office of the U. S. metal assayer. There they sell the brick for its true value, and the last view is that of the old farmer telling the story of its purchase to the officiat chemist, while the son and daughter join them in merry laughter, the four faces very large on the screen.

Scott's Immortal Tale!
"GUY MANNERING"
Two Reels. Release Wed., Oct. 9
A corking good story of Scotch smugglers, gypsies, a lost heir and charming women.

RELIANCE

"The Peddler's Find," Sat., Oct. 12. "On Account of a Handkerchief," and "The Bug and the Count," split reel, Wed., Oct. 16. "The Organ Grinder's Ward," Sat., Oct. 19. "Johnny on the Spot" and "How Jack Won Out," split reel, Wed., Oct. 23.

MAJESTIC

THE SIMPLE LIFE (Oct. 13).—To escape the snares of matchmaking mothers with marriageable daughters, Jack Vincent, a young millionaire, decides to "disappear" for a few weeks, and at the same time secure a well earned rest. Without a word to his friends he starts off. For a few days he lives the life of a tramp, strolling through the woods, communing with nature and making friends with hird and heast.

His wanderings bring him into the peaceful village of Bingtown and on the road he comes upon "Cy" Smith, proprietor of the village grocery store, a victim of "speed mania." His wagon had just heen knocked "forty ways to Sunday," and his fresh market goods generously distrihuted along the road. Jack, seeing the old man's plight, offers his aid. Together they set to work and when the task is completed Smith, impressed hy Jack's frank and engaging manner, offers him a position as clerk, $8.00 a week and hoard. Jack is somewhat surprised at this generous offer, but on a sudden impulse accepts the position.

Jack is introduced to Marie, Smith's daughter. He sees hefore him a young girl in a severely plain dress, her tightly hraided hair giving her the appearance of a typical country "slavey." She falls violently in love with Jack and becomes furiously jealous whenever she sees him hestow smiles on other girls. Not only does she keep her love secret, but from her actions Jack decides she dislikes him. This pains him, for he has come to love the village and its inhabitants.

In a village such as Bingtown, "house parties" are considered quite the proper thing, and two weeks after entering the employ of Smith Jack receives an invitation to attend one of these "a good time was had by all" affairs. He tries to heg off, saying he has no "party" suit. His excuse is overheard hy Marie and it trouhles her. She wants him to attend the "party."

While trying to devise ways and means to get Jack to the party an advertisement catches her eye: "Suits $10.00, will include Shoes, Hat, Shirt, Collar and Tie." Surely a hargain. Marie hurries to her room and finds it will take every penny of her savings, hut she does not hesitate. By a ruse she secures Jack's measurements and sends off for the suit. When it arrives she examines it eagerly and then joyfully places it on Jack's bed. When Jack discovers the "creation" he is almost overcome. He knows instinctively that Marie is the guilty party and rather than offend her he decides to attend the party arrayed in his new suit.

He dons it and, as he suspected, it is a glorious misfit. However, he decides to see the thing through, and calls for Marie. When she stands hefore him the remarkable change that has taken place in her appearance is startling. All that is required was the touch of a deft hand to hring out in Marie the beauty that was always hers.

While the merriment is at its height it is discovered that Jack is the missing millionaire for whom his friends had instituted a thorough search. Marie is heartbroken, hut Jack convinces her that money is not everything in this little world of ours.

ALL FOR JIM (Oct. 15).—Jim Goodman is a hardworking fireman in a factory. One day the chief engineer is discharged for drunkenness and Jim applies to the boss for his position, telling him he has the strength. The hoss replies it is hrains, not muscle, that is required. Jim goes home that night discouraged and tells his wife that he doesn't see any chance for an advancement as he hasn't an education. She hits upon an idea and plans for him to attend night school and learn a trade. So Jim starts to school and is progressing favorahly, hut Bess, his wife, finds the expense too heavy, so decides, unknown to Jim, to take in sewing. She answers an ad. and takes home shirts from a factory, working early and late to earn a little extra money for Jim.

In the meantime Jim hecomes infatuated with a silly hut pretty girl at the night school, and as he comes home only to find Bess worn out, he naturally finds more pleasure in the other girl's society. At last Bess' eyes give out from overwork and she is hrought home, temporarily hlind, hy the foreman. Jim enters unexpectedly and, seeing the strange man hending over his wife, rushes to strike him, when he sees his wife is hlind. He opens her hand and sees the pay envelope and realizes it has all heen for him. He drops on his knees in shame, but Bess, womanlike, forgives him.

KEYSTONE

STOLEN GLORY (Oct. 14).—Warner is an old veteran in love with the widow Simpson. His rival is an old farmer, named Burns. Warner stands in front of the Old Soldiers' Home, telling a crowd of old veterans of the hattles he took part in, and as he unfolds the tales the scenes are depicted in the film. Cavalry charges are shown, thrilling fights, hursting bombs, and horses and riders come crashing to the earth.

Burns, with rake in his hand, listens doubtfully, makes a few sarcastic remarks and walks away. Meeting the widow Simpson he dallies awhile, and she shows him an article in the newspaper regarding the coming arrangements for the big G. A. R. parade. Burns tells her he is an old veteran, and relates the thrilling experiences he had in the army, which are shown on the screen. Warner comes up and drives Burns away.

The day of the parade arrives. Warner, arrayed in all the splendor of a faded uniform, exhibits upon his breast a dozen medals. Meeting Mrs. Simpson he takes his coat off and lays it on top of a cannon while he points to each medal and explains how he won it. He discovers that one of the medals is missing, and runs pell-mell hack to the home to look for it, leaving his coat hehind. Mrs. Simpson saunters off and Burns comes on. The coat gives him an idea, and quickly donning it he secures a cap and goes to the parade.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Sept. 5—He Must Have a Wife (Com.).....
Sept. 9—An Unseen Enemy (Dr.) .....
Sept. 12—Blind Love (Dr.) .....
Sept. 16—Stern Papa (Com.).....
Sept. 16—Love's Messenger (Com.).....
Sept. 19—Two Daughters of Eve (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Friends (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Disappointed Mamma (Com.)....
Sept. 26—A Mixed Affair (Com.).....
Sept. 30—So Near Yet So Far (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—A Feud in the Kentucky Hills (Dr.)
Oct. 7—The Line at Hogan's (Com.).....
Oct. 7—A Ten-Karat Hero (Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Chief's Blanket (Dr.).....

CINES
C. Kleine

Sept. 28—Reuben and the Boys (Com.)....
Oct. 1—The Island of Malta (Sc.)..... 460
Oct. 1—How a Brave Man Died (Hist. Dr.) 540
Oct. 5—Laino, Southern Italy (Sc.)..... 300
Oct. 5—Trifle Not With Love (Com.)..... 700
Oct. 8—A Glimpse of Sicily (Sc.)..... 250
Oct. 8—Artistic Glass Work (Indust.).... 300
Oct. 8—The Wonder Powders (Com.)..... 450
Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 15—The Adventure of the Scarecrow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 19—Among the Mountains of Calabria (Scenic) 400
Oct. 19—An Abbreviated Honeymoon (Com.) 600
Oct. 22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.) 250
Oct. 22—The Invited Guest (Com.)..... 750
Oct. 26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.).....1005
Oct. 29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.) 400
Oct. 29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.). 450
Oct. 29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.).... 150
Nov. 2—A Head for a Head (Hist. Dr.)....1100
Nov. 5—The Golden Shell of Palermo, (Sc.) and Love versus Gratitude (Dr.)... 300 700
Nov. 9—No Fool Like an Old Fool (Com. Dr.) 1000

EDISON

Aug. 21—Mr. Pickwick's Predicament (Com.) 1000
Aug. 23—The Cub Reporter (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 24—The War on the Mosquito (Edu.) 1000
Aug. 27—Alone in New York (Dr.)..... 1000
Aug. 28—Helping John (Com. Dr.).....1000
Aug. 30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.).....1000
Aug. 31—Simla (Sc.) 1000
Sept. 3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.).....1000
Sept. 4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)..1000
Sept. 7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912.. 400
Sept. 10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.) 1000
Sept. 11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.) 1000
Sept. 13—The Dam Builder (Dr.) 100
Sept. 14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies 1000
Sept. 23—Benares and Agra, India (Sc.).... 350
Sept. 23—How Bobby Joined the Circus (Com.) 650
Sept. 24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.).....1000
Sept. 27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.) 300
Oct. 2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.).. 700
Oct. 4—Cashmere (Sc.) 1000
Oct. 5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—A Curable Disease (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 8—Under False Colors (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.) 1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.) 1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)..1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.) 650

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Aug. 31—Broncho Billy for Sheriff (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Wildman (Com.).....1000
Sept. 6—Twilight (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.) ....
Sept. 10—A Woman of Arizona (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Listener's Lesson (Com.).....1000
Sept. 13—Billy McGrath's Love Letters (Com.) 1000
Sept. 14—Broncho Billy Outwitted (Dr.)....1000
Sept. 17—Neptune's Daughter (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—The Mixed Sample Trunks (Com.)
Sept. 20—The Love Test (Com.) .....
Sept. 21—"Alkali" Ike's Pants (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Across the Broad Pacific.....
Sept. 25—The Adventure of the Button (Com. Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Little Louder, Please (Com.)....
Sept. 27—The Voice of Conscience (Dr.)....
Sept. 28—An Indian Sunbeam (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—Ghosts (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—Well Matched (Com.).....
Oct. 3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)..
Oct. 4—Terrible Teddy (Com.).....1000
Oct. 5—Love on Tough Luck Ranch (Com.).1000
Oct. 8—Alkali Ike Stung (Com.) 1000
Oct. 9—The Rebellion of Mandy (Com.)...1000
Oct. 10—The End of the Feud (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Not on the Circus Program (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 12—The Shotgun Ranchman (Dr.)....1000

LUBIN

Sept. 14—A Trustee of the Law.....
Sept. 16—The Sleeper .....
Sept. 18—When Father Had His Way.....
Sept. 20—Turpentine Industry.....
Sept. 20—No Trespasssing.....
Sept. 21—His Pair of Pants.....
Sept. 23—A Gay Time in Quebec.....
Sept. 25—The Renegades .....
Sept. 26—Swimming and Life Saving.....
Sept. 26—Buster and the Gypsies.....
Sept. 27—Glued .....
Sept. 27—The Water Wagon.....
Sept. 28—The Doctor's Debt.....
Sept. 30—A Girl's Bravery (Dr.).....
Oct. 2—The Amateur Iceman High Class (Com.) .....
Oct. 3—The Physician of Silver Gulch (Dr.) .....
Oct. 4—Collection Day (Com.) .....
Oct. 4—Spoony Sam (Com.) .....
Oct. 5—His Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—The Last Rose of Summer.....1062
Oct. 8—The Moonshiner's Daughter .....
Oct. 10—The Players .....
Oct. 11—Mr. Fixit (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—The German Singers (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The Cringer .....
Oct. 14—The Uprising .....
Oct. 15—Gentleman Joe .....

G. MELIES

Aug. 15—Romance at Catalina.....
Aug. 22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)...1000
Aug. 29—His Partner's Share (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 5—The Obsession (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West .....
Oct. 10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—A Son's Example (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.) 1000

PATHE FRERES

Sept. 13—Ford Her Lord (Dr.).....
Sept. 13—The Late Harriet Quimby's Flight Across the English Channel.....
Sept. 14—Saved at the Altar (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—Pathe's Weekly No. 38.....
Sept. 17—The Elopement (Com.).....
Sept. 17—Gerone—the Venice of Spain (Tr.)
Sept. 18—The Bandit's Spur (W. Dr.)....
Sept. 19—The Desperado (W. Dr.) .....
Sept. 20—Max's Tragedy (Com.).....
Sept. 20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept. 21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—Pathe's Weekly, No. 39.....
Sept. 25—Pals (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—Glacier National Park (Sc.).....
Sept. 26—The Andrew .....
Sept. 28—The Filibuster's Ship (Dr.).....
Sept. 30—Pathe's Weekly, No. 40.....
Sept. 30—The Man Hunt (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—A Well-Washed House .....
Oct. 1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.) .....
Oct. 2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct. 3—Theodore Roosevelt .....
Oct. 3—Experiments with Liquid Air.....
Oct. 4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—Pathe's Weekly No. 41.....
Oct. 8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.).....
Oct. 8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)..
Oct. 9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—His Country Before All (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Naughty Marietta (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Pathe's Weekly, No. 42.....
Oct. 15—Max Fights a Duel (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Valley of Chevreuse, France (Tr.) .....
Oct. 16—The Lass of Clauster (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Striped Bathing Suit (Com.)...
Oct. 17—Sub-marine Fauna (Oceanic) .....
Oct. 18—The Rubber Industry in Malaysia (Ind.) .....
Oct. 18—The Convertible Auto (Trick).....
Oct. 19—Misleading Evidence (Dr.) .....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Sept. 20—Tilley's Bird Farm (Edu.).....
Sept. 21—The Grit of the Girl Telegrapher (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—Fat Bill's Wooing (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Roost, the Kidder (Com.).....
Sept. 25—Queen of the Kitchen (Com.).....
Sept. 25—Along the River Nile (Sc.).....
Sept. 27—The Heart of John Grimm (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 28—The Apache Renegade (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—The Poacher's Pardon (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—A Hospital Hoax (Com.).....
Oct. 2—Ancient Temples of Egypt (Sc.)...
Oct. 4—The Village Vixen (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—The Confederate Ironclad (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 7—When Youth Meets Youth (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 9—The Belle of the Beach (Dr.)....
Oct. 9—Election Day in Californita (Com.)
Oct. 11—His Mother's Picture (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Redskin Raiders (Dr.).....1000

SELIG

Sept. 20—Life and Customs of the Winnebago Indians (Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—A Detective's Strategy (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 24—The Cattle Rustlers (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 25—Partners (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 26—The Pity of It (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 27—The Borrowed Umbrella (Com.)..
Sept. 27—Harvesting Alfalfa in New Mexico (Ind.) .....
Sept. 30—Bread Upon the Waters (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 1—Why Jim Reformed (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—The Pirate's Daughter (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—The Great Drought (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 4—An Assisted Elopement (Com.)....1000
Oct. 7—How the Cause Was Won (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 8—A Motorcycle Adventure (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—When Edith Played Judge and Jury (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 10—Euchered (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 11—An International Romance (Com.)..1000
Oct. 14—My Wife's Bonnet (Com.).....1000
Oct. 15—The Opium Smugglers (Dr.).....1000

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Sept. 11—And Chemical Action (Ed.)..... 180
Sept. 11—And Winter Sports in Moritz.... (Topical) 485
Sept. 18—New Plymouth (Scenic); and A Country Holiday (Com.)..... 980
Sept. 25—The Sacrifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel) 500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.).... 500
Oct. 9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)... 300
Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)..... 700
Oct. 16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)..... 995
Oct. 16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic) 300
Oct. 23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)..... 400
Oct. 23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)... 300
Oct. 30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)..... 975
Nov. 6—The Queen of Spades (Dr.).....1007

VITAGRAPH

Aug. 26—A Double Danger.....
Sept. 2—Tommy's Sister .....
Sept. 3—Coronets and Hearts.....
Sept. 4—Capt. Barnacle's Legacy.....
Sept. 6—Bunny's Suicide .....
Sept. 6—She Wanted a Boarder.....
Sept. 7—A Wasted Sacrifice .....
Sept. 9—Patio Days .....
Sept. 10—The Higher Mercy.....
Sept. 11—The Hindoo Curse.....
Sept. 13—The Loyalty of Sylvia.....
Sept. 14—Popular Betty.....
Sept. 14—Fortunes in a Teacup.....
Sept. 16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif.....
Sept. 17—The Troubled Trail.....
Sept. 18—A Vitagraph Romance.....
Sept. 20—The Indian Mutiny .....
Sept. 21—Adventure of the Italian Model..
Sept. 23—Bobby's Father .....
Sept. 24—His Lordship, the Valet .....
Sept. 25—Bill Wilson's Gal.....
Sept. 26—The Signal Fires.....
Sept. 27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville.....
Sept. 28—Irony of Fate .....
Sept. 30—Her Choice .....
Sept. 20—Burning of a Match Factory (Top.) 500
Oct. 1—Adventures of the Smelling Salts (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 2—Bachelors' Buttons (Com.) .....
Oct. 2—Diana's Legacy (Com.) .....
Oct. 3—She Cried (Com.).....1000
Oct. 4—Her Spoiled Boy (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—The Red Barrier (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Nothing to Wear (Com.).....1000
Oct. 7—As You Like It (Special 3 reels) (Dr.) 3000
Oct. 8—Scenes Along River Lee (Dr.)..... 300
Oct. 8—The Godmother (Com.) 700
Oct. 9—When Persistency and Obstinacy meet (Com.) 1000
Oct. 10—As Fate Would Have It (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Mammoth Life Savers (Com.).....1000
Oct. 11—Her Father's Hat (Com.) 1000
Oct. 12—When California Was Young (Dr.).1000

Warner comes back with the missing medal, and is enraged to learn that his coat has been stolen. The street parade is then shown, with the soldiers, bands, zouaves, etc., and the old veterans, cheered by thousands of spectators along the line of march. Burns takes his place in the ranks, with his chest thrown out and carrying two small flags in his hands. Mrs. Simpson occupies a conspicuous position in the grandstand and cheers the supposed veteran as he struts by.

Warner suspects that Burns has his coat and looks for him at the parade. He interrupts the marchers and becomes involved with the marshals, but he finally spies Burns and makes a dive for him. Burns sees him and dodges in and out of the parade, with Warner hot on his trail. He finally runs back to the Soldiers' Home, where he divests himself of the coat, when Warner comes panting up with his heavy cane in his hand. He attempts to strike Burns, who heroically protects himself by placing the flag on his chest. Mrs. Simpson comes along and, by clever coquetry, manages to subdue the two angry old men and to make them shake hands.

"101" BISON—NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

THE VENGEANCE OF FATE (2 reels) (Oct. 18).—This is another of the New York Motion Picture Company's stupendous productions, with overwhelming cast of soldiers and Indians, as well as emigrants, pioneers, horses, cattle, etc., showing stirring incidents in frontier life.

Hazel Phillips, a beautiful young girl, is courted by two young men, Evans and Porter, in a Western town. She favors Porter, and the two are wed. Evans conceals his chagrin and jealousy, and continues as a friend of the young couple.

One day a prospector comes into town with a bag of gold dust and nuggets, and tells an interested crowd of the big strike made in the southwest. Evans decides to seek his fortune there, and persuades Porter to accompany him. Hazel consents, and bids her husband an affectionate farewell.

The two men strike through the desert, and after months of hardship and privation Porter finally finds gold. His extreme jealousy has made Evans content to have Porter with him, as he gloated to himself that he was keeping him away from Hazel. When Porter runs in with the glad news Evans becomes madly angered, as he realizes that Porter will go back to his wife with a fortune, and an insane rage seizes him as he realizes how happy they will be.

Before the astonished Porter can defend himself Evans leaps upon him and strikes him to the earth with the butt of his pistol. The injured man staggers to his feet, but is no match for the infuriated Evans, who rains blow after blow upon his partner's head. Porter sinks to the ground, and Evans leaves him for dead.

The Deception

Evans goes to Hazel and tells her a false story of how Porter died of illness; how he nursed him through it all, and how he had come to convey her husband's dying message to her.

Porter is found by a tribe of Indians and nursed back to life. He recovers his health and strength but his memory is a blank, and he is adopted into the tribe.

Evans goes back to the gold mine and works it. Knowing that Hazel will soon be in want, having lost her parents and with a baby to support, he lays his trap cunningly. When he goes back to ask her to marry him he finally wins her consent by persuading her it is for the good of her baby, and she accompanies him back to the wild, western country, where he has built a cabin.

His Child

A few days after her arrival, the baby wanders off into the woods and is playing on the banks of a brook when it is taken by Indians. As they are hurrying away with the child Porter appears, and the sight of the innocent baby arouses him. Not knowing that it is his own child he makes them set her free, and she runs home with a tale which her mother believes is only childish imagination.

Silently and noiselessly, Porter watches the woman through the window, and the sight of her face touches his slumbering memory, but does not awaken it. Troubled, he goes back to the camp, unable to untangle the confused thoughts which crowd upon his poor brain.

At this time the government agent, accompanied by an escort of soldiers, calls upon the Indians and serves notice on them to vacate the land and move to a reservation. The Indians resent the order, and wild disorder prevails in the village. Somebody strikes a blow—ready weapons spring forth, and in a moment an avalanche of redskins throw themselves upon the soldiers. Porter is struck on the head with the butt of a rifle, and the shock instantly clears his mind. The face of the woman in the cabin comes before him, and he knows it is Hazel.

The soldiers put up a futile resistance, and are soon despatched. Porter knows that it is but the beginning, that the Indians will go on the warpath, that they will hurl themselves upon the immigrants and settlers, leaving a trail of death and destruction in their wake—and he thinks of Hazel and the baby! He rushes away, hoping to reach the cabin before the rest of the tribe arrive, and succeeds.

With the lapse of years, in his paint and feathers, he is not recognized by Hazel at first. From the window they see the long line of Indians thundering toward them. There is no time to be lost, so Porter throws a table behind the door, crowds Hazel and the baby behind it, and stands there unconcernedly. The Indians rush in and demolish and steal everything, and are adroitly kept from discovering the woman and child.

Unsuspecting, Evans comes home. The Indians hide, and as he approaches the cabin he is attacked and killed, his body stripped of his clothes, and the Indians go on.

In the meantime the soldiers have been rushed to the scene of warfare, and corner the redskins, engaging them in a terrific fight, in which the Indians are badly defeated.

Porter, with the cunning learned from the Indians, has managed to bring his wife and child to a place of safety, and the reunion is splendidly acted.

The last scene shows the vengeance of fate—the dilapidated cabin, with the bones of Evans lying in front, around which coyotes are sniffling.

BRONCHO

THE SHERIFF'S ADOPTED CHILD (Oct. 16).—This is a typically Western production, with big scenes and stirring situations, in which a clever boy does some remarkable acting.

The sheriff lives with his sister, and is engaged in running down an unknown bandit who has been quite active in the district. It develops that Jim Brown, a poor miner, who has lost his wife and is in straitened circumstances, has become embittered at the world and is the bandit, living alone with his little boy, Tom. Exciting scenes are shown as the sheriff finally trails his man to the cabin. Brown sees the posse coming and gets away, but is captured in a running fight.

Touched by the grief of the little boy, the sheriff takes Tom and gives him a home. The boy tosses in his bed, unable to sleep as he thinks of his father in jail. He cautiously gets up and, securing a rope, a file and his father's belt and pistols, he makes his way to the barred window and manages to hand them to his father.

Securing his horse he gallops away, riding hard all night. The devotion of his boy and the big-heartedness of the sheriff have shamed him beyond measure, and he writes the sheriff a letter telling him that henceforth he will follow the right path, and when he has redeemed himself he will send for Tom.

A theatre that will be the smallest in New York is to be built in the yards of two old dwellings at 66 and 68 West Thirty-eighth street. It will accommodate 266 people. The orchestra will hold 98, the balcony 91 and the gallery 77. The stage will be 19 feet wide and 14 feet deep and will be devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures. The theatre is being built by the Rhinelander estate, which owns the property, and is being done for Paul D. Leighton, who has the lease.

"I saw a real uplifting picture at th' 'Spare Moments Theatre' last night."

"How was that?"

"Fourteen hod-carriers had parts in the play."

* * * *

Our idea of really talented Scenario Editor is the one who can make it sound as if he spoke from personal experience when he informs his contributors that riches do not bring happiness.

SLIDES

¶ Announcement - Advertising, something that pleases the eye. Slides like you can't buy without you follow the crowd to

Niagara Slide Company
Lockport, N. Y.
Catalog Free Box N

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL

A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.

Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST

The Cleveland Leader

Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT.,
THE CLEVELAND LEADER,
CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 817 1815 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD

YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

EASTMAN

motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MIATT PROCURES PATENTS
1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law
Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive.
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

The Thanhouser Three-A-Week

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13

"Dotty, The Dancer"

A musical comedy man is one of the talent at a rich man's home, and is smitten with the daughter of the house, who reciprocates his affection. Of course, the difference in their positions makes marriage out of the question until—a wig and a female dancer's costume turns the trick.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 15

"When Mercy Tempers Justice"

A refined theme, refinedly treated, and certain to win the approval of the most discriminating audiences. Such films as this gain the "pictures" new friends, and from the best classes.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18

"For the Mikado"

A story of Japanese patriotism that is made the more understandable by the recent tragic ending of General Nogi, caused by the demise of his ruler, the Mikado. The loyalty of a timid Jap woman (Miss Takagi) to her husband and her country causes her to sacrifice her life without a tremor.

And Then These Two-Reel Features:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29

"PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE," a human interest film in the "East Lynne" class. Adapted from the book of CHARLES READE.

DATES SHORTLY

"THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM," a Thanhouser Masterpiece—that's all.

"FOREST ROSE," a realistic filmatization of EMERSON BENNETT'S thrilling story of pioneer days in the West.

"THE WOMAN IN WHITE," the best known of all WILKIE COLLINS' novels.

Thanhouser Company, New Rochelle, N.Y.

The Film Supply Company, American and Canadian Agents.

ADVERTISING MATTER FOR

DUBLIN DAN

THE IRISH DETECTIVE

Includes two kinds of One Sheets, Three Sheets, Colored Announcement Slides, Illustrated Heralds and Half-Sheet Lobby Displays in Three Colors, Showing a Large Reproduction of the Popular who is featured in the title role of this thrilling and sensational melodramatic masterpiece.

BARNEY GILMORE

Sample copies of excellent literature

FREE TO EXHIBITORS AND STATE RIGHT BUYERS

Fertile, Exclusive Territory Still Open.

REGULAR RELEASES

FILM SUPPLY COMPANY

THE GOLD BRICK (Comedy)
Released Wednesday, October 16

THE MAVERICK (Melodrama)
Released Friday, October 18

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING
Released Wednesday, October 23

Solax Company

FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

FILMS OF FULFILLMENT

LOVE'S TEST

Its Popularity Will TEST the Seating Capacity of Your Theatre
When You See a Good Thing—GO FOR IT

Seeking a Cupid without cupidity—A Dolly Dollars who wants to be loved for herself—Finding a nature's nobleman while disguised—Loyalty that would endure a life of bread and cheese and kisses—Love laughs at locksmiths in the form of a shrewd father.

IT LASSOES THE INTEREST

THE TIE ETERNAL

An agreeable variation of the "Eternal Triangle"—Showing the indivisibility of the marital unit—The child versus divorce.

Saturday, October 5th—LAUNCHING OF THE IMPERATOR and HARVESTING IN THE NORTHWEST.
Saturday, October 12th—REUNION WEEK IN ELI TOWN AND THE COTTON INDUSTRY.
Tuesday, October 15th—BEETHOVEN.
Thursday, October 17th—THE LEGEND OF CAGLIOSTRO.
Saturday, October 19th—THE PANAMA CANAL AND TOPICAL.

GAUMONT COMPANY

Flushing, New York

FILM SUPPLY CO. OF AMERICA, Sole Distributors.

FILMS OF FUTURITY

FILMS OF FELICITY

OCT 16 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 15

OCTOBER 12
1912

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
OCT 17 1912
PERIODICAL

PRICE TEN CENTS

PEARL WHITE
Leading Lady, Crystal Films

GAUMONT

"GREAT EVENTS"

THE PANAMA CANAL and The NAVAL REVIEW at NEW YORK

A SPLIT REEL--SATURDAY, OCT. 19th

The greatest engineering feat of any age. A task colossal whose near accomplishment by Americans rouses pride in every patriot. The views of our warriors of the sea will be an inspiration to every one with the red, white and blue in their veins.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RELEASES

Saturday, Oct. 12—THE COTTON INDUSTRY and SPECIAL
Tuesday, Oct. 15—BEETHOVEN
Thursday, Oct. 17—THE LEGEND OF CAGLIOSTRO
Saturday, Oct. 19—THE PANAMA CANAL and the NAVAL REVIEW OF NEW YORK
Tuesday, Oct. 22—A COUNTRY SCANDAL
Thursday, Oct. 24—LOVE AND CALINO MARRIES A SUFFRAGETTE

THESE RELEASES WILL NOT RELEASE YOU FROM THE MORAL OBLIGATION OF OBTAINING THE BEST IN MOTION PICTURES

COPYRIGHT PROTECTS ALL OUR FILMS
INFRINGEMENTS WILL BE VIGOROUSLY PROSECUTED

Gaumont

GAUMONT CO.

Flushing, N. Y.

FILM SUPPLY CO. OF AMERICA, Sole Distributors

Gaumont

GENUINE "101" BISON HEADLINER

"The Colonel's Ward"

IN TWO REELS——RELEASED OCTOBER 25

SENSATIONAL PIONEER MILITARY SUBJECT

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT FORD STERLING
MABEL NORMAND FRED MACE

Supported by a Strong Company

"The Ambitious Butler" AND "The Flirting Husband"

A split reel comedy with a thousand laughs, released MONDAY, OCTOBER 21

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"The Story of the Savage Modock Mine"

Sensational western story with tense situations.

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23

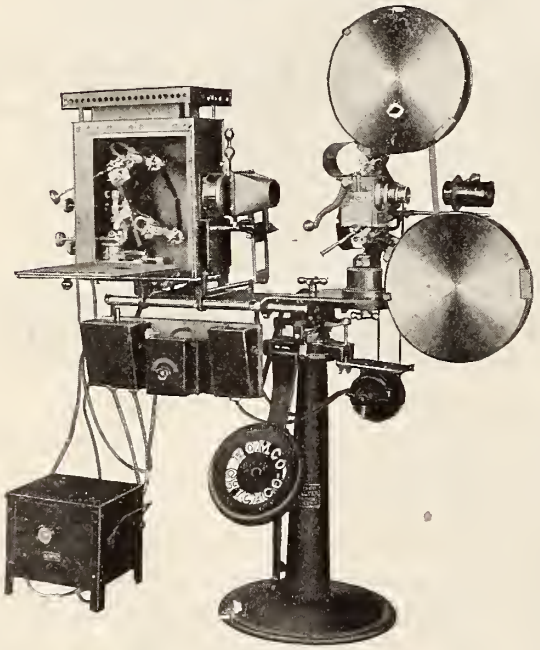
BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

MOTIOGRAPH QUALITY
HAS NEVER BEEN QUESTIONED

WE WANT YOU to compare THE MOTIOGRAPH with any machine selling near the same price—

WE WANT YOU to learn that WE USE NO COMPOSITION METAL IN OUR CONSTRUCTION — IT IS NOT GOOD ENOUGH to match up to the HIGH STANDARD QUALITY which has so firmly established the reputation of this machine.



THREE DISTINCT EQUIPMENTS
THREE DISTINCT PRICES
BUT ONLY ONE QUALITY OF MATERIAL AND WORKMANSHIP

EQUIPMENT PRICES

1002—A, without motor and seat.....$250.00
1002—D, complete with motor and seat..285.00
1002—M, completed Massachusetts Special with motor and seat and enclosed mechanism..... 300.00

You can buy direct from us—or from your nearest exchange.

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.
568 West Randolph Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

SOLAX

SECURE BOOKINGS FOR THE BIG PRODUCTION

DUBLIN DAN

THE IRISH DETECTIVE

By communicating with us for names of Exclusive

TERRITORY BUYERS

Feature buyers can purchase some good states—which have not as yet been sold—wire quick for terms and information. Abundance of advertising matter in circulation. Three sheets, two kinds of one sheets, announcements slides, heralds, and half-sheets, lobby displays with large reproduction of the popular idol.

BARNEY GILMORE

The King of Melodrama—Playing the Title Role.

ANOTHER BIG FEATURE COMING —A BIG EDUCATIONAL SUBJECT

"MAKING AN AMERICAN CITIZEN"

Regular release of Friday, November 1. A powerful story of compelling forcefulness. A great American theme—throbbing with human interest.

Released Wednesday, October 23d
"THE HIGH COST OF LIVING"

Released Friday, October 25th
"THE IDOL WORSHIPER"

Solax Company

LEMOINE AVENUE, FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

SOLAX

PATHE CAMERA

Four Magazines, Carrying Case, Zeiss-Tessar Lens, Brand New, For Sale. Will ship privilege of examination 25% down. Address A. A., 31 West 46th St., New York City.

1000 Reels
FILMS FOR SALE
$2.50 Per Reel Up.
Many Bargains.
ACME FILM CO., INC.
130 West 37th Street, N. Y. C.

LOCAL MOTION PICTURES MADE FOR 10 CENTS
PER FOOT.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFRS. CO., Inc.,
248 WEST 35TH ST.,
NEW YORK.

TUESDAY, OCT. 15TH
"ALL FOR JIM"
A POWERFUL MODERN DRAMA.

MAJESTIC

SUNDAY, OCT. 20TH.
"CAPTAIN BEN'S YARN"
SOMETHING NEW IN COMEDY—A STUPENDOUS PRODUCTION.
—COMING—
Oct. 22—"Love and War"
Oct. 27—"The Tree Imp"
Oct. 29—"A Woman Alone"
Nov. 3—"Weary's Revenge"
Nov. 5—"Cupid on the Job"
Nov. 10—"The Deacon's Shoes" and "His Cook Lady"
The Majestic Motion Picture Co., 540 West 21st Street, New York City

NOW READY
BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS
One Sheet Lithos and Excellent Lecture.
Send for Circulars and Prices.
A. J. CLAPHAM. 130 West 37th Street, New York

When You Consider MAKING MOVING PICTURES

Remember That Every Manufacturer of Note Has Equipped His Factory with

WILLIAMSON MOVING PICTURE CAMERAS, PRINTERS AND PERFORATORS

SOLE AGENTS
WHYTE-WHITMAN COMPANY, 36 East 23rd St., New York City

For reference as to Quality consult the following: The Vitagraph Co. of America, The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America, The Powers Picture Plays Co., Nestor Co., Thanhouser Co., Rex, Champion, Melies, Gaumont, St. Louis Motion Picture Co., Kinemacolor Co. of America, N. Y. Motion Picture Co., Bison, Crystal Film Co., Universal Film Mfg. Co., Solax Co., Kalem Co.

Corcoran Moving Picture Tanks

Develop your films to perfection. Save Time and Reduce Your Expenses by using a "Corcoran Film Development Tank." All up-to-date houses have installed the "Corcoran System."

Send for Price List No. 5

A. J. CORCORAN, Inc.
No. 9½ JOHN ST., NEW YORK CITY

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

KINEMACOLOR
FILM SERVICE

EXCLUSIVE SERVICE FOR YOUR TOWN
ONE SERVICE TO EACH TOWN

Special Supply Topical, Educational, Travel, Fashions

AMERICAN ACTED DRAMAS and COMEDIES

EVERY ONE A HEADLINER

Write or Wire for Our EXCLUSIVE PROPOSITION

KINEMACOLOR CO. OF AMERICA 1600 BROADWAY NEW YORK

EASTMAN
motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MIATT PROCURES
PATENTS
1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law
Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive.
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

© CL.B259353

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI October 12, 1912 Number 15

SCHOOLS? SCHOOLS?

SCHOOLS, do I say? Yes, I say schools, because as such they are known at present, but I do not say what schools, or describe them, except to say that they are there to aggravate the temperament of their dupes and to make easy marks of them, while proprietors smilingly pocket the cash which they are taking under false pretences. The sooner the Post-Office authorities and the Federal powers make an inquiry into these schools (?), the better it will be for a gullible public. I have had many people, prospective actors and actresses, scenario writers and moving picture operators, call in to see me to obtain evidence as to the value of these so-called—illegitimate—schools. I have always advised everyone to keep their money in their pockets, and read the current literature of the day, as by so doing they will gain greater knowledge and more advantage, as well as save themselves a vast amount of ill temper and distrust in human nature.

There is, first of all, the school that attempts to make playwrights out of illiterate innocent people, and whose advertisements appear in some of the highest-class journals of to-day, whose sole object is to get the ten, fifteen and twenty-five dollars for the course, well knowing that it is an impossibility to make scenario writers out of those who take their course. There has sprung up so-called operators' schools which take a fee from the operator, or the would-be operator, teaching him how to thread up a machine and general knowledge; then, by some hocus-pocus crookedness, getting a license granted to the operator after six weeks' instruction. I have often wondered where the graft for this work goes to, and how it is possible for these schools to get city licenses when operators who have been in the business for five and six years and who, with all their experience, are turned down as failures. Will some of my readers tell me why, because I want to know?

Last, but not least, the cause for my writng this article is the latest school, which professes to teach young girls and women how to act before the camera. Three ladies recently called in my office asking for information of a school for moving picture actors in the neighborhood of 145 West 45th Street, and asked if it was possible to learn and get engagements afterward for the sum of $10. I told each of them that if they had any merit and would go to the manufacturers direct, they would be able to save $10 and much more besides. This much more besides is taken from them in this way: It is a well-known fact that the majority of the manufacturers pay their help $5 a day to pose in pictures. This school of which I speak is also acting as an agency to send young starving girls to pose in pictures. They collect the $5 and give the girls $2, netting them $3 commission. Is this honest? Not being satisfied with this, every time the girls pose they demand another $3, and if they are foolish enough to accept it the girls get $2 instead of $5. Again, is this honest? I should say no, it is not. It is the most dishonest transaction it is possible to conceive.

To give a case in point, one of the actresses who have placed themselves in this agency received $2 for the first time she appeared at one of the most reputable companies in the city, and the school pocketed $3. The second time she was "called," and she went to the agency's office to collect her fee. She received the two dollars, and when expressing surprise was kindly told that the call boy received two dollars of this three and the agent only received one. She immediately demanded the full fee, but did not get it, although she did get another two dollars, the agent pocketing the one dollar.

Now, ladies of the profession of moving picture actresses, I do not believe there is a single manufacturer in the industry who desires to go to an agency of this character to obtain actresses or other help, and I do not believe one of these manufacturers, if they know the true facts of the case, would ever countenance the call boys, the acting school or the acting agency to fleece you poor innocent lambs, and by so doing get rich quickly themselves. It is my intention to bring all of these cases to the attention of the manufacturers in the city, and if you will let me know by letter—all of you—those who have been here, and those who read these notes, I will take your cases up personally and see that such swindling propensities are put to an end.

Alfred H. Saunders.

Seated, left to right: C. A. Willat, treasurer; John Bunny, First Vice-President; King Baggot, President; Calder Johnstone, Corresponding Secretary; Harry R. Raver, Recording Secretary.
Standing, left to right: C. Jay Williams, Herbert Brenon, Lawrence McGill, Oscar C. Apfel, Tefft Johnson, William Robert Daly.

THE SCREEN CLUB

The Screen Club held its first election of officers and Board of Governors on Saturday evening, September 28th, at Bryant Hall, when the following were elected: King Baggot, President; John Bunny, First Vice-President; G. M. Anderson, Second Vice-President; Arthur Johnson, Third Vice-President; Calder Johnstone, Corresponding Secretary; Harry R. Raver, Recording Secretary; C. A. Willat, Treasurer; and the following to serve on the Board two years: William Robert Daly, Lawrence McGill, Herbert Brenon, and Victor Smith; and the following to serve on the Board for one year: Tefft Johnson, Pierce Kingsley, Oscar C. Apfel, and C. Jay Williams.

The meeting was the most enthusiastic of any which have been held, and following the nominating speech of John Bunny, who had the honor of naming Mr. Baggot as President, the hall resounded with cheers for over ten minutes. Mr. Baggot made a stirring speech of acceptance, his remarks being straight to the point, full of sincerity, and positive conviction.

J. H. Gerhardt, of the Dramatic Mirror, acted as Vice-Chairman during the meeting, wielding the gavel in such an entirely satisfactory manner that there could be absolutely no cause for criticism of the way in which the business of the evening was conducted. Mr. Gerhardt's rulings were strictly in accordance with parliamentary procedure and the Club owes him a debt of gratitude for his services.

Following the election the officers and the Board held an informal meeting and on the following Thursday night, their first regular meeting at which the prominent Ways and Means Committee was appointed, this Committee including King Baggot ex-officio; John Bunny, Calder Johnstone, Harry R. Raver, C. A. Willat, Herbert Brenon and Oscar C. Apfel.

The matter of a Club house was the chief topic of discussion and, after the meeting of the Board, all of the members visited a house on West 45th street which was tentatively agreed upon as acceptable for all Club purposes. The Board instructed the President and the Ways and Means Commitee to take definite action regarding this matter and it can be safely stated that within a month's time the Club will be comfortably located in its first home.

To those readers of the Moving Picture News, who may not be familiar with the objects of the Screen Club, it can be briefly stated that the membership of the Club includes motion picture actors, authors, directors, owners, and managers of motion picture plants, authors of photo plays and scenario editors, newspaper and publicity men and camera men.

The charter initiation fee is $15.00. The resident annual dues are $12.00, payable half-yearly in advance. The non-resident dues are $6.00, payable half-yearly in advance. A life membership costs $100.00, and at the meeting referred to the Corresponding Secretary had the pleasure of announcing receipt of two checks for life membership from Mr. Carl Laemmle, President of the Imp Films Company, and Mr. P. A. Powers, President of the Powers Motion Picture Company.

Unfortunately the Temporary Treasurer, Frank Powell, was unable to accept the office of permanent Treasurer, which was duly tendered him, owing to the fact that he is going to the Coast within a few weeks' time as a director of one of the leading motion picture companies. The Screen Club owes Mr. Powell a large debt for his untiring efforts in behalf of the Club, and it is to be hoped that next year he will be able to accept office.

The next meeting of The Screen Club will be held at Bryant Hall, on Saturday, October 26th, when all who have not as yet enrolled as charter members will have the privilege of so doing.

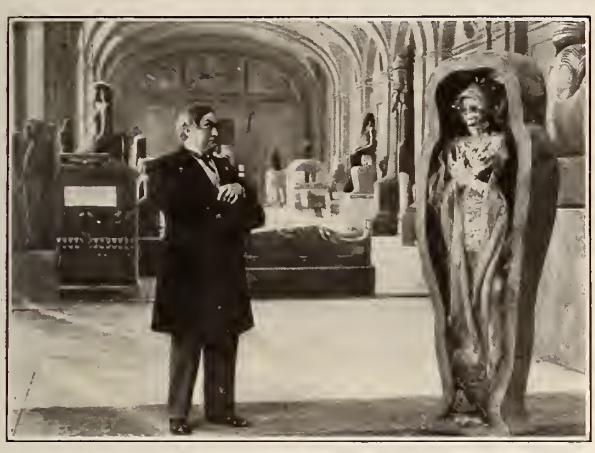
THE VENGEANCE OF EGYPT

(Gaumont Three-Reel Production)

The above production from the Gaumont Company is startling and original in theme, and gruesome, too. It is a wonderful film and well worthy of the magnificence which has been expended in its production.

It is not a hand-colored, but as a black-and-white it far surpasses many of the previous splendid productions for which Gaumont is famous.

The trouble in the story starts with the desecrating of a mummy by taking a ring from its finger. This was done by an officer of the army of Napoleon, then in Egypt, who after sending it to Paris as a gift to his sweetheart, succumbs to the ravages of the plague, thereby bringing sorrow and disaster into the life of his beloved.



AFTER AN ABSENCE OF MORE THAN A CENTURY THE RING IS ABOUT TO BE RESTORED

After a lapse of thirty years we find the girl unmarried and centering all her affection and attention on her nephew, who in rummaging through his aunt's desk finds the ring.

Again the ring leaves in its wake a trail of sadness, for the young man, struck by its oddity, and in spite of the fact that his aunt bids him return it to its place in the drawer, brings it as a gift to his beloved as she sits by the evening lamp in her room at home. But, alas! the happiness of the possession was destined to be short-lived, for even then behind them, through the mullioned window, showed the sinister features of the strangler.

With other stolen valuables the ring is brought by the murderer to the shop of an antiquary. The old man, suspecting that the ring is stolen, frightens the murderer into giving it to him. After the ring has been placed on his bony finger and he attempts to withdraw it, he finds that it has tightened, and in wrenching it off the skin of his finger is grazed to bleeding. Blood poisoning sets in and in the morning the old man is found dead.

At the auction sale of the effects of the antiquary a young man buys the circlet of catastrophe, intending to present it to his sweetheart, but is shot by his rival as he paddles up the river to the trysting place.

After many years have elapsed, and it is now 1912, a young man and woman gathering water lilies in the river find the ring encircling the stem of a beautiful blossom. It is again used as the token of a future married happiness that is never to be realized, and the aeroplane in which the young man takes his sweetheart for a flight is wrecked and both are killed.

HER ADORED DEAD FROM THE PLAGUE! BUT WAS IT NOT IN ACCORD WITH THE RING OF THE DREADFUL DREAMS?

The mother takes the ring from the cold finger of her daughter and places it upon her own, and the Nemesis of the ring, still active, she and her husband, while riding in their automobile, are precipitated over a high precipice and killed instantly.

A fisherman pushing his net through the surf which ran at the foot of the precipice finds the ring. An Egyptian scholar to whom he shows it recognizes it as belonging to the mummy Emestris, which by a queer coincidence is then in Paris.

As the ring is restored to the withered finger of the mummy, it seems to the scientist's imagination that the features of the gruesome thing actually relax, that a softened expression takes the place of that of hatred, and that the mission of the avenger being finished it lapses into the satisfied stupor of the ages

This release is very exceptional—a wonderful production.

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

In a recent interview with the writer Mr. Woodward the Manager said regarding their new model 1913 machine:

There seems to be some misunderstanding, as regards our having discontinued the 1912 model Motiograph Moving Picture Machine, with the appearance of the 1913 model on the market, and as we can well appreciate the widespread circulation that you have, as a means to advise the public generally, we would appreciate it very much, if you will publish prominently in your reading columns the fact that with the appearance of the 1913 Model Motiograph Machine on the market, on August 17th, 1912, we discontinued the manufacture of the 1912 model.

Kindly mention the fact that, with the appearance of our Advance Supplement of the 1913 Model, all previous price lists and catalogs were made void.

We are still in a position to furnish repair parts for all previous Models of the Motiograph, on short notice, and suggest to your readers that it is wise to always furnish the manufacturer with the serial number of the mechanism when ordering a repair part.

New York, N. Y.—Great Eastern Film Exchange Co., capital $10,000. Incorporators: Adam Kessel, Jr., Charles Bauman and Charles Kessel.

No one had ever heard him speak a word so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM". Then one day he told his story just as ECLAIR will re-tell it in a forthcoming Feature Release

THE KINEMACOLOR COMPANY

After months of silence on the part of the Kinemacolor Company of America, it is announced that the producers of these wonderful natural color motion pictures are ready to enter the regular motion picture field. The publicity department states that during the months of preparation for their film service they have completed 311 subjects of one, two and three reels each, and that all of these are now on the market.

There have been many rumors regarding the policy of the Kinemacolor Company, and much interest was excited when they took an expensive suite of offices comprising the whole floor of the Mecca Building at Broadway and Forty-eighth street. This elaborate headquarters contains the finest private exhibition room in the world, a regulation safe deposit vault in which 2,000 reels of film can be stored, machine rooms, inspection rooms, and every other necessity for active competition. In addition to this are the luxurious private offices from which the department heads direct the varied Kinemacolor activities all over the country.

VIEW OF OFFICES

EDUCATIONAL FILM DEPARTMENT

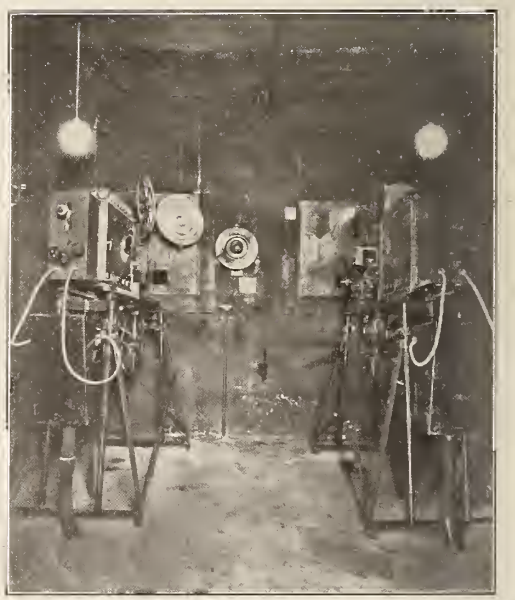
Henry J. Brock, the president, in pursuing his policy to make Kinemacolor "pictorial presentation perfected," several months ago engaged David Miles, one of the best known directors of the motion picture industry, and put him in charge of the dramatic departments. Mr. Miles has had working under him for the past four months an aggregation of motion picture artists divided into three very fine companies, each with a competent director. As a result, the Kinemacolor Company now has a splendid supply of American acted dramas and comedies ready for release in their regular film service.

These American acted productions have completed the Kinemacolor film library for service, because for some time they have had on hand a large stock of foreign dramatic subjects, travels through the most interesting parts of the world, topical subjects of current interest, and some animal, bird and fish studies that are truly remarkable for their reflection of the marvelous workings of nature.

A representative of the company told the writer that the company received many applications for film service as a result of the advertising sent out last week, a large percentage of these replies being sent by telegraph. Contracts are being closed, and the Kinemacolor film service will be established immediately in the better class of moving picture and vaudeville houses.

Pursuing their policy of extension, Mr. Miles recently has established three more dramatic companies to work at the Whitestone, L. I., studios, and generally through the Eastern States, while he has personally taken the three original companies, comprising seventy members, on a Western tour. Two of these companies are to proceed at once to the new Kinemacolor studios at Hollywood, Los Angeles, where they will be permanently established. The third will create productions which have been prepared for months, using the glorious wonderland of the Grand Canyon for a background. The color films will catch every glory of this paradise on earth, and the scenarios to be worked out there are said to be tremendously effective. This company will later take side trips to all parts of California, New Mexico and Arizona, where useful "local color" may be obtained. Anita Hendries Miles will accompany the Western party as general scenario editor.

PROJECTING ROOM



PROJECTING MACHINE BOOTH

After Mr. Miles has started the companies at work, he will leave them in charge of Frank Woods and Jack Le Saint, both well known directors, and he will return to make up new companies in the East. Being the only Company to produce the colors of nature it will be necessary to make as many productions as half a dozen of the "black and white" companies combined.

Among the artists who went West with Mr. Miles are many familiar names, including the Misses Mabel Van Buren, Stella Bazetto, Ruby Ross, Ethel Davis, and Lainda A. Griffeth, also Messrs. Gaston Bell, Chas. Fleming, Jack Brammall, Chas. Haydon, Wm. Brown, Guy Oliver, Ceceil Magnus, Robert Broderick, Ernest Joy and Murdock McQuarrie.

"THE HOMECOMING"

Eclair, Release October 22

One thing which impressed the writer about this release was its clearness in construction. It is a sort of story which could have most easily been ruined through any slighting of technical development. Not that we are sticklers for technique, yet we have long held to the argument that a better mastery of fundamental picture play rules would have saved many a story, which otherwise was a wanton failure.

The writer for one favors the striking little sequent tableaus which the director has worked in, to put over the feeling of the story rather than to resort to the much-abused sub-titling habit. They are short but telling. They are "picture dope" to use the inside expression.

The story, while rather conventional, takes a new turn which saves it from the commonplace. The work of all is clever, sincere and convincing. And that little Clara Horton, the "Eclair Kid," they proudly call her at the studio, is perfect. She works with a perfectly unconscious feeling of the camera. Not a sign of childish conceit is apparent in her enactment and her sweetness is ingenuously genuine.

The story deals with the treachery of a young broker in shifting the blame of certain criminal manipulations upon his elder partner, who is "sent up" for ten years. During his servitude his thoughts turn to revenge until it becomes an obsession.

He is released and sets about to kill the informing partner only to be prevented by a child whom he learns is of his own flesh and blood—his own granddaughter.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING (SOLAX)

And there's little to earn and many to keep.
For men must work and women must weep
Kingsley.

If the tariff had been revised downward—if instead of protecting by an equalizing tariff, such "infant" industries as the Standard Oil Company, the American Tobacco Company, American Woolen Company, the Armour's Beef, and U. S. Steel Corporations and such other "weak little" combinations, the poor man would perhaps be contented and be able to look the landlord, butcher, the grocer and the baker square in the face. As it is, within the last few years prices of the necessities of life have been soaring while the scale of wages has not kept pace with the increased cost of living. "The rich man has been growing richer and the poor man poorer."

This condition of affairs is the thesis of the Solax production, "The High Cost of Living," the release of October 23d. Joel Smith, an ironworker, has given the best years of his life—almost half a century—to his employer. He rises to be foreman of the foundry but because of mental limitations does not reach an influential or remunerative position. He works steadily and while rents go up and the cost of foods advance, old Joel is in a rut. For ten years he hasn't had an increase in salary. Nor have the men who worked alongside of him been more fortunate. Joel would have continued in the rut but for the active dissatisfaction of the younger men in the foundry.

They decide to rebel against existing conditions—to strike—if their employer does not meet their demands for a general increase in wages. Because of his age and influence with the head of the firm, Old Joel is sent to the boss. While Joel is received with cordiality, the boss is firm. He asserts he cannot meet the demands of the men, and the strike is declared.

Poor Joel, although he can little afford it, joins the men. After several weeks of idleness, he is in desperate straits. He either has the alternative of starving or else beg—something he is too proud to do. As a last resort, when he sees his suffering widowed daughter and her children before him, he decides to go back to the forge.

Serious consequences develop, and Joel finds himself an object of pity before a judge and jury. The story is full of heart interest, of poignant suffering, of truth and of wisdom.

PHILLIPS SMALLEY

LOIS WEBER

TWO CLEVER FAVORITES

The faces represented in the above cuts are no doubt well known to all our readers.

Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber are among the most magnetic of motion picture players—eminently clever and versatile. They have recently taken leave of the Rex Motion Picture Co., after spending 80 weeks in the employ of that company, playing leads.

Miss Weber in addition to playing leads, acted in the capacity of directress at the Rex Studio for several months, and is also a clever scenario writer. "The Lash of Fate," "The Derelict," "The Price of Peace," "Modern Slaves," are among the many stories which she has written for the moving pictures; all of this with five years dramatic experience prior to entering the moving picture profession, and two years with the Gaumont Talking Pictures as leading woman and directress go to prove Miss Weber's value as a most versatile and clever woman.

And Mr. Smalley's repertoire of experiences is quite as interesting as Miss Weber's. The following will tell the tale: Six months with Reliance, five months with Kalem, one year and a half with Gaumont Talking Pictures, leads and directorship; twenty years' dramatic experience, including three years with Mrs. Fiske, three years with Savage, one year with Shuberts, heavy for Elizabeth Tyree (H. B. Harriss), one year with Lieber & Co.

A TANGLED MARRIAGE
Crystal Films

ALL FOR JIM
Majestic release October 15th.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

IN commenting upon the fact that Lillian Russell may appear in moving pictures, a New York theatrical critic, whose syndicated letter is widely circulated in the West, writes the following paragraph in his weekly comments:

> "Actors evidently have feared that moving pictures would hurt their dignity, for they have been slow in appearing in them. Nat Goodwin and May Buckley have been the only two who were willing, but now that Lillian Russell has consented, no doubt there will be a rush."

The above effusion is just another case of a writer being ignorant of his subject. For the supposed theatrical expert to assert that Nat Goodwin and May Buckley have been the only two who were willing to pose in the pictures, proves that the word "critic" is a misnomer. We suppose that Bernhardt, Rejane, Walsh, Gilmore, Wilder, Bunny and many others are not actors and actresses in the opinion of this writer. Any moving picture manufacturer could show this "authority" long lists of the names of excellent actors and actresses who are only awaiting an opportunity to engage in moving picture work. The stars of to-day on the moving picture screen are also Thespians of the highest type. The reason they are not supplanted by other headliners from the "legitimate" is because Baggott, Lawrence, Turner, Johnson and the rest can do the difficult work required in a much more meritorious manner.

* * * *

Exhibitors of the Buckeye State are conferring for the purpose of cutting down the length of the programme in many Ohio cities. President Neff, of Cincinnati, attended a meeting of exhibitors in Springfield, Ohio, last week and spoke regarding the plans of Cincinnati exhibitors. The Springfield exhibitors propose giving the Sunday laws a test, as was done in Dayton, Columbus, and Cincinnati, and which in every case resulted in victories for the moving picture theatre managers. It is likely that a rule will be made that no picture programme extend over 45 minutes. At the present time, some Ohio exhibitors put on a programme of films for five cents admission that lasts more than an hour, and this is too long to make a legitimate profit. Ohio exhibitors are discovering that in many of the smaller cities of the state the public has been wrongly educated. A song and two reels of first-class pictures is abundant entertainment for five cents. Most of the exhibitors in the inland cities have been presenting an illustrated song and three reels for a nickle. The programme has been cut to two reels with disastrous results. It was tried for a week recently in several towns and then the three-reel programme was resumed. Perhaps if the exhibitors would be firm on the two-reel proposition, the Ohio picture fans would soon recover from their demands for "something for nothing." The public should be educated to pay ten cents for a programme of three good films. It's a cheap entertainment at that price.

* * * *

It remains for a lady manager of a moving picture theatre in Garrett, Ind., to outwit reformers who attempted to close her theatre on Sunday. The reformers (God save the appellation) served notice on the theatre management the other Sunday evening that if the house was not closed arrests would be made. However, Miss Leah Little, who owns the Little Theatre, was not to be daunted, and conducted her show as usual. Instead of charging the usual admittance, it was a free-will offering. Although the instigators of the closing ordinance had promised to have Miss Little arrested the following Monday morning, they failed to do so. The Little Theatre has proved too little to hold the Sunday evening attendance. Other Indiana exhibitors say they will follow her example. It is said that the free-will offering totals a larger sum than if straight admission prices were demanded.

We were glad to receive the following letter from Lois Weber:

> "Was 'The Great Man' referred to by the editor of the Ohio State Journal as having been seen in a moving picture recently, as quoted on your page, the Prophet, in 'A Prophet Without Honor,' written and produced by me while a member of the Rex Company the past Summer? If so, does it not bear out my old contention that the best pictures are not those of sustained suspense or terrific climax? For the picture was a simple story, told in simple fashion and without either of the usually sought dramatic features."

We had the "Prophet Without Honor" picture in our mind when we read and clipped that editorial and undoubtedly the editorial writer was actuated by the same film. When the cynical newspaper man, harassed and overworked, is influenced enough by a moving picture to return to the office and editorially pour out the sentiment for the benefit of thousands of others, there is certainly something refined and elevating in that same moving picture story. Lois Weber's old contention as to the "terrific climax" picture is well taken, and we have spoken in the past of this monotonous action. The simple story, told in simple fashion, is a story devoutly to be wished for in this hey-day of burning, pillaging, death struggles and "problems" so numerous on the moving picture screen. The quiet, convincing picture, containing a simple story of every-day life comes as a too-infrequent relief to the factory product turned out with machine-like regularity in some of the studios. The editor of a great newspaper was agreeably surprised by the simple story told in a simple fashion. It relieved the monotony and he was delighted to tell others of a tale where the triangle was not inflicted and the lovers did not clinch in the climax. Let the simple story told in simple fashion become more frequent.

* * * *

Hon. John J. Lentz, former Democratic Congressman, lives in Columbus, Ohio. He is an attorney for the Ohio Exhibitors' League. He is also a national character in Democratic politics. Mr. Lentz made an assertion at the National Convention of Moving Picture Exhibitors at Chicago, which has been turned and twisted considerably. Here is what he said:

> "If every church in this land would put in a moving picture every Sunday, I believe we would all go. I would go myself if they would have the film there! It would be a drawing card for the churches. Not having the film in the church is the cause of empty pews."

And we are of the belief that before many months have passed that a majority of the churches in this broad land will have installed the moving picture screen. There are many elevating pictures that could appropriately be displayed in houses of worship. Kalem is about to release "The Life of Christ," taken in the Holy Land, and we are of the opinion that this picture is going to have a great deal to do with influencing the church congregations in favor of Cinematography as an incentive to church attendance and of impressing the Sunday school lessons upon the minds of the rising generation. One by one, the city churches are coming into the fold. It will not be long, with the assistance of Kalem, Pathe and other concerns making a specialty of Biblical subjects before almost all churches will accept the picture as an important educational adjunct in the religious cause.

* * * *

It is said that secret orders of this country are inclining more and more toward the moving picture in their initiatory work. It is claimed that several of the more important orders are to have special films manufactured which will play an important part in degree work. Impressive lessons to the candidate can be prepared with the aid of the moving picture.

INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

IN the Patent Office applications for the reissue of letters patent are regarded more stringently than ever, especially those designed to expand the scope of claims. Only bona fide cases of "inadvertence, accident or mistake" meet with favor, and of these "accident" is the best excuse. "Inadvertence" or "mistake" on the part of the applicant or his attorney in the preparation of the original application for Patent is not condoned. Furthermore, a delay of over two years from date of original patent is fatal to an application for reissue with broadened claims, unless unusually extenuating circumstances can be proven. In Ex parte Tilton (O. G. 182, p. 971) Commissioner Moore held "that the statement that applicant relied upon his attorney and the latter omitted to claim the invention as broadly as possible, and that applicant did not discover the omission at the time the patent issued, is insufficient to justify the grant of the reissue."

The law may be dry, but how about Stein v. Stein (N. Y. Sup. 1147)? Here's Hock!

Patent No. 1,037,188, to E. L. Aiken, of East Orange, N. J., assignor by mesne assignments, to Thomas A. Edison, Incorporated, of West Orange, N. J.

The invention relates to apparatus for the projecting of moving pictures. It is important that the celluloid film upon which the pictures are carried shall not be exposed to the heat, which accompanies the projecting light, for more than a brief interval of time. Ordinarily, since the film travels rapidly past the opening through which the pictures are projected it does not become heated to a dangerous extent, but in case the mechanism becomes deranged so as not to properly feed the film, or in case the operator fails to properly operate the said mechanism, the film may become ignited with disastrous results. Hence, the provision of improved means for automatically cutting off the beam of light from the film when the same is not being properly moved—said means being capable of application as an attachment to ordinary projecting machines now in use, and consisting essentially of a safety shutter actuated and controlled by the film and composed of two pivoted members situated directly behind the display opening and adapted to move away from each other to permit the light to pass, and to move toward each other until they overlap as shown in the accompanying view, in order to cut off the light when the speed of the film diminishes sufficiently to render the light dangerous thereto.

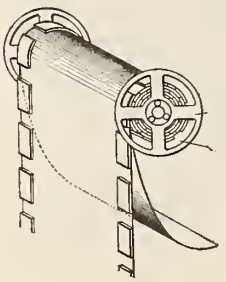
An absolutely fireproof film-rewinding machine driven by an electric motor is announced, which winds taut and evenly, obviating the scratches that are so objectionable in a "rainy" hand-wound film.

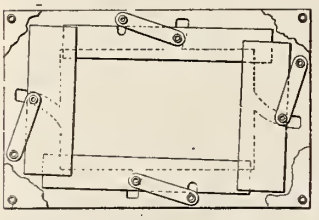
Dr. Isadore Kitsee, who took up the problem of synchronizing the phonograph and moving picture films as long ago as 1905, recently gave a very creditable exhibition thereof in Philadelphia. Seven years is not slow in the City of Brotherly Love.

Patent No. 1,037,192, to F. W. Battershall, of Albany, New York. The object of the invention is to effect the development of a roll of film while still carried upon the spool which is used for supporting it in making the photographic exposures in the camera, it being merely necessary to remove the roll from the latter and insert it without change in developing baths in the presence of actinic light. Thus the old dark room is dispensed with, as well as the newer method requiring special non-actinic apparatus. The film is carried on an opaque strip provided with spaced projections which separate said strip and film. The spool is also provided with end closures which exclude the light. The patent covers broadly the method, which comprises exposing and re-rolling with separated convolutions a roll of film in a camera and developing said roll of film before unwinding it after leaving the camera.



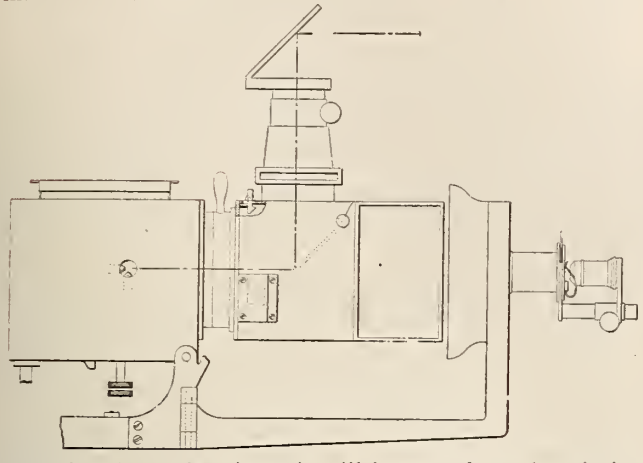
A camera for amateur use, adapted to take motion pictures as well as project the same, has been successfully introduced abroad. Glass plates are used instead of films. By turning a crank portions of each plate are exposed consecutively, the plate being fed, step by step, automatically, until fully exposed, when another plate is substituted automatically. After development, to project the pictures, the plates are replaced in the camera in proper order, a projecting lantern is placed behind the apparatus, and the crank is turned.

Patent No. 1,037,198, to R. L. Boyd, of Plainfield, N. J., relates to the printing of photographs in ordinary printing frames. In making prints from certain kinds of pictures, particularly such as show an expanse of water, the camera, especially if held in the hand, will usually have the picture upon the exposed surface in an inclined position, so that a horizontal line in the view, which should produce a horizontal line in the picture, will be tilted or inclined from the horizontal. The object of the invention is to remedy this, and also to provide means for shortening or enlarging either the foreground or the background of the picture in the print, and to this end movable screens are provided around the edges of the negative which may be adjusted so as to bring the edges of the print into proper relation with the horizontal and vertical lines in the photograph, or to modify the foreground or background. The adjoining illustration represents a front view of the device as used in an ordinary printing frame, parts being broken away to show the screens, etc.



Small electric glow lamps adapted for use as vest and coat buttons are in evidence, and obviously may be useful as well as ornamental, rendering another recent invention, the self-luminate keyhole, unnecessary.

Patent No. 1,038,349. To Elmor W. Goodrich, of Boston, Mass. The cut shown was inadvertently dropped out of the form last week. If readers will refer to last issue it will be seen from description that it is an exceptionally good device.



We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the MOVING PICTURE NEWS.

Geo. Wm. Miatt

(Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

FLORENCE LA BADIE
Thanhouser Co.

GEORGE LARKIN
(Eclair)

George Larkin alias "The Picture Daredevil," is nursing a badly injured arm, which was occasioned by a jump from a cliff, which leap didn't work out just as planned.

Time was when the producers could substitute dummies for all hazardous feats, but the public soon learned to discern the trick of it, till now not a day passes but what some actor must take some bodily risk. And the most peculiar part is that they seem to grow to liking it, for the very next day Larkin repeated the almost self-same bit of death defiance in a scene belonging to "Silent Jim," a coming feature release by Eclair.

Washington, D. C.

The Paul J. Rainey African Hunt pictures have closed a successful visit of two weeks at the Belasco Theatre. The fact that these films were displayed before the Geographic Society here last season served to advertise them among the educators, scientists and professional and official circles of Washington, and many who were unable to see these wonderful views at that time welcomed the opportunity afforded them in this public exhibition.

One of the charms of the Rainey pictures is the absolute absence of pose and dramatic effects; everything is natural and has the appearance of being natural. There is nothing tiresome about these scenes as many had expected; the interest is kept up all the time. The wonder of the pictures is realized in the securing of such unusual bits of natural animal life, and the dangers encountered or risked by the camera man. There is scarcely another set of views which so graphically describes the domestic life of wild animals and the ways and means of the true hunter.

While the various reels pictorially tell the story of Mr. Rainey's hunt, the exhibition is made more intelligently understood by the explanatory remarks by Mr. Reginald Carrington. The method of introducing the men as they appeared on the screen, as well as the animals, gave a personal tone to the story. His frequent introduction of characteristics and customs of beasts, birds, and natives familiarized his audience with the country through which it was passing in a forceful and interesting manner. The fact that Mr. Carrington was able to pick out or eject some humor from the scenes on the screen broke the monotony of the otherwise quiet picture spectators, and added entertainment and realism to the exhibition.

Kankakee, Ill.—La Petite Moving Picture Theatre burned out.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Horace Vinton, If You Please!

THE likeness of Horace Vinton which we print this week is not so very good. Honestly, Horace is a much handsomer man than the photograph that we "swiped" when he wasn't around. All jokes aside, Horace Vinton is some Script Editor and Director (kindly underscore some). He gravitated naturally from the "legit" into Picturedom. He likes the work; so do his employers. Mr. and Mrs. Vinton were vaudeville headliners before Vinton entered the studio. When asked for an interview, Horace broke the record by refusing it. To quote his own words: "I was not born on a farm; was never a soldier, a sailor, a miner, and I never sold 95 per cent. of the scripts I have written." Vinton bulged into the business way back in 1898, when he furnished scripts for Selig and Essanay. In 1910 he became a director and scenario man for the American Film Company. Later he transferred his affections to the Shamrock Film concern at St. Louis. Later he became editor and a director for the Comet Film Company. At present he is at liberty, but it will not be for long. Among the subjects Mr. Vinton has written and produced might be mentioned: "Bonanza King," "Pittsburg Millionaire," "Inventor's Model," "On the Wrong Scent," "One Minute to Live," "Checkmate," "Reddy's Redemption," "Romance in Old California," "Reggie Breaks the College Rules," "Tale of a Rubber Boot," "Reformed by Stratagem," "Two Women and One Man," and many others. Vinton has a host of friends among script writers who have appreciated his many little acts of courtesy and kindness in the past.

HORACE VINTON

A Picture Play Contest

Mr. Ralph D. Stoddard, picture play editor of the Cleveland News and Leader, announces that awards amounting to $100 are offered by the Cleveland Daily News for the four best moving picture plays. The prize-winning scripts will be produced and exhibited in Cleveland theatres. The judges will give preference to plays that deal with the growth and progress of the Sixth City and it is requested that one or more scenes include a large number of persons. The scripts should be sent in between October 21 and 26. Cleveland writers will be given the preference in awarding prizes.

The Offer Withdrawn

Recently the Universal Film Company Script Reading Bureau offered to read, criticise and revise scripts free of charge. This department received an avalanche of inquiries concerning the innovation. We queried Hal Reid, then editor for the Universal, for additional details not given in his advertisement. He informed us that the "advertisement meant exactly what it said," and that there was nothing to add to it. However, Mr. Reid was mistaken. After his resignation as script editor the following announcement was made:

> "Owing to a change in the management of the Scenario Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the offer to read and criticise manuscripts free of charge has been withdrawn and no longer obtains, as it would burden the department with entirely too much work."

It is authoritatively asserted that the unusual offer was made by Mr. Reid without consulting the other members of the department and when he resigned, the editorial force did not feel that they should be expected to conduct a "university" for unknown authors out of the goodness of their hearts and free of charge. We advise our readers to forget that the free offer ever appeared. Editors have no time to personally edit and criticise every script that comes in, whether available or not, hence do not send scripts to any one of the Universal concerns with the expectation of free criticism and editing.

Some of the Reasons

A. W. Thomas, associate editor of the Photoplay Magazine, gives some of the reasons for rejections of picture play manuscripts:

> "Writers should bear them in mind and try and avoid each as far as possible. Not sufficient humor for comedy; too large a cast; plot too weak; too melodramatic; too improbable; too unpleasant; too conventional; too expensive to produce; not enough action; similar idea used before; similar to magazine story; not of the class desired and unable to pass censorship."

Appear nearly insurmountable difficulties? Not at all. After a time you will catch the hang of it and will almost unconsciously avoid the usual pitfalls.

Mr. Thomas also writes a few trite suggestions on the comedy subject, as follows:

> "The best sellers to-day are comedies. Can you write a comedy? Try it, for the producer will pay more attention to it just now than to any other, for good, clean, humorous stories are scarce. Don't write a story simply showing a series of situations or incidents, chases, upsets, 'accidents,' pranks and the like, but weave a plot about the situations that will bring understanding and amusement without resorting to the ridiculous."

In other words, put brains into your comic situations. Have at least the thread of a plot and hit off some frill or foible humanly and reasonably.

As to Plots

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., believes he is a good "plotter" and wishes to sell straight plots and not picture plays. He takes too seriously our recent paragraph about the very unusual bent of a certain man who is supplying an author with plot-germs for scripts. The custom will not hit one man in a thousand. Pathe is the only concern we know that will occasionally consider a plot scantily dressed. The weather is too chilly to let your plots go forth so attired. If you are a good "plotter" two-thirds of the battle is already won. You can learn the rest. Really you are more fortunate than the majority. Many have a superabundance of technique and no plot at all.

Writing Short Stories

Mr. Sargent recently suggested an idea that is worthy of more than passing notice. It has been in your mind to touch on the same subject. He believes that many a pictureplaywright can learn to write short stories because the training in the picture play field is a great schooling for those ambitious to succeed in short fiction. He is correct. If you can clothe your plots in correct wording, try the magazine field. If you have never sold a short story perhaps you will write a half-dozen before finding a market. However, if you keep at it, you may become successful in another lucrative literary field. Many who successfully write picture plays will never become successful writers of magazine fiction. Then reverse the statement. Then again: There are a number we can name who can write both short fiction stuff and picture plays successfully. Maybe you can, too. Try it.

Character

Character is shown in typewritten manuscripts the same as in hand-written. When the editor takes up a typewritten script, mussy, both single and double spaced, badly typed with a worn-out ribbon, he is not apt to read very far. He unconsciously receives the impression that the writer is a novice and that his unity of thought is about like the typewritten manuscript. Turn out neat copy. Either double or single space, never both. Use a good, fresh typewriter ribbon and do not use onion-skin paper. Be clean in your work and be clean in your thoughts.

The Magazine Writers

Some months ago we stirred up a rumpus by claiming that magazine writers would become successful in the picture play field and that many of them were turning to the new occupation. Our assertion is proving true. Among the famous authors who are now writing scripts are: Randall Parish, Molly Elliott Sewell, Albert Bigelow Paine, Bertrand W. Sinclair, B. M. Bower, Roy Norton, B. M. Ferguson, Capt. Charles King and Marjorie Benton Cook. We also know of one moving picture concern that has addressed letters to well-known writers of short fiction offering $25 for every plot submitted and accepted and giving permission to the writer to use the plot again in a short story. It can be stated that a number of literary stars have availed themselves of the offer. But remember, the unknown writer, who has the original goods, is as cordially welcomed as of yore. Yes, more so, for so very many haven't the goods.

The Kind That Count

The kind of policies that count are honest, straightforward policies. These are evidently the kind determined upon by Editor Letendre of The Photoplay Author. There are too many mushroom periodicals of infinite variety, that seek to get the money with as small a return as possible to the struggling pictureplaywright. Editor Letendre proposes that no misleading statements from "universities" shall appear in his publication. In connection with this policy Mr. Letendre writes:

> "It may not be out of place to mention here also that we have refused to accept in advertisements any reference to the article by Emmet Campbell Hall in which he wrote that he had made $1,485 in one year writing picture plays. The fact that Mr. Hall made this amount is no reason why he should not receive all the credit in the world for his wonderful achievement, but when it is used extensively in advertising campaigns, it is misleading to the beginner, inasmuch as it makes it appear that the matter of writing and disposing of picture plays is only a matter of glancing at a few words of instruction and then a dash to the typewriter. The successful picture play author of to-day is lucky if he averages $400 to $500 a year with his scripts, and it will be an everlasting long time before the average writers ever get that much, so in representing such profits in the business as $1,485, it is not representing a common condition, but an extraordinary condition brought about only by the combined ability and intellectual ingenuity of Mr. Hall."

We place our stamp of approval on Editor Letendre and his above editorial. Of course, Mr. Hall is a genius, for, according to his statement, he made over $30 weekly as a free lance writing picture plays nearly three years ago. Possibly he is making $100 weekly now. However, such amazing success is not for the average writer, as Mr. Letendre truthfully says, and the sooner such bait is exhausted by the "schools" the better it will be for the beginner's pocketbook.

Give Three Ringing Cheers!

Give three loud cheers, because Joe Roach will become affiliated with the Comet Company as editor. Joe will get busy and dig out those year-old scripts and send them chasing back to anxious authors. Roach is one of the best men in the editorial end of the business. He was formerly with the Universal script reading bureau and did his best along with Messrs. Hoadly and Hall to keep things peaceable. (Hal Reid was editor-in-chief.) Writers are asked to tell their troubles to Roach. He will find those old scripts if anybody can.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT.

Not in Universal

Last week we were made to say that the Comet Company was a member of the Universal Film merger. This is not true. It is also believed that with the editorial plans the contributors who have been querying for scripts to Comet, will be given every consideration.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM". Then one day he told his story just as ECLAIR will re-tell it in a forthcoming Feature Release

HOW JACK WON OUT
Reliance release October 23rd.

THE SINGLE MEN

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Majestic Release)

THE door of Jack Vincent's automobile closed with such a bang that the word he uttered was not heard even by his chauffeur.

The young fellow slouched down into the seat with his hands pushed deep into his trousers pockets. "Damn," he said again with such vehemence that the chauffeur said, "I beg your pardon, sir, I did not hear you speak before."

"I wasn't speaking to you, Morgan, but now that the conversation is opened, I'll say that you can take a vacation if you want to. I'm going away and I shan't take a car with me."

"You're not going to ——?"

"No, I'm not," roared Vincent, "you can stay as long as you like. Have a good time and never cease to be thankful that you are not a millionaire. Here." He thrust a roll of bills into the astonished Morgan's hand and jumped to the ground as the car drew up to the curb.

"Hodges," said Vincent to his valet as he took his coat and hat, "How would you like to be a millionaire and have all the mammas in the town trying to marry you to their daughters?"

"Well, sir, I wouldn't mind being a millionaire, sir, and I wouldn't mind marrying a nice young girl, but please, sir, I'd rather make me own choice."

"That's the point exactly, Hodges. I always knew you had a level head."

Hodges drew himself up with pride as he said, "Thank you, Mr. Jack."

Jack paid no attention to him but continued talking.

"They're driving me crazy. I have the consciousness all the time that some big upholstered dame is casting her evil eye on me and trying to weave a net around me. They'd conquer me if they could. Hodges," he continued in a confidential tone, "I'm going to the country for a while —a long while—and live a free life. I'm not going to tell anybody where I'm going—not even you. I feel as if I were dying of suffocation with all these females pestering me to death. You can go on a grand vacation, Hodges, and have the time of your life. Here's two hundred dollars and your wages."

Jack counted out the money and laid it on the table. "I'm not going to take a thing with me—money or anything else."

"But, Mr. Jack——" began Hodges.

"Now, don't argue with me, Hodges. I know you are sixty and I'm twenty-four, but you're my valet just the same, and I know what I'm doing." He turned toward the old man almost appealingly. "I've got to do it, I tell you. They are killing me."

Jack threw himself into a Morris chair and sat looking moodily out of the window at the two rows of bright lights along the street below.

"Hodges," he said again after a short silence, "Hodges, what do you suppose it would feel like to be loved for your very own self?"

"Well, I—you know, Mr. Jack—that is, a man sometimes thinks—and I—well——"

"Oh, you needn't tell me the history of your life. I suppose every man thinks he's loved for himself alone. Most of them are conceited enough. But confound it, when a man's got a lot of money he can't tell, to save his life."

"Well," he said after a pause, "I suppose a rich man has no business to expect love. But I'm going to have freedom from these man-hunting mammas if it takes a leg."

Turning to Hodges he said: "You go down first thing in the morning and get me a second-hand suit—a seedy-looking one, and a cap. Have a taxi at the door at three in the afternoon and then you can close up and go where you please."

Hodges opened his mouth to speak, but the look of determination on Jack's face stopped him and he only shook his head.

The next morning when Jack awakened, the suit and cap were on a chair near his bed.

"Well," he said when he had put them on, "I look like a first-class hobo."

A sense of freedom seemed to steal over him as he stood before the glass with his hands in his empty pockets.

All went well and at five minutes after three Jack stepped quickly into the ordered taxicab and gave his destination at the Grand Central Station.

After his ticket was paid for, Jack had but three dollars and thirty-five cents. He had bought a ticket to Boston but he boarded a local train as he expected to leave it at the first promising looking station far enough away from New York to do as a starting point for his adventures.

One little station after another was passed before Jack's interest was aroused. He never knew what made him leave the train at last, perhaps he was guided by an unseen hand—and perhaps the brakeman called the name a little louder than usual. Anyway, he did get off and start on his way along the road.

Automobiles passed him going in both directions. If the occupants of any of them were acquaintances of Jack's, neither he nor they knew it. He kept his cap pulled down over his eyes and walked along with his hands deep in his pockets.

That night Jack slept on the bare ground for the first time in his life. He had bought his supper at a farmhouse and then walked two miles farther.

His bed was a mattress of pine needles. Through the far-reaching branches above him the stars shone as Jack didn't know they could shine, and for a long time he couldn't sleep for the new thoughts and feelings he was experiencing.

The next morning his bathtub was a stream nearby, and when he had bathed and stood on the bank, glowing from the reaction of the cold water, he felt that he could conquer the whole world.

As he swung up the road he felt like one of the knights of old, going forth to conquer and to aid those in distress.

"Gee," said Jack to himself, "Lancelot and the rest of the bunch must have taken a bath in a running stream every morning. Now for the maiden in distress."

As he turned a bend in the road he saw that his opportunity was at hand, not in the shape of a maiden but an old man with an overturned wagon of vegetables.

"What's happened, sir?" asked Jack.

"One o' them gosh darned machines run into me."

Jack expressed his sympathy and set to work to assist the old man. In a short time they had things in shape.

"Say, young feller," said the farmer, "I like you. What d'ye say to clerkin' fer me? I live at Bingtown and own the store there. I need a clerk an' I'll pay ye eight dollars a week an' board ye. What d'ye say?"

Jack knew that the man had made him a very generous offer. He was looking for experience. Why not try this? So he said: "Thank you, sir, I'll be glad to try. I don't know much about clerking."

"Oh, ye'll soon learn. An' by the way, my name's Smith. What's yourn?"

Jack told him and they began to feel acquainted.

When they arrived at the store they found it occupied by no one but a girl of about eighteen.

"This is my daughter, Marie," said Farmer Smith, "and this here is a new clerk, Marie. His name's Jack Vincent."

Jack and Marie looked at each other and spoke. Jack saw a girl in a plain, shapeless dress, with her hair brushed straight back and braided, and he looked away. Marie saw a very good-looking young fellow who somehow looked different from the fellows of Bingtown—and she looked at him the second time.

"I'll go over to the house and get you some breakfast," said the girl, and left the store.

"Marie's got right good schoolin'," said Mr. Smith, when she was out of hearing, "but she likes her home, I'm glad to say, an' ain't got no fool notions about goin' to the city."

Jack agreed that she was very wise, and at once set about finding out what his duties were.

The days passed quickly and quietly into weeks. Jack became more and more fond of the village and its people. He knew that these people liked him for himself.

Only one thing troubled him. Marie seemed to dislike him. At least she avoided him and acted unnaturally when compelled to be in his presence. Of course, she was just a plain little country girl and it didn't really matter, but he had to be with her sometimes, and it made him feel uncomfortable.

Once he told her he didn't believe she liked him. She only shook her head in a way that he did not understand at all, and there were tears in her eyes as she turned away. He didn't understand her actions and he didn't understand why he let it trouble him.

In Bingtown, as in many other country villages, "parties" were not infrequently given by different members of the community. One day when Jack and Marie were both in the store a young lady of the neighborhood came in to announce that she was to give a party the next week and wanted them both to come. Marie accepted at once but Jack said, "I'm very sorry but I really couldn't come for I have no clothes but my working clothes."

The hostess-to-be insisted, but Jack said he really couldn't come under those circumstances.

The evening arrived. Jack went to his room after supper, and to his great surprise, there lay upon the bed a complete suit of new clothes. He knew at once that Marie must have put them there, and he knew also the sort of clothes they must be.

Gingerly he picked them up and looked them over. Then with a wry face he said, "By George, I'll wear them if it kills me!"

When he was dressed in the suit he found the effect a little worse than he had expected, but as the clothes wouldn't fit him he determined to fit the clothes to the best of his ability.

He drew himself up as best he could to fill out the slack places and went down stairs to see if he might go with Marie.

On the front porch, in the light of the sinking sun, stood the girl. Jack could not help exclaiming, "Why, Marie, is that you? What have you done to yourself?" She turned quickly, and seeing the expression of admiration on his face, she blushed for pleasure.

She was beautiful. All she had needed was a few softening touches to relieve the usual severity of line, and she was, in a magic moment, transformed from a plain little country girl to a really beautiful young woman.

On the way to the party neither Marie nor Jack had anything to say. Thoughts that they dare not speak were in their minds and silence seemed the only safety. They danced together many times during the evening but they spoke very little.

When the gaiety of the party was at its height the horn of an automobile sounded in the road outside. "Hello," called some one in the car and was answered by those on the porch. "We've had an accident," continued the speaker in the car, "and we want to find some supper and a place to sleep to-night."

They were soon invited into the house and promised supper and beds.

When the party of four came to the parlor where the most of the guests were assembled, one of the women exclaimed, "For heaven's sake, there's Jack Vincent. You old rascal, we've been looking everywhere for you. What on earth are you doing here?"

"Well, I—I—I just came here for a little vacation, that's all," said Jack, very much conscious of his clothes.

"Ladies and gentlemen," declared one of the motor party as he stepped upon a chair, "Ladies and gentlemen, you have among you Mr. John Vincent, the multi-millionaire. He has left New York to live the simple life. Hurrah for Jack Vincent!"

All the men and girls began to cheer loudly. Jack saw Marie slip through a side door, and as quick as he could he got away, too. When he reached the side yard the girl was nowhere to be seen, but from down in the grape arbor there came a strange sound. Jack made his way there as quickly as possible.

"Marie," he whispered as he knelt by the sobbing girl, "what is the matter, Marie?"

"Nothing, only I—I like—you, and now—now you are not like us—at all," sobbed Marie.

"Oh, Marie, don't say that, please, please," pleaded Jack. "Say that you love me. I have loved you all along and I didn't know what was the matter with me. I am rich, it's true, but that doesn't make any difference. Say that you love me."

"Yes, yes, I love you," cried Marie, "but I don't want you to be a millionaire."

"But my money can't make any difference as long as we love each other," insisted Jack. "I came away from New York wondering how it would feel to have a woman love me for myself. I have found out and I know it makes a fellow mighty happy."

"And I bought your suit because I thought you couldn't afford to buy one for yourself," said Marie, smiling in spite of her tears.

"We'll keep it always," whispered Jack, "to remember the time that I came to live the simple life and found the simple country maiden who is wise enough to put love before money."

MISS PEARL WHITE TO BECOME AVIATOR

By M. I. MacDonald

Have you ever seen Pearl White? "Well, I guess so!" I hear hundreds of voices exclaiming in unison. Anyone who has seen Pathé pictures within the past three years has marveled at her clever work. Miss White usually played dramatic leads with Pathé, you will remember. Do you know that now she is playing comedy parts for the Crystal Film Co. wonderfully well? Mr. Joseph A. Golden, than whom no cleverer director of motion pictures exists, has cast her for comedy parts. He says she is one of the best comedy players that he has handled. What do you think of such versatility?

Miss White, a young lady of many accomplishments other than acting, among them expert management of her automobile, is enamored of the art of aviation. The other day she happened in the office of this magazine and with her eyes glistening and her face aglow with enthusiasm, she told us that it was her intention to learn to aviate. When she is a birdwoman, will she play pictures? Oh, we think so.

Perhaps you would like to know something of Pearl White's origin. Well, she was born in a little town in Missouri, the tenth of ten children. She is an orphan. Her mother went out of the world the day that her tenth child came into it, and only two of these ten children are now living—Miss Pearl and one other. Her mother was a well-known English toe dancer, and her father was a theatre manager in the little Missouri town. One day "Uncle Tom's Cabin" came to her father's theatre. "Little Eva" was taken ill and Pearl, the daughter of the theatre manager, the little girl who has since then entertained so many audiences in pictures, took the place of "Little Eva," filling it so acceptably that for some time she traveled with the company playing the role.

There is no need to tell you anything about the personality of Miss White—this you know better than I do. Her face has a thousand expressions. I think I have never seen one which had more numerous tones of light and shade. Her manner on meeting you is not that of other girls. She sizes you up, makes you take the initiative, and then when she's sure of her ground, sure that you're with her, she opens her heart to you as frankly and charmingly as any stranger could.

The Crystal Film Co. are indeed fortunate in securing Miss White as their leading lady, and we congratulate them most heartily on their good fortune.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM". Then one day he told his story just as ECLAIR will re-tell it in a forthcoming Feature Release

THE MUSICIAN AND THE PICTURE

By ERNST LUZ

As a preface to my discussion of "The Musician and the Picture," I would have it understood that it is my earnest desire to always be the "musician's" friend, for being of you, I am for you and your betterment. Therefore, whether now or hereafter, I may criticise, more or less severely, it will be done for the sole purpose of laying greater stress upon the remedies I propose.

There is no need to deny the fact that music in its present relation to the picture is a sadly neglected affair, not alone by you, Mr. Musician—although you alone are getting the full benefit of the severe criticisms, and I dare say the entire blame—but it is more neglected by the producer, who at times spends thousands of dollars for a single production, knowing as he must, that his thrills, climaxes, etc., will in most instances be marred by the musical accompaniment, while they easily could be made more thrilling and realistic by the correct and thoughtful use of music. I have yet to find one genuine help, of practical use, given out to the worried "picture musician," while the picture playwright and operator are always well supplied.

Mr. Ambitious Musician, I know how you feel, and your good intentions when you entered the business. I can see you in your search for help, only to find after innumerable experiences that your nervous system was on the verge of a collapse and all you were really positive of in picture playing was to play the "Star Spangled Banner" when the American flag appeared on the screen and behold the audience applaud.

I can also see you stop being foolish (foolish is the stage-name for ambitious in picture playing) and drop into the "keep your foot on the soft, soft pedal" class, improvising or faking your way through the picture, keeping the piano going, playing nothing. Little do you think or possibly care for the "musical piracy" you are committing, or how you are degrading what should be a profession, for not alone the musical critics, but the moving picture audiences as well, hold it as a disgrace over your head. In spite of another writer's words, saying that in his experience he knows of little being said in praise or blame of the music as played to the picture, I from personal knowledge know that much is said and it is lamentable to note how little good.

To devise a means for proper musical settings for the picture, thereby elevating the vocation of picture playing to its higher sphere, a profession, and endeavoring to have the public talk good about you, Mr. Musician (which will materially increase your salary) is then my mission, for which I ask your earnest and honest co-operation and welcome your suggestions. When we studied music, we were taught to believe it a profession; why, then, allow it to be degraded? When you enter the business of "picture playing," having talent and ability, you should be honored for it and should be given the opportunity of developing that talent and ability, this being the stepping stone to still greater musical achievements.

I am sorry to say that with the present conditions existing in picture playing this is impossible, and to illustrate wherein lies your greatest handicap, I will draw a parallel showing the conditions existing for you, Mr. Picture Musician, and those existing for the professional theatre, opera or concert musician. The latter goes to his theatre or concert, knowing full well what is expected of him, and is familiar with that which he is to perform, for which reason he renders it well and is honored, while you go to your work having no advance information and in a quandary as to whether you will be criticised for too much or too little rag-time.

It may seem ridiculous to you that I make this comparison, but I can assure you from personal experience in all above branches, that with improved methods, picture playing will hold out greater inducements to the good musician and in its entirety be as profitable, if not more so, than the above professional careers.

With music to the picture universally adopted by all producers and perfected by them, as it must be, there is no gainsaying the fact that the moving picture will be forever a feature in the education and entertainment of the public. Why should music not be a feature of the picture?

The prime motive of every picture, with its thrills, climaxes and other different situations is for the sole purpose of creating temperamental thought and interest in the audience. The very foundation of music is temperament, hence we have the numerous tempos, which give the composer unlimited latitude in creating temperamental musical effects. The producer creates comedies to tickle the audience so to speak, and the modern composer avoids theory and devotes hours of his time doping out catchy melodies, with the hope of tickling the same audience.

Is it not true, then, that "music to the picture" is at present the picture's greatest possible benefactor and improvement? In all amusements of a theatrical nature, the musical feature is preliminarily well thought out and arranged; why not for the picture, it also being a theatrical amusement? If this is essential to the success of a theatrical production, which we know to be true, why then is it not proper for us to demand and expect, prior to a picture's release, a proper "musical plot" from the producer of film, which I feel sure will solve the question of picture playing and will forever do away with the necessity of soft pedal improvising?

Such a "musical plot" will lay the foundation of innumerable possibilities in picture playing, of which I want to lay particular stress on one that is very important, viz., knowing that music will create a certain temperamental condition within its hearers and that the picture means to create the same effect, it follows that music should not accompany the action on the screen, but should anticipate it, thereby temperamentally preparing the audience for the ensuing action and very materially adding to its realism. It therefore can be readily seen that no musician can properly play for a picture unless he is supplied with a well thought out and carefully constructed "musical plot," specimens of which I will set up and explain.

MUSICAL PLOT No. 1

"Two Battles"—Vitagraph Release of August 17

SET-UP

No. 1. Slow waltz (very legato).
No. 2. Dramatic (battle music, lengthy).
No. 3. Military March (any Von Blon march appropriate).
No. 4. Dramatic (battle music, short).
No. 5. Dirge or Funeral Chant (Funeral Chant by Hauptman appropriate and effective).
No. 6. Sentimental (Traumerei or similar).
No. 7. Waltz (slow).

CUES

Play No. 1 until leader "In Africa" (—— min.)
Play No. 2 until Leader "Two Letters" (—— min.)
Play No. 3 until soldiers go to the front (—— min.)
Play No. 4 until Gordon walks among dead on battle field (—— min.) (Begin softly crescendo at battle.)
Play No. 5 until Gordon covers body of friend with flag (—— min.)
Play No. 6 until Army Club scene, crescendo while fiancee plays piano (—— min.)
Play No. 7 until end. Crescendo as they embrace (—— min.).

Note: Any good-bye song of mild temperament can be used for No. 1. No. 4 can be materially accentuated by a bugle call immediately after the third officer gives orders to Gordon.

* * * *

MUSICAL PLOT No. 2

"Bride of Lammermoor"—Cines Release of August 27

SET-UP

No. 1. Mysterioso (minor left hand theme with tremolo in right hand).
No. 2. Hurry (duel music).
No. 3. Classic of light effect (Chaminade's Scarf Dance appropriate).
No. 4. Standard number of love effect (Love's dream after the Ball appropriate).

No. 5. Concert Pizzicato (Le Secret by Gautier very appropriate).
No. 6. Sextette "Lucia Di Lammermoor" (this number is very essential).
No. 7. Concert number of mysterious effect (barcarolle by Tschaikowsky or Berceuse from Jocelyn by Godard).

CUES

Play No. 1 until fight (short) (—— min.)
Play No. 2 until combat is over (short) (—— min.).
Play No. 3 until Lucia and Edgar on in garden scene of subdued light (—— min.)
Play No. 4 until Lady Ashley introduces Arthur (— min.).
Play No. 5 until Lucia seated in Marriage Contract scene.
Play No. 6 once through.
Play No. 7 until end.

Note. In No. 7 you can materially accentuate Lucia's action by crescendos at the two times she angrily turns on Arthur, when she kills him and when she drops dead.

* * * *

MUSICAL PLOT No. 3

The Grandfather—Edison Release of September 21

MUSICAL SET-UP

No. 1. National air (march tempo).
No. 2. Waltz (legato movements predominating).
No. 3. Two-step 2/4 (not popular).
No. 4. Reverie.
No. 5. March.
No. 6. Dramatic (hurry).
No. 7. Valse Lento.

CUES

Play No. 1 through one scene only.
Play No. 2 until circular of picnic on screen (—— min.).
Play No. 3 until Mrs. Hines' letter on screen (—— min.).
Play No. 4 until scene of speakers' platform at picnic (—— min.).
Play No. 5 until child falls in water (—— min.).
Play No. 7 until end. Crescendo as Jim and wife turn
Play No. 7 until end. Crescendo as Jim and wife turn after grandfather's pipe is lit.

Note: During the playing of No. 3 crescendo as farm hands dance at table. This drama teaching a moral is of quiet action, and music should be selected accordingly, the pathos not being deep, nor is any action hilarious excepting in No. 3.

I separate the set-up and cues for the reason that the set-up can be made up as soon as you have the program, which can be gotten two or three days prior to its projection, and in playing there will be nothing to confuse you in the catching of cues. The parentheses for minutes which I have placed will help in the selection of music, giving us an idea of about how long the number will run and can be determined by the number feet of reel used, figuring 60 feet of reel to the minute.

The approximate number of minutes that each number will play will also be an additional help in catching cues.

The three plots are set up to pictures which differ very materially in their temperament, and by giving them a try-out, I am sure you will be convinced that there is a musical future for the picture.

I am at present arranging to be able to give plots for both Independent and Licensed pictures prior to their release, which will appear in these columns, and am in hopes that I will be granted opportunities to work out greater temperamental set-ups, as the foregoing plots were set up from theatre projection which, to say the least, is unsatisfactory. It was my intention to explain why I used the music as I did in my set-ups, but space is now limited, which compels me to defer it until some later date, when it will appear under the heading of "Music and the Picture."

In conclusion, Mr. Musician, I would like to reassure you, and create within you a feeling of justification in going to your manager, whenever adverse criticism comes your way in future, and telling him that it is impossible for you to do justice to the picture, with the present system or method of playing in vogue, and incidentally tell him of what we are trying to do for his as well as your benefit, for it may be that Mr. Manager will eventually be your benefactor.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Contract has been let for a new moving picture theatre on Main Street and Fillmore avenue.

Cincinnati, O.—A contract has been let for a new theatre on the West side of Walnut street, south of Sixth avenue.

Chicago, Ill.—No. 3018 Belmont avenue, one-story brick theatre; K. Mikelsen, 2512 Logan Boulevard. A. B. Mills, architect; cost $7,000.

Chicago, Ill.—311-23 Montrose Boulevard, one-story brick theatre. Fry & Jacobsen, 3969 Elston avenue. A. Buckley, architect; cost $18,000.

Cincinnati, O.—A contract has been let for a motion picture theatre at the northeast corner Main and Webster streets. Architects Rapp, Zettel & Rapp.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM". Then one day he told his story just as ECLAIR will re-tell it in a forthcoming Feature Release

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

General Headquarters

703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio

OFFICERS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

President, M. A. Neff, Lock Box 15, Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Vice-Presidents, S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; Wm. J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; B. L. Converse, Owassa, Mich.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; E. W. Waugh, Huntington, W. Va.; Orene Parker, Covington, Ky.; Geo. H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.; Chas. Rothschild, San Francisco, Calif.; Sidney Asher, New York, N. Y.; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City, N. J.; H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; E. V. Richards, Shreveport, La.; F. W. Young, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; W. H. Wassman, Nashville, Tenn.; Anthony J. Xydias, Houston, Tex.; Carl Gregg, Tulsa, Okla.; Paul LeMarquand, Winnipeg, Can.; M. C. Everstein, Jacksonville, Fla.; Geo. Osborn, St. Paul, Minn.

Outing, Oct. 5, 1912, Cincinnati Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A.

The first outing given by the Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, was a grand success. The day opened bright and warm and as early as eight o'clock the people began pouring into the Zoological Garden. By one o'clock there were ten thousand people in the park.

Mr. G. W. Peters, representing the Gaumont Company, and Mr. Freeman Owens, representing the Universal Animated Weekly, were early on hand taking pictures of scenes and animals at the Zoological Garden. There was a terrific scuffle of the animals at the Zoo Saturday morning, and Superintendent Sol. Stephan was amazed to find lions, bears, monkeys, fowl and serpents in a very undignified struggle to gain possession of a piece of looking-glass that had been the property of one of the little monkeys.

"How unmannerly! What doth this mean?" quoth Stephan.

"We are going to have our pictures 'took' today and I wanted to see if my hat was on straight," answered a shy dove with a top-knot.

"I wanted to get my mustache curled right," added the sea-lion.

"I wanted to see if my tail feathers were just so," interjected the proud peacock.

Even clumsy Zekoe, the Hippopotamus, and Brutus, the lion, wanted to fix up their complexions, and the polar bear was anxious to see that his new white fur coat fitted properly.

Master Stephan permitted his subjects to prepare for the camera men and finish their toilets in orderly fashion.

Soon M. A. Neff, President of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors League, arrived, with a corps of moving picture experts and a crowd of delegates to the outing of the picture men at the Zoo. The animals posed their best as the moving film was reeled off in their faces. The proud and vain creatures enjoyed the prospect of having their handsome forms and faces displayed before millions of people in picture theatres throughout the world. But the lion snarled and made a vicious lunge at the camera man because a horse was marched close by his cage and the odor of horse meat drove the king of the forests into temporary madness.

"That will make a great lion picture," said the camera expert, as he turned the crank, while the lion roared and clawed furiously a few feet away.

The buffaloes were induced to stampede and their pictures were taken while in motion, and then came a parade of all the animals that wanted to get into the moving picture lime-light, elephants, bears, monkeys, snakes and scores of other creatures took part in the strange procession. The Zoo pictures will be a part of a series of Cincinnati moving pictures taken to exploit to the world Cincinnati's good things.

At one o'clock Mr. Neff, Chairman of the Committee, with Mr. John J. Huss, Mr. J. B. Glassmeyer, Mr. Otto Lightner, Dr. Kolb, Mr. F. A. Botts, Mr. Henry Levy, Mr. Herman Eggers, Mr. Lehman, Mr. N. B. Rogers, Mr. F. L. Emmert, met Hon. Henry T. Hunt, Mayor of Cincinnati, Hon. James M. Cox, Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio; A. L. Garford, Bull Moose Gubernatorial candidate; Mayor George E. Phillips, of Covington, Ky., and Attorney-General Hogan, at the Sinton Hotel, and escorted them to the Zoological Garden in automobiles with banners flying.

Upon arrival at the Zoological Garden, pictures of Mayor Hunt, Mayor Phillips, Hon. Jas. M. Cox and A. L. Garford were taken, then a parade was formed, led by Cincinnati Local No. 2, followed by the representatives of the Boosters League of Cincinnati (which also represented the Chamber of Commerce), the Boy Scouts and animal parade at the Zoo. After the parade was over, Mr. M. A. Neff, President of the Exhibitors League, called the meeting to order, and introduced Mayor Hunt, who extended the keys of the city to the visiting exhibitors and friends. While Mayor Hunt's address was very short, it was right to the point and was loudly applauded by the exhibitors, as he touched upon some points that were vital to their interest, and his attitude was friendly all the way through.

The next speaker, Mr. A. L. Garford, talked on the high standard of pictures and the educational benefits to be derived from motion pictures. His remarks were well received and he made many friends.

The last speaker, Hon. James M. Cox, was enthusiastically received, as he has attended several conventions of the Motion Picture Exhibitors, is well-known, and most of the boys call him "Jimmy" Cox.

Everything went off nicely, everybody was there as expected with the exception of Pathe's man. Mr. G. W. Peters and Mr. Freeman Owens, of Gaumont and Universal Weekly, report that the pictures are fine and it will only be a short time until they are released. All exhibitors are anxiously waiting to run the films.

Mr. Otto Luedeking, local Treasurer, was on the job early in the morning, as he had charge of the gate receipts. Mrs. Shakespeare, his official stenographer, acted as ticket agent. Mr. August Carbin was official ticket taker.

After the big outing was over, and the tickets counted, it was found that over ten thousand people had attended the first outing. Messrs. Chas. Beeching and W. C. Kitt had charge of the electrical department and the spot lights that were used was a new feature in cabaret. Mr. Beeching's efficient managing of this department was shown by every move that was made by the spot-light and other electrical effects, and the cabaret performance. Mr. W. C. Kitt had charge of the entertainment. Mr. F. A. Botts was very prominent; Mr. Harry Brice, who had charge of the program, was very active. Mr. Carl Tarvin, who was on the film and slide committee, was the right man in the right place. Those who furnished automobiles, were J. S. Glassmeyer, F. L. Emmert, N. B. Rogers, J. J. Ditchen and M. A. Neff. Mr. J. J. Huss, President of the Cincinnati Local furnished the badges and the banners for the outing.

Mr. J. H. Broomhall, second vice-president of the state organization was present and a large number of exhibitors from surrounding towns.

The dancing pavilion was crowded at all times.

The headliner of the cabaret in the evening was Miss Francis St. Clair, of Detroit, Mich., and ten other high-class vaudeville acts; Alexander's Ragtime picture caught the people.

The python crawled around through the grass, not only for the entertainment of the people, but caused great amusement while Mr. G. W. Peters and Mr. Freeman Owens took moving pictures of it. This was certainly a thriller. Many went home still shaking after seeing this wonderful reptile, which is the largest snake in captivity—25 feet long—and vowed never to take another drink.

Mr. Neff is having 2100 feet of municipal film made for the city of Cincinnati, also 1000 feet made for the Zoological Garden. These pictures will show every important scene in Cincinnati and the Zoological Garden in full.

The meeting which will be held in Dallas, Texas, on 15th and 16th, promises to be a record one. M. A. Neff will leave Cincinnati on Friday, October 11th, stop over in St. Louis on the 12th and 13th for the purpose of meeting the Insurance Committee: will leave St. Louis the evening of the 13th, arriving in Dallas, Texas, the evening of the 14th. Mr. Neff expects to return by way of Shreveport, La.

Mr. M. M. Wear, President of the state of West Virginia, visited the National President at his offices for two days on state matters, pertaining to West Virginia.

Mr. B. H. Karnes, President of Local No. 1, of Huntington, W. Va., visited Mr. Neff's office on important business on the 6th.

BIGGEST THING IN BIG NEW YORK

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York are giving their Second Annual Entertainment and Ball on November 14th, 1912, at Palm Garden, 58th street, between Lexington and Third Avenues.

The New York Exhibitors are a strong healthy Organization and are desirous of celebrating their success by entertaining themselves and their friends and the Trade in general—at a splendid function which will tax the capacity of the Palm Garden. They have a twofold object in giving this Function. One reason is the sociability amongst themselves and the other reason is their desire to be correctly understood—as to their moral and business integrity, which has been unjustly assailed, principally on the outside, by would-be reformers.

Much praise is due Mr. A. Coleman and members of the Entertainment Committee for the excellence of the preparations which are practically complete. Financially, the affair is already a success as Exhibitors have disposed of a great number of tickets and the Trade have been surprisingly liberal in patronizing the expensive souvenir program, ten thousand of which will be given out to Exhibitors throughout the United States. Preceding the dancing there will be a high-class Vaudeville Entertainment;—"Big time" Entertainers of the most refined class have been engaged. A number of pre-released pictures will be shown. The music for the occasion will be furnished by a band of twenty pieces; prominent members of Civic Societies and well-known public officials, representing all State and City Departments have been invited. Nearly all Photo Play stars have signified their intention of being present.

Mr. Maurice Costello and Miss Florence Lawrence have promised to lead the Grand March. In moving picture circles there is no doubt that the Exhibitors Reception is the event of the year. All the Eastern Film Manufacturers have already secured boxes and will be present in person and many notable men in the trade representing both Licensed and Independent interests will mingle that evening for the first time since our Ball of last year. The Reception will eclipse anything for size and general eclat for some time to come. It is going to be a great success. Any motion picture man who misses it will surely regret having done so. All Exhibitors throughout the State and those on the Jersey side of the Hudson and quite a number from Pennsylvania are coming in large numbers.

The National President, Mr. Neff, and Mr. Christenson, National Secretary, will be in New York on November 10th and stay until after the Ball.

EXHIBITORS OF NEW YORK TO HOLD MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION

Beginning July 7, 1913, and continuing throughout the week there will be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, the Worlds First Motion Picture Trades Exposition.

A committee composed of Messrs. Tichenor, chairman; Samuels, secretary; Blumenthal, treasurer. Rosenthal, Needles and King have undertaken to make this exposition the greatest ever held. And we think they will do it.

The three large floors of the Palace have been leased to enable the Exhibitors of New York to entertain the thousands of Exhibitors from all over the world whi will attend the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

It is planned to hold the exposition on the main floor. The second will be used by manufacturers for exhibiting pictures, while the third will be the convention and banquet hall.

There are over 30,000 square feet of available space on the main floor of the Palace which will be disposed of to manufacturers of articles pertaining to the motion picture trade.

Leading men in the picture business who have been interviewed are very strong for this exposition, and many have already made application for preferred spaces.

For the best drawing or sketch emblematic of the motion picture trade the committee offers a prize of $50.00. This competition is open to all. Those wishing to compete may send their offering to Mr. F. E. Samuels, in care of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York No. 136 Third avenue, New York.

A committee from the Art Institute will conjoin with the Exhibitors' Committee in choosing the most appropriate.

Binghamton, N. Y.—The contract has been let for a new moving picture theatre; cost, $15,000.

BANQUET MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE OF CALIFORNIA: FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster and James Girvan

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION No. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Girvan.
Recording Secretary—Geo. Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—William Cohen.
Business Representative—R. Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1, of Greater New York, held their regular meeting Monday, Oct. 7th, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, N. Y. Pres. Robert Goldblatt called the session to order at 12:30 A. M., and a grand attendance was there to take part in what was later termed "The Rapid Session" owing to the quick manner in finishing up the regular business of the organization, to take up the election of permanent officers and installation.

The election started exactly one hour and a half after the opening of the meeting. It was two o'clock A. M. when the counters and tellers started to count the votes cast for the various offices, and at 2:15 A. M. the following officers were installed:

President, Robert Goldblatt; Vice-President, James Daisie; Secy-Treasurer, Robert Levy; Rec.-Secretary, George Epstein; Serg.-at-Arms, Edward Spanilo; Trustees: Mike Berkowitz, Alexander Polin, Robert Sanders; Business Representative, Ralph Knaster.

* * * *

A question was raised about placing the entrance up to $5.00, but one of the members made an address which appealed to the body to give such operators who may have worked at Summer resorts and out of town during the summer a chance to enter the organization at the regular or present low fee now in force. In order to do this it was decided to make the next meeting an open meeting for the benefit of those operators who could not or were not able to join the organization owing to the aforementioned reason, and enable them to have the honor of declaring themselves as members of the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1, of New York.

The amount of new members in the past week was twelve in number and as many new applications were placed before the body for consideration.

The meeting was closed at 3:50 A. M. thus transacting all business of the organization in three hours and twenty minutes.

* * * *

An open meeting will be held by the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 1, of New York, on Monday night Oct. 21st, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, N. Y. City, at 12 o'clock midnight. This is your last chance fellow craftmen to join this organization at the present low fee. After the above date the entrance fee will be $5 00. This is final.

* * * *

The Stork Visits an Operator

An honorary member was ushered into the midst of the happy members of the M. P. M. Operators Union No. 1 of N. Y., who were enjoying themselves at a festivity at the home of Brother Leon Silverman, of 171 East Second street. The stork must have been one of the largest of its kind, since the valuable parcel was quite of good size.

Brother Silverman was all smiles; and why not, when it was his good fortune to become the father of a chubby little fellow that tipped the scale for nine pounds when he first beheld the light of day on October 1st, 1912?

Forty guests were invited to attend the service and partake of some nice things to eat and drink at the home of the brother on Tuesday morning, Oct. 8th, 1912, the day set by the Mosaic Law for giving a name to new comers of the Jewish faith. The members of Union No. 1 congratulate Brother Leon Silverman and wish you God speed, that you may live to a ripe old age and may God assist you, that it will be possible for you to enjoy the happiness of rearing your son to be an upright and prosperous citizen of the nation.

* * * *

Mr. Richardson:—

As the business representative of the I. M. P. Machine Operators' Union, No. 1, of New York, I take pleasure in defending my organization and to assist the members in their effort for justice. The letter you received from one of our brothers from Liberty, N. Y., seems to have met with some favor in your eyes, yet it does not fully remove the stigma you have so wilfully thrust upon nearly four hundred men. You do moderate the term of riot to so-called disorderly, but before long you will, with the help of an independent union Virgil, behold the stars as Dante has, which is the true light of affairs in this generation.

I dare say, Mr. Richardson, that you, a man of intelligence, were acting, in my estimation, the part of an agitator, instead of assisting to make harmony, and now your eyes have been opened, you say that if the branch men of No. 35 are not allowed to govern themselves and are not considered equal to the spotlight department which costs $75.00 to join, you are in favor of an independent charter. Can you not realize that since you cannot elect a branch member for chairman and you cannot have your own treasurer, but must accept the treasurer of the spotlight workers, that you are not equal to them? You mention about some questions put to you by President Robert Goldblatt to be answered by mail. The questions referred to were given to you some five or six weeks ago, and I presume there was sufficient time for the answers. And why mail them? When you claim your mail is so large that you cannot find time to answer letters by mail, and furthermore, it would be more satisfactory if you will answer those questions through the press, and I am sure you will not waste so much space in so doing.

You do not seem to realize when you state you are not in favor of an independent movement, since our cards are only good in the city, that you are entirely ignorant of our aim; you know right well that we do not approve of independence of the I. A. T. S. E. or the A. F. of L.; but it is justice we demand and justice we shall get. Your claim that conduct was only disorderly at the time mention was made about an independent charter. I will admit your statement, but I must inform you that there were other reasons for that, and good ones, such as the case of the brother who wrote you the letter from Liberty, N. Y., and that case of Brother Jack Cohen's would not only cause disorderly conduct, but if such cases would come up in a government of some nations it would cause a revolution as well. For your benefit and others who may wish to know, I will state that Brother Jack Cohen was employed at Hammerstein's Theatre nearly six years and had to finish the show, which was a vaudeville performance, with one reel of pictures, and his salary was $24.00 per week. A spotlight worker running a lamp at the same theatre, getting $15.00 per week, offered to run the picture machine and spotlight for $21.000 per week, thus cutting out our brother, Cohen, from making his living and supporting his family.

This brother went to see the business representative of No. 35, Mr. Williams, to ask for redress and the answer was: "You, Cohen, can't work there, because you are only a branch or auxiliary man and not entitled to run the two jobs like the No. 35 man." Now, if this is not sufficient to cause a commotion I will give a few more instances in my next week's chat.

In conclusion, you have placed yourself in an unpleasant position according to the statements in your letter when you charge that "bringing this matter before the A. F. of L. you plainly are not very well acquainted with the procedure followed by that body—it might listen, it might recommend, and the I. A. T. S. E. would do just exactly as it pleased."

I hope, Mr. Richardson that this is not meant as a slur upon that great body, the A. F. of L., that their procedure is not a fair one and that they don't care for the individual workingman, nor care to listen to 400 workingmen. I for one honor the A. F. of L. and know that body to be a just one and without a doubt will grant justice to its constituents.

As for the I. A. T. S. E. doing just as they please, regardless of what the A. F. of L. recommends, I am sure you have made this statement without authority; you have stated that this matter is ended as far as you are concerned. I, therefore, with authority of President Robert Goldblatt and the Executive Board of No. 1, make this challenge:

CHALLENGE

To any member of the new Branch No. 35 or Local No. 35. The M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1, hereby challenges an open or public debate as to the points in controversy between Local No. 35 and its branch and the I. M. P. Operators' Union No. 1 of New York, to take place at the Union Square Hotel or any other place agreeable to Local No. 35. Time of debate to be set at the will of the members of No. 35 and all expense to be defrayed by I. M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1.

It is also agreeable to have a member or members of the ex-board of the A. F. of L. or the I. A. T. S. E. present to hear the debate, and if we, the M. P. M. Operators' No. 1, are laboring under wrong ideas we are satisfied to submit. But it must be shown beyond a doubt that the M. P. M. Operators' No. 1 are wrong, otherwise we will continue in the future as we are at present.

Approved by the Executive Board of No. 1.

RALPH KNASTER,
Business Representative.

QUESTION BOX

By Mr. R. J. Kay

G. E. writes, kindly inform me the proper way to set carbons for alternating current as I heard there were two ways to set them. I usually set my carbons straight up and down.

Answer to Brother G. E.:

On alternating current the proper way to set carbons would be as you are now setting them, though many operators claim they get better results by having the carbons set at angle. Why not experiment both ways and set your carbons the way you get best results?

Dear Brother Kay:

I have a Powers No. 6, my shutter always gets out of time, please advise me what the cause may be.

Yours truly, S. W., Newark, N. J.

S. W. of Newark, N. J.:

Your shutter shaft gear may be badly worn or the taper pin may be broken off leaving part of pin in shaft and holds it in light contact only. I advise you to take your machine to a competent repair shop, as I don't believe in operators repairing machines.

* * * *

Mr. R. J. K.

I am working in Bridgeport, Conn., have a Powers No. 5, working on this machine quite some time but machine is hard to start, it always sticks, can you advise me what to do. Yours, F. L C.

To the Bridgeport Brother:

The gears on your machine no doubt are worn and need replacing; when gears are worn, and quite often to a knife edge, they don't run in true mesh, and this causes the binding You must have new gears in their place.

LOVE AND WAR
Majestic release October 22.

THE SIMPLE LIFE
Majestic release October 13.

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

MOTION PICTURE SCENARIOS
WANTED
SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO COMEDIES
KINEMACOLOR CO. OF AMERICA
Dept. T Mecca Bldg., New York, N. Y.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM". Then one day he told his story just as ECLAIR will re-tell it in a forthcoming Feature Release

THE CRYSTAL FILM STUDIO BY GASLIGHT

By Our "Roving Commissioner"

Business delayed me during the daylight hours, so I was obliged to ring in on the shades of night for my trip to the Crystal Film Studio.

It's a pleasant place to go, is the Crystal Film Studio. Everybody seems happy and solid, and thoroughly convinced in their own minds that they are on the right track, that they have slid at last into their own rightful notches. The work of the day had evidently been done well, and to the satisfaction of all concerned, and accomplishment had lifted their spirits on her airy wings for a flight through the happyland of contentment.

At night the Crystal Studio, cornering on Wendover and Park avenues, looks like a big, clean building. Its upper portion was ablaze with lights as I approached it. I rattled the office door; the janitor let me in and summoned Mr. Goetz, the publicity man, with whom I was soon conversing at whirlwind pace. We hobnobbed about the studio proper, Mr. Goetz and I. It looked a bit spooky in the half light. There stood an old-fashioned square piano, a few Indian trinkets scattered on top of it that had been used in a scene that very day. In their accustomed places, each in its own particular chink, lounged the different bits of scenery of all kinds. So many bits there were that one would almost wonder what they really did with them all.

Then came the meeting with Mr. Ludwig E. Erb and Mr. Joseph A. Golden, two of the best known and most favorably known men in the business. Mr. Erb is probably the most skilful laboratory man in the business, while Mr. Golden holds the distinction of having produced three of the greatest feature films that have ever been produced; namely, Dickens' "Oliver Twist," with Nat Goodwin starring; Tolstoy's "Resurrection," with Blanche Walsh, produced respectively for the General Film Publicity & Sales Co., and the Masko Film Company, and another as great as these, of which I am not yet permitted to speak.

Joseph A. Golden must have done his work well on the producing end, and Ludwig E. Erb must have shown superb skill on the laboratory end, otherwise the three greatest American productions would not have succeeded one another in their hands. If Joseph A. Golden had not shown exceptional talent as a director of pictures, and if Ludwig E. Erb had not toned up his animated photographs in such a masterful manner, one of our greatest theatrical managers would never have chosen them among a score of others to handle one large and splendid production of which we will soon hear.

And, yet, in coming in contact with these men you do not find them self-centered. They are both, not alone unassuming, but gentlemanly. And these two men practically comprise the Crystal Film Company, therefore success is written all over it.

Up to a very short time ago they had confined their efforts to handling work for other people. Now they are coming on the market with something that is entirely their own, and the Universal is going to be the medium through which they will release their films.

The Crystal Film Company have learned that people like to laugh; they've got the "put-yourself-in-his-place" spirit. When the business man stops in for a half hour at the picture theatre they are on to the fact that he wants to be amused rather than reminded of the troubles that in the world of reality beset him at every turn. Therefore, because of the much-needed elixir of comedy to stimulate the tired nerves of our worry-beset humans, they have decided to produce comedy exclusively for some little time, putting out one split-reel release each week. On Sunday last they released their first split-reel comedy, "The Girl in the Next Room," and "The Man from the North Pole." The majority of the product of this film will be beautifully tinted work.

The pictures that were shown to me on that evening were strong in comedy and equally strong in artistic production. Mr. Golden has made many extraordinary points in the productions which will soon be seen from the Crystal Film Company.

The company is specially fortunate in having two of the cleverest motion picture players on the screen as their leads, namely, Miss Pearl White, and Mr. Chester Barnett.

The Crystal Film Studio and plant is one of the best equipped manufactories of moving pictures that we have seen.

SOMETHING ABOUT KINEMACOLOR RELEASES

More wonderful at each projection does Kinemacolor appear to the reviewer.

This week's releases are particularly remarkable—marvels of motion picture photography. Perhaps most startling of all—most difficult to obtain—is the film showing scenes of a storm on the sea at Teneriffe, Canary Islands. Probably no more remarkable evidence of close camera work in such a situation has ever been shown. The waves dashing with tremendous fury over the rocks and bulwarks elicited the following remark from the back row which is expressive of the sensation caused by those pictures of a terrific storm. "Turn on the fan in front there and you could almost feel that."

Another remarkable picture from the Kinemacolor camera is that of a "Bull Fight at Madrid." Tremendously brutal but true to life. In this particular picture no less than four horses are gored to death by the bull, which at last, falling exhausted, is stabbed in the spine and conveyed from the ring. Portions of this film, which was taken on the actual scene of notorious bull fights at Madrid, Spain, had to be eliminated, on account of the brutal character of the scenes.

The Yacht Races at Kiel are to say the very least, beautiful in the extreme.

And again scenes showing the cliff dwellers in a portion of the Canary Islands, their customs, handiwork, etc., are very interesting. This week's offerings are probably the most remarkable yet exhibited by Kinemacolor.

HOW GARWOOD RECREATES

Handsome William Garwood, the star receiver of "mash" notes at Thanhouser Company, once favored the old rule of eight hours for work, eight for play and eight for sleep. But since he has become an automobile enthusiast Garwood clips as many hours as he can from his work and sleep period for this sport and merges them into the recreation ones—which he spends in his swift runabout. He has lowered all the Westchester County speed records and has been haled to court no less than three times. He has never had an accident, or as much as scratched up anyone, since he does all his speeding on strictly automobile roads, such as the Pelham and Boston, on the outskirts of New York.

Captain Baldwin, the well-known aeronaut, has asked Garwood to give some attention to aeronautics, and the Thanhouser player states that if up-in-the-air speeding appeals to him he will abandon his autoing hobby and give his off hours to the air-flying.

Manson, Ia.—Amos Johnson sold his motion picture theatre here to Frank Pool and W. A. Norman.

Silver City, Ia.—E. B. DeWolf will conduct a motion picture theatre here.

Vail, Ia.—Magil & Maloney will conduct a motion picture theatre here.

Nickerson, Kan.—John Beck bought a motion picture theatre.

Bogalusa, La.—R. Blanchard will erect a $4,000 motion picture theatre.

THE ONLY WOMAN IN TOWN
Crystal Films.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

ESSANAY

THE GRASSVILLE GIRLS (Oct. 16).—After several years absence, Tom Carver, a city chap, returns to the little town of Grassville with a group of chums. He tells his friends of Rose, his old sweetheart, and, having met her and her chums, the boys now plan to fool them by writing letters to all proposing marriage and signing Tom's name. It is not until the girls meet that Tom's perfidy is discovered and the girls plan revenge. Masquerading as simple country maids they catch Tom in an awkward position at the river bank and give him a thorough ducking. He is rescued by his pals, who take him home. A few moments later a note is delivered to Tom from the girls, saying they decline his proposal and that ducking is a fine cure for deceit. In a huff Tom and his pals go fishing, but their lines are entangled by the girls, who pass in a rowboat and give them the laugh. A moment later their boat upsets and the girls are seen struggling in the water. Quickly the boys plunge in and bear them safely to shore. Out of gratitude, the girls arrange a tea party at Rose's house, and the romance of ten hearts begins. A few days later the village pastor makes the ten hearts five, and the happy couples are spooning contentedly when they discover a crowd of the town people coming for them with old shoes and rice. A hasty dash up the railroad track lands them on the observation platform of the train pulling out and, seeing they are cheated out of their fun, the Grassville folks give them a rousing send-off.

THE SNARE (Oct. 17).—Tom Ransom, a fugitive from justice, is pursued to the cottage of his aged mother and arrested. Pleading with his mother to believe in his innocence, Ransom is led away. He manages to escape from his captors and the matter is laid before Dayton, captain of police. Among the articles taken from Ransom is a letter from his sweetheart saying she has never seen his mother and a small photograph. Deciding on a plan Dayton sends for Mary Clement, a clever girl detective, gives her the details of the case and orders her to trap Ransom by gaining access to his mother's cottage through posing as Tom's sweetheart. Mary does so, and is charmed with the sweet simplicity of the old lady, whom she learns to love dearly. Learning from a letter that Tom is expected that evening, Mary is disgusted with her trickery and resolves to give him a fair chance to escape. Before her plan is put in action Tom enters and discovers Mary's deception. Furiously he is denouncing her when his mother enters, and he is forced to keep the truth from her. A few moments later the station agent enters with a telegram for Mary. It is from Dayton, saying the real culprit has been captured and to drop the Ransom case. With a prayer of thanksgiving Mary explains she must return to the city at once on an urgent matter, kisses Tom's mother good-by, gives her hand to him, he presses it with a look of deep understanding, then she fades from their lives forever.

RELIANCE

JOHNNY ON THE SPOT (Oct. 23).—Johnny Weston is a young Englishman, in love with Lady Rose Tilda. The father forbids Johnny admittance to his house and decides to take his daughter to America. Rose writes and tells Johnny they are leaving for America. Johnny makes up his mind that he will go, too. By bribing a sailor he becomes a sailor on the boat they are traveling on and, through the disguise of a custom officer and other things, he is constantly by the side of his lady love. They visit the Navy Yard and other places of interest, finally returning home. He disguises himself as a baggage man and wins her heart and hand and father's consent.

On the same reel:

HOW JACK WON OUT.—Jack is very much in love with Nettie, the daughter of a banker, who does not approve of Jack's attention to his daughter. He orders Jack from the house. The banker goes to his office, finds his stenographer has left and advertises for one. Jack sees the ad and decides to masquerade as a girl and takes the position. The banker falls in love with Jack, thinking him a girl, and gives a ball in his honor. There, in a little love scene, Nettie removes the wig from Jack's head. The father sees he has been duped and Jack tells him that if he will let him marry the girl no one will ever know what an old fool he had been.

A WIRELESS MIRACLE (Oct. 26).—Old John Deane, with his daughter and her husband and their little daughter, Lucy, lives a secluded life on an island where the old man has charge of the lighthouse. One day he hears that a wireless station is to be erected on the island. He does not believe in new inventions and feels a great antagonism toward the young operator, Johnstone, and his assistant, Hogan. But the little girl becomes a great friend of the young man. One day when she drops Grandpa's telescope over the rocks, to the old man's dismay, she runs to her new friends and, to help her out, they give her a copy of their chart of passing vessels. Later on little Lucy becomes quite ill. Johnstone, visiting her, discovers she has diphtheria. There is no doctor on the island and all are at a loss as to how the child can be saved. Johnstone learns that a famous child specialist is on board a passing liner and get an idea. He has the child carried to his wireless cabin and, from there, he gets into communication with the great doctor who is in midocean. From the steamship the doctor gives the young wireless man full directions. Finally he bids him to prepare to operate upon the child. And, with his rude tools, under instructions coming from miles away, Johnstone operates successfully. A tube inserted in her throat, the baby is once more able to breathe and her life is saved. The child well on her way to recovery, the grandfather is forced to admit the wonder of the many miracles performed by wireless.

VITAGRAPH

MRS. LIRRIPER'S LODGERS (Oct. 15).—Mrs. Lirriper keeps a boarding house. Major Jackman, dissatisfied with Mrs. Wozenhan's, farther down the street, comes to live at Mrs. Lirriper's and becomes the "star"boarder, helping her in the management of her affairs and giving her good advice.

Mr. Edson and his young wife take rooms at Mrs. Lirriper's. They are a young couple, not long married, and appear to be devoted to each other, though the Major has a sort of half-defined prejudice against Edson. One day, in the midst of their happiness, Edson is called suddenly away on important business. He takes an affectionate farewell of his wife, and the days becomes weeks, and the weeks months, and nothing is heard from him. Mrs. Edson grows pale and anxious. At last one day a letter comes. The Major and Mrs. Lirriper, who have long suspected that something is wrong, leave the letter at her door, and she reads it. It tells her that she has been deceived and deserted; that her marriage was a sham one. She falls in a faint and is revived by Mrs. Lirriper. That night, driven to despair, Mrs. Edson goes out and wanders down to the river, intending to drown herself. She is prevented by Mrs. Lirriper, who comforts her with motherly love. A baby boy is born to Mrs. Edson, but her strength has been overtaxed and she dies. With her last breath she commends the child to Mrs. Lirriper and the Major, who take it from her as a sacred charge, and with a smile on her lips she dies.

AN ELEPHANT ON THEIR HANDS (Oct. 16.)—The circus gets out of town with everything but its elephant, which is seized for debt by the town constable. To realize on the asset it is auctioned off and purchased by Mr. Goodsport, while in a happy state of "I don't care" and "We won't get home until morning." He takes it home, something that he never could have done in his sober senses.

He takes it upstairs to bed with him, entirely oblivious of what is in store for him. His wife and daughter, when they discover the presence of the beast, are frightened to death. A little later, when Goodsport wakes up to a realization of what he has done, he is almost frantic with terror. In his efforts to get rid of his purchased folly, the elephant takes possession of the kitchen, terrifies the cook and makes a clean sweep of everything in it, eating up every vestige of food and trumpeting for more.

The constable and his assistant, who are called on for help, cannot budge the brute. Finally Goodsport is obliged to send word to the circus manager, at the next stand, and pay him to take the elephant back and off his hands.

GAUMONT

THE TIE ETERNAL (Oct. 10th).—Another woman, beautiful, seductive, has tempted the husband and father from the path of constancy. The wife learns of this liason through an anonymous letter. She traces her husband visits to the home of the temptress, where, as woman against woman, the scene ends with the adventuress ordering the wife from the house. In despair at the violation of the love troths, she takes her child and goes to her mother's home, leaving a note telling of her grief and the cause of her action. A divorce follows and the wife is given the custody of the child, the father being permitted to see the little one one day every month.

Several years have passed and the father is preparing to visit his estranged baby, marshalling his many tokens of love in the form of toys. As he is arranging them a letter arrives reading that the child is critically ill and that he cannot see her this day. In his frenzy of apprehension he implores his one-time wife to allow him to see the little sufferer. Although feeling the deepness of the wound of his act in the years gone by, and in the toils of a new passion for a suitor whom she is soon to wed, she permits him to come. The other man happens upon the scene as the father stands by the sick bed and the little one responds to his caresses. With jealousy and fear he watches the child brighten under the warmth of her father's presence, and with a sinking heart the rival sees the little hands reach out and bring together the heads and hearts and lives of those who had parted.

The bridegroom-elect, although feeling that his bride-to-be would honor her promise to marry him, steals into the night, leaving a note behind telling of his sacrifice and the renunciation of his own joys in compliance with the principle regarding those of whom 'twas said, "Whom God hath joined, let no man put asunder."

BEETHOVEN (Oct. 15).—Episodes vital in the life of the great symphonist in the heyday of his powers, when master creation after master creation flowed from his pen, a perfect river of inspiration, glory shone upon him. Love as well as art engages his mighty powers. There is another man younger than he, with more of the gallantries dear to the feminine heart. He surprises the rival and the girl in a love tete-a-tete and the door shuts upon his happiness. The grief of his unrequited passion preys upon his mind, which in turn affects the strength of his body and then comes the affliction of deafness. He is fearful lest the world know of this infirmity and he guards the secret jealously. It is at last discovered. In spite of his deafness, his genius will not down and although unable to hear the melodies which surged to his soul, he wrote them down in the great silence in the thought that the world might happily hear what was denied to his ears. As the angel of death hovers near, he sees a vision of the characters and scenes portrayed in his works, the "Pastoral" and "Joy." Mortality is accomplished upon a body whose soul and work knew naught but immortality.

AMERICAN

REFORMATION OF SIERRA SMITH (Oct. 10).—Having secured his degree of M.D. he takes affectionate leave from his parents and together with a newly-acquired wife he starts for the West. En route the stage coach is held us by a lone highwayman, who relieves him of his watch, a keepsake from his father.

Soon after the young doctor has hung up his sign he receives a call to attend a stricken child. The little paticnt is found feverishly holding a watch, which the doctor is astonished to recognize as the one stolen from him. Just how the doctor regained possession of his cherished timepiece and how the highwayman came to lead an honest life is beautifully told and you will experience most delightful sensations in following this story.

EDISON

OUTWITTING THE PROFESSOR (Oct. 14).—Dora and Frank are sweethearts but they came very near having their dream of love shattered by the interference of an eccentric individual by the name of Professor Barton, who is also a suitor for Dora's hand. It seems that Professor Barton is a lifelong chum of Dora's father and he is, therefore, looked upon with favor by Mr. Winslow. Dora, however, does not care for him and loves only her Frank, to whom she imparts her father's unreasonable wishes. The lovers then plan to get rid of the persistent old Barton.

They take the maid and butler into their confidence and when Professor Barton calls to pay his respects and renew his offer of marriage Dora seems more than cheerful and induces the professor to drink a glass of lemonade into which the maid has previously put a sleeping powder. He soon succumbs to its influence and falls asleep. While in this condition the lovers bribe the maid to sit close to him, allowing the sleeping professor's head to rest on her shoulder. Dora then seeks her father and complains bitterly of the professor's inattentiveness to her and the seeming attraction the maid has for him.

Mr. Winslow hardly believes it but goes to the conservatory to investigate, where, to his surprise and horror, he finds the professor and maid in what appears to him a most compromising position. This so angers Mr. Winslow that he proceeds to handle the professor somewhat rudely. Poor drowsy old Barton, in trying to explain, only makes matters worse, as Mr. Winslow seems convinced that the man is intoxicated and forthwith has him ejected by the butler. With old Barton safely out of the way Frank makes his appearance and succeeds in getting Mr. Winslow's consent to marry his daughter Dora, and the lovers are laughing yet at old Barton's expense.

GLIMPSES OF BERMUDA (Oct. 15).—They may be only glimpses, still they are rare and beautiful glimpses, filled with strange things and at times with exquisite beauty. These glimpses may not be quite so good as seeing them oneself, but there is something in thinking of the difference in expense. Ten cents and one hundred dollars are two different things, so let us see what kind of second-hand glimpses our ten cents will give us.

First we catch a glimpse of Hamilton Harbor and here and there a man-of-war; then a glorious lily field with thousands and thousands of Easter lilies in bloom; a panorama of the three hundred and sixty-five islands that make up the land of the lily and the rose; then our attention is held by a deep sea diver coming out of the depths from under a sunken wreck.

But how about those rare glimpses we spoke of a moment ago? Ah! Here's a treat for you. We have all seen Mother Ocean in her calm and angry moments, but hush, has she ever allowed you to peep into her bedchamber or look upon the bottom of the sea? Can you imagine what it is like? Well, take all the beauty of a garden land, all the colors of its flowers, mix them upon a gorgeous spot and place them under water with the bright sunlight playing on them and you have the bottom of the ocean. This is the glimpse of real beauty that we spoke of. We even show some of the fish that live in this garden of the sea and one catches, at the close of the picture, the dying rays of the summer sun just as old Mother Ocean takes it into her arms for the night.

These are only glimpses, it is true, but they are glimpses well worth while.

On the same reel:

THE WIDOW'S SECOND MARRIAGE.—An old saying, "Two notions never no good," even if ungrammatical, has proved true a great many times. It shows that the person so addicted has a vacillating temperament.

The wily deacon in this bucolic story is very much attracted by the charming widow who possesses pretty twin daughters, and an attractive cottage home. One morning as he is about to pay her a "pop" call the village lawyer is there before him with a bad bit of news about her mortgage. The deacon overhears this and he is not so attentive a lover after his eavesdropping.

There is a certain spinster, beyond the girlish age, who is very fond of the deacon, much to his disgust. They are all at a picnic; that is, "Who's Who" in the village. The lawyer is attracted to the widow and we see them taking advantage of the day to get better acquainted.

A few days later the deacon, while passing along the village street, sees a messenger boy drop a telegram, and when he picks it up he finds, to his surprise, that it is addressed to the widow. His curiosity is aroused and as the message is only partly sealed he cannot resist the temptation to open it and learn its contents. It bears good news to the widow—her financial straits are now over. Hurriedly the deacon seals the envelope and hastens after the boy who had dropped the telegram. Then he takes advantage of the opportunity to admonish the lad for his carelessness. This is where the deacon's "second notion" comes in and proves "no good." He hurries to the widow's home by a different route from that of the boy so as to get there and congratulate her after he hears the news from her. He is, however, too late. While he was changing his mind so many times another suitor won her hand.

LUBIN

GENTLEMAN JOE (Oct. 15).—Tom Gordon, who has been spending some weeks as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Blake, parents of Alice, to whom he is engaged, is about to return home. Bidding Alice good-bye, he notices that her bracelet is not fastened, and she tells him the clasp is broken and asks him to take it to the city for repairs. The night of Tom's return, Gentleman Joe, burglar of the Raffles type, starts upon an expedition and happens into Tom's apartments. Tom, hearing the noise, determines to investigate and, entering the room, confronts the burglar. Holding the latter at bay with a revolver, Tom starts to telephone for the police. Just as he gets the message through, however, Gentleman Joe hurls a large stein at Tom which strikes him a stunning blow on the head. The two men clinch in a desperate struggle when, much to the burglar's surprise, Tom releases his hold and, with a vacant stare, laughs. Joe is quick to realize that the blow upon Tom's head has affected his reason and loses no time in exchanging coats with him. When the police rush into the room, Joe hands Tom over as the burglar while he coolly watches them take him away. Tom is locked in a cell to await trial, unable to explain who he is or where he came from. In the meantime Alice is finally forced to conclude that Tom has proven false to her. A friend invites her to visit in the city and Alice accepts. One night after her arrival she meets Gentleman Joe, who, as one of the invited guests, is looking for plunder. Joe is much impressed with the fair young woman and determines to give her a present. In looking over his miscellaneous plunder he selects the bracelet he had secured the night of the fight. When he gives it to Alice she recognizes at once the bracelet she had given to Tom and, hurriedly leaving the burglar, she hastens to advise her friend of what had happened. A visit to the police results in a clear-

(Continued on page 30.)

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 28—The Actor's Test.....
June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—The Bowstring (Dr.).....

AMERICAN

Oct. 9—A Sister's Devotion 1000
Oct. 10—Reformation of Sierra Smith.....1000
Oct. 14—The Promise (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—The Border Detective (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 17—The New Cowpuncher (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—The Best Man Wins (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Way of the Transgressor (Dr).1000
Oct. 24—The Wooers of Mountain Kate (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 28—One-Two-Three, or the Story of a Wager (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—Chiquita, the Dancer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Wanderer (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—Maiden and Men (Dr.).....1000

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept. 13—A Frontier Child (2 reels).....
Sept. 17—The Penalty .....
Sept. 20—The Doctor's Double.....
Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail .....
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line .....
Oct. 4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct. 11—The Sergeant's Boy.....
Oct. 18—The Vengeance of Fate (2 reels) (Mil.) .....
Oct. 25—The Colonel's Ward (2 reels).....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Sept. 28—At Old Fort Dearborn (2 reel Hist. Dr.) .....
Oct. 8—Indian Raiders (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 12—The Tattoo (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Star-Eyes Strategy (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—Early Days in the West (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 22—Hunted Down (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—A Daughter of the Redskins (2 reels) .....

BRONCHO

Sept. 25—His Better Self.....
Oct. 2—For the Honor of the 7th (Mil.)..
Oct. 9—An Indian Legend.....
Oct. 16—The Sheriff's Adopted Child (Dr.).

CHAMPION

Sept. 9—The Trysting Tree (Dr.).....
Sept. 16—The Dummy Director (Dr.).....
Sept. 23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)....
Sept. 30—Her Whole Story (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—To Err is Human (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—The Girl in the Gingham Gown (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Thy Will Be Done.....

COMET

Sept. 14—A Frontier Soldier of Fortune.....
Sept. 16—A Roundup in the Hills (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 21—The Heir to Bear Creek Ranch (W. Dr.) 1000
Sept. 23—Reaping the Harvest (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—The Rustler's Treachery (W. Dr.).1000
Sept. 30—The Worth-While Wedding (Com.)1000
Oct. 5—Love Will Find a Way (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—"'Ostler Joe" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Double Debt (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Taming a Bachelor (Com.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Romance of the Rockies (Dr.)..1000

CRYSTAL

Oct. 6—The Man from the North Pole.....
Oct. 13—Her Dressmaker's Bill (Com.).....
Oct. 13—McOuirk the Sleuth (Com.).....
Oct. 20—Bella's Beaux (Com.).....
Oct. 20—The Only Woman in Town (Com.)
Oct. 27—A Pair of Fools.....
Oct. 27—The Blonde Lady .....
Nov. 3—Aunt Bridget (Com. Dr.).....

ECLAIR

Sept. 22—Through China .....
Sept. 24—The Word of Honor (Dr.).....
Sept. 26—The Old Clock on the Stairs (Dr.)
Sept. 29—Love and Science.....
Oct. 1—The Old Doctor's Humanity (Dr.).
Oct. 3—The Lucky Loser (Com. Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Lock of Hair (Dr.).....
Oct. 8—All on Account of a Ring (Com.)..
Oct. 8—Surprising Eliza (Com.) .....
Oct. 10—A Choice by Accident (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 13—The White Bonnet (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—The Hoodoo Letter (Com.) .....

Feet

Oct. 15—One on Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)....
Oct. 20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)..
Oct. 22—The Home Coming .....
Oct. 24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)..
Oct. 27—Brusia (Travel) .....
Oct. 29—Rosie (Com.) .....
Oct. 31—The Transgression of Deacon Jones (Com.) .....

GREAT NORTHERN

Aug. 31—Love is Blind (Dr.)..... 943
Sept. 7—The Afflicted Governor (Com.)... 496
Sept. 7—The Spring Lock (Com.)..... 457
Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)...1000
Sept. 21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.)..... 989
Sept. 28—A Child of Genius (Com.)..... 679
Sept. 28—A Sly Servant (Com.)..... 314
Oct. 5—I Am Going Out for a Shave (Com.) 726
Oct. 5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)..... 253
Oct. 7—The Black Chancellor (3 reels) (Dr.)

GAUMONT

Sept. 26—The Stolen Cub.....
Sept. 28—Life in Caucasia .....
Oct. 1—The Convict's Band.....
Oct. 3—Nigoto to the Rescue .....
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive.....
Oct. 8—Love's Test .....
Oct. 10—The Tie Eeternal .....
Oct. 12—The Cotton Industry .....
Oct. 15—Beethoven .....
Oct. 17—The Legend of Cagliostro.....
Oct. 19—A Modern Cinderella.....
Oct. 22—A Country Scandal.....
Oct. 24—Love and Calino Marries a Suffragette .....
Oct. 26—Zigoto Has a Good Heart.....

GEM

Sept. 3—The Celebrated Case (2 Reels)...
Sept. 10—A Turn of Fate.....
Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)..
Oct. 1—The Convict's Return .....
Oct. 8—Orphans (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—What the Bell Told (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—The Woman in White (2 reel Dr.)

IMP

Sept. 30—A Cruel Stepmother .....
Oct. 3—A Country Girl .....
Oct. 5—He Had But Fifty Cents.....
Oct. 5—A Day in an Infant Asylum.....
Oct. 7—The Wreckers (Dr.) .....
Oct. 10—The Bridal Room (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—A Bronx Cocktail (Com.).....
Oct. 12—A Bad Tangle (Com.) .....
Oct. 14—The Old Sweetheart (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Fugitives (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—The Postman .....
Oct. 19—Eventful Bargain Day.....
Oct. 21—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelon (Com.) .....
Oct. 24—King the Detective and the Smugglers .....
Oct. 26—Joe the Pirate.....
Oct. 26—Early in the Morning.....

ITALA

Sept. 22—Toto's Talisman (Com.).....
Sept. 22—A Naughty Boy (Com.).....
Sept. 29—His First Lawsuit (Com.).....
Sept. 29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.).....
Oct. 6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)...

KEYSTONE

Sept. 30—The New Neighbor.....
Oct. 7—The Beating He Needed.....
Oct. 7—Pedro's Dilemma (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Stolen Glory (Com.).....
Oct. 21—The Ambitious Butler.....

LUX
By Prieur.

Sept. 20—The Little Beggar Boy (Dr.)..... 963
Sept. 27—Only a Private (Dr.)..... 970
Oct. 4—The Medallion (Dr.) 983
Oct. 11—Evading Justice (Dr.).....
Oct. 18—His Nurse (Dr.)..... 918

MAJESTIC

Oct. 6—The Little Music Teacher.....
Oct. 8—The Winner and the Spoils.....
Oct. 13—The Simple Life .....
Oct. 15—All for Jim .....
Oct. 20—Captain Ben's Yarn .....
Oct. 22—Love and War .....
Oct. 27—The Tree Imp (Com. Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—A Woman Alone (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 3—Weary's Revenge .....

MILANO

Feet

Sept. 28—The Mysterious Auto .....
Sept. 28—Honesty Punished .....
Oct. 5—An Alpine Tragedy .....
Oct. 12—The Gypsy Spy (2 reels) (Dr.)....
Oct. 19—The Blind Man's Dog (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—Kelly Goes to War.....
Oct. 26—A Three-Cornered Wedding Journey

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Sept. 18—A Western Vacation (Com.).....
Sept. 20—Won by a Call (Com.).....
Sept. 23—Carl Von Gordon's Family (Com.)
Sept. 25—The Criminologist (Dr.).....
Sept. 27—Percy, the Bandit (W. Com.).....
Sept. 30—The Old Prospector (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—Hearts and Skirts .....
Oct. 7—Romance and Reality (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—His Only Son (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Love and a Lemon (Com.).....
Oct. 14—I Owe You $10.00 (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Patsy's Mistake (Com.).....
Oct. 18—Her Friend, The Doctor (Com.)..
Oct. 21—Betty's Bandit (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Border Parson (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Lady Barber of Roaring Gulch

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Sept. 27—Her Ambition (Dr.).....
Oct. 2—Early's Awakening .....
Oct. 4—Two Women .....
Oct. 9—Good Snuff (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—On the Danger Line (Dr.).....
Oct. 16—The Golden Rod.....
Oct. 16—Does It Pay.....
Oct. 18—The Sealed Envelope (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Skeleton (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—Just a Woman (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Sept. 25—The Geranium .....
Sept. 28—The Cuckoo Clock .....
Oct. 2—Brothers Under the Skin.....
Oct. 5—Time Avenges (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 9—Guy Mannering (2 reels) (Dr.)....2000
Oct. 12—Peddler's Find (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—On Account of a Handkerchief (Com.) 500
Oct. 16—The Bug and the Count (Com.)... 500
Oct. 19—The Organ Grinder's Ward (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 23—Johnny on the Spot (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 23—How Jack Won Out (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 26—A Wireless Miracle (Dr.).....1000

REPUBLIC

Aug. 5—The Octoroon's Sacrifice.....
Aug. 12—The Borrowing Simp.....
Aug. 19—The Curse of Drink (Dr.).....
Aug. 26—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelons .....

REX

Sept. 26—The Old Organist (Dr.).....
Sept. 29—The Hidden Bonds (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Bob's Deception .....
Oct. 6—The Winnings of Silas Pegg.....
Oct. 10—If Dreams Came True (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—When Twenty Is in Love.....
Oct. 17—The Wedding March (Dr.).....
Oct. 20—Leaves in the Storm (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—A Kentucky Feud (Dr.).....
Oct. 27—Through a Higher Power (Dr.)...

SOLAX

Sept. 27—The Fugitive .....
Oct. 2—Si's Surprise Party .....
Oct. 4—The Retreat from Eden.....
Oct. 9—Canned Harmony (Com.).....
Oct. 11—A Fool and His Money (Com.).....
Oct. 16—The Gold Brick (Com.).....
Oct. 18—The Maverick (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The High Cost of Living.....
Oct. 25—The Idol Worshipper.....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Sept. 17—The Mail Clerk's Temptation.....
Sept. 20—Two Souls .....
Sept. 29—Please Help the Pore.....
Oct. 1—Letters of a Lifetime.....
Oct. 4—The Warning .....
Oct. 13—Dotty the Dancer.....
Oct. 15—When Mercy Tempers Justice (Dr.)
Oct. 18—For the Mikado (Dr.).....
Oct. 20—Petticoat Camp .....
Oct. 22—Through the Flames.....
Oct. 25—In a Garden.....

VICTOR

Sept. 20—Flo's Discipline (Com.).....
Sept. 27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—Tangled Relations .....
Oct. 11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.) .....
Oct. 18—The Cross-roads (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Angel of the Studio (Dr.)....

(Continued from page 28.)
ing up of the mystery. Tom's memory is restored to him and Gentleman Joe at last finds himself in the hands of the police.

RED SAUNDERS' SACRIFICE (Oct. 17).—Saunders was an outlaw, but different from most of his kind, as he never killed a man. He had a heart as tender as a woman, and when he looked down from his mountain retreat and saw the burning cabin of the Warrens he rushed to their rescue, and offered them his hut until they could obtain a better home. Mrs. Warren was very ill and a doctor must be obtained at once, so Mary told Saunders. Realizing that there was a price on bis head he hesitated before starting for the town where the sheriff lived and the reward posted, but the exigency of the trip urged him on. Down the mountain he galloped and soon reached the town, where he was directed to the doctor's home. With some difficulty he pursuaded him to make the trip, only to find that Mrs. Warren had died while he was away. Saunders was recognized going through the town as the outlaw wanted, and the sheriff, aroused to action, struck out hot upon his trail. The returning doctor directed the sheriff to the outlaw's retreat, where he caught him and made him prisoner. Mary pleaded for his liberty, but the sheriff was made of adamant. Mary finally persuaded him to see her mother, the woman for whom Saunders risked his liberty. Glancing at the woman, now cold in death, the sheriff recognized one whom he had never ceased to love, the sweetheart of his boyhood days. Filled with emotion and gratitude for the prisoner he removed the handcuffs and told him to go. He went just to the door, where he hesitated. He thought of the girl he now loved. What would become of her, alone in the world? Would she wait for him if he "took his medicine like a man?" Yes, she promised. Only a year was the sentence he received. The sheriff looked after Mary while Saunders was away, and on his return she received him with open arms. Together they went over the mountains toward tbe setting sun, to begin their lives anew.

COMET

THE MOCCASIN PRINT (Ocotber 12).—This interesting and stirring picture play of the Golden West reveals human passions at their worst and illustrates to what extent the green-eyed monster may prompt and inspire the most sedate person to go. Jack Morris is a miner. At the opening of the tale we find him very much beloved by Gertie Adams. The pair have been friends for some time and the general opinion in camp is that they are soon to be married. Jack, on the other hand, does not care for Gertie and can't imagine how the impression that Gertie is to become his wife got abroad. There is another girl in the case. She is Kitty Parsons, and to her Jack really gives his beart. When Gertie learns this she plans revenge. Disguising herself as an Indian she abducts Kitty and, hiding her, threatens her with instant deatb unless she will promise to go away and leave Jack alone. When she realizes how desperate her rival is Kitty pleads for time to give her answer. Then Gertie departs, vowing to return inside of a very short time. Resuming her disguise she passes Morris on the street. He fails to recognize her, but instinctively sees in her moccasin track the identical footprints as those left by Kitty's abductor. He follows the pseudo Indian and investigates. When Kitty and Gertie meet the former tells her enemy that she loves Jack dearly and that no matter what betides she will cling to him. Insane with jealous rage Gertie is about to murder Kitty when Jack comes upon the scene and from a short distance fires at Gertie, wounding her in the wrist. Then for the first time he learns Gertie's real identity. Gertie begs for forgiveness and it is only granted on condition that the would-be assassin leave the place immediately, a concession which Gertie is only too glad to accept.

ECLIPSE—George Kline

THE MISSING LOCKET (Oct. 16).—As a birthday present, Walter Perkins gives his wife a beautiful locket containing her picture, which Mrs. Perkins, after admiring it in company with her little daughter, Susie, places in a drawer for safe keeping.

Tbe child cannot get her mind off the locket, and the next morning takes it from the drawer and carries it off to school. There she shows the jewel to Mary Burton, her chum, wbo possesses one also, and immediately proposes a trade.

When Mary returns home she shows the new locket to her mother and the latter, not being able to gain a satisfactory answer as to how it was obtained, confides the fact to her husband and gives the jewel into his keeping.

In the city the next morning the husband enters a cafe for a congenial glass with a friend, and incidentally shows him the locket. As fate would have it, Walter Perkins happens to be standing directly behind and, recognizing the locket, demands an explanation, to which the owner jokingly replies that it belongs to his best girl. Mad with rage, Perkins hurries out of the room.

Puzzled at his behavior, the two men consult the innkeeper, who, looking at the picture, exclaims: "Good heavens! That is Perkins' wife." Realizing what might be the result of their fun, they hurry to the Perkins home and arrive just in time to prevent a terrible crime.

CINES—George Kleine

THE ADVENTURE OF THE SCARECROW (Oct. 15).—Farmer Martin is journeying homeward with a well-filled purse in his pocket when suddenly he is waylaid by a pair of rogues, who, after possessing themselves of the money, cast their victim into the river. Quickly scrambling out, he informs the police, who immediately start in pursuit of the men he has described, but the search is unsuccessful.

Wet and dispirited the farmer proceeds on his way but soon meets a friend who, seeing him in this condition, offers bim a coat from a scarecrow standing in a nearby field.

Placing his hands in the pockets of the coat what is his surprise when he discovers the missing wallet. Again he informs the police, who, believing that the thieves will return for their booty, make their plans accordingly.

Later, the ruffians cautiously approach the scarecrow, but suddenly the figure throws its arms tight around one of the thieves, for the captain has taken the place of the dummy.

After witnessing the capture of the other rogue the farmer carefully replaces the coat upon the scarecrow and then goes on his way in high spirits.

ECLAIR

THE HOMECOMING (Oct. 22).—A prologue sets forth how Langdon, junior member of a brokerage firm, shifts tbe blame of a criminal offense onto the shoulders of the senior partner, Tilford. Tilford is found guilty and sentenced to a ten-year term.

The treachery of the junior partner fills Tilford with a deep-rooted hatred wbich soon breeds the spirit of a murderous revenge when his term shall have expired. It becomes an obsession. He refuses to see his wife when she comes to ask his permission to the marriage of Langdon to their daughter. He tears up his mail unread. Thus he never knows that the man who was responsible for his disgrace and his deprived liberty finally married his own

(Continued on page 32.)

Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs

The Decorators Supply Co.
2549 Archer Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

		Feet
Sept.	16—Love's Messenger (Com.)
Sept.	19—Two Daughters of Eve (Dr.)
Sept.	23—Friends (Dr.)
Sept.	26—A Disappointed Mamma (Com.)
Sept.	26—A Mixed Affair (Com.)
Sept.	30—So Near Yet So Far (Dr.)
Oct.	3—A Feud in the Kentucky Hills (Dr.)
Oct.	7—The Line at Hogan's (Com.)
Oct.	7—A Ten-Karat Hero (Com.)
Oct.	10—The Chief's Blanket (Dr.)
Oct.	14—In the Aisles of the Wild (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	17—A Limited Divorce (Com.)
Oct.	17—Like the Cat, They Came Back (Com.)

CINES
C. Kleine

Oct.	5—Trifle Not With Love (Com.)	700
Oct.	8—A Glimpse of Sicily (Sc.)	250
Oct.	8—Artistic Glass Work (Indust.)	300
Oct.	8—The Wonder Powders (Com.)	450
Oct.	12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	15—The Adventure of the Scarecrow (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	19—Among the Mountains of Calahria (Scenic)	400
Oct.	19—An Abbreviated Honeymoon (Com.)	600
Oct.	22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.)	250
Oct.	22—The Invited Guest (Com.)	750
Oct.	26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.)	1005
Oct.	29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.)	400
Oct.	29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.)	450
Oct.	29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.)	150
Nov.	2—A Head for a Head (Hist. Dr.)	1100
Nov.	5—The Golden Shell of Palermo, (Sc.) and Love versus Gratitude (Dr.)	300 700
Nov.	9—No Fool Like an Old Fool (Com. Dr.)	1000
Nov.	12—On the Firing Line (War Dr.)	1050
Nov.	16—Life and Industries in Aden Campo (Educ.)	400
Nov.	16—The Old Actor's Vision (Dr.)	600

EDISON

Aug.	30—The Boy and the Girl (Dr.)	1000
Aug.	31—Simla (Sc.)	1000
Sept.	3—The Triangle (Com.-Dr.)	1000
Sept.	4—Aladdin Up to Date (Com.)	1000
Sept.	6—Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	7—Bridget's Sudden Wealth (Com.)	1000
Sept.	7—Opening of the Y. M. C. A. Playground, Lynchburg, Va., 1912..	400
Sept.	10—The Manufacture of Paper, Maine (Ind.)	1000
Sept.	11—The Stranger and the Taxicab (Com.)	1000
Sept.	13—The Dam Builder (Dr.)	100
Sept.	14—The Rescue, Care and Education of Blind Babies	1000
Sept.	23—Benares and Agra, India (Sc.)	350
Sept.	23—How Bobby Joined the Circus (Com.)	650
Sept.	24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.)	1000
Sept.	27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	30—Calumet "K" (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.)	300
Oct.	2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.)	700
Oct.	4—Cashmere (Sc.)	1000
Oct.	5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	7—A Curable Disease (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—Under False Colors (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.)	1000
Oct.	11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.)	1025
Oct.	12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)	1000
Oct.	15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)	350
Oct.	15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.)	650
Oct.	16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.)	350
Oct.	16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)	650
Oct.	18—The Foundling (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.)	1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept.	3—Back to the Old Farm (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	5—The Wildman (Com.)	1000
Sept.	6—Twilight (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	7—The Ranchman's Trust (Dr.)
Sept.	10—A Woman of Arizona (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	12—The Listener's Lesson (Com.)	1000
Sept.	13—Billy McGrath's Love Letters (Com.)	1000
Sept.	14—Broncho Billy Outwitted (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	17—Neptune's Daughter (Dr.)
Sept.	19—The Mixed Sample Trunks (Com.)
Sept.	20—The Love Test (Com.)
Sept.	21—"Alkali" Ike's Pants (Com.)
Sept.	24—Across the Broad Pacific
Sept.	25—The Adventure of the Button (Com. Dr.)
Sept.	26—A Little Louder, Please (Com.)
Sept.	27—The Voice of Conscience (Dr.)
Sept.	28—An Indian Sunbeam (Dr.)
Oct.	1—Ghosts (Dr.)
Oct.	2—Well Matched (Com.)
Oct.	3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)
Oct.	4—Terrible Teddy (Com.)	1000
Oct.	5—Love on Tough Luck Ranch (Com.)	1000
Oct.	8—Alkali Ike Stung (Com.)	1000
Oct.	9—The Rebellion of Mandy (Com.)	1000
Oct.	10—The End of the Feud (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	11—Not on the Circus Program (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	12—The Shotgun Ranchman (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	15—A Mistaken Calling (Com.)

LUBIN

Sept.	26—Swimming and Life Saving
Sept.	26—Buster and the Gypsies
Sept.	27—Glued
Sept.	27—The Water Wagon
Sept.	28—The Doctor's Debt
Sept.	30—A Girl's Bravery (Dr.)
Oct.	2—The Amateur Iceman High Class (Com.)
Oct.	3—The Physician of Silver Gulch (Dr.)
Oct.	4—Collection Day (Com.)
Oct.	4—Spoony Sam (Com.)
Oct.	5—His Life (Dr.)
Oct.	7—The Last Rose of Summer	1062
Oct.	8—The Moonshiner's Daughter
Oct.	10—The Players
Oct.	11—Mr. Fixit (Com.)
Oct.	11—The German Singers (Com.)
Oct.	12—The Cringer
Oct.	14—The Uprising
Oct.	15—Gentleman Joe
Oct.	17—Red Saunder's Sacrifice
Oct.	18—Rube's Mistake
Oct.	18—Meeting Mamie's Mother
Oct.	19—Caught Bluffing
Oct.	19—The Sporting Editor
Oct.	21—Just Maine Folks
Oct.	22—In the Service of the State
Oct.	24—The Old Chess Players

G. MELIES

Aug.	22—The Moth and the Flame (Dr.)	1000
Aug.	29—His Partner's Share (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	5—The Obsession (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	12—The Unworthy Son (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	19—The Prisoner's Story (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	26—The Beach Combers (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	3—A Western Coquette (Dr.)
Oct.	3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West
Oct.	10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	24—A Son's Example (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.)	1000

PATHE FRERES

Sept.	19—The Desperado (W. Dr.)
Sept.	20—Max's Tragedy (Com.)
Sept.	20—The Edmunds Klamm Ravine (Tr.)
Sept.	21—Silver Moon's Rescue (Dr.)
Sept.	23—Pathe's Weekly, No. 39
Sept.	25—Pals (Dr.)
Sept.	26—Glacier National Park (Sc.)
Sept.	26—The Andrew
Sept.	28—The Filibuster's Ship (Dr.)
Sept.	30—Pathe's Weekly, No. 40
Sept.	30—The Man Hunt (Dr.)
Oct.	1—A Well-Washed House
Oct.	1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.)
Oct.	2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct.	3—Theodore Roosevelt
Oct.	3—Experiments with Liquid Air
Oct.	4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.)
Oct.	5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.)
Oct.	7—Pathe's Weekly No. 41
Oct.	8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.)
Oct.	8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)
Oct.	9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.)
Oct.	10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.)
Oct.	11—His Country Before All (Dr.)
Oct.	12—Naughty Marietta (Com.)
Oct.	14—Pathe's Weekly, No. 42
Oct.	15—Max Fights a Duel (Com.)
Oct.	15—The Valley of Chevreuse, France (Tr.)
Oct.	16—The Lass of Clauster (Dr.)
Oct.	17—The Striped Bathing Suit (Com.)
Oct.	17—Sub-marine Fauna (Oceanic)
Oct.	18—The Rubber Industry in Malaysia (Ind.)
Oct.	18—The Convertible Auto (Trick)
Oct.	19—Misleading Evidence (Dr.)
Oct.	21—Pathe's Weekly No. 43
Oct.	22—The End of Louis XI (Dr.)
Oct.	22—Old Toledo (Travel)
Oct.	23—The Simple Life (Com.)
Oct.	24—Little Raven's Sweetheart (Dr.)
Oct.	25—Tom Thumb (Trick)
Oct.	25—The Hermit Crab
Oct.	26—The Light That Failed (Dr.)

KALEM CO.

Sept.	27—The Heart of John Grimm (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	28—The Apache Renegade (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	30—The Poacher's Pardon (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—A Hospital Hoax (Com.)
Oct.	2—Ancient Temples of Egypt (Sc.)
Oct.	4—The Village Vixen (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	5—The Confederate Ironclad (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	7—When Youth Meets Youth (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—The Belle of the Beach (Dr.)
Oct.	9—Election Day in Californita (Com.)
Oct.	11—His Mother's Picture (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	12—The Redskin Raiders (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	14—The Combination of the Safe (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—Paying the Board Bill (Com.)
Oct.	16—Central Park, New York (Sc.)
Oct.	18—The Plot that Failed (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	19—The Rival Engineers (Dr.)	1000

SELIG

Sept.	30—Bread Upon the Waters (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	1—Why Jim Reformed (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—The Pirate's Daughter (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	3—The Great Drought (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	4—An Assisted Elopement (Com.)	1000
Oct.	7—How the Cause Was Won (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—A Motorcycle Adventure (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	9—When Edith Played Judge and Jury (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	10—Euchered (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	11—An International Romance (Com.)	1000
Oct.	14—My Wife's Bonnet (Com.)	1000
Oct.	15—The Opium Smugglers (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—The Shuttle of Fate (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	17—Where Love Is, There God Is Also (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	18—Subterfuge (Com.)
Oct.	18—The Geishas of Japan (Ed.)	1000
Oct.	21—A Sad Devil (Com.)	1000
Oct.	22—So-Jun-Wah and the Tribal Law (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	23—Tempted by Necessity (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	24—The Awakening (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	25—The Biwa Canal, and Shooting the Rapids of the Katsuragawa, Japan (Edu.)
Oct.	25—Getting Atmosphere (Com.)	1000

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Sept.	25—The Sacrifice (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel)	500
Oct.	2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.)	500
Oct.	9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)	300
Oct.	9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)	700
Oct.	16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)	995
Oct.	16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic)	300
Oct.	23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)	400
Oct.	23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)	300
Oct.	30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)	975
Nov.	6—The Queen of Spades (Dr.)	1007
Nov.	13—Specimens of Lizards and Frogs (Edu.)	300
Nov.	13—The Town of Cognac, France, and Its Brandy Industry (Edu.)	400
Nov.	13—Reviewing French Troops by Airship (Topical)	300

VITAGRAPH

Sept.	16—Capt. Barnacle's Waif
Sept.	17—The Troubled Trail
Sept.	18—A Vitagraph Romance
Sept.	20—The Indian Mutiny
Sept.	21—Adventure of the Italian Model
Sept.	23—Bobby's Father
Sept.	24—His Lordship, the Valet
Sept.	25—Bill Wilson's Gal
Sept.	26—The Signal Fires
Sept.	27—The Counts; and Weary Starts Things in Pumpkinville
Sept.	28—Irony of Fate
Sept.	30—Her Choice
Sept.	20—Burning of a Match Factory (Top.)	500
Oct.	1—Adventures of the Smelling Salts (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	2—Bachelors' Buttons (Com.)
Oct.	2—Diana's Legacy (Com.)
Oct.	3—She Cried (Com.)	1000
Oct.	4—Her Spoiled Boy (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	5—The Red Barrier (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	7—Nothing to Wear (Com.)	1000
Oct.	7—As You Like It (Special 3 reels) (Dr.)	3000
Oct.	8—Scenes Along River Lee (Dr.)	300
Oct.	8—The Godmother (Com.)	700
Oct.	9—When Persistency and Obstinacy meet (Com.)	1000
Oct.	10—As Fate Would Have It (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	11—Mammoth Life Savers (Com.)	1000
Oct.	11—Her Father's Hat (Com.)	1000
Oct.	12—When California Was Young (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	14—Every Inch a Man (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	15—Mrs. Lirriper's Lodger (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	16—An Elephant on His Hands (Com.)	1000
Oct.	17—Parade and Gun Drill, Ft. Hamilton (Topical)	300
Oct.	17—Father's Hot Toddy (Com.)	700
Oct.	18—A Mistake in Spelling (Com. Dr.)	1000
Oct.	19—Bunny All at Sea (Com.)	1000

(Continued from page 30.)

daughter and that a child was born to them, a grandchild of his.

The sentence expires and he is released, being given the customary suit of clothes and sum of money. With the money he buys a revolver, then writes Langdon a letter warning him that be is coming to kill him. Langdon is fear-stricken when he reads it. Just then his wife and daughter chance to enter the office and Mrs. Langdon, noticing his pallor and nervousness, persuades him to step out to see a doctor. Tbey go out, leaving the child to play with her dolly. Tilford now enters. The child appeals to bim and he talks to her. The doll falls and breaks. Her sorrow over its breakage so touches Tilford that he promises to get her a new one. He leaves, and then comes the return of Langdon and his wife.

The child wants to wait for ber new doll, but her mother insists on her leaving. They exit, leaving Langdon alone. Tilford now returns with tbe doll, which, by the way, the child has seen him return with. Tilford sees Langdon and his hatred and revenge are revived instantly. He makes little waste of denunciatory words before he aims the revolver at Langdon's heart and is about to pull. Now the child rushes in, asking for her new dolly, and followed by her mother, Tilford's own daughter. So is a murder averted and revenge throttled by paternal love.

MAKING UNCLE JEALOUS (Oct. 24).—For twenty years Hiram Tyler had courted Salina Huntingdon, but had lacked the courage to propose. Will Huntington, Salina's nephew, returns from college for bis vacation, bringing his chum, George Lamon, with him. Will is in love with Hiram's niece, Judith Huges, and George immediately falls in love with her sister Muriel. They are very anxious to bring about a match between Aunt Salina and Uncle Hiram. Will makes up his mind that the only way to do this is to make Hiram jealous. In his trunk he has two costumes which he and George wore at a college masquerade, so dressing in these they persuade Aunt Salina to go for a walk with them, meanwhile having arranged with Judith to have Hiram at the crossroads at a certain time. To do this Judith, who is busy with a dressmaker, complains of a headache and asks Uncle Hiram to drive Miss Osgood to the dressmaker's home. They arrive at the crossroads just in time to see Aunt Salina in the embrace of the supposed Mexican. Hiram's jealousy is aroused, likewise Salina's, when she discovers Miss Osgood riding with Hiram. To add fuel to the flames Will describes Aunt Salina's friend to Judith in the presence of Hiram.

The next day in order to get Hiram where he can see Salina with another man Judith puts Clara into a canoe and pushes it out into the river and then rushes wildly and tells him of Clara's predicament. Hiram rushes out, dives into the river, rescues Clara and, as he is starting for home and dry clothing, sees Salina and a minister friend ride by in an auto. The next day Hiram gets his courage in both hands and proposes to Salina, much to her joy and the joy of the young people.

GONTRAN'S LOVE STRATEGEM (Oct. 27).—Gontran woos Susie, the chemist's daughter, who loves him, and is interrupted by the arrival of the chemist. The chemist has discovered a certain lotion which infallibly grows hair on the baldest head, and advertises for bald-headed men who will allow an immediate experiment. As a reward, he offers his daughter Susie's hand after using the lotion. Gontran, who has plenty of hair, does not lose hope, but schemes.

A crowd of men come to answer the advertisement, but none are eligible except Mr. Cooke, who is an excellent "object" for the chemist's experiments. But another head appears, smoother than ivory. A quarrel ensues between the two rivals. So the chemist hands each a few bottles of the lotion and says that the first to come to him within a week and has the most hair shall have his daughter. Mr. Cooke is in despair. He uses all of the lotion, but his head is still bald. Well, he will trick the druggist by using a wig. The fortunate moment arrives and the rivals look upon each other with distrust. The chemist and Susie are surprised to see that both possess a rich and thick mass of hair. The chemist is about to reward Mr. Cooke, but Susie is not to be tricked and she pulls off Mr. Cooke's wig. The latter takes hold of Gontran by the hair but it does not come off. Gontram has tricked the chemist by wearing a bald scalp, which he has removed, and now has his natural head of hair. The chemist puts Mr. Cooke out and gladly gives Susie to happy Gontran.

On the same reel:

A Laughmaker!
"On Account of a Handkerchief" and "The Bug and the Count."
Split Reel, Release Wed., Oct. 16.
"The Organ Grinder's Ward," Release Sat., Oct. 19.

RELIANCE

"Johnny on the Spot" and "How Jack Won Out," Split Reel, Released Wed., Oct. 23. "A Wireless Miracle," Release Sat., Oct. 26.

These are all up to Reliance standard and mean Full Houses for Showmen.

BRUSIA (ASIATIC TURKEY).—This film shows the beauties of Murad, a town dating from 1420; a calm cemetery; some curious streets and the old bridge. After a travel through tbis picturesque town we are shown the way oxen are shod. These oxen are used for transportation and finally they are exported.

CRYSTAL

BELLA'S BEAUS (Oct. 20).—Beautiful Bella has two beaus, John, whom she likes, and Percy, whom she tolerates. John is bashful and Bella plays Percy to wake John into a declaration. But Percy becomes a nuisance. He also scares John away. Percy takes Bella for a walk in the park. Then Bella, dressed in her prettiest, jumps in the lake and takes Percy with her. Despite this treatment, Percy sticks. So Bella hires "Kid" Long, a tough nut, to scare Percy. John overhears the girl's plot. Then John pays "Kid" a big prize to let him pose as a hero.

"Kid" throws a big scare into Percy, who runs away. John gets in a fake "knock-out" on the "Kid" and thereby wins Bella, who believes him to be a hero.

Pearl White as Bella, a character that shows her to great advantage in one of our best laugh producers.

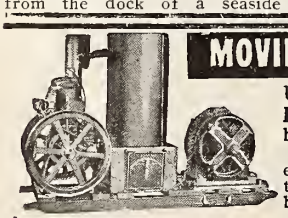
THE ONLY WOMAN IN TOWN.—Hiram Scroggs sells his restaurant in Silver City, Colo., to the Widow Chase. Bill and Jack are rivals for the widow's hand. Jack buys a beautiful lace shawl for the widow and leaves Sam hold it while he goes in for a drink. Bill meets Sam, who tells him of the shawl and Jack's intentions. Jack induces Sam to give him the shawl and to fill the box with straw. Jack then gives the shawl to the widow. Bill then calls on the widow and gives her the box filled with the straw. The widow, indignant, throws Jack out, and Bill, who is enjoying Jack's discomfiture, proposes and is accepted by the widow. They are married and Bill prepares to take life easy, but the widow compels him to do his share of the work in the restaurant, making him waiter and porter, much to the amusement of Bill's friends, who had always known him as a hard customer.

A real farce, full of laughable situations, very capably acted.

MAJESTIC

CAPTAIN BEN'S YARN (Oct. 20).—Captain Ben Bobstay, a retired mariner, is fishing from the dock of a seaside resort. Mrs. Brownlow sends her two little children, Tommy and Molly, down to have him spin a yarn for them. Captain Ben begins and recounts his early love, in this same village, for beautiful Mehitabel Lee. He tells of her father's opposition to his love, and the intention of forcing Mehitabel to marry a rich man. The old salt then spins the tale of his desperate running off to sea, his adventures with the Hottentots, after a shipwreck, where he is about to wed the princess who saved him, when the vision of Mehitabel Lee comes to him and makes him remain true to his love. Then he escapes by a daring ruse. He is captured by pirates, who land on this cannibal island, and they are about to slay him when the chief's daughter offers to marry him and make him a partner with her father. Again Mehitabel's image appears to his mind's eye and he stays steadfast. He flings himself into the sea, where he swims for hours, and is rescued by a British admiral, who has a beautiful daughter. This damsel falls a victim to the salt's fatal gift of beauty, and her father is persuaded to offer her to Ben. Mehitabel's image intrudes once more, and Ben refuses. At last he lands safe and sound back in the quaint village, and he goes to Mehitabel's house to find that she has indeed married the rich man, and he is taunted by her cruel father.

As he is finishing his romance, the mother of the two children walks down the dock and observes the portrait of Mehitabel which is in old Captian Ben's watch. She shows him a duplicate of the picture in an old-fashioned miniature in her locket about her neck. The old captain is dumfounded, but she laughs and insists that he come up with her to the veranda of their summer cottage. He follows her, and as he gets on the veranda a big limousine whizzes up, out pops the young husband, helping a quaint little old lady from it, with band boxes, and he leads her up the steps. "It is Grandma," cry the children, and the daughter kisses the little old lady rapturously. Then she leads her to old Captain Ben. It is Mehitabel Lee. The old man rubs his eyes, and the two wipe their eyes. Captain Ben gallantly leads her to a seat on the veranda, and the daughter, whispering, takes the children inside and beckons her husband to follow. "Where have you been?" asks Grandmother Mehitabel, as she takes out her knitting from a little bag, and wipes her eyes with a tiny lace handkerchief. Captain Ben, wiping his own optics with a generous bandana, looks at the picture in the watch, waves his hand towards the ocean, and begins his yarn all over again, rocking in time with the old



MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and highly endorsed by the United States Army. Biggest Sensation in the Moving Picture World. Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes: "Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day."

Write today for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet.

(163) DETROIT ENGINE WORKS, Dept. 112, DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

lady—as the picture ends—a sunset effect used for finis.

LOVE AND WAR (Oct. 22).—Robert Carlisle and Nell Stark are Southern sweethearts and he asks her father for her hand, which he gives. On this occasion Nell presents him with six linen handkerchiefs on which she has embroidered the letter "R," reminding him that it is his birthday.

The Civil War is declared and when Robert announces his intention to join the Northern forces, he is ordered off the Stark premises, and Nell, prompted by her Southern heroism, tells him to go, never to see her again. He leaves, and in her tears she remembers his ring and, tearing it from her finger, throws it in the direction taken by him. Her anger cools, however, and regretting her hasty act, she searches in vain for the ring. Nell's brother Will arrives home from Richmond, and before joining the Confederate forces Nell gives him a photo of herself.

Will is assigned as a spy and is about to enter the Federal lines when he is discovered, pursued and wounded. He eludes his pursuers by crawling in a thicket but, crawling onward, he comes upon Robert, who has been assigned to picket duty. Weak from the loss of blood Will resigns his fate to the Union soldier, who is about to give the alarm when he spies the picture projecting from Will's coat. He extracts it and is shocked to find Nell's photo. At once thinking he is her sweetheart he is tempted to kill him, but, fortunately, drops the photo, which alights right side up, and his gaze rests on the words written thereon, "From Sister." The truth now dawns upon him and, binding up the wounded man's arm with his handkerchief, he carries him within a short distance from the Stark home and succeeds in returning to his post without being detected.

Will crawls home and Nell, on removing the bandages, recognizes the handkerchief, and on inquiring, her brother tells her the story. She at once decides to enter the army as a nurse in hopes of being of some assistance to Robert in this capacity, and later on, after a battle, finds Robert badly wounded. She prevails on the Confederate soldiers to take Robert to the hospital and she nurses him back to health. The war is ended and Robert comes to the Stark home, where he is given a warm re- he carries him within a short distance from the under the old tree, find the discarded ring in the grass, which is replaced on her finger.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE FRERE'S WEEKLY No. 42 (Oct. 14).

MAX FIGHTS A DUEL (Oct. 15).—Max, the celebrated fun maker, is shown in another of his amusing playlets. His fiancee, ere she marries him, insists that he prove himself a hero by fighting a duel. Max has difficulty in finding an opponent whom he can defeat, and his adventures constitute a comedy which is a scream from start to finish.

On the same reel:

THE VALLEY OF CHEVREUSE AND THE VEAUX DE CERNAY (Colored).—A tastefully colored travel film showing some charming scenes in one of the environs of Paris.

THE LASS OF GLOUCESTER (Oct. 16).—With a parting kiss, Betty Lane, a fisherman's daughter, and John Monroe, promise to meet later in the day at their trysting place on the seashore. Bety returns to keep the appointment and is waiting but a moment when a wealthy young yachtsman comes ashore for provisions. He flirts with Betty and Betty's heart is lost. John arrives to find his sweetheart in the stranger's arms. Betty ignores John's protests and agrees to the newcomer's proposal that she pack her things, meet him in half an hour and elope. John hides and awaits their return. The yachtsman is the first to arrive. He has his provisions and has not forgotten a bottle of stimulant, most of which he has already consumed. John thrashes him for stealing his girl, throws him into his rowboat and orders him to get aboard his yacht and not to return. On board the yacht the intoxicated yachtsman drops a match near the oil tank. Betty arrives on the scene in time to see the vessel in flames and the owner dive into the water. Betty looks appealingly at John. John takes to the water and with a few strong strokes reaches the drowning man. In the meantime, Betty has been doing some heavy thinking, it appears, and has come to the conclusion that a man as brave as John is, although poor, is better for her than a wealthy sailor who cannot swim.

THE STRIPED BATHING SUIT (Oct. 17).—After making his wife a present of a new striped bathing suit, Mr. Peters is astonished to see the suit in the sea in the arms of a strange gentleman. Peters, on the sand, storms and rages at the couple out in the water, but they do not seem to see him. The gentleman bestows a kiss and this is the last straw. Peters wades out in his best suit of clothes to get the fellow. When the water reaches his chin the lady faces him, and to Peter's surprise it is not his wife at all, but another young lady who has purchased a striped bathing suit at a department store. The film is alive with amusing situations.

On the same reel:

SUBMARINE FAUNA.—An interesting study of some of the plants and animals inhabiting the bottom of the sea.

THE RUBBER INDUSTRY IN MALAYSIA (Oct. 18).—Arm in arm with electricity, rubber has taken its place in the foremost rank of the world's great industrial products. This film is of wide interest, because it shows the manner in which the greater part of the world's supply of this article is secured. No proceeding, from the time the rubber trees are planted until the finished product is sent to Europe and America, is omitted.

On the same reel:

THE CONVERTIBLE AUTO.—A comedy, featuring an automobile, which is equally serviceable on land or on sea.

MISLEADING EVIDENCE (Oct. 19).—Joe Mannering, a revenue officer, comes to a mountain town to trap the moonshiners. He meets and loves a young woman who is also loved by the county sheriff, although she prefers Joe. A hollowed oak tree is a trading station for the moonshiners, and Mannering, in order to secure evidence against them, sets a camera facing the tree in such a manner that when any one looks into the hollow they will be photographed. The sheriff, when he finds the girl has no use for him, sends her an anonymous note asking her to go to the tree. Later he and Mannering develop the picture and to Joe's surprise the woman he loves is revealed. However, he has sworn to do his duty and he goes to her home to arrest her. When he and the sheriff reach there they find her father dying, and with his last fleeting strength he confesses that he is the moonshiner. The girl shows Mannering the note asking her to come to the tree and informs him that it was brought to her by the sheriff's servant. When Joe learns this he is with difficulty restrained from taking the sheriff's life.

"101" BISON—NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

THE COLONEL'S WARD (Oct. 25) (two reels).—This is another production of the New York Motion Picture Co., with an overwhelming cast, presenting stirring battle scenes and a story of gripping human interest.

The Indians are on the warpath, and their depredations have reached such a length that the government has massed its troops and, after much difficulty, surrounded them. A terrible battle takes place, in which the Indians are badly defeated, and as the troops take possession of the village the redskins take to the hills. In one of the tepees Col. Ward finds a broken-hearted little girl about ten years old, grief-stricken over the loss of her parents, and he brings her back to the fort. The little orphan is adopted by the Colonel and his wife and treated as if she were their own child.

Awed by the drastic measures of the troops, the Indians lay down their arms, and at a peace conference a treaty is solemnly signed by which the Indians agree not to venture beyond certain boundaries, which the government agrees to protect from further intrusion and settlement.

Mary—the adopted child—grows up into young womanhood, and is sent to an Eastern boarding school.

One morning the Indians are considerably excited over the appearance of a long wagon train which slowly wends its way into their territory. A good location is picked in a beautiful valley, and the emigrants prepare to settle down.

Wild consternation prevails among the Indians. The old treaty is brought out and discussed, and the chiefs make stirring harangues. A delegation is appointed to call at the fort and protest against the invasion of their hunting grounds.

Colonel Ward sees the justice of the Indians' protest, and receives them kindly. He promises to take the matter up with the Washington officials, and to do everything in his power to aid them. The Indians insist upon the emigrants being removed, and to this the Colonel turns a deaf ear.

Mary has just come home from college. The muttering and threatening Indians meet her in the yard, and the attraction of race overcomes the years of education and civilization. These are her people—her brothers, and she listens to their impassioned recital of their wrongs, and then bids them wait while she intercedes for them.

Mary eloquently pleads the cause of the Indians to the Colonel, but he is helpless in the premises and can only promise to do his best. It is the first time Mary has ever asked anything which was not granted her by her doting foster-father, and she feels it keenly.

The Indians appeal to the government agent, and as they become excited he orders them from his office. They refuse to move and upbraid him. Thoroughly angered he draws his revolver and attacks them, and in the scuffle that ensues the weapon is discharged and he falls to the floor mortally wounded.

The Indian police and soldiers rush in and arrest the chief. A courtmartial is held and the Indian is sentenced to be shot. A squad is picked to carry out the execution, and the guns are loaded and placed aside to await the break of the following day.

Mary has overheard the trial, which took place in the Colonel's quarters, and determines to save the chief. She secures permission to visit him in his cell and unfolds to him her plan, which is to remove the bullets from the guns and replace them with blank cartridges. When the soldiers fire he is to fall and feign death, and, when his body is turned over to his tribe, to continue the deception until he is safely away.

Mounting a horse she gallops to the Indian village and informs them of the plot, and when she arrives at home she impatiently awaits the fall of night to carry out the scheme.

At length midnight arrives, and all is peaceful and quiet. Mary cautiously makes her way to the library and extracts the bullets, replacing them with blank cartridges. In her excitement she drops one of the guns. It awakens the Colonel, who, gun in hand, starts to investigate. Mary listens a moment and, hearing nothing, concludes no one has been awakened, and goes on with her work. The Colonel sees the dark form moving in the room and fires. Hastily lighting a candle he picks up the dead body and sees who it is. Mrs. Ward is frantic with grief, and the Colonel with difficulty controls himself.

A glance at the guns explains the situation, and he replaces the cartridges, and decides to conceal Mary's death until after the execution.

The next morning the fort is surrounded by hordes of Indians, who, with illy-concealed smiles, await the time of execution. The chief, confident that Mary has carried out her plan, having received no word from her to the contrary, boldly takes his place facing the firing squad. Not a tremor affects him as the captain gives the command: "Ready—aim—fire!"

With a dozen bullets in his body he drops like a log. The Indians laugh merrily at what they consider his clever acting. He is placed on a stretcher and given to his tribe, and still laughing to themselves they march on. When they think they have reached a safe distance from the soldiers they draw back the blanket which covers their chief, and then, for the first time, they learn that he is dead.

KEYSTONE

THE AMBITIOUS BUTLER (Oct. 21).—Old man Harding has a palatial residence, keeping a number of servants, including a French butler and chef. He is called away one day, expecting to be gone for several weeks, and the ambitious butler unfolds a plan to the chef by which he hopes to marry a wealthy girl. A widow and her daughter have just taken a house nearby, and the butler sends the chef with a note inviting them to dinner, signed with the name of a fictitious count. The women accept the invitation, and the butler arrays himself in the frock coat of his master and prepares to receive them. He secures the co-operation of the other servants, whom he has promised to reward handsomely if he wins the rich girl's hand.

Everything goes well until the bogus count begins to think he is really a great man, and his arrogance towards the chef arouses that worthy's ire, and he decides to spoil the butler's plan. He gets one of the servants to attire himself in another suit of their master, and he comes upon the scene. Much comedy results and a screaming duel is fought with table knives. Into the midst of this melee Harding comes home, and the crestfallen servants are discharged. The amazed women are horrified to think they have been dining with their neighbor's servants.

On the same reel:

THE FLIRTING HUSBAND.—Mrs. Smith is married to a man who is such an inveterate flirt that he not only causes continual annoyance to his wife, but is in danger of being beaten by the husbands and sweethearts of the women he annoys. After Smith has made himself obnoxious to a couple of his wife's friends, whom he has not met before, they decide to lay a trap for him and teach him a lesson.

They flirt with him deliberately, and go to the park with him. Here one manages to make her escape, and runs back to Mrs. Smith. The other makes a fool out of him, and finally gets him to play "Blind man's buff" and ties a handkerchief over his eyes. As he is groping about for his fair companion Mrs. Smith slips into his arms. He tears the handkerchief from his eyes and faces the music. When the husband of Mrs. Smith's friend gets through with him she takes him in hand and he is made to see the error of his ways.

SOLAX

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING (Oct. 23).—Old Joel Smith is charged with murder in the first degree. At the trial he pleads in opposition to his own lawyers. He explains that he is now too old to be of any assistance to his widowed daughter and his grandchildren, who are dependent on him for support. He says he prefers death to a life of poverty and wretchedness. In telling the judge and jury his pathetic story, which is shown on the screen—old Joel betrays a love of his grandchildren and his fellow laborers that is poignant with pathos. He tells how he had been sent by the men to tell the boss that they were dissatisfied. Although Joel was a favorite with the boss, his representations, while listened to with respect, were productive of nothing. His employer simply said, that if he raised salaries to meet the present "high cost of living" he would be compelled to close up shop.

When they receive the answer from the boss, the men vote to strike—much against Joel's advice. Much as he liked his boss, however, Joel is with the majority and walks out with his fellows. A long period of lean days ensue. Joel's grandchildren and widowed daughter are starving. He is too proud to beg. He goes to the headquarters of the strikers and finds them all drinking and carousing. This is too much for Joel. He announces his intention of going back to work. One of the ironworkers calls him a coward. All of the old man's pent-up anger comes to the surface, and before he knows it, he has killed the insulter. The jury weeps at the old man's pathetic story—they cannot find heart to convict him.

THE IDOL WORSHIPPER (Oct. 25).—Maud Merriwell is a charming girl, but fond of romantic novels. She disgusts her father with her sentimentality, especially when the old gentleman has his ankle broken and is forced to remain home in a wheeled chair.

One afternoon he is sitting inside by his library window, Maud and Tom Harland, a fine young chap, sitting on the porch outside. They think the old gentleman is asleep, and Tom proposes to Maud for the hundredth time.

She refuses him, declaring that "No man but a hero can win my hand."

Tom is disgusted, and walks away, but gets a signal from the old gentleman to come inside. He does so, and the father proposes a plan to make a hero out of him. This is to fill about six coal buckets with leaves and set fire to them—right there in the library. Then Tom can rush in and save his life. Tom agrees, thinking it will be a good joke to play on Maud. The old gentleman follows out the plan.

Meanwhile, Tom walks outside, sees Maud entertaining a crowd of girls, and so goes into the garden to smoke his pipe and await the signal.

The smoke is rushing out of the window now; the girls see it and scream with fright. Maud and the rest of them are transfixed to the spot with horror. Maud strikes a romantic attitude and cries out: "I swear that I will marry the man who saves my father's life."

She naturally expects Tom to be on the job, but it so happens that the Chinese laundryman is coming up the walk with a bundle of wash on his back. The girls see him, but Maud has fainted. Tom rushes up, and sees his sweetheart fainting. This frightens him more than the smoke, which he knows is a fake fire. So he stays with her chafing her wrists and kissing her. The girls force the Chinaman into the window of the smoking room.

The next scene shows the Chinaman trying to rescue old Mr. Merriwell, who resolutely resists all attempts to rescue him. He is in his wheeled chair and he has a great combat with the Chinaman. At last the Chinaman pulls him out on the porch. Maud has revived and the girls tease her about her vow. Tom hears it and tells her father, and they secretly determine to teach her a lesson. Tom goes to the Chinaman, gives him five dollars and offers him five more if he will obey orders. Then Maud's father tells her that to save the family's name and honor she must marry the Chinaman. The girls have been tipped off, and they all back him up. Tom pretends to be a heroic martyr. Maud is frantic, but the girls hurry upstairs and make her pack her suit case. Tom sends for a minister, in his automobile, and the man arrives shortly, very mystified.

Tom and Mr. Merriwell dress the Chinaman in an old frock coat, with silk hat, etc. Tom sits down at the piano in the library to play the wedding march in ragtime, while the girls bring Maud in, weeping and sobbing. The poor chink is led in (by the chauffeur) frightened to death.

At the last instant Mr. Merriwell rolls in on his wheeled chair, leading the minister. This is too much for Maud and she throws herself on Tom's bosom. That young man slips the chink his final five, and the laundryman dives out of the window to escape from the white devils. The minister, bewildered at the fuss, has sense enough to marry the two, and they kiss everybody, good-bye—Tom kissing the bridesmaids—and dash out to his automobile, throw in the suit cases, climb in and speed away.

CHAUFFEUR'S COMPLETE OUTFIT SACRIFICED. Consisting elegant mink fur lined coat, Persian lamb collar, $35; pair of elegant bear robes $15 each, raccoon cap $5, pair of fur gloves $4, pair of goggles 50c., 1 pair leather leggins $3.50. Will sell separately or the lot, all new, never worn; original price $225.

G. CHASE, 118 East 28th St., New York.

FILM SALESMAN—Experienced Film Salesman desires position. Salary and Commission. Specialty Features, etc. Address E. S., c/o Moving Picture News.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING
PHOTO
ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 1817 1818 CHELSEA

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN

Or THE YELLOW PERIL

A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.

Exclusive Territory

NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD

YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Numher, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST

The Cleveland Leader

Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.

We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.

Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 22nd

"THE HOMECOMING"

An intensely interesting drama which develops one of the strongest dramatic situations ever seen in a photoplay. The sort of scene they try to encore.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24th

"MAKING UNCLE JEALOUS"

Featuring the inimitable Alec B. Francis as "Uncle". Full of deep, lasting, comfortable humor of his own incomparable creating.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 27th

"GONTRAN'S LOVE STRATAGEM"

Another of that funny Paris artist's exploits. On the same reel

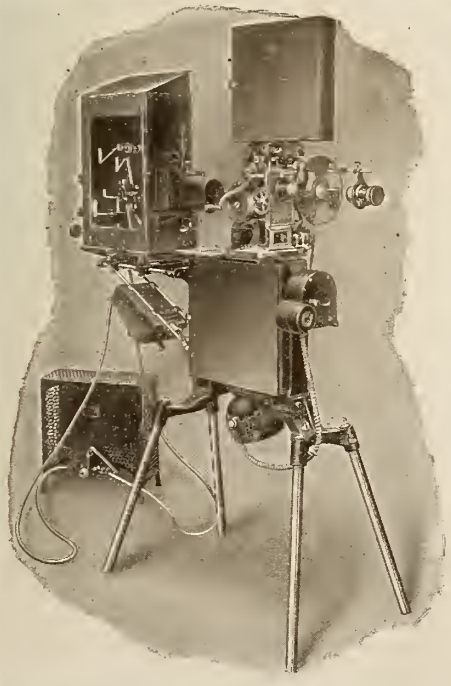
"BRUSIA"

A journey via cinematograph through an Asiatic Turkey town of renown.

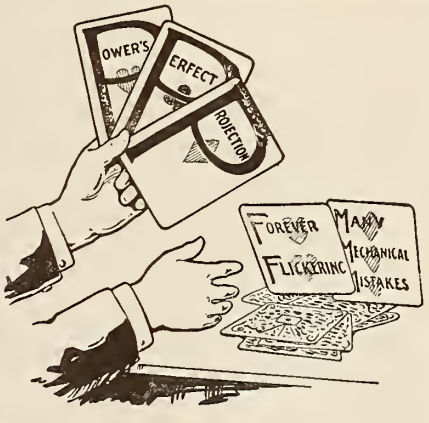
ECLAIR FILM COMPANY, 225 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



3 OF A KIND WHICH MAKE POWER'S 6A FAMOUS



They accomplish the greatest virtue of all:—clear, steady, flickerless pictures. "POWER" has developed projection to absolute perfection, and thrown into the discard forever, the mechanical drawbacks of the past.

There's the hand for you, Mr. Exhibitor! With it, you will draw to a full house, AND KEEP IT FULL, TOO.

A word about lenses. We have given this subject years of study, and are convinced that our machines are equipped with the very best the market affords; they are subjected to the most rigid test before leaving factory. All users of our machines should insist on these lenses which bear our name.

A world-wide public knows and trusts Power's Cameragraph. The result is big business, which is keeping the largest factory of its kind in the world working day and night.

The trade and big users have "got us right." Let us put YOU right, with a Power's 6A.

Catalogue D gives full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
90 Gold Street, New York City

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

YOU CANNOT EVADE

RECOGNIZING THE MERITS OF

The Vengeance of Egypt

ITS MIGHTY REALISM WILL HOLD AUDIENCES
IN A HYPNOTISM OF ATTENTION

STATE RIGHTS

3 REELS

HERALDS——POSTERS, 1, 3 and 6 SHEET

This is the first advertisement of this film. Wire to-day and you will beat out the other fellow. If you don't, you take chances. Play safe—wire now, NOW.

A trail of tragedy that followed the stealing of a ring from an Egyptian mummy. The relentless avenger that brings death by plague, the strangler, poison, bullet, in aeroplane and automobile. Covering a period of 115 years it traces the grim course of a curse that knew only one end.

Gaumont

Copyright protects all our films. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted

GAUMONT CO., Flushing, N.Y.

GAUMONT

OCT 24 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 16

OCTOBER 19
1912

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
OCT 25 1912
PERIODICAL

Scene from
"THE STARBUCKS"
American Release November 9th.

PRICE
TEN CENTS

THE MIRACLE

HAS ARRIVED

Brought to us by a Special Messenger from the Continental Kunstfilm of Berlin.

All and only authorized versions of this Marvelous Photoplay must bear this copyright trade mark

Have 4,200 feet length and bear our name.

NEW YORK FILM CO.

12 Union Square, New York

EASTMAN motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MIATT PROCURES PATENTS

1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law

Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive.
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT FORD STERLING
MABEL NORMAND FRED MACE

Supported by a Strong Company

"The Grocery Clerk's Romance"

and

"At Coney Island"

A Split Reel, Released MONDAY, OCTOBER 28

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"How Shorty Kept His Word"

Thrilling Story, with Sensational Scenes

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

LITIGATION ENDS

BISON vs. UNIVERSAL

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

NOW PRESENTS

"KAY-BEE" FILMS

Spectacular, Historical and Dramatic, Military, Frontier and Pioneer subjects all in TWO REEL features released regularly every Friday.

Every picture a headliner. "Kay-Bee" stands for Kessel and Baumann and Kessel and Baumann stands for Quality.

WHO WINS?

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY has settled its litigation with Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the terms of which are a matter of great satisfaction to New York Motion Picture Company.

Owing to the fact that the Universal Company persisted in selling films under the name of "Bison," and threatened to sell films under the name "101 Bison," which were not made by the New York Motion Picture Company, confusion resulted, and New York Motion Picture Company has decided to discontinue the use of that name, and to make films of the well-known Kessel and Baumann quality under the name "KAY-BEE" FILMS, in order that the public might again know that our trade mark was a guarantee of super quality, and free from imitation.

At this psychological moment the Universal Company made the startling offer to cease all litigation and harassing tactics, if we would give to that Company our right to use the name "Bison" and "101 Bison," and would also pay to them a sum of money in liquidation of a cash indebtedness which they claimed.

New York Motion Picture Company never doubted for a moment that it would obtain a complete victory over the Universal Company in all litigation commenced by that company, as, in fact, it has so far done.

The Universal Company in all litigation claimed title to all of the valuable properties of New York Motion Picture Company, and sought to obtain them, and also restrain Messrs. Kessel and Baumann and their associates from employing their abilities in the motion picture field in competition with Universal Company.

The settlement, therefore, reduces itself to this: That New York Motion Picture Company GIVES THE UNIVERSAL COMPANY SOMETHING THAT IT DID NOT WANT, the "Bison" trade name.

In addition to this, the cash paid by the New York Motion Picture Company to Universal Company is less than the cost of litigation would be.

New York Motion Picture Company receives in return the termination of all litigation and harassment of the Universal Company, all of its vast properties in California and in New York City, and the undisputed right TO EMPLOY THE TALENTS OF MESSRS. A. KESSEL, JR., CHAS. O. BAUMANN, FRED J. BALSHOFER, THOS. H. INCE, Director, CHAS. KESSEL and "DOC" C. A. WILLAT, and their complete staff of artists, in turning out the best pictures in the world, UNDER THE NAME OF "KAY-BEE" Films.

New York Motion Picture COMPANY presents to Universal Company ten feet OF TITLE, and continues to release nine hundred and ninety feet of pictures of Kessel and Baumann combination quality.

WHO WINS?

New York Motion Picture Co., 150 E. 14th St., New York City

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

CONTINUES CONTRACT WITH

MILLER BROS. WILD WEST SHOW

Indefinitely; using their entire equipment and aggregation of 300 cowboys and cowgirls, 200 Indians, 600 horses, steers, bison, etc., which they have used in the past year in making and producing the World's Famous Features, under the name of "101" Bison Films, which name we have given to the Universal Film Company, and which we will discontinue after the release of Friday, October 25th, and begin with the new trade mark, under the name of "KAY-BEE" Films for the New York Motion Picture Company, and Broncho Films for the Broncho Motion Picture Company exclusively, and for no other concerns, produced under the direction of Thos. H. Ince, the greatest Motion Picture Director in the World.

After October 25th the name will be "KAY-BEE" Films, with better and bigger features than heretofore.

OUR LAST "101" BISON RELEASE IS

"THE COLONEL'S WARD"

2,000 Ft. IN TWO REELS 2,000 Ft.

Released Friday, October 25

A Stupendous Pioneer and Military Production

Blood-Stirring Battles
Superb
Dramatic Rendition
Thrilling Situations

HORDES OF INDIANS
TROOPS OF SOLDIERS

A Hundred Scenes

INCLUDING

A Military Execution
The Tragic Death of the Indian Girl
The Plot to Save the Doomed Chief
The Indian Uprising
An Impressive Court Martial

$50.00 WE ARE IN THE MARKET FOR SCENARIOS. THE MINIMUM PRICE PAID WILL BE $50.00. WE WANT STIRRING FRONTIER, PIONEER, MILITARY STORIES IN ONE AND TWO REELS. IF YOUR SCENARIO IS NOT WORTH AT LEAST $50.00 DON'T SEND IT IN

Address: T. H. INCE, Director, 1719 Allesandro St., Los Angeles

WHO WINS?

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., Sole Agents for U. S. and Canada

ECLAIR

BEGINNING FOUR RELEASES A WEEK

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29th

"ROSIE"

An animated pictorial novel of love and its jealousies. Cupid maroons the pair on an island.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31st

"THE TRANSGRESSION OF DEACON JONES"

A comedy object lesson which proves that the advance of science must eventually eradicate sin and crime.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1st—"The Best Split Reel Released"

"THE HOUSE FLY"

A wonderful showing of humankind's most deadly menace. As a preachment "It Swats the Fly" all right. And on the same reel

"THE MENDER, THE PIPE AND THE VASE"

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 3rd

"AUNT BRIDGET"

A little masterpiece of one reel production. Every element perfect.

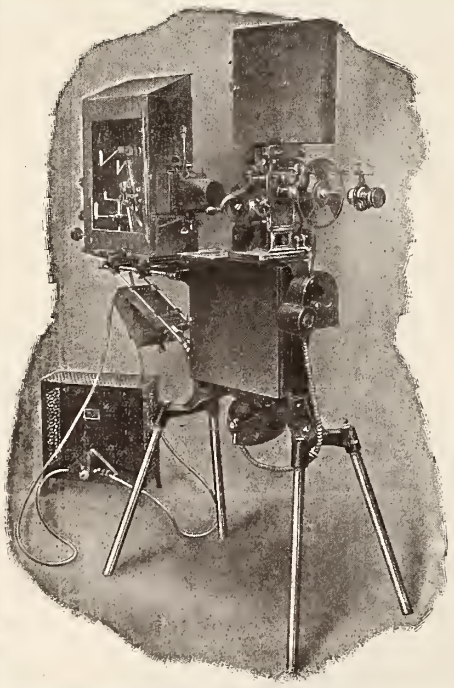
ECLAIR FILM COMPANY, 225 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

ECLAIR FILMS PARIS

STANDARD FILMS

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



CAUSE AND EFFECT POWER'S 6A GETS THE MONEY

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has staying power—and satisfies both operators and patrons alike. Where this is accomplished, success is assured and a full cash drawer results.

In our new equipment No. 6A we have added the following improvements:

ARC LAMP: 100 Amp. capacity, 14 adjustments, takes ¾" carbons, 6" lower, 12" upper.

LAMP HOUSE: Excellent ventilation, large and roomy with door each side, lamp more accessible.

STAND: Made of iron, 14" lower magazine built in.

Our new patented Loop Setter, costing but $10.00 additional, resets the lower loop automatically, doing away with the dark screen and interrupted pictures.

These CAUSES make POWER'S better than ever, and the EFFECT is a perfect machine in every particular.

It means good money to you, Mr. Showman.

Let us send you catalogue D giving full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

90 GOLD STREET, NEW YORK

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

© CLB259639

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI October 19, 1912 Number 16

EDUCATIONAL FILMS

AS showing the tendency of the day along educational lines we want to urge every manufacturer in the industry to follow suit along the lines I want to call special attention to. The MOVING PICTURE NEWS has always advocated the uplift of the motion picture in every respect, and when I look back and note the great advance that has been made in this work of education I feel I have done some little to help the present-day results.

Some few years ago it was my privilege to be commissioned to find a few actors to take special part in a play then being produced on the top of a building downtown. I thought it was an easy task, so walking up the theatrical district on Broadway I accosted an actor and asked if he would like a position for a week or so to play some parts. He very condescendingly said: "Lead me to it, my boy, that's what I want." I told him that I wanted about four males and three females to take prominent positions and about a dozen more for minor parts. He called over to him two of his lady acquaintances with a remark, "Hello, girlies, want some money?" They replied they did. He said, "Well, here is a man who wants to give us some," and turning to me said, "Now what is it you want?" I said, "I want you to pose for moving pictures," and, if a moving picture camera had been around the neighborhood at that time, and could have photographed the air of utter disgust and contempt on the faces of those people, it would be an education to those of the present day. I remember the vilification I got for asking that question of them, and the difference today is such that hundreds of actors now try to eke out their existence by posing in moving pictures. Then they considered it a disgrace, today they consider it an honor to pose before the cinematograph camera, thus showing the trend of the educational film whether of comedy, drama, or historical interest.

Passing over the actor, I want to show the trend of educationalism. A prominent Doctor of Philosophy in New York City made a statement to me this week that took me a little by surprise. He said: "I want to tell you that in a few years, probably three or four, there will not be a school or an educational institution without its fully equipped projection booth with a specially appointed operator, or an electrician in charge thereof, to show both stereopticon and cinematograph views, and that no school of any note will be fully equipped without these adjuncts to the progress of the world." His remarks regarding the attitude of the NEWS were very flattering. He asked me to inform my readers that the action taken had the full support and sympathy of every true-minded educational worker in the country, and that it was becoming a topic of burning interest as how best to reach the masses. He said even the classes want teaching manners, and conventionalities, and he thought that the moving picture would teach them both, and that they might well take example from their humbler brethren.

A further prediction he made was to the effect that, while the microscopic objects were shown on the film in several instances, in a little while no bacteriological laboratory would be fully equipped without its tank, microscope and moving picture machine, to take bacteria in evolution, and then project it on the screen for the benefit of students now and for posterity. His only objections to the films he sees at the moving picture shows today, are that they are so mediocre and poor compared to the great things that might be obtained from them. Referring to some historical, or so-called historical films, he said: "The director who posed those ought to take lessons in English history, study costumes and customs, and the firearms or warlike weapons of the date supposed to be depicted." He suggested that historians of the various colleges should be asked to give an opinion upon some of the film manufactured, and advice as to the proper staging and effects to make it complete. Is this suggestion worth anything to our manufacturers?

Another point of importance showing the trend of thought, is an address by the Hon. E. J. Henning of the Moose Institute, delivered at Anderson, Indiana, during August, specially noting the following:

> I think you can teach more geography, you can teach more of history in an hour, by properly selected moving pictures, than you can by months of dry reading in the schoolroom. We propose to have modern methods. One of our first school appliances will be a moving picture equipment, where you can throw upon the screen for very little money, the actual likeness of animals of foreign countries, the people as they walk in their streets, and as they work in their shops in any of the countries of the world. And when the boys and the girls see those geographical pictures of the Hindu, worshipping over in Hindustan, the Chinaman working in the tea fields of China, the customs and activities of the people of the world, they will never forget it; it will be a more perfect lesson in geography, it will be a more perfect lesson in natural history than all the lessons they could learn in months and months of reading.

After reading the above, I felt that I was not alone in my prophecy regarding the future of Cinematography, and am pleased to note the vast progress the Edison studio is making along the line of educational films. It will take too long to write what I desire for this week, so postpone my remarks regarding what they are doing with a complete list of subjects up-to-date until the next issue.

Alfred H. Saunders.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

We herewith present to our readers two prominent workers in New York, who are going to make the convention of July 7, 1913, one of the greatest successes in the Cinematograph industry, Mr. Sam Trigger, the president of the New York State League, and we have pleasure in introducing him to you so that he can make his bow. Sidney Ascher also makes his bow to you, and of him we want to say he is one of the most energetic live-wire electric sort of workers it is possible to find. It was through his instigated principles that the New York State

SAM TRIGGER

SIDNEY ASCHER

League is in such a good condition. Out of chaos he brought order in New York City, and but for him we fully believe there would have been no organization as it stands today, and therefore we give him all the honor due to him. In the hands of these two men with the help of the committees around them, success, we feel, is absolutely certain to the great convention at Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7, 1913, and all we ask of our readers is to boost New York 1913.

PLANS FOR CINEMATOGRAPH EXPOSITION PROGRESSING NICELY

Although the committee in charge of the coming Motion Picture Trades Exposition are not saying much we understand their plans are rapidly maturing and everything seems to point to its being a world beating success.

The prize of $50.00 offered by the committee for the best three-sheet drawing pertaining to the motion picture arts is making a big hit with the students of the several art schools in New York. The contest is, however, not limited to New Yorkers.

Several other promoters of shows and expositions have been to see the Exhibitors Committee in the endeavor to handle this exposition, but the committee remain firm in their intention of handling it themselves and selling space at a minimum amount.

ERRATUM

In our last week's issue by a blunder of the compositor the title of the Majestic story was changed from "The Simple Life" to "The Single Men," and if our readers will kindly make this correction in their copies giving the proper title of the Majestic release as "The Simple Life" released October 13th they will be doing us a favor.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH IN THE SCHOOLS

Powers No. 6-A has been installed by Williams, Brown & Earle of Philadelphia, in New Jersey School for the Deaf, and a No. 6 in the Venice Union High School, Venice, California.

"THE MIRACLE"

A version of "The Miracle" which has found its way to America under the wing of the New York Film Company is perhaps the most startling production in film that we have had. The story of the beautiful nun Beatrix is one that touches every heart among us. It is allegorical in a sense, but it is at the same time so brutally true to life that it holds us spellbound. The story of the sweet girl nun, which, like the flower with the honeyed heart attracted the bee, whose eyes falling upon the handsome young knight caused the physical being to reach forth for its mate. And then after a brief term of intoxication the disillusionment comes. One after another events fall thick and fast until she at last finds her way back to the peaceful seclusion of the convent, and the Virgin, who in pity has stepped from her niche above the altar to take the place of, and continue the work of the wayward nun, gives up again the keys and the raiment of Sister Beatrix and dissolves into the image in its place above the altar.

The ancient legend upon which the story of "The Miracle" is based may be found among the "Sieben Legenden" of Gottfried Keller, and is prefaced by the following text from the fifty-fifth Psalm, sixth verse: "Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then I would fly away and be at rest."

The commencement of the legend is as follows: "A cloister lay high up on a mountain-side, and its walls shone afar over the surrounding country. Within it were many women—some beautiful, some ill-favored—all of whom served the Lord and the Holy Virgin according to a strict discipline.

The most beautiful of the sisters was Beatrix, the sacristan of the cloister. Of queenly form she moved from choir to altar performing her duties. She kept the sacristy in order, and at the break of day and again when the shadows of evening began to fall, she tolled the cloister bell.

"But ever and again she turned her wistful eye from the billowy blue of the sky upon the passing gleam of weapons or listened to the huntsman's horn from the neighboring wood and the joyous calls of the men, and a great longing to see the world filled her bosom.

"When at last she was no longer able to restrain the desire of her heart, she arose one moonlit night in June, put strong shoes upon her feet, and, ready for departure, approached the altar. 'I have served thee faithfully for many a year,' thus spake she to the Virgin, 'but take now these keys from my hands, for I am unable longer to repress the yearning of my heart.'"

And so it was in the original story that the beautiful nun went out into the world. The picture play has laid the first scene in the chapel of the monastery. An immense crowd of people kneel about the sacred image of the Madonna, from which it is said a miraculous power radiates.

Among the pilgrims is to be found a handsome young knight whom Beatrix, who is also there, cannot help observing with admiration. The Evil Spirit whispering in her ear moves her to follow the knight as far as the door of the cloister; but here her good genius awaits her and reminds her of her duty.

Again when the young knight, among a number of others, returning from the chase is regaled in the cloister court, the eyes of the beautiful nun and those of the knight meet, Beatrix flees, consumed with red blushes. The knight rising quickly followed her, and in the shades of the cloister garden he swears to her, with ardent words, his love.

When night has come she prays to the Virgin for forgiveness for the sin committed in thought. But the young knight who had crept in, steps forth from a hiding-place and ensnares the nun with amorous words. The keys and her nun's garment drop, and the knight drags the feebly resisting woman with him out of the cloister to his steed, which has been secreted nearby, and flees with her to his castle.

When it comes time for Beatrix to be relieved from service, a miracle occurs; the Madonna to prevent the discovery of the desertion of duty by the nun steps from her niche above the altar and takes the place of the wayward one.

Then comes the troublous story of the nun's experience of the world. There are days of intoxication, then days of bitterest sadness when the knight tiring of her forsakes her for another, and then the kidnapping of Beatrix by the robber band. There is the wooing and winning of the love of Beatrix by the robber chieftain, the encounter in subterranean passages between the robber band and the baron's cavalcade, the killing of the baron, the death of the robber chieftain, and, after all the worldly conflict, the return of the nun to the cloister, the retiring of the Virgin to her niche again.

This picture was produced by the Continental Kunstfilm Company, of Berlin, Germany. It was brought to this country by M. Rakow, a special messenger of the foreign concern, turned over to the New York Film Co., of 12 Union Square, and was exhibited for the benefit of the press at the Fourteenth Street Theatre.

UNIVERSAL AND N. Y. FILM CO.'S STATEMENT

In the making of the offer of settlement by Mr. Charles O. Baumann for the New York Motion Picture Company, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company won an unqualified victory in regard to the absolute sole right to the use of the names "Bison" and "101 Bison."

After Justice Delaney had rendered his decision in the matter of the New York Motion Picture Company against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it was apparent that the Universal must eventually triumph in the matter of securing the exclusive privilege of using the names of the two brands mentioned above.

Overtures were made by the New York Motion Picture Company to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the discontinuance of the litigation pending, and an amicable settlement of the entire matter.

This resulted in the New York Motion Picture Company assigning all its rights, title and interests in and to the trademarks, trade-names and copyrights of Bison and 101 Bison in which assignment all of the stockholders, officers and directors of the New York Motion Picture Company joined.

The terms of the assignment called for the return of all stocks and bonds of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company issued to the New York Motion Picture Company valued at nearly half a million dollars. In addition thereto, a cash sum of several thousand dollars was turned over to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company by the New York Motion Picture Company as damages for the litigation incurred and the loss of sales by reason thereof.

After October 26th it will be impossible for any exchanges other than those handling the Universal releases to supply Bison or 101 Bison pictures.

Considering the spirit of the litigation brought about by the New York Motion Picture Company and their overtures of assignment, and the subsequent terms of agreement, it is an unqualified victory for the Universal.

A representative of the Moving Picture News called on Messrs. Kessel and Baumann referring to the statement. They said they have nothing further to say other than to refer all interested parties to the advertisement containing their statement, which appears on pages 4 and 5. They are more than satisfied that the litigation has come to an end, at the same time wishing their opponents the best of luck and success.

CAPTAIN BEN'S YARN
Majestic release October 20th.

SCENE FROM "MAKING AN AMERICAN CITIZEN"
Solax Release.

MAKING AN AMERICAN CITIZEN

Solax, October 30

A husband and wife, belonging to the most ignorant and lowest class of peasantry, where the husband is lord and master and the wife his servile slave, emigrate to the United States. On landing in New York, the husband loads a huge bundle on the back of his wife, and, carrying nothing but a rough walking-stick himself, starts to pass through the Battery, walking behind his wife, who is bent nearly double with the weight of the bundle. Soon a crowd gathers around them, some laughing, jeering, others indignant and threatening, until, suddenly, a huge American pushes his way through crowd, stops wife, takes bundle off her back, lays huge hand on shoulder of husband, bending him nearly double, picks up bundle, places on his back, and orders him to march on.

This is the husband's first lesson in Americanism. Other lessons follow, in which the husband is taught, with an emphasis he cannot doubt, American ways and manners, until after he has been arrested and sent to jail for beating his wife, he becomes thoroughly convinced that Old World methods will not do in this strange New World, and decides to become an American in spirit and in manners.

A transformation is also worked in the character and spirits of the wife. Her animal-like patience and servile docility gradually give place to a spirit of independence, until, at last, she vigorously resents the brutality of her husband and asserts her rights as an American woman.

The scenario closes with husband and wife working harmoniously together, each doing his or her proper share of the work.

Shenandoah, Pa.—The contract has been let for a new theatre in this city, the Arcade Theatre.

Dallas, Tex.—The Mutual Film Corporation; capital, $5,000. Incorporators: J. D. Wheelan, E. T. Porter and C. B. Peterson.

BULL MOOSE FILMS GO BIGGER THAN EVER

Unfortunate as the recent accident to the ex-President was, it has made a tremendous boom in the film business of the General Film Publicity and Sales Co., for now the demand upon them for Bull Moose films is so great that it means almost twenty-four hours in the day to keep on the job with an adequate supply.

The accompanying cut is a scene taken from one of the films in which figure Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Geo. Roosevelt, Col. Cecil Lyons, of Texas, and Dr. Terrill, the surgeon who first attended the wounded ex-President.

A tremendous value attaches to the Roosevelt films apart from the fact that they are entertaining; they are valuable accessories to the historical records of our country. And should Col. Theodore Roosevelt have lost his life at the hands of the insane assassin, their value would have tripled itself. In that event no means within the power of man could have given to the country the life likeness of one of our greatest men, such as has been given it by the General Film Publicity and Sales Co. in their series of Bull Moose films.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

American

"One-two-three, or The Story of a Wager" is somewhat on the farce order, and treated as such is fairly amusing.

"The Wooers of Mountain Kate" as a drama is very fair, and has the unusual characteristic of having an unhappy ending.

Thanhouser

"The Woman in White" in two parts, adapted from the novel of the same name, written by Wilkie Collins, is a triumph for Miss Marguerite Snow. In this story she plays a double role of singular difficulty. The entire production may rightfully be termed a triumph.

"In a Garden" is one of the sweetest, most delicately beautiful productions that has appeared in films, and is splendidly adapted for child audiences as well as for theatres.

Majestic

"All for Jim" has fine dramatic possibilities which have been well carried out by Mabel Trunelle and Herbert Prior.

"Love and War" is a story of Civil War days, and is one of the strongest of Majestic's recent releases.

Solax

"The Gold Brick" is intended for comedy, but is not strong.

Pathe

"Passing Gypsies" is particularly gripping. The triumph of the better nature of the gypsy girl is something to be remembered.

Gaumont

"Beethoven" as an artistic production is not to be questioned. As a portrayal, however, of the habits and character of the great master-musician it lacks authenticity. The real Beethoven, though beautiful in character, was extremely untidy in his habits, made his haunts when not with his Viennese friend in plain, ill-furnished rooms, was gruff of speech and rugged in appearance and manner.

"The Legend of Cagliostro" is a most remarkable presentation, and meritorious in every way so far as the writer knows.

Reliance

"The Organ Grinder's Ward" is not quite up to the mark as a production. Reliance can do better.

Lubin

"The Cringer" has no particularly startling feature, but gets over just the same.

Edison

"Uncle Mun and the Minister" is a farce comedy of the old sort, not particularly commendable, but of the kind that makes the ordinary individual laugh.

Keystone

"The Beating He Needed" is the story of a college boy, who returning to his home a perfect "Sis," was sent West by his father to become a man, and who, eventually, had to be hammered into shape by his father. The comedy is fair.

Bison "101"

"The Vengeance of Fate" in two reels is a telling production—full of thrills and dramatic situations. It is quite out of the ordinary.

Eclair

"The Old Professor" is a good story, and is strong as a production. The subject has been handled exceptionally well.

Vitagraph

"As You Like It" in three reels is a production to be remembered, with Rose Coglan as Rosalind, and Maurice Costello as Orlando. The portrayal of the Seven Ages of Man recited at the Duke's banquet is a specially interesting feature of the production.

Powers

"On the Danger Line" is one of Powers' best. As a drama this film stands well to the front.

Great Northern

"I Am Going Out For a Shave" is real good fun, and although such happenings never did or could occur in real life, it makes you laugh until your sides split.

Broncho

"An Indian Legend" is unique and very acceptable.

Kinemacolor

"The Husband's Story" is a well-played drama wherein the wonderful possibilities of Kinemacolor are shown to remarkable advantage.

"Peep into Nature" presents a most interesting series of scenes on the Cawston Ostrich Farm in California.

"Many Beach Scenes" is a series of most alluring scenes at the bathing beach New South Wales, Australia. It is probably the finest of the kind that has ever been shown.

"Cairo, Egypt" is most interesting. This film is another triumph for Kinemacolor. The sunset scene beggars description.

THE WEEKLIES

Pathe No. 43

Bishop Farrelly is accorded a warm reception on his return from the Vatican at Cleveland, Ohio.

The Sioux Indians exhibit their products at an agricultural fair at Poplar, Mont.

The German Kaiser visits Switzerland to witness the Swiss military tactics.

A beautiful flower parade is a feature of the Atchison Corn Carnival.

Governor Dix attends the unveiling of the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument at Albany, N. Y.

The Duke of Lancaster, who is also King of England, visits Lancaster. It is fifty-one years since a reigning monarch made a similar visit.

Col. Cornelius Vanderbilt visits the aviation field and flies with George Beatty at Hempstead, L. I.

The Sioux Indian Celebration brings out the entire tribe at Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.

Admiral Osterhaus, commanding the fleet mobilized in the Hudson, calls on Mayor Gaynor at the City Hall.

Gaumont Weekly No. 32

Annual foot race in Paris brings out many contestants.

Steamer Nantucket which met disaster at Baltimore is brought to the surface.

Emerson Institution in Brooklyn celebrates century and a quarter of progress.

The Czar and Imperial Family at the Centenary Celebration of the Battle of Borodino at Moscow.

Annette Kellermann up a tree. Views of the famous diving Venus at her country home near Baltimore.

Twenty-two cars go over an embankment at Calvert, Texas.

New York Fire Department gives exhibition.

French Modistes give us first samples of coats and front sheathed gowns. USB: the army hat and how Paris is adopting it.

New England city receives Governor Foss at its annual Agricultural Exposition.

This is not Roosevelt, but John M. Keyes, giving a moving picture cartoon of third-term candidate.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 32

Scenes aboard the United States Battleship Connecticut during the great Naval Review held at New York, October, 1912.

Interesting competition at New Milden, England, to decide the Archery Championship.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt enjoys his first flight in an aeroplane at the Hempstead Plains Aviation Field, Garden City, Long Island.

The last flower parade of the season an unusual procession.

The last classic of the season won by Mr. August Belmont's "Tracery."

American Life Saving Society gives an exhibition of life saving.

Oscar Straus, the Progressive nominee for governor of the State of New York.

The President of Peru, Augusto B. Lequito, reviews the Peruvian Army from the Government Palace, founded in 1535, A.D., by Pizarro.

W. R. Applegarth breaks the record for the 200-yard dash at the meeting of the South London Clubs.

The "Yama, Yama Girl" (Bessie McCoy) and her husband, Richard Harding Davis, at their summer home, Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

"KINEMACOLOR IN THE TRAVEL FIELD"

Another field of competition recently entered into by President Henry J. Brock, of the Kinemacolor Company, is that of the illustrated travel talk, to which he feels that the wonderful process of motion pictures in the colors of nature is better fitted than anything before discovered.

MR. LAWRENCE GRANT BY THE YELLOWSTONE TERRACED POOLS

The general name of the new venture is "Travel by Kinemacolor" and the beauty spots of the world will be searched for by the corps of experts maintained by the company, as well as by special expeditions directed by Mr. Lawrence Grant, who will be the star speaker in the Travel department—Mr. Brock feels that he is the equal of any man in the field, and with perfect confidence enters him in the lists to bid for popular favor. On Monday evening, October 21st, Tremont Temple, Boston, Lawrence Grant will have his premier performance in the topic of "Yellowstone National Park and Crow Indian Celebrations."

Mr. Grant is well known in England as a speaker of topics pertaining to travel, and it was while in the United States making up a series of talks to be called "America Through my Monocle," that arrangements were made for several Kinemacolor experts to accompany him on his tour of the wonderlands of the West. Heretofore Mr. Grant has relied simply on his brilliancy of word painting and ability to visualize far off lands to his audience without any such accessory as pictures. He was never satisfied with painted slides, or the unreal black-and-white pictures, but in Kinemacolor he saw the opportunity of a lifetime, and so adopted it as a means to actually carry his hearers with him through all his wanderings.

The Yellowstone, according to announcements, has never before been treated with such attention—it took Mr. Grant and the color-film experts three months to make the series, the rest of the past year having been devoted to the Grand Canyon of Colorado and Glacier National Park, which will be shown in later presentations.

Mr. Grant was made a member of one of the chief tribes of the Crow Indians, and when this honor was bestowed on him, he was christened "Striped Elk" by the Council of Chiefs. But this was not the name they called him—by common consent, on account of the little gold-rimmed monocle that seems inseparable from his left eye, he was called "One Eye in Eye." The primitive Americans were so delighted with the bit of glass that he sent through a hurried order to an optician in Salt Lake City, and was so able to present a monocle to each of the high chiefs who had so well aided him in making up the pictures of Indian life, and who had arranged many ancient ceremonials in full costume to be perpetuated in the color camera.

A KINEMACOLOR CAMERA MAN IN THE YELLOWSTONE CANYON

QUEEN ELIZABETH FEATURE

It was gratifying to note, while witnessing Sarah Bernhardt's picture portrayal of above feature film, that some thought had been given to the musical feature of the film. While the music was of a continuing heavy and plaintive nature and severely dramatic, offering very little tension relief in major key movements and unnecessarily repeating the themes used, not creating the variety of music possible, still it proves beyond a question the musical possibilities for the picture, as advocated for some time past by Ernst J. Luz, on the writing staff of this paper. The orchestra is excellent, the instrumentation perfect, considering the number of musicians used, and the cues are taken up with an apparent ease which would show extended experience did we not know differently. Never was an abrupt break necessary into the music to make a segue, the entire music played for each part of picture being as one specially arranged number. This production as a whole is very commendable. Success to Queen Elizabeth and its producers.

While Director J. A. Golden was rehearsing a scene in His Twin Brother, a Crystal comedy, last Saturday, the genuineness of the portrayal nearly resulted disastrously to some of the actors. The scene was where the hero is fighting with several toughs. The fight was so realistic that a citizen, who happened to be passing in his carriage, mistook it for the real thing, and attempted to help Mr. Barnett, who was playing the lead, against the seemingly overwhelming odds. It was only after much persuasion on Mr. Golden's part, that Mr. Barnett's new friend was convinced that the fight was mere by-play for the pictures, and was thus prevented from bestowing upon Mr. Barnett's fellow-actors a most unwelcome horsewhipping.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION No. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

You cannot afford to miss the grand opportunity which is extended to all operators by the M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1, of New York. You are all welcome to hear some excellent news at our next open meeting, Monday, October 21, 1912, at 12 o'clock midnight, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street. Don't forget this date, as it means much to you operators to know the value of your skill. Every human being looks for his benefit and for the benefit of those that depend upon them for their daily bread.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1, of New York, is trying to assist all fellow craftsmen and their gain is your gain; why not help to better your condition, and unite yourself by enlisting in this great army of organized labor. You are ready at all times to protect your country, you should be ready at all times to protect your living, and therefore, if there is principle in you, it must be represented, and the best way is to join hands with us and you will have what is known to be Victory!

Yes, victorious is correct, and now boys, rally 'round the flag of Independence, adopted by those great fathers that sought equality for all, justice to all, and special privilege to no individual. This is the password and motto of the I. M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1 of G. N. Y. Picture machine operators were little thought of in the year 1852, but that year brought a little confusion in other organizations, and in that year the Republican party was formed in opposition to the old Whig party, for it was claimed that the Whigs did not keep up the motto of equality and freedom for all. The men of the new movement placed a man in the field to carry out this motto, and his name to this day carries with it that famous Gettysburg speech. Abraham Lincoln was the man that led that new movement and, as you all know, swept the country from coast to coast in the election of 1860.

In a little less than one year he carried out that motto, "Independence and freedom for all," by signing the proclamation of emancipation. Now, fellow craftsmen, we are on the same point, practically in the same boat as our forefathers stood many years ago.

The I. M. P. M. Operators' Union No. 1 have come together and the proclamation of emancipation was signed to eliminate the white men slaves from the clutches of Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E. And this war will be carried on until a treaty is signed in our favor. It may be possible that some foolish fellows are acting the same way as some of the black slaves acted in 1861 A. D.; when the slaves were given their freedom, some of them went back to the slave-drivers and fought in that army against the men that took them from bondage. This is the very thing that many members of the Branch No. 35 are doing, after fighting five years to get what was due them and to better their condition, they went back to Local No. 35, joined the new branch, went to work for bosses for less salary and are actually fighting against themselves. Fortunately their number is very small and such men as we do not care to have in our organization.

Now, brother operators, I am going to inform you that the Independent Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of New York will hold an open meeting on Monday, October 21, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York City, at 12 o'clock midnight, and I advise you, if you want to join this organization and know all about it, to attend to this meeting for it will mean much to you, and will be your last chance to join at the present entrance fee. After this open meeting the price to join will be $5 00 to all operators whether they belonged to the former auxiliary or not.

Special Announcement

The challenge printed in last week's issue of the M. P. News has not been accepted up to the present time and I have been requested to state that we are anxiously waiting to hear that Local No. 35 will accept.

I also wish to remark that Dick DeCosta cannot be included in this challenge, though he is a member of the new branch No. 35. Proofs were given that he worked in unfair places against the wishes of the I. B. E. W., affiliated with the A. F. of L., and such men we do not class as union.

RALPH KNASTER,
Editor of Chat and Bus. Rep. of I. M. P. M. O. U. No. 1.

QUESTION BOX

By Mr. R. J. Kay

Mr. R. J. Kay;

I am operating a Powers No. 6 and the automatic shutter always drops down in the time that I am running. Kindly advise what to do. S.T.

S. T.—The shoes in the governor are worn or the spring is in bad condition. If you will look these things over you can remedy your trouble.

* * * *

Mr. Kay:

I have a 30-amp. cut-out in my booth for my machine and am thinking about putting in a new adjustable rheostat. Am I allowed to put in larger fuses?

R. M., New York City.

R. M.—Adjustable rheostats are now in use in this city and you can put in or use 40-amp. link fuses. No cartridge fuses are allowed.

* * * *

Editor M. P. News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly inform me as to how to go about securing a position as M. P. operator? I understand operating O. K. Is a license necessary in every city? Who should I see to obtain a license? And where can I find information so as to secure a position?

Thanking you in advance, I am

Yours respectfully,

E. G. HOLDT.

Mr. E. G. Holdt, Pearl River, N. Y.—You must have a license to operate a M. P. machine in New York City, and without a doubt you must have a license to operate a picture machine in all cities. There are a number of small towns and villages in which you could work without a license, but they are few in number. To get a license in New York City you will have to apply to the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity and take an examination as to your ability in operating a machine. About finding work, the field is open to you if you are an A-1 operator, as there is always a job for a competent man.

NOTICE TO OPERATORS

Send in your trouble questions to Mr. R. J. Kay, care Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth street, New York City.

A PAIR OF FOOLS
Crystal Films October 27th.

INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City enforcement as well as the interpretation of the provisions of the recent Amendment to the Law of Copyright, relating specifically to "Motion picture photoplays" and "Motion pictures other than photoplays" noted in our last report, of course rests nominally with the Librarian of Congress and primarily with the Recorder of Copyrights. But, as in all cases of statute law, the amendment can only be a basis for future litigation and final interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States. While in Washington last week we called at the Copyright Office, and are indebted to Register Thorvald Solberg and his Assistant for most courteous treatment, and a lot of valuable and interesting information not otherwise obtainable. Of one thing all concerned may be assured, and that is fair and impartial treatment for all applicants for registration under the present administration of the Copyright Office. In fact, in the absense of pertinent Court decisions to the contrary, the obvious tendency is to give all claimants the benefit of any doubt that may arise as to the exact construction to be put upon the wording of the law.

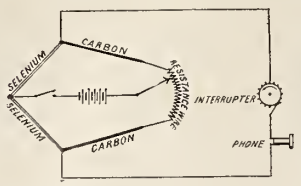
Patent No. 1,037,325, to A. C. Roebuck, of Chicago, Ill, assignor to The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., a corporation of Illinois.

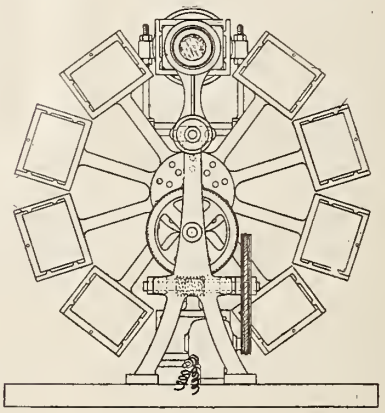
This invention relates to kinetoscopes, and has for its object to provide a simple and efficient film-tensioning mechanism whereby a uniform and extended resilient contact of the lateral pressure member or shoes against the film is attained, with the resulting advantages of an avoidance of uneven wear of the guide ribs of the aperture plate, as well as the liability of damage to the sprocket holes in the film due to excessive tension necessary where short surface contact is had. With such uniform and extended tensioning contact the stoppage of the film in unison with the stoppage of the intermittent sprocket wheel is insured, and any tendency of the teeth of the sprocket wheel to jump the sprocket holes of the film is eliminated. Another advantage of the special construction is that it eliminates accidental stoppages of the exhibition due to the use of spliced films, which under the high stress of short tension contact devices are frequently pulled apart at the splices. The accompanying figure is a rear elevation illustrating the general arrangement of the device and its relation to the frame or housing of a kinetoscope.

The diamond is considered "loud" when worn ostentatiously, but who would believe that its sparkle is actually audible?

D'Albe's optophone, which is exciting considerable interest abroad, is based on the well-known property of selenium of changing its electrical resistance under the influence of light, and is the result of several years of experimental investigation. It opens up wonderful possibilities for the blind, and who can predict what will finally be accomplished in their behalf? Even in the state of embryo the optophone enables the totally blind to locate any source of bright light such as a window or open space, to detect readily the shadows of objects passed between them and the light, and to even locate persons dressed in white.



The device in its present form is a small camera-like affair; but the accompanying diagram will give a general idea of the principle involved. Thus light is made audible, and it is possible to hear the gentle whisper of the "pale faced moon" or the mighty roar of the sun in its noontide glory, together with all the intervening graduations of light and shade. It can even detect the light of stars invisible through the telescope.



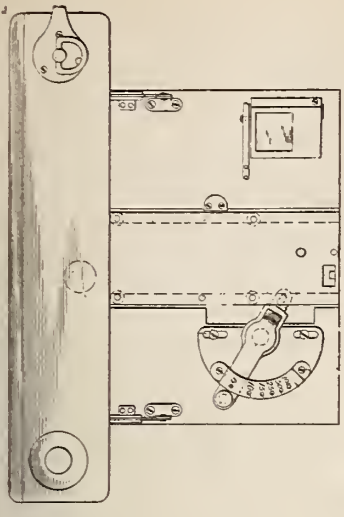
Patent No. 1,037,346, to A. M. Smiley, of Franklin, Pa.

The object of the invention is to provide a stereopticon for the particular purpose of displaying advertising matter, though other information or illustrative matter may be displayed thereby.

It consists in the combination of a continuously illuminated projecting device, a horizontally and vertically adjustable condenser, and a lens adjustable in the direction of said condenser, with movable transparency holders arranged to contain transparencies and to position the same in projective register in said projecting device, said transparency holder consisting of a wheel composed of a hub and a plurality of radial arms attached to said hub, each carrying a transparency holder at its outer end, a shaft in said hub for revolubly mounting said wheel pins, corresponding in number to the number of said arms and holders, projecting horizontally from said hub, a revoluble shaft arranged with its axis in alinement with the axis of said first-mentioned shaft, means for continuously revolving said shaft, an arm upon said shaft arranged to engage one of said pins at each revolution, for the purpose of moving said wheel a portion of a revolution, bringing the succeeding one of said transparencies into focal register in said projecting device, and spring-actuated means tending to hold said wheel in said registry position.

D'Albe's optophone above referred to transmutes light into sound. To descend from the sublime to the ridiculous, we note that an innovation in vaudeville is a music-illuminating wind instrument having a plurality of horns in each of which is positioned a small incandescent lamp, which glows when that particular horn sounds. With a darkened stage the rapid flashing of the various lamps in unison with the music, together with the reflections in the polished metallic surfaces, is calculated to render the effect novel and attractive. Now that the vaudevillians themselves are making light of their musical selections, it is permissible to say that they are only following the trend of a majority of their auditors. Good music in vaudeville is the exception and not the rule.

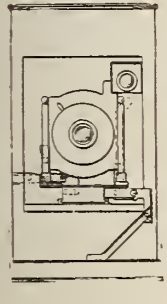
In this connection it may be stated as an incongruous fact, that in the Patent Office classification, as related to Trade Marks, Automobile Horns are musical instruments. Certainly they are inspiring under certain conditions of use; and for quick-step music they have no equal; but they scarcely harmonize with anything other than the average chauffeur's natural cussedness.



Patent No. 1,037,721, to Carl Bornmann and George W. Topliff, Binghamton, N. Y., assignors to Ansco Company, same place. The accompanying view represents the top of a folding camera, showing the front board lowered, and illustrating the essential features of the invention, the purpose of which is to provide means whereby the mere movement of an automatic lock focus lever to points indicated upon a suitable index, which designate the focal distances, will automatically move the lens to such positions as will properly correspond to those distances. The claims embody a photographic camera having a movable plate adapted to support and guide the lens frame, a pivoted lever adapted to engage with and when swung upon its pivot to move the movable plate, and an index to determine the degree of movement of the lever; and the combination with these elements of other minor details of construction.

Patent No. 1,037,722 to Carl Bornmann, Binghamton, N. Y., assignor to Ansco Co., same place, is for a folding camera having a pivoted support so shaped and located that when folded it will act as a metallic reinforce or edging therefor.

The nerve of the photographer is proverbial, but it required pluck as well to "take" a tornado in the teeth, as was done recently by an enterprising photographer in Oklahoma. Apprised by telephone of its approach, he snapped it from a house directly in the line of advance and had then barely time to take refuge in a cave before the tornado completely demolished the house from which the picture had been taken.



Patent No. 1,039,088, to Carl Bornmann, of Binghamton, N. Y., assignor to Ansco Co., of same place. The accompanying figure represents a front elevation of an ordinary folding front camera to which the invention is applied, the front board being lowered and the lens frame projected.

It is the purpose of this invention to provide a support for cameras, particularly those of the so-called folding or collapsing variety, adapted to sustain the same without the use of a tripod during the making of time exposures, and it is the special object of the invention to so construct and arrange the parts that the support shall be connected to the lens and shutter supporting devices and move at all times with them, so that the line of support shall be at all times as nearly as possible directly under the shutter mechanism, thus securing greater stability in the apparatus during the operation of the shutter. Also another important advantage is that when not in use the support is folded behind some part of the shutter supporting structure, so that it is largely hidden from view and thus the appearance of the camera greatly improved and the support itself protected against injury by reason of contact with exterior objects.

An adaptation of the telephone to the use of deaf persons is being introduced into the London theatres, particularly the New Theatre. Each seat is to be equipped with a small box similar to those from which opera glasses are obtained, and by placing a sixpence in the slot the "earphone" as it is called, is released. The instrument is devised not so much to intensify the sound as to render it clear and distinct, so that all but the stone deaf can enjoy the performance. When the auditor fails to clearly distinguish voice or music, he places the receiver to the ear and moves a little indicator around until the required distinctness of sound is attained.

Haussmann & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., have been granted registration of "Ditropic" for Optical Lenses. Used since November 1st, 1911. No. 88,626.

Registration has been granted the Lubin Mfg. Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., for the adjoined mark for Kinetoscopic films. Used since July 1st, 1909. No. 88,629.

The Multispeed Shutter Co., of New York City, has been granted registration of "Simplex" for moving picture apparatus and supplies. Used since February 20th, 1910. No. 88,633.

In the case of Gents v. Spring Valley Coal Co. (155 Ill. App. 628) the plaintiff, although a winner, proved to be no gentleman. 'Cause why? Plaintiff's first name was Maggie.

As a result of the exhibition in Belgrade of moving pictures of American origin, there is great demand there for wearing apparel, etc., similar to that in vogue in the United States; and even the American style of cutting the hair has become the fashion in "The White City" of Servia. Would not this indicate an economic and effective way of introducing American machinery abroad.

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the Moving Picture News.

Geo. Wm. Meath

Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

ECLAIR STARTS ITS FOURTH RELEASE A WEEK

We note that Eclair has announced its fourth release to commence November 1st. We had the pleasure of seeing several of their scientific subjects, and in justice to all, we say we have never seen anything finer. They should be an immense factor in furthering the campaign for pictures as an educator.

The Eclair studio rather resembles the winter quarters of a one ring circus these days. The writer saw a very ferocious looking watchdog as he passed through the entrance gate. Inside he saw a kitten. Then he saw another dog. But that isn't all.

Passing around to the studio he heard the roar of the jungle. Being a product of New York civilization he did just a natural sort of tremble. He was greeted by one of the boys, Johnstone, who laughed at his start of fear. Others joined in the greeting and soon a chorus of Johnstone, Francis, Hedlund, Grisel, and even little Clara Horton, Muriel, and dainty Miss Tennant were all trying to tell him of their wild animals, and each trying to drag the unfortunate news gatherer into the very jaws of death. For in the studio proper were two cages, one containing a leopard and the other a royal specimen of Bengal tiger.

It seems that Eclair is about to produce several features in which the jungle beasts play their naturally exciting part. Talk about the days of melodrama!

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Editorial Changes

THE many picture playwrights who consider C. B. Hoadley their friend will be pleased to learn that he is now in charge of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's script department. He hopes to have things running smoothly before very long, and all contributors will be assured a square deal. Hoadley was formerly editor for the Imp Film Company, then the Powers Company, and joined the Universal Central bureau under Hal Reid. The other "boys," who made the Universal, are scattered again. Hall has again become editor for the Imp Company; Schulberg will look over the "dope" for the Gem and Rex concerns, and Roach will become editor for the Comet Film Company. It is said that a script writer will be engaged for all Universal studios with Mr. Hoadley installed at the central bureau. Hal Reid, formerly head of the Universal script department, joined the Champion Film Company as director, and then later joined the staff of the Animated Weekly.

* * * *

Writers' Remuneration

When is that halycon time coming when picture playwrights are to get from $50 to $100 for good working scripts? We have waited patiently for many moons because we have been informed that "the time would soon be here." It's a long time a-coming. Twenty-five dollars remains a high price for a script, while the ten and fifteen dollar offers become more and more numerous. The script is the most insignificant part of the picture in the estimation of some guiding spirits, and the talk of "better times" for the writer seems a forlorn hope. Cheap prices became popular with a certain editor, who is an editor no more, and the tendency to reward authors for good work was checked through this editor's cheap policy. Cheap prices bring cheap stories; the directors won't handle them, and they are a loss to the manufacturer. The sooner a better scale of prices is inaugurated the sooner the cry for convincing drama and real-for-sure comedy will be hushed.

* * * *

Art and Craftsmanship

Art cannot be taught; craftsmanship can be taught. It is dangerous to confuse art with craftsmanship. In other words, you can acquire technique and form, but fertility of plot and originality are inherent talents. Our philosophy is called forth from the fact that yesterday we received one of the prettiest working scripts we ever read. But the story was not there. The script didn't get anywhere.

* * * *

Proper Headlines

A number of picture plays have been released recently which contain a flash of newspaper headline. It's a good way of putting over the information essential to the plot, but it is suggested that the headlines be properly written. Perhaps the author of the playlet was a novice in writing headlines or maybe the director was a know-it-all. If not a newspaper man and a headliner, he would advise the author who wishes to use headlines in his action to get some newspaperman to write them for him. The would-be newspaper heads we have read on the screen lately are not impressive or well written. Headlining is a difficult art.

* * * *

Swallowing False Teeth

In the Solax comedy, "Imagination," the action hinges on the individual who imagines he has lost his false teeth. We have heard critics say this excellent Solax plot was overdone. Not at all. In our newspaper experience we once knew of a farmer who lost his false teeth. He worried over the cause and finally made up his mind that they were in his stomach. He consulted a physician. "No doubt about you're swallowing 'em," asserted the Disciple of Esculapius. An operation was performed. No teeth. Three days later the false molars were discovered back of the woodbox in the farmer's kitchen. There is not so much improbability in some of the moving picture plots as some might believe.

How to Get Plots

"How do I get my plots for plays?" repeated Charles Klein. "Perfectly easy. They happen right along. Then I take 'em." Of course you know of Charles Klein who has written a large number of Broadway successes. Then Klein told a story which gave him the plot of a new play now in the course of construction. It deals with the society of the metropolis and of the efforts of those who are on the outside to get inside. "A very well-to-do man from the Middle West," said he, "came to New York not long ago. He continued to be as successful here in business as he had been in the sage brush —but he wanted more. His wife and daughters began to worry him because they could not get into society. He determined that as the first step he would join one of the most exclusive clubs on Fifth avenue. He easily found a man to present his name—but nothing ever happened. He was neither accepted nor blackballed. Somehow, his name was never voted on by the club. He sent for his sponsor.

"'What's the matter?" he demanded.

"'The truth is,' said that unhappy individual, 'that the most eminent men in the club have instructed me to tell you that the club's door will never open to you.'

"'You go back and tell them,' said he, 'that if they don't open it to me I'll kick it in.'"

Klein will not tell whether he made good his threat to "kick it in"—of course, by the use of money and power—or not. But there have been rumors that a very grave situation was occasioned because a certain man stubbed his toe kicking at a club door.

* * * *

"Suggested Plots"

Nearly every day we receive a letter or two from picture playwrights asking if it is wrong to write a script on an idea "suggested" by such-and-such a poem, book, or play. To the beginner we would say, "avoid the suggested procedure." Experienced writers can ofttimes read a book or story, or see a play, and some little twist or turn in action or dialogue, will suggest an entirely new idea to them. It is the suggested idea and is legitimate. On the other hand, the amateur writer is apt to unconsciously adapt the entire plot germ of that story, book or play, and in so doing will be treading on mighty dangerous ground. We know one professional writer who read the synopsis of a successful play to be enacted in one of his home theatres. The story suggested to him an entirely new idea. He developed it, and the picture play that resulted was unusually successful and popular. However, this man was not a beginner. To the amateur picture playwright we would earnestly advise strict originality and an absence of "suggestions" from copyrighted works. There should be some kind of association of picture playwrights, not an association "for protection from editors," but an organization to devise some means to take up the question of plot thieving and prosecute known thieves. Action of this kind would soon put a stop to those writers who try and market the originality of others, and in so doing cast reflection upon the trustworthy picture playwrights who are trying to earn honest success. We also know of several cases where certain exhibitors have posed as authors of picture plays advertised for their playhouses, in order to win increased attendance. A picture playwrights' association might also take such action that the bona fide author of the play would get credit that is due him. This is one reason why the name of the author, whether he be staff man or contributor, should appear on every film.

* * * *

Thinking in Action

To think in words is one thing. To think in clear action is another, but because the work seems easy there are drawn to it—many—too many persons who cannot think at all. That's where the trouble lies.

We quote from Mr. Sargent, because of the onrush of many, where angels fear to tread. There are many who will never make success in any field of literary work who are trying to write picture plays. The so-called schools are responsible for this ever-increasing class of would-be writers, who pay over their tuition fees and then cannot understand why they cannot make "fifty dollars weekly" doing it. We have always believed that there is a good chance for success to the man or woman, whether trained writer or not, who has fertility of idea and a capacity for hard work. However, there never will be room in the picture playwright's ranks for the person who persists in turning out messy, sobby stuff of the Libby-Clay school, and inflicting it on the long-suffering picture play editor.

Per Example

The following paragraph taken from one script is sufficient evidence as to why it was rejected:

"a lady went to a big ball. While she was a dancing with a man A gintleman they crap into the window and sees lovely lady a dancing. he goes away and gets him some cloths and puts them on, he goes to the beutiful lady. asks for the dance. she thinks he belongs to the dance and puts her name on the books. She caught love at him from first sight and went away. She telled him to come and see her. A few days later they was keeping company and then they was married. He give her a diamond ring. She done never know he been a gintleman thef."

Do you suppose that the author of the above touching action will ever become a credit to the profession. We do not think so.

* * * *

Multi-Scene Plays

The multi-scene play now seems in vogue (that is among certain directors). Many of our correspondents are commenting upon the fad, and are anxious to know if they are expected to furnish scripts containing forty to sixty-five scenes. Not at all. The fad will soon cease just as the fad of cutting off the players' feet will soon be malapropos. Write your action, tersely, coherently, and stop when you get through. When you tell a story, tell it. Start when your story starts and end with it. Avoid side issues. If you can develop a good plot in fifteen scenes, all right. It it runs twenty-five, let it. Do not try and pad your action to thirty-five and forty scenes. Let the director do it. We saw one Biograph picture which was shot into one hundred and seven scenes. It was going some. So was the audience.

* * * *

A Vitagraph Hint

"The Photo Play Author" calls attention to the fact that Vitagraph will soon be releasing six reels weekly. This should be good news for the authors who have been successful in marketing to Vitagraph. We wish to compliment Editor Letendre on his "Picture Play Market" Department. Much that is beneficial to the reader is found therein.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

"Broadway was crowded as usual," says the Los Angeles, Cal., Express. "There were hurrying throngs of shoppers blockading the rush of business men. Broadway fairly seethed with humanity.

"Then occurred the unusual note. The movement of the crowd slowed down. Heads were twisted and eyes were distended slightly.

"There was a pretty reason. Little Mary Charleson, as from the band-box, tripped down the broad promenade of that thoroughfare, clad in a real, honest-to-goodness pannier, right from New York.

"The crowds turned to stare. Women asked:

"'Who is that pert young women?' after the manner of the sex which never is jealous.

"The men wanted to know for a different reason. But Mary, as dainty as a tulip, continued on her way, modestly but with the air of distinction which any pretty woman, clad down to the minute, has a right to assume.

"Mary was not on parade. She merely was hastening to an afternoon tea to which she had been invited.

"To many in the crowd her 'face was familiar' but her name unknown.

"She was the 'little Mary' Charleson, of the Western Vitagraph Company, and the pannier was her own property. When the newspaper photographer snapped Mary she demurred, declaring she was not 'on in this scene,' but merely was a citizen who had a right to wear her pannier without undue publicity.

"Mary has worn many costumes as 'leading lady' of the Vitagraph company, from the barefoot boy to the Indian princess, but it is suspected that the culmination of her personal satisfaction lies in the pannier, 'right from New York.'"

* * * *

A new theatre in which a stock company will rehearse plays and act them for the production of "movie" films is to be built in Omaha this fall far away from the business and factory district of the city. The public will not be admitted to it.

Plans for such a theatre have been drawn and as soon as the company which is to build it can find a site answering the requirement, the erection will begin. Some of the best actors in the country will be employed to perform in it and the plays will be the very newest, written by a playwright employed by the company.

* * * *

The Lubin Company, under the management of General Director Barry O'Neil, have returned to the home plant in Philadelphia. They report a most glorious summer up at Cape Elizabeth, Portland, Me., and did excellent work on sea coast pictures. There were thirty-one people in the organization who were housed in cottages in the fishing village for thirteen weeks.

* * * *

The Lubin Comedy Company, under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling, has gone to Jacksonville, Fla., for the winter. A studio will be built for the company, and every advantage given for making pictures of the southern atmosphere. Most of the old company have been retained including May Hotely, George Reehm, Walter H. Stull, and the two Misses Ne Moyers. There are twenty-six people in the organization.

* * * *

Visitors to the South Wales Art Academy at Cardiff, particularly Americans, are much interested in a large and beautiful painting typifying the American cowboy which was recently accepted and hung upon its walls.

Mounted on a little pinto, so familiar to our Western ranges, against a background of eternal mountains that fade off into the distance, with his face turned toward the West, is the figure of a perfect speciman of manhood. The visitor, regardless of his nationality, gazes at the picture with a growing sense of familiarity, a feeling of having known or seen the subject somewhere. Few, however, arrive or even guess at the truth. As a matter of fact, they do know the face, and have seen it countless times in the motion picture theatres. The painting is a masterpiece of a famous London artist, and in looking about for a suitable model for his study, he chanced into a motion picture theatre in London and witnessed a picture by the "Flying A" Company, entitled "The Call of the Range." Jack Kerrigan appealed to him as typifying the true cowboy, as he has also appealed and endeared himself to countless thousands throughout the civilized world. The artist lost no time in communicating with Mr. Kerrigan through the London office of the American Film Manufacturing Company. Upon request Mr. Kerrigan forwarded a photograph of himself, which the author used for his model, the rest of the picture being purely imaginative with the artist, but wonderfully true to life. To-day it hangs in the hall of fame, representing that almost extinct class of men of our Western plains, the American cowboy.

* * * *

Los Angeles, according to the Los Angeles Times of September 29th, is to be made the home of the largest and finest collection of wild animals on the American continent. Mr. W. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company made a business trip to the Pacific coast, and while there entered into an arrangement with "Big Otto" Breitkreitz, who for some years past has been identified with the Selig Company as supcrintendent of the animal department and director of animal pictures whereby Otto will become a partner of Mr. Selig in this particular branch of the industry.

* * * *

Through the courtesy of Mr. Charles F. Gunther, who has the distinction of owning the largest collection of Spanish-American and Civil War relics in this country, the Selig Polyscope Company will be enabled to use any and all of Mr. Gunther's various historical chattels that they desire in the production of historical pictures. The original flag of the Merrimac will be borrowed from Mr. Gunther and utilized in a forthcoming production by the Selig Company.

THE COLONEL'S WARD

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from N. Y. Motion Picture Co. "101" Bison Release)

A NUMBER of years ago, in the early days of the West, word was brought to the fort that the Indians were on the warpath. This announcement had been made before, a number of times, since Colonel Ward had been at the fort, and it was, perhaps, because of this fact rather than in spite of it that he became so serious—almost sad—when the news was brought.

Colonel Ward was a stern soldier when he came to do his duty and to carry out commands, but his heart was kind and loving and it pained him to do injury to any man, even in a just cause. He knew from past experience what a battle with the Indians meant—terrible slaughter—and the very thought sickened him.

But as much as the colonel would have liked to do so, he knew that it was impossible to stop the threatening outbreak. For months the trouble had been brewing and the time had come when the government must bring things to a close.

Two days later the climax was reached. The troops drove the Indians back into their own village after a hard and bitter fight. At last, after an appalling loss of life on their side, the Indians abandoned their homes and fled to the hills.

"It is terrible," exclaimed Colonel Ward as he stood after the battle surveying the gruesome scene. "It is terrible that we have to do such things. But how can we help it? Something must be done."

Before the officer to whom he spoke had answered, they both turned quickly toward a tepee close by. Then both approached it and looked in cautiously, remembering the possibility of treachery.

What they saw was no enemy, but a little Indian girl about ten years old. She was lying on a blanket, sobbing as though her heart would break.

By the few words of English the child knew and the slight knowledge the men had of her language, they were finally able to understand that both the little girl's parents had been killed and she was left all alone.

At once the big heart of Colonel Ward went out to the lonely, grief-stricken child.

"I'll take her home," he said. "It's the least a man can do after this bloody work."

So that is how the child, who was afterwards known as Mary Ward, came to be adopted by white parents.

Colonel and Mrs. Ward were devoted to their little Indian child, and she was given every advantage that life at the fort could afford.

Long and earnestly Colonel Ward pondered over the problem of making peace with the Indians.

At last a treaty was drawn up that they were willing to sign, a large tract of land was assigned to the Indians, beyond which they would not venture. In return the government promised to protect their rights and see that no white settler intruded upon their lands.

At last there was peace again and the life at the fort went on without much excitement.

With the help of Mrs. Ward and a governess Mary was progressing rapidly, but when four years had passed it was decided that it would be much better to send her East, where she could entirely be away from any memories of her former life.

It greatly grieved Colonel and Mrs. Ward to part from the child they had grown to love as their own, but they were willing to make even so great a sacrifice for the sake of the little girl.

So at the age of fourteen Mary entered a boarding school in New England. She did not come home at vacations, for her foster parents thought it best that she should see none of her own people until she had entirely learned the ways of the cultured young girls with whom she was now associating.

During the summer vacations Mrs. Ward went East and spent some time with Mary at a summer resort, and Colonel Ward went whenever he could get away from his very constant duties.

In those days a girl's education was not so complicated and did not last for so long a period. At eighteen Mary was considered fully proficient in all branches. From her manner and conversation and from her accomplishments, no one would think for one moment that she was an Indian.

The plan to keep her entirely away from her people until all attraction had died out, seemed to have succeeded perfectly, and now she was coming home.

About the time that Mrs. Ward had started West with Mary, after her commencement was over, an immigrant train crossed the border of the Indian's land and prepared to stay.

The Indians were wild with excitement and indignation. They read over their treaty of eight years before and knew that they were right in saying that these people had no right to settle on their land.

Colonel Ward told them that they were right when the chief and a few chosen braves called at the fort to protest and to ask for justice. But he also told them that he could do nothing himself; that he would write to Washington at once and plead their cause.

This they did not understand. They wanted immediate action.

It was on the day of this visit to the Colonel that Mary arrived home. She found the yard full of excited Indians, and although she had not spoken or heard one word of their language for four years, she understood perfectly and stopped, as though by some invisible hand, to listen.

When the full story had been told, there came over Mary a great rush of sympathy for her people. The gulf that had been made by the years of separation and the culture and education acquired by the girl, had been bridged in a moment. She felt that she was one of them—they were her people as no white men could ever be.

"Wait," she said in a quiet voice tense with feeling, "wait and I shall do my best to help you."

"What is my little girl so serious about?" asked the colonel when he had greeted her affectionately.

"Father," replied the girl, "those men out there are my people. When I came through the yard just now and heard their complaints, all my heart went out to them. I love them, and no amount of education can take that love away. What are you going to do for my people now?"

"I can do nothing but plead their cause," answered the colonel, much troubled. "That I have done and now we can only wait."

Mary was an Indian in spite of everything, and she wanted things done at once. She pleaded with Colonel Ward to compel the immigrants to leave immediately, but he told her that he had no authority and could not do so under any conditions.

It grieved the Colonel to deny Mary her request but he could do nothing else. The girl was sorely disappointed and told her people of her failure, with tears in her eyes.

Finding no relief from the colonel, the chief and his men decided to see what they could get from the government agent. But their hopes, if they had any, were very soon dispelled, for he did not even treat them kindly. He became very angry and threatened them with a revolver, at the same time ordering them out of his office.

The Indians refused to go without a promise of justice. The agent flourished his revolver and attempted to put them out. A scuffle followed, the revolver discharged, and in a moment the agent was lying on the floor motionless.

It was an easy thing to arrest the chief, and in less than half an hour a trial was being held at the quarters of Colonel Ward.

The trial was short, for the evidence against the man seemed strong and there was no one to defend him. He was found guilty and sentenced to be shot at daybreak.

No one suspected the presence of the young girl who stood breathless with suspense outside a door of the room in which the trial was held.

When the sentence was pronounced Mary wanted to cry out, but she knew that would do no good, so crept to her room to think of a plan to save her chief.

By late afternoon the girl knew what she would do. She obtained permission to visit the chief in prison. The colonel felt that he could not deny her that.

In a few words she laid her plan before the imprisoned Indian. She promised him to remove the cartridges from the guns which were to end his life, and to replace them by blank ones. His part was to drop at the firing of the guns and lie as though dead until his people had carried him away.

The old chief smiled very gravely and shook his head in acknowledgment of her kindness.

Then Mary mounted a horse and rode to the nearby village with the news of her plan. Great was the rejoicing when it was laid before them, and great was their faith in the girl who was one of them and yet so unlike them.

With a heart almost light, Mary returned home and went to her room to await the time when it seemed safe to change the cartridges.

At last the time arrived and the girl crept cautiously down to the library, where she had heard her father say the guns would be kept that night.

With trembling hands Mary set to work. She had finished with several guns when suddenly one slipped to the floor. Feeling sure that she must have awakened the household, she moved toward a long window as quickly as she could in the darkness, thinking she could make her escape if anyone came.

When she reached the window she stopped to listen. All seemed quiet, so she turned to continue her work.

But just then a form appeared in the doorway. The report of a pistol sounded in the stillness, and Mary dropped to the floor.

Colonel Ward bent over the quiet form, holding a lighted candle above his head. "My God, it's Mary," he cried. "It's my little girl and I've killed her."

He stood gazing at the dead form for several minutes. Then lifting his eyes, he saw that the guns had been disturbed, and he knew that it was his duty to examine them.

In a few hours the time of the execution arrived. The condemned chief was led from his cell. Many of his men were there ready to bear his body away. At least that was the reason given for their presence, but their faith in Mary was firm and their reason was to see how cleverly the ruse was being carried out, and to act their part in it.

The chief took his place. Calm, dignified, undoubting, he stood in the gray morning light.

The command was given—"Ready! Aim! Fire!"

The chief dropped to the ground and lay quite still. A smile, so seldom seen on the face of an Indian, flickered for an instant on the faces of many of the men, and they looked at one another with knowing looks. Their chief was a clever actor, they thought.

The body was given to the waiting men, and after placing it on a stretcher, they marched solemnly away.

When they had gone a half mile and were within the cover of a wood they put down the stretcher and threw back the blanket which covered their chief.

He did not move. They spoke to him. But still he did not move. Then laying back his own blanket they understood. Blood was streaming from many wounds in his chest.

THE AMBROSIO COMPANY

In Turin, Italy, is located the studio of the Ambrosio Company, the greatest institution of its kind in the world. Here are manufactured picture films which represent the acme of perfection in photography. The Ambrosio Company employ a half dozen eminent stage directors, the very pick of all Europe. One hundred of the best motion picture actors in the world are under contract to this company, and as a result, having the material with which to create the best in motion picture art, it is no wonder that the Ambrosio films stand as the leaders in this style of work.

One strong point made by the Ambrosio Company is that nothing is too difficult for them to undertake, no spectacle too stupendous, no pageant too heavy, no situation too expensive for them to transplant into the motion picture film. Having ample resources both as to money and ability, it is easy enough for the Ambrosio Company to select from the great literary storehouse of the world, such themes and subjects that offer unlimited scope for reproduction in film art. In looking for material with which to set a high-water mark in their style of work, they seized upon Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," the most wonderful book ever written with the exception of the Bible, a literary composition originally written in English, but which has been translated into every language that employs written symbols. Another feature which made "Pilgrim's Progress" a valuable one for film reproduction, was that the story has a broad appeal, irrespective of race, creed or nationality. In the 3,500 feet of film, over one hundred actors were employed in the fifty different scenes.

The Ambrosio Company has sold the American rights of this wonderful picture film to the World's Best Film Company, who report that a tremendous interest in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" as a moving picture production, is current among churches and educational institutions; in fact, the general film users throughout the United States and Canada, are displaying great activity in their efforts to secure territory for the exploitation of the greatest production ever made by the Ambrosio Company.

BECK GOING WEST

Mr. Beck is leaving for a Western trip and expects to be gone for about a month to take some special pictures for one of the large railroad companies there. He is going to California on an observation car, taking all kinds of educational pictures, and he will have these pictures ready for the market in a very short time. The Special Event Co. has some negatives on hand and will start to release pictures in the near future. They also have numerous camera men throughout the United States and supply the large manufacturers with the Special Event product.

POWER'S CAMERAGAPH IN THE CHURCH

A Power's No. 6 has been installed by the New York Film Exchange in the church of the Redemptorist Fathers, Fifty-ninth street and Sixth avenue, Brooklyn.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF DEACON JONES
Eclair release October 31st.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

By ERNST LUZ

Let harmony for "Music and the Picture" be our aim, for in that harmony I can see the picture wielding a world-wide artistic influence heretofore unheard of. I can see the discouraged and wasted talent take new life, and through the inspiration received from such harmony rekindle its dying energies and more studiously strive for the pinnacle of success. We see to-day many a picture artistically produced from thoughts based on poems of worth, still it remains a poetic thought, and needs an excellent oratorical rendition to create its proper inspiration. The picture is no more nor less than a portrayal of thought. Why not let music be the orator that gives the inspiration, for all mankind responds to it in some form or other, and the picture can and does in its wonderful versatility call for all classes of music. Why not give it a thought?

"Grand Opera" is the moving picture of music, and its financial failures are caused only by its tremendous cost for production, and from the fact that it is not universally popular for the reason that the action caters entirely to the music requiring an advanced musical training to understand and appreciate it. On the other hand we know of many musical productions of worth that have been great financial successes, although produced at enormous cost, for the reason that the music in these productions caters to the action, which in turn caters to certain characters and plot.

You may wonder how this concerns the picture, and say that it is not possible or practical, and I tell you that it is quite possible and practical, and I go even further and say that it is just as possible to create a beautiful and inspiring picture based on a symphony or musical suite, such as Peer Gynt by Grieg, as it is possible to create one on a poetic thought. Furthermore, the "Music and the Picture" would go fittingly hand in hand through its entire projection, and were you to lend oratorical inspiration to the poetic picture, the poem would run five minutes and the picture eighteen. Naturally the foregoing would be feature work, but features must be popular when they are booked for extended runs on Broadway. We note at the present time that pictures are showing at prices ranging up to the half-dollar, and wonder if a good picture thoughtfully produced, with proper and intelligent care given to its musical inspiration, using vocalists and a competent orchestra in its projection, would not be worthy of the same prices, more profitable, just as educational and certainly more entertaining. I touch upon this higher sphere of musical possibilities for the picture, feeling that the picture should do something extraordinary on this point to musically retrieve itself and knowing that one successful production along this line of thought would immediately assure the picture's musical future and place it where it belongs among the works of art.

I am positive musical combinations, vocal and instrumental combined, equipped with such a film product, properly rehearsed, could more extensively tour the country at a greater profit, charging one-fifth the admission, than the larger expensive companies on tour and have a larger field, bringing their product to the very door of the masses at a cost which would not be prohibitive.

A few words on what the picture is musically prepared for at this time, for it is gratifying to note that in the picture production of the past three months, 75 per cent of those based on serious thought in themselves create musical inspiration and opportunities. There is a continual craving in the picture theatre for something new, an added attraction, etc., all short lived and speculative for the exhibitor, which compels him to raise his admission, this in itself having its detrimental points, not to mention the harm done him should the attraction not come up to his patrons' expectations. Why not give him a substantially new feature, one that is lasting and forever new, which is music? Are we destined to forever hear a lone piano thumping in the picture show, sometimes accentuated by the noise of a drum or as in some few instances hear an orchestra render a summer garden programme, regardless of the picture action, or can we look forward to a real theatre equipment for moving pictures.

It can be done and by the simple adoption of temperamental musical plots, not musical titles that jingle with the "Leaders" or music suggested by a possible twenty-foot film action, but suggested by the running thought of the combined film action, whether it be introductory, descriptive, dramatic, light or heavy, hilarious or plaintive, or be the picture of soft toning or sharp, all these and more form the temperamental qualities of the picture, and alone will create proper musical inspiration.

On another page you will find plots set-up along these lines, and you will also note that I give but the temperament suggestion, each number being selected to allow for any toning of action on screen while it is being played without breaking into it. By looking carefully at these plots you will understand what I mean when I say that music will be the everlasting newness for the picture. By the use of such plots it is just as practicable for an orchestra of twenty or more to properly play the picture as well as the lone pianist, and no one can deny the beauty of string instruments in dramatic effects as well as sentimental and plaintive. All that is required is to set-up the music in advance, as is done for any vaudeville or other performance. No rehearsals are required, as each musician uses those numbers he is familiar with. Any pianist with a repertoire sufficient, or who can read music and has an ordinary amount of intelligence can play the pictures to better advantage than they are now played by competent musicians. An only violin added (not a drum) would already be a musical improvement, and could be featured in many scenes. An orchestra or pianist so desiring could set a different musical programme to the same picture at every projection, giving the same temperamental effect. For picture theatre patrons visiting more than one theatre, often seeing picture repetitions, were the musical plot method in vogue and the picture theatre music improved, there would always be a newness surrounding the picture for them. It not being likely that two out of a hundred musicians would make similar set-ups while creating the same temperamental effect. Furthermore it would give the picture theatre manager an opportunity to properly and successfully feature certain instruments, such as violin, 'cello, organ, etc. It has come to my notice that in communities—far from New York—orchestras appear and have a private projection and then rehearse the music. If this is the method which is hoped to perfect picture-playing, we can well despair, for the time will never come when you can convince ten or more thousand musicians that they should individually do what one could do for the entire number, not to speak of the results obtained by a sorting out of those competent. You will also see that the plots will create a variety of music suggested by the variety of picture which is the pictures greatest attraction, differently classed music being essential to differently classed pictures. These plots would also give the orchestra or pianist (with little training in their use) the opportunity to so play for a picture as to give the impression to the audience that the music was especially arranged for that picture which would virtually be true. What an opportunity and inducement would thereby be extended to a new talent connecting itself with the picture, such talent having the immediate tendency for elevating the picture in the eyes of the intelligent classes.

CHESTER BARNETT NOW PLAYING FOR "CRYSTAL," FORMER FAVORITE OF LEGITIMATE

The Crystal Film Company are fortunate in being able to place among their players an actor so favorably known as Chester Barnett. Mr. Barnett, who is now to lend his talents exclusively to the "Crystal," has appeared under the personal direction of Mr. David Belasco, supporting Miss Frances Starr, in the "Rose of the Rancho." He was also a member of Ben Greet's famous company portraying leading Shakesperian roles. For two years he disported as the highly temperamental boy-musician in "The Climax."

Thomas Edison, it is said, worked one hundred and twenty-two hours out of one hundred and forty-four to perfect the phonograph. He's not the only man the phonograph has kept awake.

Love-letter-writing, a correspondence school "professor" contends, will enable one to acquire a literary style. But there is danger that love-letter-writing will lead to trouble for the pictureplaywright in a final scene.

"ROSIE"

Eclair Release of October 29th

This Eclair release serves to further introduce the work of one of their new directors. And it is good. A mighty fresh little plot idea lies back of it and in consequence the players all enter into it with a spirit of genuineness.

Robert Frazer is unusually good as one of the marooned lovers and Mrs. Goodstadt does not lag behind so far as credit goes. The whole is finished off with that ever-changing artistry which pervades and permeates all Eclair productions.

The plot of the story is quite simple, for it is the action it affords which entitles it to commendation.

John (Mr. Frazer) has a friend who writes him about a certain "Rosie being a beaut." Mary, his fiancee, sees the post card and will not listen to explanations. Now this all happens by the seashore. In a very clever manner both the estranged lovers are cast upon the same little island, where they are marooned a la Crusoe. So here are enacted all the corking little bits of lovers' jealousy which are most amusing to those who are out of its throes.

So John affects compromise after compromise as she is forced to make little heart confessions for the sake of the necessary comforts of life, such as the loan of his coat to keep her warm and a share of his meal of fish to appease her starving appetite.

And in the end we learn that "Rosie" was the name of a small sailboat, feminine in name even though neuter in gender.

THE ARMY AND NAVY STRONG FOR POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

Instruction given by the aid of the eye has been fully recognized by the leading educators and the world's greatest scientists.

A great and very important field, to which the motion pictures could be applied with beneficial results, is the instruction of the recruits of the National Guard with the aid of the cameragraph.

Films could be produced of a company of "regulars" going through the various facings, foot movements, company movements and the manual of arms, which would show clearly and distinctly the correct positions, attitudes and foot movements in the most minute details.

Instruction in this manner would prove a great aid to the drill sergeant in the practical training of the soldier-recruit.

The success of such instruction would depend a great deal on the film and the machine which projects it. We recommend the installation of a Power's Cameragraph at all armories for instructional purposes. These machines are now in use and have given splendid results at the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; the U. S. Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.; Fort Sill, Okla.; Fort Scriven, Georgia; Fortress Monroe, Va.; Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.; Fort Totten, N. Y.; League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; Marine Barracks, Charleston, S. C.; the Navy Y. M. C. A., Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Army Y. M. C. A., Boston, Mass., and Ft. Leavenworth, Kan., and also has been installed aboard the U. S. S. "Florida," "Utah" and "Panther."—The National Military and Naval Review.

EXCELLENT BASEBALL VIEWS

An excellent set of slides covering the Championship Baseball Series between the Boston and New York teams has been produced by A. J. Clapham, whose advertising relative to this subject appears in this issue. Mr. Clapham has selected the most interesting subjects for the set. The slides are produced with an interesting lecture or with full description on the slide. Attractive special one-sheet litographs in colors are furnished free with each set. The slides are produced from genuine photographs and will prove a timely feature for exhibitors.

Says the Wilmington, Del., Journal of September 24th:

"There was some excitement on Saturday night in front of a moving picture theatre in this city, all because a man was looking for his wife, who he said was in the theatre with another man, and he proposed to shoot both when they came out.

"When the man approached the ticket window the girl in charge prepared to hand out a ticket but he merely shook his head and made the remark that he was there for another purpose. His wife was in there, he said, pointing to the entrance of the theatre, 'and I propose to shoot both of them when they come out,' he added.

"The ticket seller informed the manager of the man's threat and he immediately got busy. He announced from the stage of the theatre just what the man outside threatened to do, and said that in order to avoid trouble, the couple in question could leave the house by the rear entrance.

"It is said that eleven couples passed out by the rear entrance within the next ten minutes."

MEN WHO DARE
Reliance (2 reels) October 30th.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

AMERICAN

CHIQUITA, THE DANCER (Oct. 30).—When Jim Olcott made a rich strike a short distance from the Mexican town of San Pablo, he staked his claim in the usual way and hurried to Washington to negotiate for money with which to work it.

Meanwhile, the pretty Chiquita continued to dance in the local drinking place for the amusement of the Mexicans and miners of the neighborhood. Her drunken half-brother, Bill, continued to absorb liquor at the expense of good-hearted loungers, and in short, life swung along in much the usual way, until one evening Jake Foster and Ike Watson entered the drinking house. From behind a palm Chiquita heard them talk of the Olcott strike and their plans to jump his claim. She said nothing until the following day when Jim, having returned, flushed with triumph, from Washington, took a seat beside her with several friends. Motioning him aside, during an intermission, she told him of Foster and Watson. Jim promptly looked to his guns, went to his claim and ejected the hullies from his property.

But Foster and Watson were not so easily to be defeated. They called upon a crooked justice of the peace and secured from him a warrant for the arrest of Jim. This Jim ignored until he saw them coming in force to arrest him. Then he fled—to the home of Chiquita. Chiquita found a place for him in a shed adjoining the house and brought him meals, and one day, some writing paper, which he used in dispatching a letter to his Washington attorney.

While he waited for the delivery of his mail, Chiquita became prey to the machinations of Foster and her drunken brother. Foster, by the free use of money, won the assistance of Bill in trying to force his attention upon the piquant Chiquita. They made frequent trips to Chiquita's home and troubled her a great deal.

In Washington, Attorney Brown, seeing Jim's property threatened, started West at once with a Deputy U. S. Marshal. They arrived at San Pablo and started things by instantly arresting the crooked justice of the peace. In handcuffs they marched him ahead of them toward the Chiquita home, where events were rapidly reaching a focus.

Chiquita's visits to the barn where Jim was secreted result in the awakening of love between the two. On one of her trips, when she awakens to the sincere love she hears Jim, she almost stumbles into the arms of Foster and her inebriated half-brother and Foster secures an opportunity to force his unwelcome attentions upon her. She does not dare to scream for fear of attracting Jim's attention.

Idly musing on the sweetness of his love dream, Jim lights a cigarette and drops the burning match on the straw. Flames instantly spring up and his efforts to liberate himself prove in vain and he succumbs to the dense smoke. Chiquita, still struggling with her captor, sees the smoke and rushes to liberate her lover, pursued by her adversaries. At this moment Attorney Brown and the United States Marshal, appear upon the scene and effect the arrest of Foster, leaving Olcott, now rescued and revived, in the arms of Chiquita.

THE STARBUCKS (Nov. 9).—Mrs. Mayfield, sister of Judge Elliot, of Nashville, dispirited over the dissolution of her unfortunate marriage, sat moodily in the Elliot home and brooded. Judge Elliot, one-armed, stern old veteran that he was, found it impossible to console her and gave it up as a bad job.

The judge's son Tom, returning from some recent escapades, and intensely fond of his aunt, suggested the wild idea that these two city nurtured people go forth in search of adventure into the Tennessee mountains, but a few miles from Nashville. Mrs. Mayfield was nothing if not imaginative, and her artist soul seized eagerly upon the prospect of escape from fashionable boredom. So straightaway they made all arrangements and some few days later found themselves in the heart of the hills and in the midst of a civilization so primeval and natural that Mrs. Mayfield's delight knew no bounds.

They arrived at the home of Jasper Starhuck, a giant mountaineer, whose strong but simple nature, quaint philosophy and fearless courage charmed the city folk and furnished a needed balm for the gentle, wounded nature of Mrs. Mayfield.

In the days that followed, Tom and Starhuck's daughter, Lou, found love. Jim Starhuck, a country preacher, nephew of Jasper, come to visit at the Starbuck household. Long-legged, awkward, extremely diffident, but possessed of a soul that reveled in the beauty of all nature and also possessed of a quaint, backwoods eloquence and a dauntless physical courage, Jim Starhuck, country preacher, appealed strongly to the imagination of the easy speaking society woman of the city. They were thrown much together and love came, naturally, quite before either realized it. Only big Jasper Starhuck, with his keen eye and whimsical humor, discovered the secrets of both couples.

Adjoining the Starbuck property lived Lije Peters, bully without being a coward, passionate, unscrupulous, murderous in his likes and dislikes. He wanted Lou Starbuck, but the girl spurned him and quickened his smoldering anger to revengeful hate.

Back of the house Starbuck made whiskey without a Government license. His grandfather had done so and so had his father—and so, it might be added, did many of the residents of the Cumberland valley. It was no secret, and Government officers had long ceased to penetrate the deadly hills for offenders. Lije Peters applied for the position of Deputy U. S. Marshal. He made many trips to the Starhuck home and threatened old Jasper, demanding his daughter and loans of money.

One day the appointment came. Lije Peters, with two deputy marshals, wrecked the still. Old Jasper, calmly smoking on the doorstep, cleaned and oiled his Winchester. Up the hill he went, threw himself on the grass and pulled an unerring aim on the dastardly heart of Lije Peters. But his old hand trembled; he thought of his daughter Lou, who had married Tom Elliot, and his nephew Jim, who had married Mrs. Mayfield, and the happiness of the two couples who were then on their honeymoon. Jasper also thought of the many men who had fallen beneath the merciless rain of that Winchester—his old hand trembled, he hurled the rifle from him and went down into the midst of Lije Peters and his marshals.

They took him to the jail at Nashville and locked him, who never before had known other than boundless freedom, in the cell of a common felon. He waited trial with what fortitude he could.

Meanwhile, Judge Elliot, of Nashville, wrote his son Tom a good-natured letter congratulating him on his marriage and jokingly remarking that Tom had failed to mention his bride's former name. Also he casually remarked that he must on the morrow try an old soldier named Starhuck for moonshining and that the job was anything but pleasant. This news brought the honeymoon couples post haste to Nashville. Also, poor Mrs. Starhuck was daily becoming more lonesome; so she saddled the horse and struck the pike for Nashville.

Jasper Starhuck was led into Judge Elliot's presence. He knew that Judge Elliot was the father of the boy who had married his daughter, but he forbore mention of the fact, preferring to make his plea for freedom on his own ground: that of an old soldier who had given his blood to Uncle Sam and who did not expect Uncle Sam to take his blood just because he, Jasper Starhuck, made whiskey to give his friends. His plea was eloquent—Judge Elliott carrying an empty sleeve in his coat, and his softest point was touched. He knew a face and the soul that lay back of it, and he had not the heart to send the old man to jail. He freed him and old Jasper Starbuck, stepping back from the witness stand, saw Lije Peters enter the room. He seized the villain by the throat and only timely aid saved Peters' life. A deputy marshal then stepped up and informed the judge that Lije Peters had made an attempt on Starhuck's life after Starhuck had surrendered to the Government. Judge Elliot promptly ordered the arrest of Peters.

Suddenly the door was burst open and Mrs. Starhuck threw herself in Jasper's arms. She was followed immediately by Tom, Mrs. Mayfield, Jim Starbuck, and Lou, and there was rejoicing in the old courtroom that had seen so many tragedies under the iron rule of Judge Elliot.

EDISON

THE AFFAIR AT RAYNOR'S (Oct. 25).—When Mary walked into the office of Raynor & Jones she created what might be termed a magnetic disturbance. Raynor needed a stenographer very badly and welcomed Mary while Wilson, Raynor's trusted clerk, instinctively disliked her.

Wilson had been losing steadily at the stock game until he was almost wiped out, and his last hope lay in somehow securing enough money to carry his margin. Slowly, a daring and desperate scheme occurred to him. No one must know, but he must act quickly, and accordingly that afternoon he saw his opportunity. He knew that it was customary for the collector to allow himself half an hour to get to the bank, so, watching his chance, he steals over to the collector's coat and sets back his watch thirty minutes. As a consequence the collector arrives at the bank after hours and is compelled to return with the money. Mr. Raynor is forced to put the money into the safe and, watched by Wilson, he now proceeds to put the safe combination memorandum in his coat which hangs on the rack. Later, Wilson, in helping Raynor with his coat, apparently accidentally drops it. Wilson apologizes, takes the coat to the outer office to brush it, and incidentally to steal the memorandum, which he hurriedly places behind the washstand. Later, after Mr. Raynor has gone and Mary is preparing to go home, she chances to see the stolen memorandum and, like a flash, Wilson's intention dawns upon her. Quickly she makes another memorandum and, changing the figures, replaces it. Wilson unsuspectedly gets the changed slip and asks Mary if she is going home. She makes an excuse about working late and Wilson leaves. Mary now prepares for her vigil by securing a revolver and switching off the lights. Hour after hour drags by and Mary begins to get weary. Suddenly she hears a key in the door and, seeing Wilson's shadow, starts up and darts behind the screen. Wilson stealthily enters and Mary, tensely grasping the revolver, breathlessly waits. Swiftly he gets to work; back and forth the combination knob turns and now he tries the handle. Locked! Again and again he tries, the while feverishly consulting the false memorandum. He is beginning to despair. Suddenly he gets up and rushes into Raynor's private office. He must get that combination. This is Mary's opportunity. Stealthily she reaches the telephone and calls up Raynor's club. Explaining hurriedly the situation she gets back behind the screen just in time to avoid Wilson, who rushes in like an infuriated beast. Again he tries the safe and again he is unsuccessful and, ripping out an oath, clinches his fists. This so startles Mary that she inadvertently makes a noise which Wilson hears. Quickly turning he rushes to the screen only to find a revolver poked in his face. Nonplused for the moment; now he begins arduously to plead, but the revolver never wavers. Becoming frantic he beseeches and implores. Mary feels that she cannot hold out much longer. She throws the screen toward Wilson and the fight is on. Suddenly the door is thrown open and Mr. Raynor, his brother and an officer rush in. Mary collapses—Wilson is arrested, and the next morning Mr. Raynor's brother, whose admiration for Mary is unbounded because of her pluck the night before, succeeds in getting Mr. Raynor's consent to her going to Europe on a private diplomatic mission for him.

LUBIN

THE OLD CHESS PLAYERS (Oct. 24).—Two old men, a German cobbler and a Jewish pawnbroker, have been friends since youth. The pawnbroker, a widower, has a boy twenty years of age. The cobbler and his wife have a daughter. Their places of business are near one another, and after their day's work Brand and Stern spend their evenings in their favorite game of chess. Three years elapse when Brand's wife dies. The incident binds the friendship of the two old men stronger and likewise their children become inseparable. A little later while the two old men are at a game of chess the boy and girl come in and tell of their engagement, which overjoys the old men. After kisses and congratulations have been passed, the game is resumed. Soon, however, an argument ensues over a move and finishes in a bitter quarrel. The children try to soothe their respective fathers but fail, and after more bitter words the pawnbroker takes his son and rushes home—estranging the two families and breaking the young people's engagement. A short time later the girl, worrying over the loss of her lover, becomes sick. The cobbler is at her bedside, his money is all gone. He has parted with many little treasures which have been sent to the pawn shop. Needing a few dimes, he bethinks of the chess set, which for weeks has now been out of commission. His pride will not permit him to take it to Stern himself, hence he solicits the aid of a young friend. The pawnbroker recognizes the chess set and gives the messenger some money, refusing to take the pledge. He then calls bis son and together they go to the cobbler's home, where reconciliation is effected and all are happy once more.

IN THE SERVICE OF THE STATE (Oct. 22).—Joseph Vance, a prospector, has built a home near the mountain regions of Southern California for the reception of his mother, father and sister, whom he expected. Upon going to the railroad station to meet them he learns that a wreck has occurred on the line and that his parents and sister were among the killed. He loses interest in life until one day volunteers are called to form a posse to hunt down a desperado who killed the sheriff of the county. He is sworn in as a deputy and receives his badge. Determining to bring the desperado to town, dead or alive, he leaves on his man hunt. Burt Hawkins is hiding in the hills in a deserted log house. Every day his daughter secretly brings him food. It was on one of these trips that an accident befell her while Vance was in the vicinity. He assists her to her cabin and his admiration for the pretty girl is shattered when he learns that she is the daughter of the man he has sworn to capture. He tells her why he came into the hills and Molly is called upon to choose between the lives of the two men, while Vance is torn between counter forces, his duty as an officer of the law and his admiration for the girl. Vance decides to do his duty. He trails Hawkins to his hiding place and Molly follows. rifle in hand, to protect her father. A desperate battle takes place. Hawkins tries to kill his opponent, but in the effort the gun is discharged and Hawkins falls with a bullet from his own gun. Molly, believing Vance has killed her father, fires at him, wounding him in the shoulder, but when she learns that Vance had not fired a shot from his revolver her heart goes out to him. She hurries away to obtain assistance and meets the posse, who went out to help and protect Vance. Tbey find Hawkins beyond human aid and Vance wounded. They assist him to Molly's cabin wbere Molly tenderly nurses him back to health. Vance has fallen deeply in love with the little angel who daily administers to his wants.

ESSANAY

THE OUTLAW'S SACRIFICE (Oct. 19).—Jim Barton is elected to the office of county sheriff, takes the oath of office, obtains his star and rides back to his shack highly elated. Later word reaches Barton that Bud Layton, the noted outlaw, has passed the boundary line into his county and to watch out. Securing a posse, Barton starts out to trail Layton. Meanwhile, Layton has camped near the Barton shack and, thinking his identity unknown, rides into town and secures groceries. He is recognized by a cowboy, however, and Barton is soon in hot pursuit with the posse. Barton's little baby girl, Audrey, now wanders off from the shack. A few moments later a cowardly Mexican peon finds Mrs. Barton alone and attempts to enter. She wounds him and, out of revenge, he fires the shack. Picking the baby up in his arms, he carries her with him and suddenly discovers the blazing shack with the Mexican crouching nearby over the lighted straw. Whipping out his gun, Layton kills tbe scoundrel, leaving Audrey on the ground, dashes through the flames and, after a terrible battle with the smoke and fire, rescues Mrs. Barton, who has fallen unconscious. Barton and his posse arrive just as Layton, terribly burned, has dragged Mrs. Barton to safety. "Too late, Sheriff." he gasps, "I've paid my debt." A moment later he falls back dead. With uncovered heads the posse kneel beside the Western hero with the realization that he has not died in vain.

Just Look
Two Reels—Thrilling Feature
MEN WHO DARE
Picturized by Forrest Halsey
Released Wed., Oct. 30, 1912

RELIANCE

Advance Releases: "The Organ Grinder's Ward," Drama, Sat., Oct. 19. Split Reel, "Johnny on the Spot" and "How Jack Won Out," Wed., Oct. 23. "Wireless Miracle," Sat., Oct. 26.

GAUMONT

A COUNTRY SCANDAL (Oct. 22).—The happy Parisian household of an officer in the Treasury Department is more or less deranged by his promotion to the governorship of a small country province. He and his wife, although pleased at the advance, dislike very much the isolation from their good boulevards. His wife, beautiful, chic and vivacious, creates a decided impression upon the gentlemen in the town of their new residence. Their interest is of such an emphatic order that their wives become the victims of a very strong order of jealousy. Tbe Parisienne, while without any overt intention of flirting, cannot help, because of the fact of her superior charms, from making a very good eye-full for the beauty lovers among tbe rurals. The matrons are much scandalized and all almost gossip their middle-aged lives away over the entirely innocent doings of the governor's lady. In desperation at the continued thraldom of their husbands, tbey write a letter to the head of the Treasury Department in Paris telling him that a great scandal is disturbing the peace of their city and ask that be investigate. An inspector is sent, who himself succumbs to the charms of the Parisienne. The inspector bas a tendency to inspect too minutely and he gives a very striking imitation of a man making love to another man's wife. The Parisienne angrily repudiates his advances and he is more or less orally ejected from the house. He is not a bad fellow at heart, however, and, not resenting his discomfiture, he decides to do the exiles a good turn. He realizes that they are uncomfortable in their suburban situation and pine for their gayer city. He recommends the regime of the governor to bis employer so highly that the latter is recalled to Paris to a superior position.

LOVE (Oct. 24).—Love shows the harrowing experience of a literary gentleman when one of his productions tells those wbo have "passed sixteen" to cheer up, that the sun of love is about to rise for them. It takes three letter carriers to carry the mash notes he receives. He keeps an appointment with a lady who signs herself "Past Sixteen." When he gets there, there are about thirty ladies of the maiden state who look as though they had passed sixteen at a dead gallop and look as though they had left it twenty years behind. The disappointed author seeks to lose his admirers who, with pertinacity worthy of tbe love of angels, pursue him in a merry chase of the usual French destructiveness and hilarity. He finally escapes them and resolves henceforth he will devote his literary talents to writing booklets for a dill pickle factory and essays on the frankfurter.

On the same reel:

CALINO MARRIES A SUFFRAGETTE.—This story tells of a gentleman struck by tbe strong mind which had inspired a woman's rights article in a newspaper. He is married to her or she is married to him, according to the way you look at it, and thereupon he enters upon a domestic reign of teror. She puts him through a course of sprouts that include physical training, which includes wrestling with the kitchen utensils, hooking friend wife up the back. He finally turns like the proverbial worm and shows that it is man's place in the universe to wear trousers, and in the last scenes he has friend wife eating out of his hand and giving the paw.

ECLIPSE

A PERSISTENT FLY-SWATTER (Oct. 23).—Charlie, like a good many other bald-headed men, is greatly bothered by the flies. One of the pesky creatures so annoys him that, after attempting to capture it in every possible way, he seizes a broom and begins to lay about him, wrecking destruction to nearly everything but Mister Fly.

He even pursues the pest out of the window, determined to kill it, and after a series of adventures, too many to enumerate, be is successful. There are to be no flies on Charlie.

On the same reel:

MAKING BRIAR PIPES.—The briar is cut from the stumps in Corsica and shipped to St. Claude, France, to be manufactured. The entire process, including weighing, cutting, sorting, turning of the bowl and stem, scraping out the bowl, polishing and packing is shown.

On tbe same reel:

IN THE OSSAU VALLEY, PYRENEES, FRANCE.—A fascinating travelogue film spreading before us many beautiful landscapes and places of interest in this valley of the Pyrenees, and several exciting scenes in a bull ring where the fierce animals are being trained for fighting.

CINES—GEORGE KLEINE

THE INVITED GUEST (Oct. 22).—Mr. Stout is highly flattered by an invitation to dine at a friend's house. After arraying himself in his "very best" and procuring a huge bouquet, he arrives, receiving a most cordial welcome from his host and hostess and their two children.

The children take it upon themselves to see that not one dull moment shall break into the pleasures of their honored guest and by all manner of pranks make life miserable for him.

After enduring it as long as possible, be starts to make his departure, but finds that the youngsters have smashed his hat and filled the pockets of his coat with water.

Upon reaching home Mr. Stout takes solemn oath to "regret" all family dinners thereafter. And incidentally the children receive a hearty thrashing and a long lecture upon the proper conduct of children when company is being entertained.

On the same reel:

ASCOLI PICENO (SOUTHERN ITALY).—An extremely interesting travelogue subject showing the Acqueduct, the Cemetery, the Bridge of Cecco De Ascoli and a series of views of the famous lime quarries in operation.

KINEMACOLOR
FILM SERVICE

Unlimited Supply Now Ready of

AMERICAN ACTED DRAMAS AND COMEDIES

Also Travel, Topical and Educational Subjects

EVERY ONE A HEADLINER

Have You Seen the Weekly "Fashions"?

ONE SERVICE TO EACH TOWN

Wire or Write for Our Exclusive Proposition. Applications Considered on Order of Arriva

KINEMACOLOR CO. of AMERICA

MECCA BUILDING, 1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

For the CONVENIENCE of EXHIBITORS in OHIO, MICHIGAN, INDIANA and WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Kinemacolor May Be Seen Every Evening at the Beautiful ALHAMBRA THEATRE, CLEVELAND, O.

Special Morning or Afternoon Exhibitions May Be Arranged With J. H. MICHAEL, ALHAMBRA THEATRE, CLEVELAND

RELIANCE

MEN WHO DARE (Oct. 30).—Urged on by an unscrupulous paying teller, George Mortimer steals money from the bank in which he works. He is arrested on the night his wife is giving a dinner party to their frients. George is condemned to ten years in prison. In the prison he meets with nothing but abuse—strict punishment being the rule for the slightest offense. Alone, Ruth's only consolation is the visits she is allowed to pay her husband. George is put to work in the prison shirt factory. Here the men have to work hard whether they are sick or well. Dr. Randolph, the new prison doctor, arrives to find George hung up by the thumbs in his cell. He orders him released at once. The warden is furious at the doctor's interference. And when George is taken out of the factory and sent to the hospital his anger knows no bounds—for he has a big order for shirts which must be attended to at once. The warden writes Ruth that she cannot see her husband any longer. The girl comes at once to the prison, where the warden says the doctor is responsible for the new rule. She curses the supposed tyrant and asks the warden how George is. He says he is well and happy. But at this moment George is brought from the hospital and the wife sees he is hardly able to stand. She hears her husband's defense of the new doctor and learns of all his kindness. That night she follows Dr. Randolph home and begs him to be kind to her husband. The prison factory foreman sees her with the doctor and goes at once to tell the warden. They plan to have the doctor removed from the prison and get Ruth to swear that she went to his home in the night. She refuses to do anything of the kind, but after they show her a convict dying—and then promise to be kind to her husband if she accuses the doctor—she agrees. The warden brings in a host of reporters to hear the woman's accusation. And before them all she tells of her visits to the doctor's home. But George, in his hospital cot, hears his wife's voice and comes out in time to hear what she is saying. He springs forward and makes Ruth deny it, telling them all what a good friend the doctor has been. And Ruth, breaking down, confesses her lies and tells why she told them. George, after his passionate defense of the doctor and his wife, falls dead. The reporters show the warden no mercy and force him to resign, as they will publish the whole story in the next day's papers. The doctor, filled with a great pity for George's young wife, leans over and very gently leads her away from her husband's body. This picture was made from Forrest Halsey's novel of the same name dealing with present prison reform system and the prison contract labor evil.

THE TRIALS OF FAITH (Nov. 2).—The Allens have a pretty daughter, Priscilla, whom they are very anxious to see married to John Winthrop the finest lad in old Plymouth town. So the parents of the young people arrange the match. All would have gone well but on the day that the papers were to have been signed and the engagement entered into, Faith, a poor relation of the Allens, arrived from England. John loses his heart to Faith and she returns his affection. He vows he will marry none hut her. This does not make Faith any too much of a favorite at the Allens, and Priscilla's treatment of the stranger is particularly harsh. One day in the woods Faith is kind to an Indian. In turn he teaches her the value of the herbs and the healing qualities of the various plants. A little child is taken ill in Plymouth town and Faith, with her knowledge of woodland remedies, cures him. She is called upon to attend others and she does everything so well that Priscilla sees a chance for her revenge. She spreads the information throughout the town that Faith must be a witch, else how would she be able to effect such marvelous cures. The governor has Faith arrested and the girl is condemned to be hung. John, in despair, goes to the Indians and secures their help. At the last minute—just as the fire is about to be applied —he dashes in with his Indian followers and snatches the girl from the very arms of death. Guided by their faithful Indian friend, John and Faith are sent off safely to a new land, bearing in their hearts a memory of the redskin who never forgets.

BIOGRAPH

IN THE AISLES OF THE WILD (Oct. 14).—A widower and his two daughters live in the wilds of the North Woods. They form the acquaintance of two trappers, Bob Cole and Jim Watson, who hunt in the neighborhood. As fate will have it, both trappers love the same girl—the elder sister, but she loves Bob, while the younger girl is attracted by Jim. The elder girl, however, through a woman's whim, pays marked attention to Jim simply to arouse jealousy in Bob. He, in temper, cannot reason her motive and leaves, so through pique she accepts and marries Jim. Later Bob revisits the place, feeling that the girl loves him best, and tries to induce her to go away with him. He finally succeeds and, as you may imagine, fate brings about justice.

A LIMITED DIVORCE (Oct. 17).—Mr. and Mrs. Peck have cultivated the habit of quarreling incessantly, and during one of their quarrels Mrs. Peck's brother visits them. He realizes what the trouhle is. It is simply a case of peevishness and so suggests a remedy —that is, to agree to a "time-limit" divorce. This plan strikes them favorably. Hence they sign an agreement to an absolute separation for five weeks. Peck immediately starts in to enjoy his bachelorhood at a nearby seaside resort, hut his "joys" are soon vanquished by the "glooms," for brother-in-law plays a trick which teaches Peck an indelible lesson.

On the same reel:

LIKE THE CAT, THEY CAME BACK.—The Commissioner of Police discovers that some one has been helping himself to his cigars and, to catch the culprit, he places some loaded cigars in the box in lieu of the good ones. The maid, following her usual custom, gives a handful of the "smokes" to her sweetheart, the Copper. The Copper meets the Lieutenant, who takes the cigars from him, but as neither of them has had a chance to try them, the nature of the "near-Havanas" is still a secret. On the Lieutenant's arrival at the police station a meeting of the Police Board is in session. The Commissioner gives the Lieutenant a dollar and asks him to go out and get a dollar's worth of good cigars, and—but why tell more?

THANHOUSER

THE WOMAN IN WHITE (Part One) (Oct. 20).—Walter Hartwright, a young drawing master, while in the suhurbs of London, one evening meets a mysterious woman in white, who asks to he directed to the city. He informs her, and watches her curiously as she slinks off. A little later he is accosted by several men, who describe the woman in white, say she has escaped from a lunatic asylum and that they are keepers who are hunting for her. Walter, impelled by pity, does not give them any information, and they continue their search in an entirely different direction.

The young man is engaged by a Mr. Fairlie as instructor for his young and beautiful niece, Laura. When Walter meets her he is struck hy her marvelous resemblance to the woman in white. Teacher and pupil soon fall violently in love, but Laura confides to Walter that she is bohnd by a pledge made to her father on his deathhed that she would marry Sir Percival Glyde.

Broken-hearted, Walter resigns his position and seeks forgetfulness by taking a trip to the fever districts of Central America. Sir Percival arrives to claim his hride and Laura fulfills her promise. Just before the wedding day the mysterious woman in white tracks her down and gives her a note in which she says that Sir Percival is unfit to be Laura's hushand and that she (the woman in white) has heen persecuted for many years because she knows his awful secret.

Laura, grief-stricken at having had to give Walter up, and full of forebodings because of the mysterious message of the woman in white, still steels herself to ohey the wish of her father. In her beautiful home she and Sir Percival are married, while from the outside the woman in white peers in the gaily decorated room and wrings her hands in anguish hecause she cannot prevent the sacrifice of a young, beautiful and innocent girl.

Part Two.—Laura Fairlie, although deeply in love with Walter Hartwright, who had been drawing master, became the bride of Sir Percival Clyde, a wicked nobleman, because her father, on his deathbed, arranged the marriage. Laura had been warned against Sir Percival by a mysterious woman in white, who in looks was the double of the young noblewoman. The woman in white claimed to know a dreadful secret concerning Sir Percival, but her warning was disregarded.

Sir Percival, who had married solely for money, was enraged when he found that the bulk of his wife's property was so tied up that she would only enjoy the income, and the money would not be distributed until after her death. He longed to have her out of the way, but wicked as he was, shrank from committing murder.

While strolling about his grounds one day he came face to face with the woman in white. She denounced him, but her agitation brought on a recurrence of the heart trouble with which she was afflicted and she fell fainting at his feet. He dragged her into a nearby summer-house just in time to get her out of the observation of his wife. Sir Percival glanced from one woman to the other, noted the wonderful resemblance between the two, and like a flash realized how he could solve his financial problem. He carried the woman in white into his house, stealthily placed her in one of the bedrooms, and by his medical knowledge was convinced she had but a few hours to live. When she expired, he drugged his wife and arrayed her in the stranger's clothes, then, still unconscious, he carried her to the door of the asylum, knowing she would be found, taken for the woman in white and placed in a cell. The dead woman was supposed by all concerned to be Lady Clyde, and when the rightful noblewoman escaped from the asylum she found that so far as the world was concerned she was dead.

One faithful friend came to her aid, the young drawing master who so steadfastly loved her. They were helped by an old servant, who found the dying message of the woman in white, and through it they were enabled to strip Sir Percival of his illgotten wealth and to reveal the secret he had long hidden from the world. In a desperate effort to circumvent them, Sir Percival was trapped in a blazing church and his fearful death obviated the necessity of any earthly punishment. Lady Clyde married the faithful Walter, and her later years were as happy as her early days had been unfortunate and gloomy.

TAKING CARE OF THE BABY (Oct. 27).—The small boy was sneaking quietly out of his home when he was halted by the familiar and hateful cry, "I want you to take care of the baby." He waited sullenly while his mother washed the little girl's face and finished making her spic and span. The order to accompany the child to the park was a hateful one, but it was modified by an offer of ten cents if he kept the little one out of all harm.

The boy and the girl went down the street together and the mother looked out of the window after them and thought what lovely children she had. Some hours later they returned, and the brother was loud in his praise of the goodness of little sister.

"She was just the loveliest child, mamma," said the boy. "I took her to the park and she slept in her little gocart all the afternoon. She wasn't a bit of trouble."

The mother patted the boy on the head and again thanked heaven that she had such lovely children. In the evening when her husband came home she told him what a manly, helpful fellow the boy was, and how soundly the baby slept after a refreshing outing in the open air.

Luckily for mamma she never knew what really happened in the park, for had she been aware of it she would have had hysterics. The boy never knew, either, and the baby didn't tell, but here is the true record.

The boy wheeled the baby sedately enough till he met some of his chums playing marbles. He accepted an invitation to join in the game, shoved the gocart to one side, and, boylike, never thought of the baby again until it was time to go home. Then, as she was asleep in the gocart, he simply started off with her.

While his attention was distracted the baby crawled out of the carriage, and this is what she did. She crossed a road, and was nearly run down by a whizzing auto; she robbed some birds of a dirty crust of bread and ate it, although mother had a hatred of germs and watched her diet carefully; she was just falling into the lake when a woman saved her; was nearly mashed flat by a piano that fell from a high window into which it was being hauled, and ended her adventures with a thrilling dynamite explosion of which she was the star. Then, weary and frightened, she went back to her gocart, and it was not a bit surprising that she slept calmly.

Yes, it is very easy to take care of the baby, if the baby will only help by taking care of itself.

On the same reel:

MARY'S GOAT.—When John Green was prosperous every one seemed to be his friend, but little by little his modest fortune ebbed away until at last he was forced to mortgage his home in the little village of Garretsville. Times did not get better for him, and finally he was told by the holder of the mortgage that unless he paid the principal of the note at once he would lose his home.

The town's banker would not advance him money, neither would any of his friends. Despair had already seized him when he sepped into the little country store owned by William Warren, a crusty old bachelor, who was the last person in the world he would have asked to help him. But the old storekeeper actually volunteered to loan the amount needed, but he exacted one condition, which was that unless the note was paid at a certain time John Green's daughter would have to marry him. The prety young girl did not view this condition with favor, but she and her father both felt confident that they could meet the note at maturity, so his curious condition was embodied in the note and the girl signed it.

The day the note was due John Green went proudly to the bank and drew out the amount necessary to pay the storekeeper. But on his way home he lost his pocketbook and the old storekeeper found it. The finder knew to whom the pocket book belonged, and decided not to return it until after the note was due, for he wanted the girl to marry him and he knew it was the only way to win her.

But he reckoned without Mary's goat. The intelligent animal, calmly and dignifiedly, delivered Mary from her trying position, and sent the wicked old storekeeper haffled from the little home.

CRYSTAL

A PAIR OF FOOLS (Oct. 27).—Pearl, a very pretty girl, is stopping at the only hotel in a wild Western town. Jack and Joe, two chums, meet her and she flirts with first one and then the other. Each tries to hide the fact of his flirtation from the other. Accidentally they both call on Pearl at the same time, only to find her very much taken up with Chester, a city drummer. Jack and Joe throw Chester out of the hotel, and then leave Pearl vowing never to see her again, but each tries to steal a march on the other, and visits her again, but she will have none of them, having again taken up with the smart city drummer.

On the same reel:

THE BLONDE LADY.—George and Mabel are in love with each other. Mabel's father is opposed to George and his suit. George writes Mabel a letter, asking her to meet him at Darling's restaurant. Father gets hold of the letter and decides to meet George himself, taking with him a large club. Mabel warns George. George disguises himself as a blonde lady and keeps the appointment. George flirts with father and they dine together. Father is very much smitten, and George steals father's hat. George then runs out on father, who does not know what to make of it until he arrives home, only to find George and Mabel planning their wedding day. Father raises a row until George threatens to expose his wild actions and career in the restaurant, and father has no other course left open to him than the giving of the paternal blessing.

ECLAIR

ROSIE (Oct. 29).—Mary one day finds in her fiance's possession a postcard from his friend Tim concerning his "Rosie," whom the writer declares to be a "beaut." Moreover, with a generosity which is somewhat startling, he offers to let his pal "take her out for a week." In a fit of jealousy Mary gives her John his ticket of leave and his engagement ring, and flounces off to a summer resort to nurse her wounded pride in solitude.

She finds little of the desired privacy in the gay hotel, and she seeks it on the ocean waves in a light canoe. Not being a graduate in navigation, she comes to grief, and crawls up, wet and much annoyed, upon an uninhabited island. The first object she comes upon, lying under an oak tree like a dropped acorn, is her John. Mary's annoyance is considerably increased when she learns from him that they are marooned there as hopelessly as Crusoe. She spurns his offer of his own dry clothing, and they agree to meet as little as they can.

As night comes on, the cold becomes stronger than her pride, and she is glad to creep out from behind her rock and beg for the comfort of the rejected coat. By morning the aching void where her breakfast should be puts another crimp in her spirit. Mary gets an object lesson in the high price of food. They breakfast on a microscopic fish, the best specimen that the incomplete angler, John, can lure to his hook; but not until the mischievous lover has first secured his payment in kisses from the famished and exasperated Mary. In view of the dimensions of the meal the cost of living seems to Mary unreasonably high.

In short, John improves the advantage of his position so thoroughly that by the time they are rescued by a passing doryman and taken back to the hotel Mary has all but forgotten her rage against that mean, horrid "Rosie." John shows her to Mary through his spy-glasses, dancing innocently on the waves, her name, written in beautiful gilt letters about her stern, "Rosie."

Two cheeks are together once more. Night closes in; the Rosie skims full sailed across the watery path of the moon, and from the lookout comes the word, "All's well!"

THE TRANSGRESSION OF DEACON JONES (Oct. 31).—Deacon Hiram Jones is tendered the nomination for mayor of his town on the Purity League ticket, which has for its platform the establishment of a Curfew Law and the abolition of the moving picture business.

The deacon's daughter, Mollie, is in love with Dave Baker, but the deacon will not allow her to have anything to do with him on account of his being in the hated moving picture business.

A few months before the election the deacon attends the County Fair and, unknown to him, a moving picture concern is taking views in the Fair Grounds. The deacon is attracted by a three-shell game and, getting the fever, places a few bets on the elusive pea. He is arrested for gambling, but buys the officer off.

Just before the election for mayor takes place, Dave, in his service, gets the reel showing the County Fair scenes. He runs the pictures off before the show commences and sees the good deacon playing the three-shell game. Dave realizes that he has the deacon where he wants him and sends for him to come to the theatre. The deacon does so and is horrified on being shown the picture. He begs Dave not to show it, but without success until at last Dave offers to compromise, with Mollie as the basis. It is a bitter pill for the deacon to swallow, but rather than face the results of the picture being shown, he finally consents, much to the delight of his daughter and future son-in-law.

A STUDY OF THE FLY (Nov. 1).—The last few years have aroused men of mighty ability to combat this seemingly innocent little pest. Scientific and medical researches made the horrible discovery that the house fly is a more deadly enemy to humanity at large than all wars, fatalities and plagues other than those which the fly itself carries.

This film discovers the dangerous little insects swarming about the dead and decomposing body of a hog which has succumbed to cholera. There it is seen feasting on foul flesh and then crawling under this carrion body to lay its eggs.

"LOVE AND WAR"

TUESDAY, OCT. 22ND

A TREMENDOUS MILITARY DRAMA WITH BEAUTIFUL HEART INTEREST

—COMING—

Oct. 27—"The Tree Imp"
Oct. 29—"A Woman Alone"
Nov. 3—"Weary's Revenge"
Nov. 5—"Cupid On the Job" and "His Dress Suit"
Nov. 10—"The Deacon's Shoes" and "His Cook Lady"

MAJESTIC

540 West 21st Street, New York City

We are shown the generation of its larvæ into life and the peculiar phenomena which it has of liquifying the decaying flesh that it may obtain its nourishment.

Under highly microscopic conditions, its dangerous physical parts, such as the hooks about the mouth, the respiratory cord at the other end, are clearly depicted.

Then, as maggots, which is their common term, they are shown crawling into the decayed recesses of the flesh, there to remain till they break their shell and issue forth as flies.

After all this repugnant filth, we see them fly and feast upon a cookie which a dear little child afterwards most innocently picks up and eats.

On the same reel:

THE MENDER, THE PIPE AND THE VASE.—Gontran has a model wife. His wishes are hers and her wishes are his. "Ah! If I only had a good pipe." "Oh! If I only had a prety vase." She loves flowers and he likes to smoke a good pipe.

The following day Mr. Gontran surprises his wife by giving her a vase, while she gives him a pipe. Later Mrs. Gontran complains that he is trying to smoke her out, and she throws the pipe out of the window. Mr. Gontran finds that his wife is trying to crowd him out with her flower mania and throws the vase out of the window. Pipe and vase come crashing at the feet of a porcelain mender, who is passing on the street. He mends the broken articles. Mr. and Mrs. Gontran regret, however, their hasty action. The mender brings the mended pipe and vase up and becomes a medium for reconciliation. Mr. Gontran presents his wife with the vase and Mrs. Gontran offers her husband the pipe, and the mender has mended their shattered joys.

AUNT BRIDGET (Nov. 3).—The summer is very hot and Aunt Bridget would like to spend it in the country, but her nephew and niece, Joseph and Irene, have not invited her. But if Aunt Bridget is poor in money, she is rich in ideas. She will outwit them. Knowing the attorney, Ducarneau, she asks him to write her a letter as follows: "You have inherited $50,000.00. Let me have your instructions." A dealer in cardboard money will deliver the inheritance in real money bags and it will be placed in the cupboard. The letter will remain on the table so that Joseph and Irene will not fail to see it.

The nephew and niece pay her a visit, but are very anxious to get back to the country, it is so hot in Paris. Of course, they do not fail to "bite at the bait" and insist that Aunt Bridget come with them. In the country she leads a very fine life, well taken care of by Joseph and Irene.

In the autumn she complains of the cold and wants to return to Paris, but they insist that she remain. They even go to Paris to get her warmer clothing. This journey had a purpose. They want to see the famous fortune, which they hope will be their's some day.

While they are absent, Aunt Bridget reads in the paper that the lottery ticket she has won $100,000.00. Aha, she will laugh heartily when Joseph and Irene return.

But they are greatly surprised when they find that the money is "fake," and return to put Aunt Bridget out. They do it so quickly and make her take the first train for Paris at such haste, that she cannot find time to tell them the good news.

It is only when the train has left they find out their mistake. They regret very much that they have misunderstood so "precious" an aunt. But it is too late.

SOLAX

AT THE PHONE (Nov. 1).—Mr. Dean, a wealthy broker, at the hospital awaits with nervous expectancy the results of an operation on his wife. With impatience he paces up and down the ward-room, and finally, in order to fill in the untenable space he decides to call up his "kiddies" and gain solace in a few moments' talk with them. When central gives him the connection he hears, first to his bewilderment, and then to his utter dismay and unrestrainable excitement, two strange voices saying, "Well, if the kids make a holler, we'll shut 'em up for good, eh? This safe will be easy."

Dean doesn't know whether to stay at the hospital and wait to hear the result of the operation or run to the rescue of his little ones. He is about to rush out of the ward, when the doctors come back bearing his wife. They notice his wild excitement, and by force keep him out of her way. The strain is too great for Dean. He falls in a dead faint.

At the house before Mr. Dean had called, the nurse, in a rush to receive and hurry away with her beau, forgets about hanging up the receiver, after talking to the butcher. The burglars enter, go through the house and decide that they will not hurt the sleeping children, so long as they slept—but in discussing their plans in the library near the safe and open 'phone—which central vainly tried to have closed—they are overheard by the anxious Mr. Dean.

The burglars are surprised at their work by a wideawake policeman and the children are saved and brought to the side of their mother. When Mr. Dean is revived he starts for the 'phone to telephone the police to save his children, but to his amazement and delight, he sees them in the arms of his dear wife.

MAJESTIC

THE TREE IMP (Oct. 27).—Rex, a rich young man who is the idol of a summer resort, grows sick unto death of being run after, and escapes to the woods, where he comfortably settles under a big tree. An irresistible imp in the branches above mischievously tosses an apple into his lap. Great is his astonishment when he sees her charming self. He invites her down and, scorning his proffered hand, she jumps lightly to the ground, hugging her book and her apples. They become great friends, and when the imp notices the position of the sun, which means dinner is ready, and runs off abruptly, he is disappointed. The next day he chances to come upon the farm cottage where she lives alone with her grandmother, and the delighted imp invites him up onto the porch for a glass of lemonade. The two are surprised by Miss Gay—one of the many determined to catch him—who looks the imp over jealously and carries the reluctant Rex away. Jealousy springs up in the imp's heart. As for Rex, he cannot keep away from the imp. Happy, carefree hours they spend together. One day the imp rescues Miss Gay, who has toppled into the water. But when Rex carries Miss Gay back to the hotel the other ladies stare so scornfully at the imp's meagre apparel and her glorious hair, which hangs about her shoulders like a halo, that she runs ahruptly away, dropping Miss Gay's hat. Rex hastens after and finds her mournfully holding out her skirts. He takes her hand, but seeing something in his eyes she runs away frightened. She begs Grandma to buy her a pretty dress, and when Grandma flatly refuses drops in a sobhing heap—then, seized with an inspiration, rushes to the attic and fishes an old-fashioned evening dress of her mother's from a trunk. Gleefully donning it and doing her hair up in imitation of the hotel style, she strolls down before the hotel. Miss Gay and several others poke fun at her. She whirls upon them and, in a blinding rage, lays them low, declaring that at least her hair is her own. Rex has overheard, gives the ladies a withering glance, and pursues the imp, finding her sobbing her heart out against her tree. He tells her he loves her "in any old clothes." Later, the hotel boy gives the ladies a note, "The imp and I are to be married. Hurrah. Rex."

A WOMAN ALONE (Oct. 29).—Mabel Weston falls in love with a dashing young stock hroker to whom her father takes a violent dislike. She marries him in spite of her father, who tells her to choose between him and her lover. A constant gambler on the stock market, her husband finally loses his last dollar and commands Mabel to go to her father and borrow some money. She goes, and is refused the loan, tells her hushand that her father will not help them, and he rushes from the room in despair. Meanwhile, the father reconsiders his act and goes to his daughter's home with the money. Just as he is handing it to her a shot is heard and they discover that the husband has committed suicide.

Mabel starts out to support herself as a stenographer and leads a very lonely and miserable existence, due to the rude advances made by her employer. A young lawyer in an adjoining office makes her acquaintance by means of a bunch of violets, which he places on the end of a pole and transfers to her desk across an airshaft and through a window.

He watches Mahel constantly from his office window and one day sees her employer forcing his attentions on her. He arrives upon the scene just in time to administer a good thrashing to the employer and persuade Mabel that she need no longer be a woman alone.

CHAMPION

THY WILL BE DONE (Oct. 21).—Bob Shirley, whose grubstake has given out, is befriended by the Morgans, Joe and his daughter Gertie, aged eleven years. Bob later becomes Morgan's partner, and one day, while prospecting, Morgan is injured by a fall caused hy a cave-in on the edge of a cliff. Boh, coming to Morgan's assistance, discovers gold which the dislodgment of dirt has laid bare. Boh, although joyous at his discovery, does not neglect his friend but carries him back to his shack. He, realizing that death is near, begs of Boh to take care of his daughter. Bob promises. The claim that Bob has staked proves valuable and, realizing that Gertie needs an education, he sends her East. Five years later Bob visits Gertie and, deciding to settle in the East, takes his ward to live with him. The guardian has grown to love his ward, but she has fallen in love with a young man by the name of Bert Foster. The young man proposes to Gertie and she accepts him—the guardian is asked his consent. Although it pains him greatly he gives his consent to the marriage. The young folks are married. Before three years have passed Bert has cast his affections elsewhere, neglecting his devoted wife. He showers money and attention on a designing woman. To avoid ruin he gets mixed up in a crooked deal. The guardian sees Bert in company with the other woman and warns the boy to change his conduct. The hoy resents his interference; the men quarrel. Bert learns of the failure of his deal and is advised to leave the country. The other woman learning of Bert's ruin refuses to have anything more to do with him. That and his other trouble cause Bert to become morose and he tries to drown his troubles in drink. He tells his wife of his ruin; she seeks aid from her guardian when he calls on her. Bert seeing her with the guardian misconstrues his wife's action. His distorted mind causes him to believe his wife unfaithful. He orders the guardian from the house and hurls a base insinuation at his wife. The wife at his insinuation gives vent to her rage. The guardian returns in time to prevent the wife from bodily injury. The detectives who are in search of Bert arrive. Bert, in his endeavor to escape, tries to crawl down from the second balcony; the railing hreaks, he falls and is killed. The heartbroken wife realizes what kind of a man she has been married to. She is filled with grief and turns to her guardian again for protection.

POWERS

JUST A WOMAN (Oct. 25).—Mamie, a girl of the underworld, whose only education has been that of crime, becomes a daring housebreaker and succeeds in looting many of the apartment houses and private residences in the suburbs. Completely nonplused, the police are obliged to call in special detective service and a noted sleuth is assigned to the case.

Detective White frequents the haunts of the girl, finally meeting her and ingratiating himself in the rôle of a lover. Disguised as one of the habitues of the dive, he tries for some time to secure damaging evidence, but is unsuccessful. In his attentions to Mamie he arouses the jealousy of Big Bill, a notorious crook, whose suspicions are aroused as to the detective's true calling. Through persistent shadowing he finds his suspicions correct, and just as the detective had planned to make a clean haul, denounces him before the gang and in the hearing of the girl.

Although thoroughly disillusioned, the girl cannot forget the one good influence that entered her life, and as the gang is about to wreak its vengeance, she throws herself upon the gun in the hands of Big Bill and in the struggle receives the shot intended for the detective.

"101" BISON

A DAUGHTER OF THE REDSKINS (Oct. 26).—A regiment of cavalry surprise the warlike Sioux and put them to flight. Colonel Graham and others personally attend to the wants of the wounded, and the Colonel finds a wounded squaw in one of the tepees, with a litle girl crouched in terror by her side. The Colonel sends for a canteen, gives the squaw some water, promises to look after the child and, closing the eyes of the Indian woman after she dies, he leads the little girl away, leaving the canteen in the tepee.

The Colonel takes the child home, where she is raised by his wife and himself. Fifteen years pass and Nechia, the Indian girl, is educated at Carlisle, where she purchases some heautiful Indian dresses. She returns to the Colonel's home and soon becomes the object of admiration to Lieutenants Stark and Leo. Stark later proposes and is accepted.

Old Chief Gray Eagle, at the head of the Sioux warriors, jumps the reservation and commits outrages. Colonel Graham receives orders to ride against the Indians and to punish them. Nechia learns for the first time that Gray Eagle is her grandfather, and blood begins to tell and her sympathies turn to her native race.

The Indians attack a small settlement, which is rescued by the timely arrival of the cavalry. Many Indians are taken prisoners, including the implacable Gray Eagle. At the fort he comes face to face with Nechia and tells her she is a daughter of the Sioux.

Colonel Graham treats with the tribe, offering to release Gray Eagle if they will return to the reservation. The Indians refuse. As the troops ride out, Nechia steals to the window of Gray Eagle's cell. He commands her to go and tell the braves to fight. He gives her a feather from his hair. Nechia obeys. She reaches the Indian camp in time to prevent their making peace terms, tears off her riding costume, disclosing her Indian garb underneath. She is henceforth all Sioux. The braves attack the officers and kill a number of them. The Indians, led by Nechia, attack the fort, capture it and release Gray Eagle. As reinforcements ride up Nechia stands beside Gray Eagle. Stark comes up and, not understanding the situation, runs to Nechia. Gray Eagle fires as Nechia throws herself between them, and she dies in Stark's arms.

MILANO

KELLY GOES TO WAR (Oct. 26).—Kelly loved his sweetheart and the girl loved Kelly, but her father wouldn't consent to his daughter marrying a namby-pamby sort of gentleman. He was a veteran and his son-in-law must bear the scars of battle and have trophies galore. A mere matter of collecting a few war souvenirs and a few scars didn't deter Kelly, so he started out to be a real honest-to-God warrior. He went to enlist but the army didn't want him. Undaunted he went to a collector of war junk and he bought enough equipment to outfit a whole battalion. He even included a life preserver, for Kelly had determined that he wouldn't sink in any event. So he chartered a boat and, placing his formidable armament aboard, with the cannon well in front of his rowboat, started out to win laurels of the carnage of battle and come home triumphant. But even a brave soldier must eat and so when Kelly started to cook he forgot all about the amunition around him, and poof! up went the ammunition and up went Kelly. But he was wearing the talisman of love and he landed right in the midst of a big hattle. With a whirl that sent the enemy flying he grabbed a flag; it didn't make any difference what kind of a flag it was, as long as it was a flag. And before the routed warriors knew what he was about he made a dash for the ocean, for Kelly was in a hurry to get back and claim the girl. In fact a shell fired hurled him much faster than he wanted to travel. So fast, indeed, that he went down to the bottom of the sea. But he rose again, though wet. He smelled smoky enough, he had a trophy, and now he wanted some kind of an enemy. Any kind of an enemy would do, so he packed a little baby Turk in a suitcase and started home. With as large a collection of trophies as any militant warrior ever could conceive of he presented himself at his prospective father-in-law's and claimed honor as a veteran and his girl. He won both.

NESTOR

THE LADY BARBER OF ROARING GULCH (Oct. 25).—Violet De Ray bursts upon Roaring Gulch like a meteor from a clear sky. Roaring Gulch wants waking up, and awakes. Violet opens up a barber shop and every rube within riding or driving radius discovers that his chin whiskers require trimming or that it is the fashion to go clean shaven nowadays.

Violet not only does a ripping good business, but she unconsciously has a hand in hurrying along several matrimonial affairs which have hung fire.

This is notably the case with Si, who has loved bashfully and at a respectful distance for years. He is lured into Violet's shop and after his wiry chin whiskers have been metamorphosed into a stylish military goatee of an early date, and his eyebrows have been dabbed with perfume, he emerges elated and almost blatant, and this, coupled with Mandy's desire to protect him from such evil influences, cements a long drawn out romance.

Marcia Allen is a flirt. Her pa takes her to the window, so that she may see her Jack being patted and petted, after which Marcia is not so coy.

Pa's desire to get into the lady barber's shop never consummates, owing to ma's vigilance, and when pa, with malice aforethought, injures his hand so that he cannot shave himself, ma officiates with disastrous results as far as pa's beauty and comfort are concerned.

The ladies of Roaring Gulch eventually meet and decide to oust this interloper and innovator. They swoop down upon her in a body; they look through the window and see the minx kissing a gentleman of Italian extraction. They enter and make themselves very unpleasant and discover that the man is Violet's husband.

Violet is persuaded to leave and does so in good financial circumstances, and Bill the barber's smile returns and he does his customary business as of yore.

REX

THROUGH A HIGHER POWER (Oct. 27).—Antonio, a handsome Mexican, is in love with Estella, a Mexican maiden; but an attractive American girl arrives and fickle Antonio immediately falls in love with her. Upon learning of this the Mexican maiden attempts to stab her lover. He overpowers her and sneeringly dismisses her. Then, in order to rid himself of her altogether, and to further his ends, he steals the money from the strongbox and accuses her of the theft. She is sent to prison for a term of years. He marries the American girl, who is an adventuress, and one day shortly after runs away with her American lover, taking all the money with her. The Mexican maiden while crossing the prison corridor beholds Antonio being led to confinement for a crime committed by him as a result of his American wife's treachery.

GEM

WOMAN IN WHITE (Oct. 22).—Walter Hartwright, a young drawing master, is loved by his beautiful pupil, but they cannot marry, for she is engaged to Sir Percival Clyde, an unscrupulous nobleman, and she is too sincere a girl to break the engagement. Soon after the marriage she finds Sir Percival has only wed her for her money, and when she refuses to allow him to squander her fortune he becomes desperate and plans to force her into signing the estate to him. He has a friend, an adviser, in the person of Count Fosco, who devises the following plan to be rid of the stubborn Laura. They shrink from murder but determine she shall be considered legally dead in order that her great fortune shall revert to the husband. The Count knows a very delicate invalid who closely resembles Laura and he has the unfortunate Laura imprisoned in a private madhouse while the dying invalid, who is her double, is installed in her place in Laura's home. The invalid conveniently dies and is buried for Laura, who escapes from the private madhouse only to find that she is legally dead. None can identify her, for during the time she was imprisoned the distress and confinement had played havoc with her beauty, and the nervously apprehensive and world-weary woman who starts at every falling leaf bears but little resemblance to the lighthearted and impulsive Laura. Unable to comprehend the cruel web in which she is entrapped she visits the cemetery to look upon her own tomb. While she is tracing with wondering eyes the inscription of her own death and burial she encounters the startled gaze of Walter Hartwright, her former sweetheart. He understands the cruel deception at a glance and swears to devote his life to her service, and promises to right her in the world's eyes, although he realizes he has a worthy foeman in the person of the treacherous and resourceful Count Fosco.

Reel Two.—Walter's hands are tied, for at the first move against Fosco he is told that if he is molested Laura will again be imprisoned in the mad house. This is a threat more effectual than violence. Walter dare not move. In despair he applies for advice to an Italian friend who spies upon Fosco and finds that he is a spy for whom the Italian secret societies are searching. He arms Walter with a note offering the Count two days to leave the country if he will promise to right Laura's wrongs. The brave Count weakens like a child when he finds the secret societies have found him out, for he knows they have sworn to have his life. Walter, armed with the surrendered evidence of the Count, call upon her husband, the plotting Sir Percival Clyde, but they arrive too late to denounce him, for he perishes in a fire. Laura is restored to her rights and Fosco, although he adopts disguises and seeks foreign shores, is hunted down by the Italian societies, and one moonlight night a Parisian gendarme stumbles across the disguised body of a large-sized man. It is the wise and desperate Fosco, who has paid the penalty for his treachery.

VICTOR

THE ANGEL OF THE STUDIO (Oct. 25).—Little Roxie, the studio slavey, has worshipped at the shrine of art for a large portion of her brief existence until, to her mind, an artist appears a greater being than the ruler of a powerful nation.

Two of the artists occupying studios in the building are especially interesting to Roxie. One, Duncan Andrews, because he is successful, and the other, Charles Moss, because he is apparently most unfortunate. She pities him and pity is akin to love. Andrews is a sober, hard-working young man, while Moss is a dissipated fellow, who has wasted his time and money in riotous living and is threatened with dispossess proceedings from the studio.

Moss receives a letter from a wealthy uncle who informs him that as he is bent upon following art, he will aid him if he can show any practical results from his years of study. He also states that he will call upon him the following afternoon at two o'clock. Moss is filled with consternation at the prospect of a visit from his avuncular relative, because he has no results to show him, excepting a barren studio half filled with rickety furniture.

In despair, he sarcastically calls Roxie's attention to his destitution and shows her the letter.

Instantly an idea for his salvation comes to her mind and she proceeds to put it into execution. By means of a clever ruse, she gets Andrews away from his gorgeously appointed studio and then leads the half-willing Moss into it and tells him to receive his uncle in it, claiming it as his own. She next meets the uncle on the stairs and, upon his inquiry for his nephew, she tells him what a wonderful artist he is and proudly leads him up the stairs to the rooms. The uncle is astounded by the vividness of his nephew's success and congratulates him heartily. In the meantime, Roxie sits at the bottom of the stairs, guarding against Andrews' return. Now Andrews has not been as completely deceived by Roxie's ruse as she believes, and he returns almost immediately to get at the bottom of things. Roxie is terribly frightened but, pulling herself together, she takes Andrews into Moss' miserably furnished studio and explains matters to him and appeals to his generosity. Andrews is amused and agrees to help her, if only he be allowed to enjoy the fun. He therefore returns to his own studio accompanied by Roxie and greets the perturbed Moss as a dear friend. Then the uncle decides he wants to see Moss do some work and asks him to get a model and start something. Roxie again comes to Moss' rescue by whispering to him that she will put on a costume and pose for him, and she slips away with one of Andrews' splendid costumes, an Egyptian affair, and goes down below stairs to array herself in it. While she is gone, one of Andrews' models arrive, a tall, statuesque beauty, and Andrews jokingly orders her to pose for Moss. Moss and the model become strongly fascinated by each other at first sight and she retires to assume a Grecian costume. Then Roxie returns and proudly mounts the dais and strikes a pose. Moss is mortified by her appearance and, the model entering at the same time, Moss roughly orders Roxie from the platform and places the model thereon. Roxie's poor litle heart is broken as she slinks away to a corner of the room. The uncle then says he must go and, turning to Moss, shakes his hand and says, "You are doing so well you don't need any help!" This cheerful statement cuts the ground from under Moss' feet and he is in worse despair than before. As the uncle leaves he takes Roxie with him and, laughing over his litle joke, he writes a check for $5,000, payable to his nephew, and tells Roxie to give it to him. Then he leaves chuckling.

Roxie at first starts to destroy the check, but better feelings prevailing, she goes back upstairs to the studio with it. As soon as Moss sees her he starts to abuse her, blaming all his troubles upon her. She finally succeeds in giving him the check, when his anger turns to the wildest joy and he shows it proudly to the model and Andrews. Roxie has slunk from the room and resumes her seat upon the stairs. Gaining permission from Andrews to paint the beautiful model, Moss escorts the latter down stairs to his own rooms and, in order to let them pass, Roxie has to rise and is crowded to the wall, her only reward being to watch the studio door close upon her adored hero and his latest flame.

KEYSTONE

THE GROCERY CLERK'S ROMANCE (Oct. 28).—The grocery clerk's sympathies are aroused by the sight of hardworking Mrs. Brown, whose shiftless husband sits around and smokes and spends his time at the saloon. The clerk wins Mrs. Brown's gratitude by doing the washing for her and taking care of the chores around the house. Brown saunters out to the woods and comes upon three conspirators, who accuse him of being a spy and decide to kill him. Brown is tied to a tree stump, a charge of dynamite is placed under him, a fuse attached and lit, and Brown is saying his prayers when his little son finds him. The boy rushes home with the news, and the clerk does all in his power to prevent the rescue party reaching Brown in time. In his frantic struggles Brown frees himself and makes his escape just as the explosion takes place and the rescuers arrive. All believe him dead, and the grocery clerk immediately proposes to Mrs. Brown and she accepts him. They lose no time in getting a minister and the ceremony is about to proceed when Brown, who has gone to the village saloon to steady his shattered nerves, is informed that his wife is marrying the grocery clerk. He dashes to the scene and prevents the wedding, chases the clerk away and takes his unwilling spouse home—to work—again.

On the same reel:

AT CONEY ISLAND.—The Boob takes his girl to Coney Island, where she flirts with a married man and eludes the Boob. They visit all the amusement devices, and many comical scenes are shown as the Boob tries to get his sweetheart back again. They finally land in a ballroom where the clumsy and heavy-footed Boob is pushed aside for the light-footed rival. His little son, however, has been on his trail and brings his mother to the scene, where she asserts herself in a positive manner and leads her erring husband away by the ear. The girl, weeping and regretful, throws herself into the arms of the happy Boob.

BRONCHO

THE STORY OF THE SAVAGE MODOCK MINE (Oct. 23).—This picture displays the wonderful versatility of the Broncho stock company, showing pleasing contrasts between a handsomely appointed banquet hall, with men in evening clothes, and sensational scenes in the West.

After-dinner speeches are being made, and the toastmaster calls upon a man named Allen, who, while apparently young in years, has snow-white hair, and he tells how his hair turned white in one night.

As he speaks the scenes he describes are shown in the film.

John Allen, his father, joined the gold rush with a partner. After many hardships they finally located a good claim and worked it, securing gold beyond their wildest dreams. The partner went hunting one day and was killed by Indians, and Allen received the news from a trapper who found the body. Saddened, he resolved to come home and sent a letter to his wife and son that he would join them in a few months. The mine caved in and buried him alive. Allen heard no further word from his father, and as time elapsed his mother died. Alone in the world he went west to search for his father, and one night as he sat alone by his campfire a vision of the dead man appeared. The next day his hair had turned white. The spirit of his father guided him to the mine, where he secured assistance and dug out the dead man. This scene is very cleverly shown taken from the interior, and showing the picks and shovels breaking through, permitting ever-widening rays of light to lighten up the inside of the mine.

HOW SHORTY KEPT HIS WORD (Oct. 30).—Jim Burns, a young lawyer, defends Shorty, accused of moonshining. In a great court room scene he secures the acquittal of his client, and wins his gratitude. Burns' sweetheart, Ethel, goes on a visit to a neighboring town and comes back in a stage coach. Burns goes to meet her, and on the way his sorse shies at a rattlesnake. Jim draws his revolver and shoots the reptile, continuing on the way.

Powers, a Government detective, is sent to the district to secure evidence against the moonshiners, and rides in the same coach with Ethel. His unwelcome attentions are resented by Ethel, and when she meets Jim she tells him of the insults. Jim promptly knocks the detective down, and friends prevent any further trouble. Shorty sees the detective and recognizes him as the man who killed his brother in trying to arrest him, and Shorty has sworn vengeance. Ethel washes her hands at a well and Jim goes to bring her a towel. In his absence the detective appears and tries to apologize. Shorty, concealed by a bush, fires and kills the detective, who falls at Ethel's feet. Jim rushes back as well as others attracted by the shot, and all, including the girl, believe that Jim has done the shooting. He is arrested and tried for murder.

Shorty, in making his escape, is dangerously injured by his horse falling upon him. His partner carries him to his cabin and sends for a doctor, who calls frequently on his patient. One day the doctor lays down a newspaper, which contain glaring headlines of the murder trial. Shorty, in his weakened condition, determines to save Burns and, fighting back the doctor who seeks to detain him, he leaps on a horse and gallops to the courthouse, where he absolves Jim in a highly dramatic scene.

MUSICAL PLOTS

By Ernest Luz.

A few rules governing their use.

The cues given will allow for natural ending of strains, unless "Leader" cue, in which case a quick seque should be made unless otherwise stated. Avoid Overtures and Potpourris in their entirety; each picture creates its own selection or potpourri. The cues are so stated as to give you both a prompt and direct cue. You are safe in making seque as soon as you

(Continued on page 30.)

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—The Bowstring (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—The Ship of Lions.....

AMERICAN

Oct. 16—The Border Detective (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 17—The New Cowpuncher (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—The Best Man Wins (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Way of the Transgressor (Dr).1000
Oct. 24—The Wooers of Mountain Kate (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 28—One-Two-Three, or the Story of a Wager (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—Chiquita, the Dancer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Wanderer (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—Maiden and Men (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 7—God's Unfortunate (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 9—The Starbucks (two reels) (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 11—Man's Calling (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 14—The Intrusion at Lompoc (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 16—Jim Bentley's Adventure (Dr.)....1000

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept. 20—The Doctor's Double.....
Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail .....
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line .....
Oct. 4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct. 11—The Sergeant's Boy.....
Oct. 18—The Vengeance of Fate (2 reels) (Mil.) .....
Oct. 25—The Colonel's Ward (2 reels).....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Oct. 8—Indian Raiders (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 12—The Tattoo (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 15—Star-Eyes Strategy (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—Early Days in the West (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 22—Hunted Down (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—A Daughter of the Redskins (2 reels) .....
Oct. 29—The Cowboy Guardians (Dr.).....
Nov. 2—Trapper Bill, King of Scouts (2 reels .....

BRONCHO

Sept. 25—His Better Self.....
Oct. 2—For the Honor of the 7th (Mil.)..
Oct. 9—An Indian Legend.....
Oct. 16—The Sheriff's Adopted Child (Dr.).
Oct. 23—The Story of the Savage Modock Mine .....
Oct. 30—How Shorty Kept His Word.....

CHAMPION

Sept. 23—The Rose of the Island (Dr.)....
Sept. 30—Her Whole Story (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—To Err is Human (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—The Girl in the Gingham Gown (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Thy Will Be Done.....
Oct. 26—Sue (Dr.) .....

COMET

Oct. 5—Love Will Find a Way (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—"'Ostler Joe" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Double Debt (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Taming a Bachelor (Com.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Romance of the Rockies (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 21—She Married a Hero (Com.).....1000
Oct. 26—The Mule Ranch Mystery (W. Dr.).1000
Oct. 28—Dooley's Triumph (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—A Tempest in a Teapot (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—A Four-Cornered Wedding (Com.).1000

CRYSTAL

Oct. 13—Her Dressmaker's Bill (Com.).....
Oct. 13—McQuirk the Sleuth (Com.).....
Oct. 20—Bella's Beaux (Com.).....
Oct. 20—The Only Woman in Town (Com.)
Oct. 27—A Pair of Fools.....
Oct. 27—The Blonde Lady .....
Nov. 3—O, Such a Night (Com.)..... 525
Nov. 3—Marriage a la Carte (Com.)..... 475

ECLAIR

Sept. 29—Love and Science.....
Oct. 1—The Old Doctor's Humanity (Dr.).
Oct. 3—The Lucky Loser (Com. Dr.).....
Oct. 6—The Lock of Hair (Dr.).....
Oct. 8—All on Account of a Ring (Com.)..
Oct. 8—Surprising Eliza (Com.) .....
Oct. 10—A Choice by Accident (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 13—The White Bonnet (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—The Hoodoo Letter (Com.) .....
Oct. 15—One on Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)

Feet

Oct. 20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)....
Oct. 20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)..
Oct. 22—The Home Coming .....
Oct. 24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)..
Oct. 27—Brusia (Travel) .....
Oct. 29—Rosie (Com.) .....
Oct. 31—The Transgression of Deacon Jones (Com.) .....
Nov. 3—Aunt Bridget (Com.) .....
Nov. 5—Silent Jim .....

GREAT NORTHERN

Sept. 14—Aunt Jane's Will (Com. Dr.)...1000
Sept. 21—Benoit's Fortune (Com. Dr.)..... 989
Sept. 28—A Child of Genius (Com.)..... 679
Sept. 28—A Sly Servant (Com.)..... 314
Oct. 5—I Am Going Out for a Shave (Com.) 726
Oct. 5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)..... 253
Oct. 7—The Black Chancellor (3 reels) (Dr.)

GAUMONT

Oct. 3—Zigoto to the Rescue.....
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive.....
Oct. 8—Love's Test .....
Oct. 10—The Tie Eeternal .....
Oct. 12—The Cotton Industry .....
Oct. 15—Beethoven .....
Oct. 17—The Legend of Cagliostro.....
Oct. 19—A Modern Cinderella.....
Oct. 22—A Country Scandal.....
Oct. 24—Love and Calino Marries a Suffragette .....
Oct. 26—Zigoto Has a Good Heart.....
Oct. 29—A Domestic Treasure .....
Oct. 29—The Gorges of Albuquerque.....
Nov. 1—Zoological Specimens of the Pond..
Nov. 1—Bruges, the Venice of the North....

GEM

Sept. 17—Down by the Sounding Sea (Dr.)
Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)..
Oct. 1—The Convict's Return .....
Oct. 8—Orphans (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—What the Bell Told (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—The Woman in White (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 29—The Old Dollmaker (Dr.).....

IMP

Oct. 10—The Bridal Room (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—A Bronx Cocktail (Com.).....
Oct. 12—A Bad Tangle (Com.) .....
Oct. 14—The Old Sweetheart (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Fugitives (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—The Postman .....
Oct. 19—Eventful Bargain Day.....
Oct. 21—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelon (Com.) .....
Oct. 24—King the Detective and the Smugglers .....
Oct. 26—Joe the Pirate.....
Oct. 26—Early in the Morning.....
Oct. 28—Yvonne, the Foreign Spy (Dr.).....
Oct. 31—John Sterling, Alderman (2 reel Dr.) .....
Nov. 2—Ferdie Be Brave .....
Nov. 2—Pres. Taft at the County Fair.....

ITALA

Sept. 22—A Naughty Boy (Com.).....
Sept. 29—His First Lawsuit (Com.).....
Sept. 29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.).....
Oct. 6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)...
Nov. 1—Souls in Torture (Dr.).....2000

KEYSTONE

Oct. 7—The Beating He Needed.....
Oct. 7—Pedro's Dilemma (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Stolen Glory (Com.).....
Oct. 21—The Ambitious Butler.....
Nov. 1—The Grocery Clerk's Romance.....
Oct. 28—At Coney Island .....

LUX
By Prieur.

Oct. 4—The Medallion (Dr.) 983
Oct. 11—Evading Justice (Dr.)..... 800
Oct. 18—His Nurse (Dr.)..... 918
Oct. 25—Stick It John (Com.)..... 445
Oct. 25—All Through a Bank Note (Com.).. 524
Nov. 1—Oh! My Pipe (Com.) 331
Nov. 1—Henpecked's Bid for Freedom (Com.) 652

MAJESTIC

Oct. 8—The Winner and the Spoils.....
Oct. 13—The Simple Life .....
Oct. 15—All for Jim .....
Oct. 20—Captain Ben's Yarn .....
Oct. 22—Love and War .....
Oct. 27—The Tree Imp (Com. Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—A Woman Alone (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 3—Weary's Revenge .....

MILANO

Feet

Oct. 5—An Alpine Tragedy .....
Oct. 12—The Gypsy Spy (2 reels) (Dr.)....
Oct. 19—The Blind Man's Dog (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—Kelly Goes to War.....
Oct. 26—A Three-Cornered Wedding Journey
Nov. 2—A Tragic Wedding (Dr.).....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Oct. 4—Hearts and Skirts .....
Oct. 7—Romance and Reality (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—His Only Son (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—Love and a Lemon (Com.).....
Oct. 14—I Owe You $10.00 (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Patsy's Mistake (Com.).....
Oct. 18—Her Friend, The Doctor (Com.)..
Oct. 21—Betty's Bandit (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Border Parson (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Lady Barber of Roaring Gulch
Oct. 28—The Call of the Desert (W. Dr.).
Oct. 30—Fatty's Big Mix-up (Com.).....
Nov. 1—Making a Man of Her (Com.)....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Oct. 2—Early's Awakening .....
Oct. 4—Two Women .....
Oct. 9—Good Snuff (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—On the Danger Line (Dr.).....
Oct. 16—The Golden Rod.....
Oct. 16—Does It Pay.....
Oct. 18—The Sealed Envelope (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Skeleton (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—Just a Woman (Dr.).....
Oct. 30—The Collaborators (Com.).....
Nov. 1—A Dreamland Tragedy .....

RELIANCE

Oct. 2—Brothers Under the Skin.....
Oct. 5—Time Avenges (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 9—Guy Mannering (2 reels) (Dr.)....2000
Oct. 12—Peddler's Find (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—On Account of a Handkerchief (Com.) 500
Oct. 16—The Bug and the Count (Com.)... 500
Oct. 19—The Organ Grinder's Ward (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 23—Johnny on the Spot (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 23—How Jack Won Out (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 26—A Wireless Miracle (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—Men Who Dare (2 reels).....
Nov. 2—Trials of Faith .....

REX

Oct. 3—Bob's Deception .....
Oct. 6—The Winnings of Silas Pegg.....
Oct. 10—If Dreams Came True (Dr.).....
Oct. 13—When Twenty Is in Love.....
Oct. 17—The Wedding March (Dr.).....
Oct. 20—Leaves in the Storm (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—A Kentucky Feud (Dr.).....
Oct. 27—Through a Higher Power (Dr.)...
Oct. 31—Careful Nursing (Com.).....
Nov. 3—An Old-Fashioned Mother (Dr.)...

SOLAX

Oct. 2—Si's Surprise Party .....
Oct. 4—The Retreat from Eden.....
Oct. 9—Canned Harmony (Com.).....
Oct. 11—A Fool and His Money (Com.).....
Oct. 16—The Gold Brick (Com.).....
Oct. 18—The Maverick (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The High Cost of Living.....
Oct. 25—The Idol Worshipper.....
Oct. 30—The Clue on This Hearth (Dr.)....
Nov. 1—Making an American Citizen (Dr.).

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Oct. 1—Letters of a Lifetime.....
Oct. 4—The Warning .....
Oct. 13—Dotty the Dancer.....
Oct. 15—When Mercy Tempers Justice (Dr.)
Oct. 18—For the Mikado (Dr.).....
Oct. 20—Petticoat Camp .....
Oct. 22—Through the Flames.....
Oct. 25—In a Garden.....
Oct. 27—Taking Care of Baby.....
Oct. 27—Mary's Goat .....
Oct. 29—Put Yourself in His Place (2 reels)
Nov. 1—The Little Girl Next Door.....

AMMEX

Oct. 2—Ashes of Memory (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—Getting in Strong (Com.).....
Oct. 9—Woman Haters (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Mission Maestro (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—A Redeemed Reputation (Dr.)....
Oct. 30—Brand of Cain (Dr.).....

VICTOR

Sept. 27—The Advent of Jane (Dr.).....
Oct. 4—Tangled Relations .....
Oct. 11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.) .....
Oct. 18—The Cross-roads (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Angel of the Studio (Dr.)....
Nov. 1—The Redemption of Riverton (Dr.).

are positive of your prompt cue. Avoid introductions to numbers unless otherwise stated. Avoid the shading of numbers as printed, an even mezzo forte being the best. From this you can get both pp and ff shadings with effect according to the demands of picture action. When shading is positively essential you will find words "Tone to action." Avoid the use of books. They are not practical for setting-up. In playing numbers following a certain line of action drop to pp in case there is a cut-in of flash scenes. For playing recopy plots legibly on large paper and fasten by clasp to right of music stand or piano. Read the Film Stories in this magazine as it will familiarize you with the cues. Studio projection would allow for material improvement in setups. We are always ready to hear from you and explain any difficulties you may have with these plots or otherwise. If personal reply is requested enclose stamped envelope.

THE ELOPEMENT and GERONE, SPAIN
C. G. B. C. Release of Sept. 17.

Set-up.

1. Love's Dream, After the Ball or Spring Song.
2. English Waltz. (Legato)
3. Standard Love Ballad. ("Dear Hear, Matti" or "Answer")
4. Concert Pizzicato or Gavotte. (Even tempo)
5. Angels' Serenade, Braga or Simple Aveu, Thome.

Scenic

6. In Old Madrid or 3/4 Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until once through, concert style.
Play 2 until girl back in room at piano after leaving lover in heavy shrubbery scene.
Play 3 until leader "Next morning Arthur persuades," etc.
Play 4 until leader "The elopement," etc.
Play 5 until end. Softly.

Scenic.

Play 6 until end. mf.

Note:—Numbers selected should be sweet and melodious, corresponding with picture setting and coloring. Quick seques at leader cues not necessary.

SHE CRIED
Vit. Comedy. Released Oct. 3.

Set-Up.

1. Popular Rag Songs.
2. Lohengrin Wedding March. (Lively)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader, "The Honeymoon." (About 16 min.)
Play 2 until end.

Note:—Picture is a continued scream. Good opportunity to bring out your rags. For orch. 6 or 7 arrangements required, for pianists about 15 song copies, 1 verse, 2 choruses.

THE SIGNAL FIRE
Vit. Drama. Released Sept. 26th.

Set-Up.

1. Dramatic Agitato.
2. Sentimental number.
3. Novelette or Caprice. (Dainty)
4. Waltz. (Melodious. Play in descriptive style.)
5. Tosti's "Good-Bye" or Sentimental number.

Cues.

Play 1 until Mrs. Barnes is given drink in boat.
Play 2 until Capt. Barnes in berth aboard ship.
Play 3 until Capt. Barnes recognizes photo of wife.
Play 4 until Capt. Barnes and wife embrace on island.
Play 5 until end.

Note:—For No. 5 Tosti's "Good-Bye" can be sung to end softly with beautiful effect. Play introduction at cue given. The whole action is sentimental; select and play your music accordingly.

SO NEAR, YET SO FAR
Bio. Comedy. Released Sept. 30th.

Set-Up.

1. Popular Rag Songs. (March tempo)
2. Dramatic Pizzicato. (Sneaky)
3. Dramatic Hurry. (Struggle)
4. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until tramps look through open window. Exterior. (About 15 minutes.)
Play 2 until girl rushes to window and confronted by second tramp. (Short)
Play 3 until girl runs outside house. (1 min.)
Play 4 until end.

Note:—For No. 1 you must set up sufficient numbers—to avoid repeating—to play 15 min. 5 orch. arrangements on 10 to 12 song copies.

HIS LIFE
Lubin Drama. Released Oct. 5.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Slow and very legato.)
2. Song Rags. ("Take Me to the Cabaret," etc.)
3. Sentimental Number.
4. Two-Step. (Popular rag, lively dancing.)
5. Dram. Agitato. (Lengthy.)
6. Gallop or Lively 2/4. (Light.)
7. Sentimental Waltz. ("Home Sweet Home" appropriate.)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Success."
Play 2 until scrubwoman exits after janitor discharges.
Play 3 until leader "The Masked Ball." Play ff at ballroom scene very P. as other scenes flashed.
Play 4 until son sees vision of mother after giving scrubwoman money.
Play 5 until leader "Back to mother."
Play 6 until auto stops.
Play 7 until end.

EUCHERED
Selig Drama. Released Oct. 10.

Set-Up.

1. 6/8 March. (Lively.)
2. Waltz. (Descriptive.)
3. 2/4 March. (Allow for hurrying.)
4. Agitato Dram. (Light.)
5. Dram. Hurry. (Heavy, struggle.)
6. 2/4 March. (Hurried.)
7. Waltz. (Legato, sentimental.)
8. Dram. Agitato. (Light.)
9. Waltz. (32 bars.)

Cues.

Play 1 until Saunders meets girl with fishing rod. f. when smugglers on.
Play 2 until revenue officer off screen after holding girl's hands.
Play 3 until girl and mother enter cave.
Play 4 until revenue officer enters cave.
Play 5 until revenue officer overcome in struggle.
Play 6 until revenue officer and girl on rock.
Play 7 until officer points revolver at nets.
Play 8 until old Joe, girl's father, escapes.
Play 9 until end. f.

Note:—For hurried march numbers select those of simple technique and opening in minor key.

THE GIRL FROM THE COUNTRY
Edison Drama. Released Oct. 1.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Descriptive.)
2. Sentimental number.
3. Intermezzo 2/4. (Not characteristic.)
4. Pathetic. (Longing for Home. Jungman.)
5 Caprice. (Light and catchy.)
6. Waltz. (Dreamy, sentimental.)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "I like you, Tom, but," etc.)
Play 2 until leader "Hall bedroom."
Play 3 until Nellie leaves supper room after refusing to drink.
Play 4 until Tom crates pigeon to send to Mary.
Play 5 until train on in R. R. station scene.
Play 6 until end. Drift into "Home Sweet Home" as Tom and Nellie enter room where mother seated.

RED BARRIER
Vit. Drama. Released Oct. 5.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Legato.)
2. Caprice. (Slow and legato.)
3. Intermezzo, Novelette. (Major key.)
4. Reverie.
5. Agitato, Dramatic.
6. Dramatic Hurry. (Struggle.)
7. Waltz. (Dancing.)
8. Dram. Agitato. (Light.)
9. Pathetic.
10. Pathetic Agitato. (Heavy.)
11. Pathetic.

Cues.

Play 1 until Lieutenant's note on screen.
Play 2 until Count finds note on Isabel's table.
Play 3 until leader "Her destiny."
Play 4 until leader "In Petersburg."
Play 5 until Count enters bedroom.
Play 6 until Count falls on couch.
Play 7 until Count and Isabel in conservatory after leaving ballroom.
Play 8 until Count hands his card to Lieutenant.
Play 9 until leader "Morning of the duel."
Play 10 until Count is shot. (Accentuate fall.
Play 11 until end. (Slow.)

Note:—You can simplify 9, 10 and 11 by using number similar to "Hearts and Flowers," in which second strain is of heavy minor or decided agitato. Repeat first strain for 9 until cue, then continue straight through number. Not necessary to break into number.

THE RESURRECTION
Masko Feature. Part One.

Set-Up.

1. Russian 2/4. (Characteristic.)
2. Waltz. (Legato.)
3. Caprice. (Slow, Legato.)
4. Waltz. (Legato, Slow.)
5. Pathetic. (Concert number.)
6. Valse Lento. (Very legato.)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Prince Nekludov visits aunts," etc.
Play 2 until leader "The Man's Way."
Play 3 until leader "The Next Day."
Play 4 until leader "Death takes Katusha's child," etc. Cres. at action with Bible.
Play 5 until elaborate drawing room scene. (Quick seque.)
Play 6 until end. (Very legato and slow.)

Part Two.

Set-Up.

1. Russian 2/4. (Characteristic.)
2. Waltz. (Lively, Descriptive.)
3. Russian Dance 2/4. (Accompany dancers.)
4. Waltz. (Lively.)
5. Russian Dance 2/4. (Accompany dancers, Long.)
6. Waltz. (Lively.)
7. Pathetic. (Minor heavy.)
8. Russian Dance 2/4. (Accompany dancers, Short.)
9. Pathetic.
10. Mysterioso.

Cues.

Play 1 until blue-toned scene on screen.
Play 2 until leader "The life without care or hope."
Play 3 until dancer stops.
Play 4 until three female dancers line up for dance. Chord after they dance assembled.
Play 5 until leader "Merchant given overdose of poison," etc.
Play 6 until "Merchant and Maslova drink wine."
Play 7 until Maslova exits from private room. (Tone to action.)
Play 8 until dancers stop. (Short.)
Play 9 until police enter private room.
Play 10 until end. (Tone to action.)

Note:—Quick seques positively necessary in this part.

Part Three.

Set-Up.

1. Miserere. ("Il Trovatore.")
2. Valse Lento. (Legato.)
3. Pathetic.
4. Agitato. (Heavy.)
5. Waltz. (Very legato and slow.)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Nekludov is called to serve on jury," etc. (Accentuate as women struggle.)
Play 2 until leader "The jury decides Maslova guilty." (Open bright. Very slow from first prison scene.)
Play 3 until Prince offers hand to Maslova. Prison scene.
Play 4 until Maslova put back in cell.
Play 5 until end.

Part Four.

Set-Up.

1. Reverie.
2. Processional. (Tosti's "Good-Bye" can be used in even tempo.)

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Sept. 23—Friends (Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Disappointed Mamma (Com.)....
Sept. 26—A Mixed Affair (Com.).....
Sept. 30—So Near Yet So Far (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—A Feud in the Kentucky Hills (Dr.)
Oct. 7—The Line at Hogan's (Com.).....
Oct. 7—A Ten-Karat Hero (Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Chief's Blanket (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—In the Aisles of the Wild (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 17—A Limited Divorce (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Like the Cat, They Came Back (Com.) .....
Oct. 21—The One She Loved (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—The Painted Lady (Dr.).....

CINES
C. Kleine

Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 15—The Adventure of the Scarecrow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 19—Among the Mountains of Calabria (Scenic) 400
Oct. 19—An Abbreviated Honeymoon (Com.) 600
Oct. 22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.) 250
Oct. 22—The Invited Guest (Com.)..... 750
Oct. 26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.).....1005
Oct. 29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.) 400
Oct. 29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.). 450
Oct. 29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.).... 150
Nov. 2—A Head for a Head (Hist. Dr.)....1100
Nov. 5—The Golden Shell of Palermo, (Sc.) 300 and Love versus Gratitude (Dr.)... 700
Nov. 9—No Fool Like an Old Fool (Com. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 12—On the Firing Line (War Dr.)....1050
Nov. 16—Life and Industries in Aden Campo (Educ.) 400
Nov. 16—The Old Actor's Vision (Dr.)..... 600
Nov. 19—The Magic Elixir (Com.)..... 650
Nov. 19—Caught With the Goods (Com.).... 350
Nov. 23—Mafredonia, So. Italy (Sc.).....
Nov. 23—Two Afflicted Hearts (Com.)..... 700

EDISON

Sept. 24—The Little Girl Next Door (Dr.)..1000
Sept. 25—Cynthia's Agreement (Com.).....1000
Sept. 27—Mary in Stageland (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.) 300
Oct. 2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.).. 700
Oct. 4—Cashmere (Sc.) 1000
Oct. 5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—A Curable Disease (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 8—Under False Colors (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.) 1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.) 1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)..1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.) 650
Oct. 16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.). 350
Oct. 16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)..... 650
Oct. 18—The Foundling (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.).. 350
Oct. 16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)..... 650
Oct. 18—The Foundling (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—Kitty at Boarding School (Com.).. 650
Oct. 21—Mother Goose in a Sixteenth Century Theatre (Com.)..... 350
Oct. 22—At the Masquerade Ball (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—At Home in the Water (Top.)..... 400
Oct. 23—The Boy Rangers (Com.)..... 600
Oct. 25—The Affair at Raynor's (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 26—Young Mrs. Eaton (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 28—The Land Beyond the Sunset (Dr.).1000
Oct. 29—Burma, Rangoon, India (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 29—Bringing Home the Pup (Com.).... 650
Oct. 30—Copper Mines at Bingham, Utah (Sc.) 400
Oct. 30—A Suffragette in Spite of Himself (Com.) 600

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 17—Neptune's Daughter (Dr.).....
Sept. 19—The Mixed Sample Trunks (Com.)
Sept. 20—The Love Test (Com.) .....
Sept. 21—"Alkali" Ike's Pants (Com.).....
Sept. 24—Across the Broad Pacific.....
Sept. 25—The Adventure of the Button (Com. Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Little Louder, Please (Com.)....
Sept. 27—The Voice of Conscience (Dr.)....
Sept. 28—An Indian Sunbeam (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—Ghosts (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—Well Matched (Com.).....
Oct. 3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)..
Oct. 4—Terrible Teddy (Com.).....1000
Oct. 5—Love on Tough Luck Ranch (Com.).1000
Oct. 8—Alkali Ike Stung (Com.) 1000
Oct. 9—The Rebellion of Mandy (Com.)...1000
Oct. 10—The End of the Feud (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Not on the Circus Program (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 12—The Shotgun Ranchman (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 15—A Mistaken Calling (Com.).....
Oct. 16—The Grassville Girls (Com.) 1000
Oct. 17—The Snare (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 18—The Warning Hand (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—The Outlaw's Sarcifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Tomboy of "Bar Z" (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 23—Bringing Father Around (Com.)....1000
Oct. 24—The Thrifty Parson (Com.).....1000
Oct. 25—Sunshine (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 26—The Ranch Girl's Trial (Dr.).....1000

LUBIN

Oct. 4—Collection Day (Com.) .....
Oct. 4—Spoony Sam (Com.) .....
Oct. 5—His Life (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—The Last Rose of Summer.....1062
Oct. 8—The Moonshiner's Daughter .....
Oct. 10—The Players .....
Oct. 11—Mr. Fixit (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—The German Singers (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The Cringer .....
Oct. 14—The Uprising .....
Oct. 15—Gentleman Joe .....
Oct. 17—Red Saunder's Sacrifice.....
Oct. 18—Rube's Mistake .....
Oct. 18—Meeting Mamie's Mother.....
Oct. 19—Caught Bluffing .....
Oct. 19—The Sporting Editor .....
Oct. 21—Just Maine Folks .....
Oct. 22—In the Service of the State.....
Oct. 24—The Old Chess Players.....
Oct. 25—The Noodle Industry (Ind.).....
Oct. 25—Down With the Men (Com.).....
Oct. 28—An Irish Girl's Love (Com.).....
Oct. 29—Parson James (Dr.) .....
Oct. 31—The Heavenly Voice (Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Fixing a Flirt (Com.) .....
Nov. 2—The Family Next Door (Dr.).....
Nov. 4—Juan and Juanita (Dr.).....
Nov. 5—The Substitute Heiress (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—The Sheriff's Mistake (Dr.).....

G. MELIES

Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West .....
Oct. 10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—A Son's Example (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 7—The Smuggler's Prisoner (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 14—Value Received (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 21—The Governor's Clemency (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 28—Linked by Fate (Dr.) 1000
Dec. 5—The Sheriff's Pro-Tem (Dr.).....1000

PATHE FRERES

Oct. 1—A Well-Washed House .....
Oct. 1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.) .....
Oct. 2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct. 3—Theodore Roosevelt .....
Oct. 3—Experiments with Liquid Air.....
Oct. 4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—Pathe's Weekly No. 41.....
Oct. 8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.).....
Oct. 8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)..
Oct. 9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—His Country Before All (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Naughty Marietta (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Pathe's Weekly, No. 42.....
Oct. 15—Max Fights a Duel (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Valley of Chevreuse, France (Tr.) .....
Oct. 16—The Lass of Clauster (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Striped Bathing Suit (Com.)...
Oct. 17—Sub-marine Fauna (Oceanic) .....
Oct. 18—The Rubber Industry in Malaysia (Ind.) .....
Oct. 18—The Convertible Auto (Trick).....
Oct. 19—Misleading Evidence (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Pathe's Weekly No. 43.....
Oct. 22—The End of Louis XI (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Old Toledo (Travel).....
Oct. 23—The Simple Life (Com.).....
Oct. 24—Little Raven's Sweetheart (Dr.)...
Oct. 25—Tom Thumb (Trick).....
Oct. 25—The Hermit Crab.....
Oct. 26—The Light That Failed (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—Olympic Games, Stockholm, Sweden, 1912 .....
Oct. 28—Pathe's Weekly, No. 44.....
Oct. 28—Frenzied Finance (Dr.).....
Oct. 29—Whiffles, Cubic Artist (Com.).....
Oct. 29—In the Tyrol—The Arlberg Valley (Travel) .....
Oct. 30—A Mamma Wanted (Com.).....
Oct. 31—Jim's Partner (W. Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Tragedy at the Court of Milan (Dr.)
Nov. 2—Wifey's Investment (Com.).....

KALEM CO.

Oct. 2—Ancient Temples of Egypt (Sc.)...
Oct. 4—The Village Vixen (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—The Confederate Ironclad (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 7—When Youth Meets Youth (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 9—The Belle of the Beach (Dr.)....
Oct. 9—Election Day in Californita (Com.)
Oct. 11—His Mother's Picture (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Redskin Raiders (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—The Combination of the Safe (Dr.).1000
Oct. 16—Paying the Board Bill (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Central Park, New York (Sc.).....
Oct. 18—The Plot that Failed (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—The Rival Engineers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—The County Fair (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Peril of the Cliffs (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Girl in the Caboose (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—New York Public School Drills and fll Dances (Edu.) .....
Oct. 26—Death Valley Scotty's Mine (Dr.).1000

SELIG

Oct. 15—The Opium Smugglers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—The Shuttle of Fate (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 17—Where Love Is, There God Is Also (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 18—Subterfuge (Com.).....
Oct. 18—The Geishas of Japan (Ed.).....1000
Oct. 21—A Sad Devil (Com.).....1000
Oct. 22—So-Jun-Wah and the Tribal Law (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 23—Tempted by Necessity (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—The Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Biwa Canal, and Shooting the Rapids of the Katsuragawa, Japan (Edu.) .....
Oct. 25—Getting Atmosphere (Com.).....1000
Oct. 28—A Fisherboy's Faith (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—Jim's Vindication (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—A Heart in Rags (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 31—Her Bitter Lesson (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 1—His Wedding Eve (Com.).....1000
Nov. 4—The Voice of Warning (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 5—The Dynamiters (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—Her Education (Com.) 1000
Nov. 7—Carmen of the Isles (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 8—The Legend of the Lost Arrow (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 8—Enchanting Japan (Edu.) 1000

URBAN ECLIPSE
G. Kleine

Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel) 500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.).... 500
Oct. 9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)... 300
Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)..... 700
Oct. 16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)..... 995
Oct. 16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic) 300
Oct. 23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)..... 400
Oct. 23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)... 300
Oct. 30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)..... 975
Nov. 6—The Queen of Spades (Dr.).....1007
Nov. 13—Specimens of Lizards and Frogs (Edu.) 300
Nov. 13—The Town of Cognac, France, and Its Brandy Industry (Edu.).... 400
Nov. 13—Reviewing French Troops by Airship (Topical) 300
Nov. 20—The Masqueraders (Dr.) 1000

VITAGRAPH

Oct. 1—Adventures of the Smelling Salts (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 2—Bachelors' Buttons (Com.) .....
Oct. 2—Diana's Legacy (Com.) .....
Oct. 3—She Cried (Com.).....1000
Oct. 4—Her Spoiled Boy (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 5—The Red Barrier (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—Nothing to Wear (Com.).....1000
Oct. 7—As You Like It (Special 3 reels) (Dr.) 3000
Oct. 8—Scenes Along River Lee (Dr.)..... 300
Oct. 8—The Godmother (Com.) 700
Oct. 9—When Persistency and Obstinacy meet (Com.) 1000
Oct. 10—As Fate Would Have It (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Mammoth Life Savers (Com.).....1000
Oct. 11—Her Father's Hat (Com.) 1000
Oct. 12—When California Was Young (Dr.).1000
Oct. 14—Every Inch a Man (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 15—Mrs. Lirriper's Lodger (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—An Elephant on His Hands (Com.).1000
Oct. 17—Parade and Gun Drill, Ft. Hamilton (Topical) 300
Oct. 17—Father's Hot Toddy (Com.)..... 700
Oct. 18—A Mistake in Spelling (Com. Dr.).1000
Oct. 19—Bunny All at Sea (Com.).....1000
Oct. 21—Four Days a Widow (Com.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Spirit of the Range 1000
Oct. 23—An Expensive Shine and Scenes of Irish Life in Dublin 1000
Oct. 24—The Toymaker 1000
Oct. 25—Faithful Unto Death 1000
Oct. 26—Into the Furnace Fire.....1000
Oct. 28—None But the Brave Deserve the Fair 1000
Oct. 29—Bunny at the Derby and Just Luck.1000
Oct. 30—Poet and Peasant 1000
Oct. 31—On the Line of Peril (Mil.).....1000

3. Pathetic. (Concert number.)
4. Waltz. (Legato, sentimental.)
5. Spring Song or Angels' Serenade.

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "The condemned start for Siberia."
Play 2 until Maslova seated in snow with child in arms. (Very pathetic as lady with child falls and dies.)
Play 3 until leader "Prince returns with pardon," etc.
Play 4 until Maslova meets Prince in hospital office.
Play 5 until end.

THE SERGEANT'S BOY
Bison 101. Released Oct. 11.

Part One.

Set-Up.

1. Heavy Mysterioso. (8 bars.)
2. Indian Dramatic. (Fight.)
3. Military March. (Lively.)
4. Hurry. (Light.)
5. Dramatic Heavy. (Battle. 2nd and 3rd movement of Poet and Peasant Overture good. Dal Segno back to 2nd movement after first 32 bars of 3rd movement.)
6. March 6/8.
7. Bugle Call. (Taps.)
8. Polka Movement. (Slow and even tempo.)

Cues.

Play 1 8 bars slow 4/4.
Play 2 until Indians drag emigrants off.
Play 3 until leader "The Ambush."
Play 4 until cattle well on and shots fired.
Play 5 until boy in American officer's arms. (Begin 6 P and slow, fast and f at stockade scene.)
Play 6 until leader "Taps."
Play 7 once slow.
Play 8 until end.

Part Two.

Set-Up.

1. Sentimental number.
2. Dramatic Agitato.
3. Dramatic. (Battle.)
4. Pathetic.
5. Hurry. (Fight.)
6. Plaintive.
7. Dirge.

Cues.

Play 1 until Sergeant's boy off screen at coach scene. (Tone to action.)
Play 2 until leader "Summit Pass."
Play 3 until leader "Dying Man's Sacrifice."
Play 4 until cavalry officer slides down embankment.
Play 5 until officers at Sergeant's boy's body.
Play 6 until leader "And he never knew," etc.
Play 7 until end.

PATHE CAMERA

Four Magazines, Carrying Case, Zeiss-Tessar Lens, Brand New, For Sale. Price $285.00. Will ship privilege of examination 25% down. Address A. A., 31 W. 46th St., New York City.

Two Reels
DANTE'S INFERNO
like new with 250 one-sheet lithos in five colors. Devils' costumes. 100 slides. $80.
ACME FILM CO., Inc.,
130 West 37th Street, New York

Mr. Hobart Bosworth, leading man of the Selig Polyscope Co.'s western studios and recognized as one of the greatest romantic actors of the present age, was selected to vizualize the role of Edmund Dantes in "Monte Cristo," Selig's great three-reel masterpiece, which will be released through the General Film Company on October 14. This famous part was created by the late Charles Fecher, for whom it was written, and perpetrated by one of America's foremost actors, Mr. James O'Neill, who played a stage version of the great Dumas novel for so many years.

* * * *

Mr Guy Hedlund has joined the Eclair Stock Company, his engagement having started October 7. Mr. Hedlund has proven himself a valuable man to those on the Patent's side of the fence, having been with Biograph a couple of years, then Vitagraph and just lately with Edison.

* * * *

Mr. John E. Reardon and Mr. C. W. Shults, owners of the Gem, City and Star Theatres, of Little Falls, are in the city on a visit to the New York Exhibitors. They are members of Local No. 2, Utica, and they report progress to the effect that nearly fifty Exhibitors have joined that local within the past two months. They have made a special trip to New York for the purpose of getting information for the betterment of the members of the league, and also to make preparations for the up-state locals with reference to the ball.

They have promised to be here in numbers on the night of the 14th to help this social entertainment.

* * * *

William Duncan, leading man of the Selig Colorado Company, has for some time past been driving an automobile in order to get used to it. In a film soon to be released at the Colorado headquarters, Duncan will have to drive this car over the top of a cliff which stands some thousand feet in height. Every precaution is being taken to insure the success of the scene and it is expected that this will prove to be one of the most thrilling sensations of recent years. The story will, in all probability be called "The Sheriff's Son" and will be produced by Marshall Stedman.

THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS.
Statement of the ownership, management, etc., required by Act of Congress, August 24, 1912.
Published weekly at New York City, New York.
Editor, Alfred H. Saunders; Business Manager, Wm. M. Petingale; Publisher, Cinematograph Publishing Company.
Owners of 1 per cent or more of total amount of stock or securities: Cinematograph Publishing Co., 30 West 13th St., New York City; Alfred H. Saunders, 30 West 13th St., New York City; Annie Saunders, West New Brighton, N. Y.; New York Conveyancers Co., 92 William St., New York City; Charles Francis Press, Inc., 30 W. 13th St., New York City.
(Signed) ALFRED H. SAUNDERS. Editor.
Sworn and subscribed to before me this 8th day of October, 1912.
[SEAL] CHARLES E. FRANCIS.
Notary Public, Kings County, Certificate filed in N. Y. Co.

ECLAIR ANNOUNCES "SILENT JIM"

IN TWO PARTS

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, 1912

GET THIS

World's Championship Base Ball Series

Produced from genuine photographs, copyrighted by the National Press Syndicate. Photography perfect.

21 Slides Plain $5.00 — 35 Slides Plain $8.75
21 Slides Colored 10.00 — 35 Slides Colored 17.50

Produced with interesting lecture or description on slides. Specify which style desired.

Handsome one-sheet lithos in colors furnished free with each set. Send your order quick to

A. J. CLAPHAM, 130 West 37th Street, New York

OTHER BIG FEATURES
BECKER MURDER CASE — PILGRIM'S PROGRESS
LIFE IN SING SING PRISON — BIG NAVAL REVIEW
SEND FOR CATALOGUES

Highest Prices Paid for SCENARIOS

WE WANT
HEADLINERS
COMEDIES Receive Special Attention

KINEMACOLOR COMPANY
1604 Broadway New York

CHAUFFEUR'S COMPLETE OUTFIT SACRIFICED. Consisting elegant mink fur lined coat, Persian lamb collar, $35; pair of elegant bear robes $15 each, raccoon cap $5, pair of fur gloves $4, pair of goggles 50c., 1 pair leather leggins $3.50. Will sell separately or the lot, all new, never worn; original price $225.

G. CHASE, 118 East 28th St., New York.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL

A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.

Exclusive Territory

NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST

The Cleveland Leader

Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DO YOU WANT A FILM PRODUCED?
Let us show you how.
Local Pictures made or taken.
Camera and Camera man Rented.
Motion pictures Cameras for Sale.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFG'S CO., Inc.
248 West 35th St., New York City.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING PHOTO ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 817 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD

YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.

We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.

Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

Abonnement 1 fr. pour le monde entier

CINÉMA-REVUE

Journal indépendant d'Informations
Supplement mensuel à "Cinema"
Annuaire de la projection fixe et animée
Numéro spécimen sur demande
Bureau 118, rue d'Assas Paris

To Writers:

THE EDITOR

(The Journal of Information for Literary Workers) published in your interest for eighteen years, is the magazine of which Jack London said: "I may not tell a hundredth part of what I learned from THE EDITOR, but I may say that it taught me how to solve the stamp and landlord problems." It is a monthly stimulus to the production and sale of more and better manuscripts. Besides articles of concrete, practical worth by editors or by writers successful or about to be successful, each number contains in "The Literary Market" all the news of all the magazines, new and old, that pay for manuscripts.

THE EDITOR is especially helpful to the scenario writer. It publishes from time to time helpful articles by those who are successful producers of photoplays. A copy of the current number will be sent for 15 cents. The yearly subscription is one dollar.

The Editor

Box 830, Ridgewood, New Jersey.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

IS PUBLISHED FOR YOU

IF you do not yet know what The Motion Picture Story Magazine will do for you and your theater, you can hardly be blamed for not placing it on sale.

It is doing so much for other exhibitors, that you owe it to yourself to give it a test.

We do not ask you to take our word for this. Many letters are coming to us each day, from exhibitors who are now selling The Motion Picture Story Magazine at their theaters. All of these letters are enthusiastic of the interest the magazine arouses in their patrons, the new people it brings to their theaters, the increase of gate receipts it creates, and the good it does the motion picture business.

What better proof could you ask, than the word of those who are now selling the magazine?

Drop us a card and we will send you further particulars, and duplicates of some of these letters, or better still why not place a trial order now and test it yourself?

Rate to exhibitors, ten cents, retail price, fifteen cents. Your profit five cents.

Don't delay until you forget, but send in your order and remittance to-day.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

26 Court Street, Brooklyn, New York

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

MOTIOGRAPH QUALITY
HAS NEVER BEEN QUESTIONED

WE WANT YOU to compare THE MOTIOGRAPH with any machine selling near the same price—

WE WANT YOU to learn that WE USE NO COMPOSITION METAL IN OUR CONSTRUCTION — IT IS NOT GOOD ENOUGH to match up to the HIGH STANDARD QUALITY which has so firmly established the reputation of this machine.

THREE DISTINCT EQUIPMENTS
THREE DISTINCT PRICES
BUT ONLY ONE QUALITY OF MATERIAL AND WORKMANSHIP

EQUIPMENT PRICES

1002—A, without motor and seat.....$250.00
1002—D, complete with motor and seat..285.00
1002—M, completed Massachusetts Special with motor and seat and enclosed mechanism..... 300.00

You can buy direct from us—or from your nearest exchange.

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.
568 West Randolph Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

A TWO REEL
"MYSTERY—SENSATION"

FLESH and BLOOD

or THE GREAT JEWEL MYSTERY—
Staged by Madame Blaché, the producer of "FRA DIAVOLO."

RELEASED FRIDAY, NOV. 15th

A powerful detective story, dealing with the exploits of a Secret Service man, who trails a crime to the very door of his own home. He finds that his son had stolen valuable jewels, and had concealed them in an old violin. The detective in a sensational and realistic pursuit across housetops, shoots his son, who drops from a height of four stories.

ALL-STAR CAST

Including the Solax perfect photography, perfect staging, and well-known and unequalled advertising matter, which includes one sheets, three sheets, Heralds, slides and other miscellaneous material. Write for samples.

OTHER—REGULAR—FEATURES

"MAKING AN AMERICAN CITIZEN"
Released Wednesday, October 30th

"AT THE PHONE"
Released Friday, November 1st

Solax Company
LEMOINE AVENUE, FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

GAUMONT

YOU CANNOT EVADE

RECOGNIZING THE MERITS OF

The Vengeance of Egypt

ITS MIGHTY REALISM WILL HOLD AUDIENCES
IN A HYPNOTISM OF ATTENTION

STATE RIGHTS

3 REELS

HERALDS——POSTERS, 1, 3 and 6 Sheet

THE unseen hand of a spirit avenger that comes from its immortality of 2,000 years to wreak wrath upon the holders of a ring sacrilegiously taken from a mummy. For more than a century's length it brings violent death and destruction through agency of plague, the strangler, poison, bullet and the wreck of aeroplane and automobile. The diabolism contained in a talisman of tragedy. A token of the state marital which mocks at life and love. The sorrows of those whom "unmerciful disaster, followed fast and followed faster."

Copyright protects all our films
Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted

Gaumont

GAUMONT CO.

Flushing, N. Y.

Gaumont

GAUMONT

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

OCT 31 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 17

OCTOBER 26
1912

LIBRARY OF CONG. FEB'C
OCT 31 1912

KING BAGGOT
Leading Man "Imp" Films and President of Screen Club

PRICE
TEN CENTS

KAY-BEE FILMS

BAUMANN and KESSEL make the first release under this trade-mark with a

THRILLING, SPECTACULAR WAR-DRAMA

"On Secret Service"

IN TWO REELS

RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 1

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO., 150 East 14th Street, New York City

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., New York, Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND

Supported by a Strong Company

FORD STERLING
FRED MACE

"Mabel's Lovers" and "At It Again"

A Split Reel. RELEASED MONDAY, NOVEMBER 4

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"The Man They Scorned"

Sensational Two Reel Feature. RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

ECLAIR

FOUR A WEEK NOW

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 5th

"SILENT JIM" In Two Parts

Equal to any feature release of the year and far better than most.
Advertise it as such. Get an announcement slide, newspaper cuts and the three and one sheets we have prepared. Special musical suggestions ready for the asking.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7th

"FOILING A FORTUNE HUNTER" — THIS IS A COMEDY DRAMA

SPLIT REEL

"WHAT FATHER DID" — This is a screaming farce

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8th

"THE BUSY BEE" — Scientific, educational and most interesting

SPLIT REEL

"FUNNICUS' HUNTING EXPLOITS" — Introduces the wild beasts of the jungle in a sensational comedy

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 10th

"GOLDEN HAIR" — A drama from deep down in the heart and superbly produced

SPLIT REEL

"CONSTANTINOPLE" — Another ECLAIR travel picture, than which there are none finer nor nearly as interesting

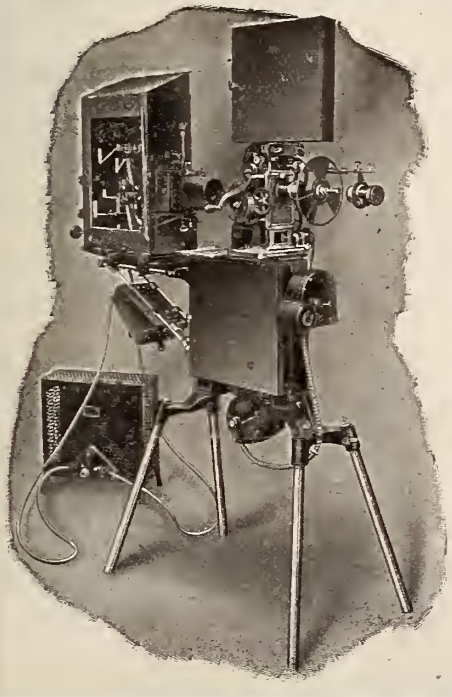
ECLAIR FILM COMPANY, 225 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY

ECLAIR FILMS PARIS

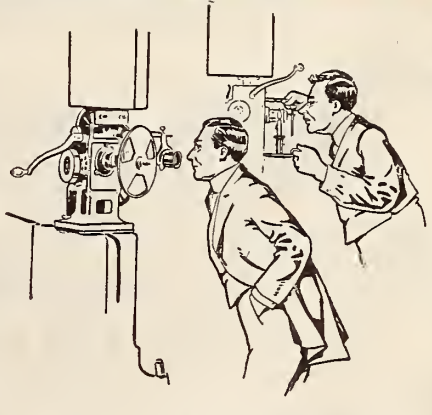
STANDARD FILMS

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry



EXPOSED



"INSIDE INFORMATION" NOT ALWAYS BEST
THE PARTS OF POWER'S 6A MECHANISM ARE ON THE OUTSIDE

The operator is the man who has to contend with and "stand for" the machine. He knows that if for any reason the house goes dark and he has to flash on the screen "One Moment Please," he must be able to locate his difficulty quickly. If the parts are enclosed, that means delay and an impatient audience.

On a POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A, the parts ARE ALL EXPOSED; they may be seen and got at instantly.

That is one of the many reasons which give to POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A the supremacy over all other moving picture machines.

Catalogue D gives complete details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
90 GOLD STREET, NEW YORK

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

LETTERS OF A SELF-MADE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR

United States,
Oct. 26th, 1912.

Film Supply Co. of America,
133 W. 44th St., New York City.

Gentlemen:—I herewith confirm my telegram of even date ordering all Gaumont Releases. I order them because they are in order with my audiences. They want them!
With pleasure I anticipate receiving

THE GAUMONT WEEKLY AND FILMS

Saturday, November 2nd—CASTLES OF BAVARIA and Topical
Tuesday, November 5th—CUPID'S LOTTERY
Thursday, November 7th—THE EMPEROR'S MESSAGE
Saturday, November 9th—GIVING THE BLIND THE LIGHT OF KNOWLEDGE and Topical
Tuesday, November 12th—AN ADVENTUROUS ADOPTION
Thursday, November 14th—THE PRICE OF PARADISE

Very truly,

THE EXHIBITOR WHO KNOWS

DON'T FAIL TO ATTEND THE

SECOND ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT AND BALL OF THE

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION OF GREATER NEW YORK

THURSDAY EVENING
NOVEMBER 14, 1912
AT PALM GARDEN
58th STREET, Between LEXINGTON and THIRD AVENUES
NEW YORK CITY

The Art of Scenario Writing

By Wm. Lord Wright

The original work from which all schools and writers are copying ideas.

Given as a premium with the Moving Picture News.

Send $2.00 and the "News" will be sent for one year and the above will be mailed to you at once. Save School (?) Fees. All you need for $2.00.

Another offer to amateur writers:—

Send $2.00, one year's subscription to "News," and a script which will be criticised and revised by a competent authority. These two offers will save you money.

CINEMATOGRAPH PUB. CO.,
30 W. 13th Street. New York

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

IS PUBLISHED FOR YOU

IF you do not yet know what The Motion Picture Story Magazine will do for you and your theater, you can hardly be blamed for not placing it on sale.

It is doing so much for other exhibitors, that you owe it to yourself to give it a test.

We do not ask you to take our word for this. Many letters are coming to us each day, from exhibitors who are now selling The Motion Picture Story Magazine at their theaters. All of these letters are enthusiastic of the interest the magazine arouses in their patrons, the new people it brings to their theaters, the increase of gate receipts it creates, and the good it does the motion picture business.

What better proof could you ask, than the word of those who are now selling the magazine?

Drop us a card and we will send you further particulars, and duplicates of some of these letters, or better still why not place a trial order now and test it yourself?

Rate to exhibitors, ten cents, retail price, fifteen cents. Your profit five cents.

Don't delay until you forget, but send in your order and remittance to-day.

The Motion Picture Story Magazine

26 Court Street, Brooklyn, New York

A FILM WITH A PUNCH!

FLESH and BLOOD

A SECRET SERVICE SENSATION STAGED BY THE PRODUCERS OF FRA DIAVOLO—ALL STAR CAST

TWO REELS

RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

An old detective sacrifices twenty-five years of honest effort for the sake of his wife and erring son. The son does not permit the sacrifice.

Romance, thrills, tears and heart-throbs permeate the story. Stolen jewels are hidden in an old violin case. There is a spectacular chase across house-tops. The detective's son, ashamed of himself, tries to evade his father and drops from a height of four stories, almost to his death. Realism.

ADVERTISING MATTER INCLUDES

one sheets, three sheets, heralds, slides and other miscellaneous material. Write for samples.

OTHER FEATURES

THE NEW LOVE AND THE OLD

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOV. 6

JUST HATS

RELEASED FRIDAY, NOV. 8

Solax Company

LEMOINE AVENUE, FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

THE MIRACLE
HAS ARRIVED

Brought to us by a Special Messenger from the Continental Kunstfilm of Berlin.

All and only authorized versions of this Marvelous Photoplay must bear this copyright trade mark

Have 4,200 feet length and bear our name.

NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Square, New York

EASTMAN
motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by
EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MIATT PROCURES
PATENTS
1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law
Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive.
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of tbe officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI October 26, 1912 Number 17

EDUCATIONAL FILMS

TAKING up the editorial where I left off last week, with a promise to show the progress of the Edison Studio along the educational line of films, I herewith present them to my readers. They cannot fail to be of interest to all educationalists who are making up programs either for the education of children, or those of larger growth.

"The Westminister Kennel Club Dog Show" gives a fine exhibition of dogs of various types which are certainly an interesting study to everyone who is a lover of dogs.

"The Close of the American Revolution" is a series of United States history and is interesting as showing present-day ideas of an old episode.

"Children Who Labor" is one that should be in the hands of every child's labor society, and should be shown wherever it is necessary to describe or depict the horrors of child labor.

"A Personally Conducted Trip to Bermuda" gives some very good scenic views that will teach geography and bring foreign countries close to our door. The same may be said of St. John's Newfoundland and Its Surroundings."

"The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Washington Crossing the Delaware" do not need any special comment, also "The Declaration of Independence."

Other educational scenic scenes are: "Picturesque Darjeeling, India," "Views in Calcutta," "Scenes in Delhi, India," "Incidents of the Durbar," and in our own country might be mentioned "The City of Denver," "Niagara Falls," "A Thousand Miles Through the Rockies," "A Fifty Mile Ramble Through the Thousand Islands," "A Trip Through Colorado Springs," "Cripple Creek," "A Winter Visit to Central Park, New York City," "Winter Logging in Maine," and special industrial subjects and types of municipal workers such as "The Pennsylvania State Police," "How Motion Pictures Are Made," "New York City Street Cleaning," "New York and United States Life Saving Corps at Work," "The Codfish Industry," "Modern Weapons for Fighting Fire in New York City," "The Maple Sugar Industry," "Target Practice," "On the Atlantic Fleet of the United States Navy;" others showing" Ten Days with the Fleet of the United States Battleships," "New York Poultry and Pigeon Exhibit," and "The Eskimos in Labrador." We might add to these by calling attention to other historical pictures such as "His First Commission," a story of Abraham Lincoln. "The Minute Men," a story of the battle of Lexington. "The Price of Victory," a story of Napoleon Bonaparte. "The Battle of Bunker Hill," "The Capture of Fort Ticonderoga," "The Battle of Trafalgar," "How Mrs. Murray Saved the American Army" and "The Death of Nathan Hale."

This list will answer the inquiries of many of my readers for a program of various educational subjects, and I feel sure that taking other manufacturers' films in addition to the above, churches and such like institutions, public and other schools, will find matter sufficient to impress the young mind very forcibly. I will continue this series in future editorials as soon as I receive full data from the other manufacturers whom I ask to co-operate with me to bring before the educational public the best they have—either as industrial, scenic, city life, or other scenes. Our next article will touch upon the product of Pathe Freres.

Alfred H. Saunders.

MAJESTIC SUIT AGAINST OLD SALES COMPANY

The Majestic Motion Picture Company is conducting two suits against the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company and the individuals and manufacturers who were interested and active therein. In the United States Court the defendants attacked the complaint of the Majestic Company, but the complaint has been sustained by Judge Lacombe. In the suit in the New York Supreme Court, Judge Bischoff has sustained a demurrer to the complaint, which is to that extent a victory for the defendants. The attorneys for the Majestic Company, however, state they will either promptly take an appeal or perhaps procure leave to amend the complaint.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

General Headquarters

703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio

OFFICERS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

President, M. A. Neff, Lock Box 15, Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Vice-Presidents, S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; Wm. J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; B. L. Converse, Owassa, Mich.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; E. W. Waugh, Huntington, W. Va.; Orene Parker, Covington, Ky.; Geo. H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.; Chas. Rothschild, San Francisco, Calif.; Sidney Asher, New York, N. Y.; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City, N. J.; H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; E. V. Richards, Shreveport, La.; F. W. Young, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; W. H. Wassman, Nasbville, Tenn.; Anthony J. Xydias, Houston, Tex.; Carl Gregg, Tulsa, Okla.; Paul LeMarquand, Winnipeg, Can.; M. C. Everstein, Jacksonville, Fla.; Geo. Osborn, St. Paul, Minn.

REPORT OF TEXAS CONVENTION WHICH WAS HELD AT DALLAS, TEX., ON THE 15th AND 16th OF OCTOBER

M. A. Neff, president of the National League, was introduced by T. P. Finnegan, of Dallas, Tex., who was chairman of the committee on arrangements and entertainment. After Mr. Neff's address was completed he took the chair and called for membership and the following members were enrolled. The members were enrolled as they came forward and paid their initiation fee, and they all expressed their desire to assist Texas by joining the League which has shown its ability in the past and has made such marked progress.

Mr. E. V. Richards, Jr., of Shreveport, La., who is taking a great interest in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and who is now president of the League in Louisiana, was appointed by Mr. Neff as temporary secretary. The convention was enthusiastic throughout. The first day's meeting was closed on adjournment to meet on Wednesday, the 16th, at 1:30 p.m. Immediately after the adjournment the delegates assembled and a picture was taken by the representatives of the Universal Animated Weekly. This picture will be a great drawing card throughout the State of Texas, as all the exhibitors throughout the state are very enthusiastic, and while they could not all come to Dallas, they are with the League and the movement to bring about better conditions for the exhibitors. Texas is thoroughly organized and the effect of their organization will be felt in every part of the country.

After the pictures were taken the delegates were given a sight-seeing automobile ride through the city of Dallas, and to many of us it was a revelation to see the magnificent buildings and the well-paved streets, and especially the very fine residences. On returning to the hotels the delegates, film men and newspaper men assembled at the spacious banquet hall at the Oriental Hotel, where a banquet was served by a corps of waiters who seemed to work in harmony with the chef, and this was voted to be the grandest banquet ever pulled off in the city of Dallas; the spacious dining-room was full to overflowing.

The music which enlivened the occasion was inspiring and the many speakers made the affair one to be long remember. Mr. J. B. Kelley of the Film Supply Company was chosen toastmaster. Mr. Kelley showed remarkable ability in selecting speakers. The first speaker called upon was T. P. Finnegan. Other speakers were William Fairman, Bert Lewis, J. C. Clemmons, J. E. Etezelle, B. J. Parker, George Georgeson, J. Robbins, E. L. Lampkin, Frank Dalton, O. W. Blankenbecker, V. O. Clemmons, L. J. Locke and N. E. Depinet. A select solo was rendered by O. Reese. An address on "Motion Photography," by Miss Martha Russell; a speech by M. A. Neff and Mr. Anthony Xydaias. At the close of the banquet everybody joined in singing "I Am Going Back to Dixie."

On the second day the convention was called to order by M. A. Neff. The National Cash Register Company's representative asked for a few minutes to make an announcement in regard to a new register machine which is being sold to the exhibitors. Mr. Pyle, husband of Miss Martha Russell, also made an announcement in regard to his posters. The representative of the Universal Film Company announced that the independent manufacturers had come to an agreement and had settled all their difficulties. The convention was then called to order and went into executive session, and the following officers were elected:

T. P. Finnegan, National Vice-President, Dallas, Texas.
Maurice Wolf, President, Houston, Texas.
C. M. Blanchette, First Vice-President.
L. J. Locke, Second Vice-President.
Moye Wicks, Secretary.
J. C. Penn, Treasurer.

After discussing many subjects the convention adjourned to meet in Houston, Texas, at the call of the President.

The representatives of the Independent Film Exchanges were there at all times and never lost a chance to entertain the exhibitors and to make them feel at home and to assist in making the convention a grand success.

On his way home Mr. Neff stopped off at St. Louis to confer with C. M. Christensen, National Secretary, and William J. Sweeney, of Chicago, on matters pertaining to the League. They met at the Planters' House, St. Louis, Mo.

The members of the two Dallas Film Exchanges and their representatives were at all times mixing with the delegates, and a strong friendly feeling was manifested at all times, which will no doubt redound to the great good of the business in general.

MR. NEFF'S ADDRESS AT THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF TEXAS

Ladies and Gentlemen:

This is a great day for Texas. The actions taken here to-day establish a record in the motion picture business in your State. The distinguished and progressive motion picture exhibitors assembled here today in whom all the sentiment of a square deal to all with special privileges to none is manifest. We, as business men, are organizing for the purpose of protecting an industry which is educating and amusing the world. In view of the fact that a large number of exhibitors bave come from a long distance is evidence of the great interest taken in our organization and the necessity of co-operation. The thing tbat we most desire as motion picture exhibitors is a thorough, bonest understanding with those with whom we have commercial and other dealings; the most priceless blessing for which we contend and seek is harmony, co-operation and a square deal. We extend a hand of good fellowship to all, asking for nothing only that which rightly belongs to us, co-operating together that all may be bencfited and receive that which we are commercially entitled to. We are all dependent one upon the other for the things that have caused us so mucb worry and money heretofore, we wish to eliminate, just as we wish to eliminate those injustices which have crept into the business and force themselves upon us as exhibitors, without our consent. We are doing millions of dollars worth of business a year, a great army of people are engaged in our line of business, and as the days go by our trade relations become more entwined with our other relations in the commercial world, binding us closer together and only through co-operation and organization can we stimulate sentiment in favor of the motion picture and bring about a condition that will be just, honest, fair and profitable to all concerned. There is not only a potential influence of mutual gain to be derived from a thorough organization for ourselves but for every manufacturer, film man and all others with whom we have business relations.

We believe that we are justified in thinking that we are worthy of a commercial place upon the map and we believe that we, as exhibitors, should not be forgotten in the great commercial world. A line of business that employs over 200,000 people directly and, indirectly, over a half a million, and does a business of over $500,000,000 a year, should be recognized as a potential factor in the calculations of every state in this Union.

We believe in the uplift of Cinematography, we believe that the councils and legislatures of every State should protect our interests the same as other commercial interests; we believe that the scheming politician should not be allowed to interfere with our individual rights; we believe that there should be a censor board created for the protection of the exhibitor, as well as the public. We believe that no man should be employed to operate a motion picture machine unless he is competent; we believe in giving the public every safeguard possible. We believe that every exhibitor should conduct his theatre in a pleasant and efficient manner, always looking to the comfort and welfare of tbe patrons. We urge and demand that all members of our organization conduct their theatres on the highest plane and that where a certificate of membership is hung that it is a guarantee to the public that nothing will be shown that is suggestive or immoral and that the proprietor is working to place Cinematography on the very highest plane.

We desire to have it distinctly understood that our organization takes sides with neither the licensed nor independent film manufacturers or exchanges only in so far as it is to the best interests of our members and the public in general. We also desire to have it understood that we are not organizing for thc purpose of co-operating together to the detriment of others who are engaged in our line of business, but for the purpose of creating a healthy sentiment in favor of the greatest and grandest educational business that has ever heretofore been established. While there are some fanatics who do not and will not understand Cinematography and the aims and objects of the exhibitor, however, in the near future the light will dawn upon the most skeptical, and like others who have heretofore frowned down upon it, will become strong and staunch friends of the motion picture and our organization.

GREATER NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' BALL

We cannot too strongly urge every member of the industry to attend the second annual entertainment and ball of the Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, which will be held at Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street, near Lexington avenue, on Thursday evening, November 14th.

The committee in charge have been untiring in their efforts to make this occasion a gala one, and the affair has the promise of being a huge success. Remember this date, November 14th, and make no other engagements.

"SILENT JIM"

Eclair Two-reel Release for Nov. 5th

A tale of the northwest mounted police, "Silent Jim" is a release of which Eclair may well be proud. It has the atmosphere that should accompany the subject, and it has "snap" in every inch of the film. Full of action that is not superfluous, it does not drag a moment.

The quartette of leads in "Silent Jim," Miss Barbara Tennant and the Messrs. Francis, Frazer and Johnstone, are sufficient to get any story over, even though the production be less flawless than that of "Silent Jim."

All the romance and fascination of the remote and unfamiliar enliven this stirring tale of that vast and little known region "from Athabasca to the Bay," somewhat hazily thought of as "Northwest Canada"; Indians and half breeds, trappers and moccasined maidens come and go. Royal mounted police, the flower of the British provincial forces, dominate the drama, while behind all the mighty Hudson Bay Co. looms vaguely, lending a unique atmosphere to the story of a man's hate and gratitude.

Silent Jim, who in the commencement of the film story is a trapper, living by himself, coming seldom to the haunts of men, and habitually so silent as to be a mark of ridicule to his acquaintances.

One day, stung by the well-meant pleasantries of some young bloods of the Royal Mounted, he breaks his silence. He, too, wore a uniform. And thus he tells his story:

Twenty years ago he had come, the younger son of a noble English house, to seek his fortune in Canada. Gambling soon left him penniless, and so deprived him of the company of the little flirt Jacquline, who frankly preferred the rich presents of silver fox and beaver which a half-breed trapper, Black Baptiste, laid at her feet to the Englishman's empty pockets. At this juncture the latter received his coveted commission. As a Royal Mounted policeman his first task was to apprehend this same Black Baptiste for causing the death of Jackphine, a Cree Indian. He follows the half breed to Jacquline's cabin, where the girl has concealed him in a closet. The Mounted fires through the door, but the fugitive has made a clever escape. A chase through the forest begins; the wily Baptiste leads his pursuer on to the quicksands, and leaves him there helpless to await his death. But during the night an omen twice occurring awakens pity in the heart of the frightened half breed. He returns to the spot, drags the fainting man from his death and bears him on his back to Jacquline's cabin. He is returning to consciousness when the hoof beats of the Royal Mounted are heard outside. As they enter the cabin Black Baptiste flees. The sergeant pursues him and is about to fire when a shot from the cabin window pierces his hand. Baptiste has escaped, and Jim has squared his debt.

Degraded and stripped of his uniform, Jim wandered back to Jacquline's cabin. But she had gone to join the half breed beyond the Athabasca. The years of silence began. Silent Jim ended his story. A grizzled officer stepped forth from the crowd, showing his scarred right hand, and offered the trapper his belt and holster. But Jim gathered up his pelts and returned in silence to the woods.

This film has all the requisites of an entertaining production. One most remarkable photographic effect occurs when as the mounted police ride along the river bank and Baptiste is hiding on the opposite side only the reflections of the horses and men in the water are seen in the picture.

Erin, Tenn.—T. E. Buckingham's moving picture theatre destroyed by fire.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A moving picture theatre will be built at Thirty-sixth street and Haverford avenue, for William Bogar.

THE LIFE OF JOHN BUNYAN AND BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

Produced by Hochstetter Utility Co., Inc.

Reviewed by M. I. MacDonald

To say that the above-named production is an artistic one would be putting it very mildly. It is artistic to the last degree; it is authentic in every detail; the costuming is absolutely correct according to what history tells us, but, to the mind of the writer, after all these necessary essentials of a good production have been passed upon and declared to be satisfactory to the intelligent mind, the great point of significance in connection with "The Life of John Bunyan and Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress," as produced by the Hochstetter Utility Company, under the direction of so able a man as Francis Powers, with the supervision of Oscar I. Lamberger, Ph.D., is that it was the culmination of a series of inventions, optical, mechanical and chemical, from the brain of F. W. Hochstetter, a young man of remarkable mental powers, and the endurance, both physical and mental, necessary to the inventive genius who would make good.

It is because of all this that I would like to speak first of the inventor of many inventions before going deeper into the merits of the production.

In the Hochstetter productions the stereoscopic effects will be found to be very remarkable, the high lights and shadows, the color ingredients or values are so recorded on the film as to be possible of separation by the human eye to such an extent that the figures on the screen stand out with a life-like roundness and substantiality, showing a depth and distance between the different luminous parts of the figure.

F. W. HOCHSTETTER

Sixteen years ago F. W. Hochstetter, then a mere boy, started out to materialize ideas that struggled in his brain for recognition. In that time he has materialized no less than twelve different inventions. In fourteen years he turned out four optical inventions, two mechanical, and two chemical; in the following two years four more, principally chemical, saw the light of day. To-day we find Mr. Hochstetter nervous and thin, but his whole personality illumined with the glow of enthusiasm. He is bright and cheery, although he has not had a vacation in all those long sixteen years. During that time he has developed a startling natural color process for motion picture photography that places his name easily in the same category with that of Chas. Urban, the much esteemed and unapproachable genius of Kinemacolor.

Remonstrating with Mr. Hochstetter on his neglect of his health, for he tells me that for weeks and weeks and weeks he has slept not more than a couple of hours each night and sometimes not that, and for five nights before the first exhibition of the Bunyan pictures not at all, his answer was: "I don't care if I lose my life so long as I accomplish something that is for the benefit of the world." I sincerely believe that he meant what he said.

In the Bunyan pictures some remarkable color and light effects have been accomplished. There are certain light effects that are rather difficult of description—a certain growth in brilliancy of illumination in a certain portion of the picture without any shifting whatsoever. This Mr. Hochstetter tells me is the result of a peculiar process of development which he has devised. And then again, and most startling of all, is the natural color illumination of the angels in the second to the last scene in "Pilgrim's Progress." To the eye it seems an iridescent illumination within the picture under which the armour and shield of Christian glint and glow in the most remarkable manner as from a reflection from a delicately tinted electric globe. The effect is almost uncanny. This latter is accomplished in the printing on films that have been sensitized.

In the wonderful film production of which we speak the characters of John Bunyan and Christian have both been posed for by the same man, a celebrated artist. Warner Oland, a Swedish artist of exceptional powers, made famous by his vivid portrayal of "The Father," August Strindberg, Sweden's greatest author's greatest work, has portrayed with wonderful reality and versatility the character of John Bunyan, the vicious boy who was born at Elstow, now Bedford, England, of very poor parents in the year 1628, who as he grew older buried his better self in riotous living and profanity of the vilest kind, and whose awakening came with the death of a soldier comrade, and for which he was indirectly accountable through his addiction to alcohol. Also a good angel appeared to be waiting for him in the person of the young girl whom he afterwards made his wife. Thrown into prison because of his rigid religious beliefs and persistent teachings, he there wrote the book whose influence has been so widely felt, and in which is written the remarkable experiences of Bunyan's life, from the depths of vice and immorality to the highest point of ecstasy.

No one who has the good fortune to see this production can fail to recognize in its five splendid reels one of the most remarkable feats of motion picture photography, action and dramatic direction ever witnessed.

The exhibition from which the present criticism was drawn took place in the auditorium of the West 23rd street Y. M. C. A. before a highly intelligent audience composed of press representatives, clergymen and representatives from the different charitable organizations. The Russell Sage Foundation was specially represented; the Woman's Municipal League, etc., etc. General satisfaction and delight was evident on all sides.

At the quarters of the Hochstetter Utility Co., 42 East 12th street, the work of properly equipping the plant to facilitate the work and to make possible even better results than have already been obtained is under way. We understand that the entire production will be delivered to the public colored and illumined by the Hochstetter natural color process of developing and printing.

Corsicana, Tex—M. L. Levine has let the contract to build a structure for a moving picture house, which will be located on West Fifth avenue near the business centre of town.

"WHAT FATHER DID"

"What Father Did," by Eclair, serves to present a new member of the Eclair stock company, Miss Mildred Bright.

Her part, while light and simple, is well enacted and if perfection in little things augurs anything, her first big chance should prove immense. She is pretty, no doubt, with a strong bit of character permeating through her loveliness. Miss Tennant is always a certified performer and does all she has to do with a genuine feeling of refinement.

Mr. Brownell as "Father" carries the burden of the tale and he reaches the goal set out to—he gets the laughs.

It is a most cleverly conceived and naturally evolved scenario. Very novel and unusual in theme but every bit of it highly probable.

Dad has three daughters who, of course, have three beaux. All young men are of the little better than the average sort, and the girls are alarmed that the sight and odor from father's pipe will disgust them into failing to call again on Sunday.

Father lights his pipe, takes up his paper to read, only to be admonished and requested to hunt another room by Barbara and her friend. Obligingly does Dad betake himself into the next room only to be met by Mildred and the man she adores. Mildred gets him to move on and father meets the third daughter, who ships him on. With no other room to go to, the poor old gent wanders to the kitchen, and more of it still. The cook and her "steady" resent his interloping and attempt to tell him so.

Father is riled. So he starts a fight for his master-of-the-house-rights with the result that all "beat it in fear of imminent death."

Then the air fills blue with the smoke from Father's old jimmy pipe.

BEDELIA AND THE NEWLYWEDS
Reliance release November 9.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

MAJESTIC

"The Tree Imp" for October 27 is just as pretty as it can be, and, moreover, is abundant in good spontaneous comedy, a rare attribute indeed in the present-day film stories. A more cute, unsophisticated little country girl could not be imagined. The scene where she comes out trying to look like other girls, arrayed in a flowered hoop-skirt costume which her grandmother wore, is a delight in the simplicity of the child's manner and the comedy the situation creates.

THANHOUSER

"Taking Care of Baby" and "Mary's Goat," on the same reel for October 27, are both of excellent quality, particularly the former. In "Taking Care of Baby" the tiny Thanhouser tot does some fine work for a babe of her years. The little boy of the family is sent to take baby sister out in her carriage, and is promised ten cents on his return, providing he takes proper care of her. The little boy takes her to the park and then leaves her to herself. Meantime, Miss Baby runs about all over the place, gets into a stone quarry, opens a box of dynamite, proceeds to eat some of it, eventually throwing it against a stone causing an explosion. She just misses being killed by the falling of a safe which is being hoisted up to a high building, and before her return home asleep and happy numerous other happenings of interest in comedy occur. The mother, pleased and happy at the return of her baby, supposing it to have been well cared for, gives the boy the promised dime.

"Mary's Goat" is also rich in comedy as well as in dramatic situations.

"Put Yourself in His Place," in two reels, for October 29, is a masterpiece. Charles Reade's novel by this title and from which the film story was taken is too well known to require repeating here. The chief characters of the story are splendidly interpreted by the Thanhouser players. The Thanhouser Company has certainly done itself proud in this production. The scene when Henry Little is at work at his forge, secreted in the old deserted church, is something to be remembered.

GAUMONT

"The Destructive Duelist" is rather out of the ordinary for Gaumont. It is a farce-comedy—one of the furniture-smashing, crockery-breaking tremendously destructive type, and will no doubt elicit many laughs.

"A Diplomatic Couple," a comedy-drama, has many interesting situations, but is of the ordinary sort.

"Olga the Adventuress" is the story of a singer who took Paris by storm. A well-known musician and composer is called to Paris to accompany her at a certain musicale and falls in love with her. The singer is invited to his home in the country, where the secret of her adventurous career is made known to the old musician by the fiance of his daughter. It divulges that the singer, to whom he is now betrothed, has spent some time in prison. The story ends in his releasing her and in reconciliation with his daughter, who has been much disturbed. The film is not only interesting in plot, but wonderfully artistic in production.

"A Domestic Treasure" for October 29 is another of the beautiful Gaumont hand-colored. In color effects it is a dream, in production, artistic and consistent, and a good deal of smooth comedy in its make-up. On the same reel appears a delightful scenic entitled "The Gorges of Albuquerque."

"The Price of Paradise" is a most beautifully produced film. The story is of a young girl, who, to please her mother sold herself for wealth. One of the finest effects we have ever seen is exhibited in the vision where a river scene blends so perfectly with the interior of the room in which the girl sits that she appears almost to be a part of the vision.

AMERICAN

"The Wanderer" is a delight with Miss Van Trump, Miss Bush, Mr. Kerrigan and our beloved villain, Richardson, to the fore. This is, to the writer's mind, one of the best recent efforts of the "Flying A." The simple harvest scenes are beautifully artistic pictures.

"Chiquita the Dancer" is the story of a tragedy attendant on claim-jumping. It is authentic in incident and atmosphere, and is a credit to the participants in the production.

RELIANCE

"A Wireless Miracle" is the story of how a little child was cured of dread diphtheria through directions given over the wireless. It is peculiarly interesting, and holds the audience every moment although the operation performed by a novice on the child's throat hardly seems reasonable.

"Men Who Dare," in two reels, to be released October 30, is one of the best of Reliance's recent releases. In fact it is a masterpiece of its kind. The story centres around a young man who squandered his money in luxurious living, and who, urged by another, committed the crime of bank robbery. The principal portion of the story takes place in the penitentiary, where buffeted and ill used by his keepers, he dies, while his young wife is visiting him. This is a very excellent film.

SOLAX

"The Idol Worshipper" does not do Solax credit. The story is about a girl who was a worshipper of book heroes and is too foolish to be real good comedy. Solax should pay more attention to the selection of good plots. They are capable of better work.

COMET

"The Mule Ranch Mystery" is fairly interesting, and shows a marked improvement in Comet production.

A NATURAL EFFECT

Speaking of getting a natural effect on moving pictures, the Bohemia, of Cleveland, Tenn., was running a Vitagraph "Bumps, the Circus Elephant." Everything was running smoothly when the fire alarm sounded from the tower just across the street, then the clanging of the fire department passing the theatre, when on the screen flashed a sub title "Fire!" and the circus tent was burning. "Bumps" saved his small trainer and the audience got the effect.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

THE tendency to show advertising slides on the moving picture screen is certainly growing. It is a mistake and distasteful to refined patrons. Mr. Brewster, in the Motion Picture Story Magazine, truthfully asserts that it would be a calamity if all theatres adopted the policy, and that only misguided exhibitors will allow bakers, soap makers, etc., to use the screen to advertise their wares. The only advertising that can legitimately appear on the screens is that which pertains to the pictures and theatres. All else is taking unfair advantage of the patrons.

* * * *

And while on the subject, we would say a word about songs. Now there are good, bad and indifferent eggs—also songs. The tuneful melody is a delight to the moving picture patron. The near-suggestive and the unmelodious "rag" are not so delightful. Many an exhibitor will carefully censor his pictures, but is willing to accept any old musical number forwarded him. This is a grave mistake. The picture play public is becoming as fastidious and as discriminating in the song line as it is in the picture service. Watch the song service.

* * * *

It has remained for the members of the Western Committee of the Republican Party to figure out the election in November through the medium of moving pictures. For the last few days, agents of the Western Committee have been investigating sentiment as revealed in the moving picture theatres when the films of the various Presidential candidates were thrown on the screen. The howls that went up for "Smiling Bill Taft" have been more eloquent and convincing than any newspaper polls of straw votes. However, after the Taft films, there followed pictures of "Woody" Wilson and "Teddy" Roosevelt, and their publicity agents say the yells of approbation are even more prolonged than those for "Smiling Bill." Despite the differences of opinion the fact remains, as we predicted several months ago, that the moving picture has become an important factor in political campaigning.

* * * *

Frank E. Fredericks, of Port Clinton, Ohio, has invented a mechanical device which he says will eliminate the number of moving picture operators to one hereafter. It is an automatic take-up and film carrier and will produce one continuous show, while all rewinding and rethreading of films will be done away with. Maybe this invention would have helped some at May's Theatre, Piqua, Ohio. An immense audience was disappointed because an operator botched up the presentation of the Bernhardt "Camille" feature film. All ticket purchasers of the first night were admitted free the following evening when a competent operator was in the booth. Moral: Pay good salaries and keep efficient operators.

* * * *

The Ohio State Building Inspector has ordered that all moving picture machines in the Buckeye State be turned by hand. Operators will not be permitted to motor, as it were.

* * * *

According to late statistics, five million people every day, in Uncle Sam's domain, visit moving picture shows. What do you know about that?

* * * *

Charles Frohman has announced he will enjoin any attempt at motion pictures of the home life of Ethel Barrymore and Maude Adams, as these actresses do not desire such publicity. It is not believed, however, that the Cherry Sisters would have any objection to the films.

* * * *

The season is here when the motion picture actor would appreciate buckwheat cakes in the breakfast-room scenes.

* * * *

None of the educational pictures have contained a single hint against the Ben Davis apple, and yet it is a subject that could be viewed with alarm.

* * * *

One Yale professor says there is a waste of fifteen years in the average American's life. Waiting in line to enter moving picture shows on Saturday evenings may account for some of it.

* * * *

William James, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has made a contract for the use of Kinemacolor in Franklin County. Mr. James says his contract was the first signed with any theatre in the United States. James is popular with Ohio and Indiana exhibitors, and he shows his wisdom by "hooking up" with Kinemacolor which will be very popular in the Middle Western states.

* * * *

Mr. Brewster wonders if future historians will point to the great men of our time and compare them with the great men of the past. He wants to know who are our Napoleons, Cæsars and Shakespeares of to-day. Well, we can point with pride to Carl Laemmle.

* * * *

We note with interest that Reliance is releasing a two-reel "Guy Mannering." There is a wealth of dramatic material in this great novel by Sir Walter Scott. Reliance is to be congratulated; the film will appeal to cultured audiences. And we are anticipating the release of "Ivanhoe" in about five reels by Selig or Vitagraph some of these days.

* * * *

Thomas A. Edison, in an interview, says he will support T. R. for president "because the Colonel is a man who does things." Edison is also such a man.

* * * *

A Chicago youngster was fined fifty dollars and costs for "hitting the high places" and sentenced to jail. At the end of twenty-five days his millionaire father paid the boy's fine. The boy was free twelve hours and then he returned to jail and asked to be imprisoned a while longer. He wishes to remain a prisoner until he has acquired a resistance to temptation. And many a script editor would reject such a picture story as "improbable." Truth is often stranger than fiction.

* * * *

Will some moving picture manufacturer kindly arrange for the release of a film called "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early"? We can call the attention of those interested in film of humanitarian tendencies to the lack of consideration shown by persons who patronize stores at unreasonable hours. Every purchase made on a holiday has a tendency toward keeping the store open on future ones. It is the people who often unnecessarily add to the burdens of the shop girls.

* * * *

The man who is forever reading evil thoughts between innocent lines would make a dangerous guardian of virtue.

* * * *

Child stories sympathetically enacted are popular, but we do not care to see the infant prodigy, in Wild Western raiment, holding up a bunch of grown men at the points of two big revolvers.

* * * *

There is enough in the noble, pure, beautiful, inspiring phases of life to interest people without resorting to the low and vile. A low picture show is a dangerous thing in any community.

* * * *

"Kindly tell me how Thanhouser retains its wonderful popularity," exclaimed a moving picture authority within our hearing. Easy enough: Carefulness in detail; good photography; refined and convincing stories and natural acting.

* * * *

Every knock is a free advertisement. Please remember this fact.

* * * *

Good afternoon, Miss Pearl White! Moving picture fans down our way are de-lighted to see your pretty face in Crystal films.

* * * *

We are anxiously awaiting the news that the pajamas-sent-to-the-girl-by-mistake-for-flowers plot will never, never be revamped again.

LOTTIE BRISCOE
Leading Lady Lubin Stock Co.

Miss Lottie Briscoe, for one so young, has achieved remarkable distinction in her chosen profession. She was discovered by Mr. McKee Rankin at the age of four years in St. Louis, and played the boy in "The Runaway Wife." She starred for three years in "Editha's Burglar," and after that created the principal female part in Russ Whytals' "For Fair Virginia." She was with Richard Mansfield, and was always described by him as his one and only prince in which he referred to her performance in Richard III. She was in the original stock company at the Orpheum Theatre, Philadelphia, playing ingenues there two and a half years. Those who have ever seen "The Little Vagrants" cannot help remembering her impersonation of Claude. Wherever she has stayed for any length of time, as in Milwaukee, Providence, Portland, Me., or Columbus, she has been popular and endeared herself to all the theatregoers. During the last eighteen months she has devoted her attention and time to moving pictures, and is now one of the Lubin leading ladies.

"THE TREE IMP"
Majestic, October 27

A PRACTICAL USE FOR MOVING PICTURES

Moving pictures are being put to a new use, which will result in the saving of life and limb. Professor Munsterburg, of Harvard, is responsible for what is known as the cinematograph nerve test, which is said will reduce motor car accidents in the United States to a minimum. The professor's theory is that no young man ought to become a chauffeur if his tests indicate that he would not be quick enough to stop his car if a child ran out in the roadway in front of the wheels. In the test for chauffeurs at Harvard the subject is placed in a motor car in a hall equipped for the purpose. He is seated at the wheel of the machine, which is jacked up so that all the machinery is movable, while the car remains stationary. The experiments are conducted in a darkened room. In front of the car is a white wall, on which moving pictures of great size are shown. They are immediately before the chauffeur student's eyes. The student is then told to act as he would in real life if he saw any one of the things happen that appear on the screen. Although he knows that the car is not actually running, the fact that he is under a test puts the student on edge and makes him behave approximately as he would under ordinary circumstances. A child is first shown on the screen with startling realism, tottering across the road in front of the car. The chauffeur is, of course, expected to handle his car without an instant's loss of time, just as he would have to do if the emergency arose in real life. This is the most important test to which the students are subjected by the Harvard system.—From the New Orleans Daily Picayune.

Bruce Noel, the popular southpaw, known all over the baseball world, and Chas. Graham of Detroit, Mich., have purchased the Cozy Theatre at Marionette, Wis.

EXHIBITORS' NOTES

George F. Abbott, a graduate of the University of Rochester in the Class of 1911, has received a position as assistant to Mrs. Clements, manager of B. F. Keith's Bijou Theatre in Boston. Mr. Abbott studied dramatic literature last year at Harvard University and has written plays.

* * * *

The Consolidated Theatres Company, a corporation which will practically control the moving picture business in Kentucky, Southern Indiana and Tennessee, has just completed its organization, according to official announcement made recently. The new concern has a capital of $500.000. Its general offices will be in Louisville, and in the near future it will take over the Orpheum, Casino and Crystal Theatres in this city, now owned and operated by the Princess Amusement Company.

At the head of the consolidated concern are some well-known local men. O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, who controls and operates about ten motion picture theatres in St. Louis, is president of the new company. William Higgins, of the Mattingly-Moore Distillery Company, is vice-president; Judge W. Allen Kinney, secretary of the Princess Amusement Company, is secretary and treasurer of the Consolidated concern, while Irvin C. Simon, also with the Princess, has been elected to fill the office of manager.

Ed. L. Williams, president of the Southern National Life Insurance Company, is a director of the new corporation.

The Consolidated Theatres Company will devote most of its attention to small towns of not less than 5,000, which, of course, means that small theatres will be the rule. However, when it appears to the company's advantage large houses will be erected.

At present plans have been approved to erect four new theatres in the states named.

Siegmund Lubin has invented a machine, though that is a bad name for it, but it is something on the order of the stereoscope for showing moving pictures at home. It is small and takes up little room on the library table, and moving picture films can be inserted. Mr. Lubin suggests a very pretty idea for this apparatus (which so far he has not given any name) but it will come out later. The idea is to keep a family record of a child. He says: "We will take a picture of the infant, at six months old, again at one year when it can toddle, and still later the romping child of five or six, and again the little school miss, and each few years until the baby has evolved into the gorgeous woman. Fancy this picture being a part of a wedding function. It is worth nursing and will be another joy of the future.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

A Little Dissertation on Plots

THE essential element of plot construction is that the interest should increase steadily from the beginning to the end. A good plot is a perfect illustration of climax, and the principle of climax as against anti-climax is an important principle of all writing from the sentence to the picture play. The climax of the picture play plot sometimes has two phases, the climax proper and the catastrophe. The climax proper is the point of greatest intensity of interest; the catastrophe is the clash of material elements resulting from the revealed motives. Cody believes that in practice the catastrophe is the only climax that is recognized, and the descent to earth easily accomplished immediately following. There are two recognized methods of plot construction. One is that of cleverly concealing the nature of denouement until the end. It is the method of nearly all mystery plots and detective stories. The general method of constructing detective playlets is simple, and Cody gives his method of the work. The writer begins at the conclusion and decides on what his hero-detective is going to discover; then he works backward, carefully arranging his signs. When all is in readiness he begins to write. His detective, with an air of mystery, is introduced and brought to the first sign, and so he goes on until he solves the prearranged mystery. Writing detective plots does not require the shrewdness or versatility as the convincing plot and action of everyday life. Neither do detective stories require penetrative insight on the part of the writer. Keep away from the detective story. Always unconvincing, they are also unpopular with many of the Script Editors because crime of some sort must invariably be present in order to be detected.

Women as Script Editors

Many of the more successful picture plays of recent months were either written by women or selected by women editors. Everyone knows Gene Gauntier's work as a writer. Miss Gauntier, star of the Kalem Company, has found time to evolve some of the best picture plays of the present day. Then Mrs. Hartmann Breuil, editor for the Vitagraph Company, is known to writers for her versatile work and judicious discrimination between good and bad scripts. The latest to achieve success is Miss Christine Van Buskirk, of the Victor Company. Miss Van Buskirk is now assisting Giles R. Warren, of the Victor, in selecting scripts, and Miss Van Buskirk within the past few months, has achieved an enviable reputation as a writer and judge of picture play scripts. Hats off to the ladies, say we!

B. F. SCHULBERG

When Mr. B. P. Schulberg rejects a script he does so in a way that brings tears of joy to the author. It's a great talent and Mr. Schulberg has made many friends among picture playwrights because of his courtesies and fair dealings. Editor Schulberg hands out a hot tip to writers in the following contribution to the department:

> My consistent tip to would-be's and nearly are's is to keep away from the beaten path—which is original. Of course, the ancients have stolen all our ideas, but there's the slightest fraction of a chance that one or two homeless ideas haven't yet been Columbused. As a suggestion, let them imagine that they've jumped out of their skins—and if they can't imagine a little think like that they can't be scenario writers—that they have landed on a new planet, and started to write scripts for a new brand of people. The stuff might unconsciously become new with that thought in view—not that I could do it, but it would hardly do to upset tradition and practice what I preach. But not to get slangy with the truth, there are new ideas. If there were not, we'd stagnate. The popularly deplored fact that there are no new ideas is an older wail than the most antiquated plot itself. That there are no new situations is a feasible conclusion (and personally I think that is what many mean), but there are always new ways of constructing and combining them. I would tell any script writer in the country without blushing that there are new ideas hiding in every corner of the world and in every incident in life. When the writer absorbs the cheerful view that there are no new ideas, it's very easy to write old ideas; if he would convince himself that there are new ideas dying for neglect, it might not be so difficult to construct some. The trouble is, script writers are human, and therefore are lazy mentally. They follow the line of least resistance. The idea that there are no new ones is more comforting than the certainty that there are, and they become conservative. They should be progressive—organize a Bull Muse party. The company particularly wishes scripts of American domestic life, with some domestic or love problem, and its solution. It will probably be recognized as an old demand—it's the only type of story, in my estimation, that has consistent possibilities. I'm strong for the domestic story, and next to that, the kiddies, God bless 'em!

Mr. Schulberg is evidently a psychologist. However, the mental attitude he recommends is worthy of consideration by every picture playwright, for psychology has been known to help.

A Good Picture Play

Mr. Brewster, in the Motion Picture Story Magazine, gives his idea of a good picture play in a striking manner. Particularly does his opinion on the sub-titles appeal to us. Speed the day when technique will become so perfect that playlets need not be shot to pieces with illogical and oftentimes misspelled sub-titles! To quote Mr. Brewster:

> "After seeing a picture play I always remark to myself that it is good, very good, bad, very bad, fine, etc., as the case may be, and I have often wondered what constituted a good play. I have seen picture plays that lacked plot, action, complications, continuity of thought, and all the other elements, but still I pronounced them good. Perhaps it is the photography as much as anything. A good director and a good photographer can evidently make a good play out of a poor story. Fine acting also tends to pull a poor story out of the mire. According to the works on the technique of the drama, a play must have rising action, falling action, a turning-point, and a catastrophe. First should come the introduction; second, the rising action; third, the climax; fourth, the falling action, and fifth, the catastrophe. There must be a proposition, and there must be unity. Dramatic unity is the conformation of proposition, plot and action. The plot should carry out the proposition. Every good play should have a theme. A theme is the general subject, which holds throughout, but which reduced to a specific form, becomes the basis of the play. Characterization is an important, but not a necessary, element. Character is shown by what the characters do, not by what they say, or appear to say. Sub-titles show weakness of construction. The spectator comes to see, not to read. Sub-titles at the beginning of a play are seldom comprehended or remembered, and hence are wasted. The action should unfold naturally and logically, and sub-titles should only be used to show that which action cannot show, or to represent lapse of time. These are a few of the elements of a good picture play, as I understand it, but apparently all of the directors do not agree with me!

Answers to Correspondents

OGDEN, ILL.—Mr. Joe Roach is now editor for Comet, and the script department will be ably conducted. If you fail to land comedies with Solax or Reliance, try other manufacturers who advertise in the News. Good comedy finds a ready sale. You're welcome.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—You might apply for the part of "The Blood-Hound" in an Uncle Tom's Cabin troupe. There's as much chance for you getting a position with a "picture company" as there is of Taft being re-elected.

JACKSON, MICH.—Glad you like the department. Kinemacolor is in market for superior comedy and drama. See their advertisement in recent issues of the News.

NEW YORK CITY.—The editor didn't steal your plot, forget such rot. In Reliance's "Votes for Women," the plot hinged on the person who contracted scarlet fever from clothing. We used the same idea in an industrial script previously. Reliance never saw the industrial picture and, supposing the editor had seen it? We were paid for our trouble.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Send 'em a registered letter demanding return of your script. You are one of many complaining of that Indiana scenario contest. Stick to legitimate prize contests conducted by concerns who advertise in reputable trade journals.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Alfred H. Saunders is editor of this publication. He is one of the world's authorities on the dark-room end of Cinematography. A sketch of his career was published in a back number of the News. Write to him personally.

Mr. Wood is no longer "Spectator" for the Mirror. He is with Kinemacolor. The Mirror will search long before that publication can replace "Spectator." Mr. Sargent edits the photopage department of a trade journal. He lives in New York City. Mr. Thomas is associate editor of a moving picture magazine. He does not live in Gotbam. We are personally acquainted with them, yes; but that is no reason why we should divulge the private affairs of others.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Giles R. Warren is editor and director for the Victor Company. You are correct. He is considered a leader in his profession. It was probably Warren, he was former editor at Lubinville.

We answer these correspondents through this department because they enclosed stamps, but the return addresses were not easily decipherable. Write or print your return address plainly on a stamped return envelope.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

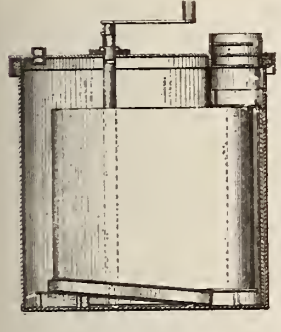
IN the Patent Office a successful application for patent passes through the hands of more than fifty persons before reaching the inventor or his attorney. While attorneys have to be registered in order to practice before the Patent Office, the latter does not vouch for any so registered, as will be seen by the following advice to inventors contained in the official rules of practice, to wit:

"The office cannot respond to inquiries as to the novelty of an alleged invention in advance of the filing of an application or a patent, nor to inquiries propounded with a view to ascertaining whether any alleged improvements have been patented, and, if so, to whom; nor can it act as an expounder of the patent law, nor as counsellor for individuals, except as to questions arising within the office."

"Of the propriety of making an application for a patent, the inventor must judge for himself. The office is open to him, and its records and models pertaining to all patents granted may be inspected either by himself or by any attorney or expert he may call to his aid, and its reports are widely distributed. Further than this the office can render him no assistance until his case comes regularly before it in the manner prescribed by law."

"An applicant or an assignee of the entire interest may prosecute his own case, but he is advised, unless familiar with such matters, to employ a competent attorney, as the value of patents depends largely upon the skillful preparation of the specification and claims. The office cannot aid in the selection of an attorney."

Which means that all responsibility for the technical scope and value of a patent rests upon the attorney.

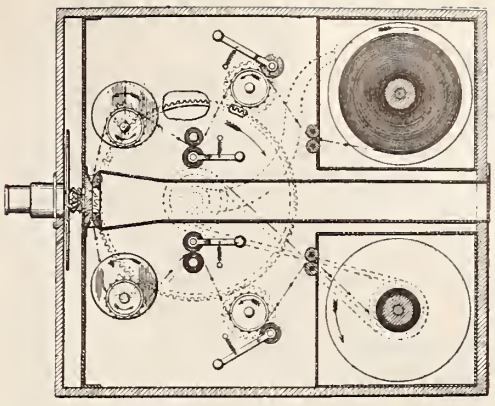


Patent No. 1,039,190, to S. Pratt, of Piedmont, Cal.

This invention relates to apparatus for developing and washing sensitized films in such a manner that they will at no time be exposed to the light. One object is to provide a device which will be simple in construction, inexpensive to manufacture, compact in form, strong, durable, easily manipulated, and quick and thorough in its operation. Another object is to supply the developing apparatus with adjustments whereby it may be adapted to accommodate films of different sizes. A further object is to provide a developing apparatus with means for permitting the supplying of solutions thereto, at the same time preventing the intrusion of rays of light therein. A still further object is to provide means for unreeling the roll of film and spacing apart the successive coils thereof, so as to permit a circulation of the developing fluids therebetween.

PATRONS of a German theatre are soon to be entertained with "novelties" not only on the stage but in the auditorium as well. In a theatre in course of construction for a Teutonic manager, a free tea buffet will be maintained. Furthermore, there will be between-act "fashion shows" by professional models on the stage, during which periods free refreshments will be served. Judging from the popularity of the fashion films displayed weekly in many of our moto-picture theatres, the innovation ought to be attractive, although it would seem to indicate decadence of interest in more legitimate entertainment when such expedients have to be resorted to in order to insure an audience. What next? The free administration of laughing gas might help an audience endure interjacent vau-de-villainous stunts perpetrated in many of our moto-picto shows.

ACCORDING to La Revue, Francesco de Bernoechi, a young Italian experimenter, has been successful in wireless iconography, having transmitted pictures by the Marconi system. Images, drawings and autographs have been duplicated with precision and fidelity. The inventor is only twenty-five years old, but has been practically interested in the subject since 1897, having been inspired by Prof. Rhigi's investigations of the Hertzian waves. The invention has been tested between Milan and Turin, a distance of 92 miles, with surprising results.

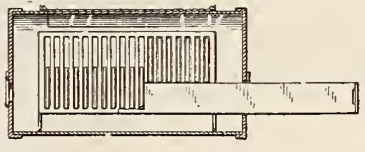


Patent No. 1,039,501, to V. L. Duhem, of Oakland, Cal., assignor to American Vimograph Co., a corporation of Arizona.

This invention relates to moving picture machines, and particularly pertains to mechanism for operating the ribbon film therein, both in a camera and in a projection machine. An object is to provide means for causing a ribbon of film to travel continuously from one reel onto another, which means includes simple mechanism for giving the film a reciprocating movement in conjunction with and during its constant travel, so as to cause it to intermittently assume a stationary relation to a fixed lens at a point adjacent to the inner end thereof, but at the same time continue its movement from one reel to the other. In other words, the purpose of this invention is to provide means by which the film will be stationary in relation to the lens when the shutter is open and yet be in constant motion, thereby doing away with the intermittent, or stop and start movements commonly employed, and which cause considerable wear and tear on the film ribbon and necessitate the use of a multiplicity of parts. This is accomplished by the use of eccentrically mounted idler sprockets over which the film travels.

SAFE at last! The Kleptograph is an electrical thief detector comprising photographic apparatus which may be likened to a spider having a web extending wherever a burglar or sneak is apt to fumble or intrude. Upon contact therewith the apparatus points its lens in the direction of disturbance, a magnesium flashlight illuminates the room, and the intruder's picture is caught on the negative plate. Signor Camosso is the author of this diabolical contrivance, and claims quadruple results: i.e., the protection of treasure, the flight of the intruder, his detection and capture by means of the developed negative, and a lighter sentence for the unsuccessful culprit.

Patent No. 1,039,191, to S. Pratt, of Piedmont, Cal., relates to a meter for determining the length of time of exposure which is necessary to obtain a photograph showing the proper detail of an object. If there is interposed between the eye and an illuminated object, light screens, such as pieces of transparent colored glass, so as to just obscure the light from the object, and the correct time of exposure of a photographic plate or film for such illuminated object, under such conditions, be ascertained, then a scale of exposure can be compiled for objects of various degrees of illumination; thus, if each screen obscures 50 per cent of the light from the object, then the light transmitted to a second screen will be 50 per cent of that coming to the first screen, and this second screen will transmit 50 per cent of this light to a third screen, and so on for any number of successive screens. The stronger the illumination of the object, the more screens it will be necessary to interpose between the eye and the object, in order to obscure the light, and the less will be the exposure in length of time. It is therefore an object of this invention to embody the above feature in a meter, whereby, by exposing successively any number of light screens between the object and the eye, until the proper degree of obscuring is obtained, the interposition of these screens being in synchronism with the movement of an indicator or pointer, running along a pre-calculated scale, the times of exposure can be readily read off on this scale for different degrees of illumination of the object to be photographed, and for different apertures.



We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the Moving Picture News.

Geo. Wm. Miatt

(Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

THE LION TAMER'S REVENGE

Kleine-Cines Feature Film in Two Reels Released October 21st, 1912

"The Lion Tamer's Revenge" is a dramatic and highly sensational story of love, jealousy and revenge, in which is seen the most thrilling battle for life ever filmed, between the hero, who is an army officer, and twenty ferocious lions.

The film shows to what depths a human being's fiendish nature can go, when the one nearest his heart is known to have looked with favor upon another; and it pictures vividly the ultimate end that must come to him who attempts to steal away from another the cherished love of a beautiful woman, and in this case the most awful punishment and the most cruel death are the penalty of the intruder.

The opening scene in the film is that of a circus which is giving nightly entertainments in a great amphitheatre in the historic city of Rome. The performers are striving to please the throngs of people who are in attendance at every performance. Herman and Cleo, his fiancee, are lion tamers with the circus. They manage twenty lions in a great iron cage, and their act is the most sensational on the bill. Lieutenant Alexander is a frequenter at the performances, and he falls madly in love with Cleo. She is also attracted to the lieutenant, as is indicated by the pleased expression upon her countenance as she accepts the flowers he presents to her through the iron grating. The lieutenant and Cleo find many opportunities of exchanging words, and numerous clandestine meetings take place between them before Herman's suspicions are aroused.

THE PERFORMANCE

After one of the performances Lieutenant Alexander follows Cleo to her dressing room, and there tells of his burning love for her. Herman comes in at the critical moment, and the lieutenant retires; but following occurs a stormy scene between the lion tamer and his fiancee, during which Herman threatens Cleo with vengeance if she ever loves another man. She manages to flatter him until he departs, his suspicions somewhat allayed, but with a determination to keep a close watch over the pair.

Here we are introduced to a clown whose mirth-provoking antics are surpassed only by his treachery. For a mere pittance paid to him by the lion tamer, he takes up the role of spy, and follows Cleo day and night. One day the lovers meet, and go for a motor ride, the clown hanging on to the back of the car. He sees them embrace each other, and overhears enough of their conversation to prove that they are lovers. That evening, while the performers are having dinner, Cleo is late coming to the table, having been detained through her afternoon's appointment with the lieutenant. Immediately following her is the clown, who tells Herman what he has seen and heard. The lion tamer is mad with fury and openly accuses Cleo of being false to him. A violent quarrel takes place between the two, but they are finally quieted by the other performers.

THE LION TAMER ACCUSES THEM

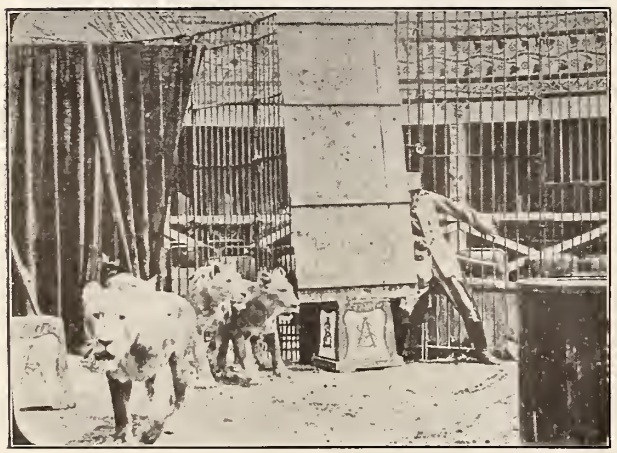
Upon the same night Cleo, while performing on horseback in the circus ring, throws a note to the lieutenant, telling him to keep away from the circus as their actions have been detected. The lieutenant is disconsolate and



TRAPPED IN THE LION'S CAGE

A TERRIBLE REVENGE

provoked, because he has permitted himself to fall in love with a woman whom he has no right to love, and whose love he should not expect, but he is determined that he will not give up the object of his affections.

The clown ingratiates himself with Cleo, until she looks upon him as a friend, and entrusts him with a letter to the lieutenant, which he conveys to Herman. The letter is opened by the lion tamer and the clown, and its contents fires Herman's anger so that he decides upon a deadly scheme of vengeance. He seals the letter again, and tells the clown to carry it to its destination. The lieutenant receives the note, in which Cleo asks him to meet her that night after the performance. He eagerly writes a reply and gives it to the clown to deliver. The clown, through his deceitful nature, is now in the good graces of both the lovers, and when the lieutenant comes to meet Cleo at the appointed time and place, he pretends to notify her that the lieutenant is waiting. Instead, however, he inveigles Cleo into the circus ring. Here she is confronted with the lion tamer who, assisted by the clown, binds her, mounts her on a pedestal, and ties her to the iron bars. The lieutenant, not having observed Cleo's plight, is induced to go into the ring also, the clown having told him Cleo would meet him there.

Not until the big iron gates have closed and locked behind him, does the lieutenant realize that he has been made a prisoner, but now the whole diabolical plot is revealed to him. He struggles wildly for his freedom, but his case is hopeless. Near him Cleo is fastened with ropes to the iron bars, awaiting the same fate as his own. It has been arranged that the two lovers shall die together.

The lieutenant manages to loose the ropes that bind Cleo, and she escapes just before the lion tamer drives twenty of the ferocious beasts into the arena to bound upon their human prey. Although Herman has whipped the lions into a state of fury, the lieutenant, by main strength, battles with the beasts for a time, but the odds are against him, and the roaring of the kings of the jungle marks the ending of a romance filled with intense situations drawn from real life, and suddenly terminated by the infamous plot of a jealous lover.

"The Lion Tamer's Revenge" is a wonderful production, full of action in every scene. The lions are savage, as is their well-known characteristic. The circus scenes are wonderfully realistic; two distinct performances are seen, the one with the lions showing that man can become master of the wildest and most ferocious beasts, and another where acrobats, tumblers and horseriders appear in true circus fashion.

A SUMPTUOUS EDITION OF "THE PROJECTION"

The direction of the technical, illustrated moving picture newspaper, "The Projection," which is known not only in Germany but also in foreign countries, has published a special number in three-color printing which surpasses all like editions for artistic execution.

The number which we have received contains 120 pages wth numerous supplements. This number contains also a very interesting article from the convention formed by manufacturers, which may conflict between the two syndicates.

Newspapers have permission to take information from all articles; the influence the German market exercises over the foreign market is important.

The present number also contains interesting articles and numerous articles from the manufacturers.

THE WEEKLIES

PATHE

Bayonne, N. J.—An exploding boiler in the steamship Dunholm, loaded with 90,000 barrels of gasoline, results in a long series of tremendous explosions which completely destroys the Dunholm, another steamship, a large bark and the piers of the Standard Oil Company.

New York, N. Y.—The Freshmen, for the first time in the history of the College of the City of New York, win the annual flag rush.

Chicago Junction, Ohio.—Two are dead and a score injured as a result of the rear end collision between a Baltimore and Ohio passenger train and a string of freight cars.

Spokane, Wash.—"Miss Spokane," representing the city, assisted by Mayor Cottrill, opens the Spokane Fair and Dog Show.

New York, N. Y.—Thousands of people swarm the piers looking at and visiting the great fleet in the Hudson.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Veiled Prophets' night parade is a gorgeous pageant of light and color.

New York, N. Y.—One feature of Fire Prevention Day is the sensational drill work of the Fire Department.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 33

Released October 23

"Red Sox vs. Giants." A glimpse of the second game of the World's Championship Baseball Series at Boston, Mass.

"King George and His Troops." King George attends the annual Autumn Manœuvres at East Anglia, England.

"Thrilling Aeroplane Flight." George Beatty, America's foremost aviator, thrills the crowds with his daring flight at Oakwood Heights, Staten Island.

"Theodore Roosevelt." The "Bull Moose" is welcomed by a large and enthusiastic crowd upon his arrival in Chicago.

"Sailors' Land Parade." Twenty thousand sailors march in Columbus Day Parade, at New York City.

"A Million Dollar Fire." A spectacular fire destroys the Standard Oil Company's tanks at Bayonne, N. J.

"Votes for Women." A large gathering attend the Suffragette Demonstration on Tower Hill, London, England.

"Departure of the Fleet." President Taft reviews the fleet from the deck of the "Mayflower."

"Bryan at Goshen." William Jennings Bryan attends a meeting of party leaders at Goshen, Ind.

"Who's Who in Stageland." Jefferson De Angelis, late star in "The Beauty Spot," at his summer home, Sunnyside Drive, Yonkers, New York.

GAUMONT No. 33

"The U. S. Battle Fleet Visits New York Harbor"; "A Week with the Warships."

"Lima's Gala Races"; South American Capital Celebrates Inauguration of Peru's New President, William E. Billinghurst.

"The Kaiser Reviews His Army." The German Troops Return from the Autumn Manœuvres.

"Wonderful Babies." California product competes for a prize at Los Angeles.

"Oh, Look, Ladies!" Aren't those just the sweetest hats you ever saw?

"International Football." The visiting Australians play California in first American game.

"Schrank." Scenes in Milwaukee connected with the attempt on Colonel Roosevelt's life, together with close views of the would-be assassin.

"A Cincinnati Playground." How the Queen City provides recreation for its children.

"Ohio Site Selected." Governor Harmon dedicates the home of State Exhibit at Panama Exposition, San Francisco, Cal.

"Canning Corn in Kansas." Millions of tins of Nature's most valuable product preserved in Sunflower State.

"Scottish Rite Council. High Masons meet in conclave in Washington.

Altoona, Pa.—Contract has been let for extensive alterations on the Pastime theatre on Eleventh avenue, near Fifteenth street.

Marshalltown, Ia.—A contract has been let for a new vaudeville theatre which is to be built between the Letts-Flat Mer. Co. Building and the Elks Building.

RAY SMALLWOOD
The Cowboy Camera Man on his horse "Hans"

ECLAIR STOCK COMPANY
Bidding their Chief Director, Mr. E. Arnaud, a bon voyage.

LIKE THE CAT, THEY CAME BACK

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Biograph Release)

JOHN CARTER, Commissioner of Police, came down to his breakfast. He had been up very late the night before attending an important meeting, therefore he was very sleepy. He had overslept and breakfast had been waiting for an hour, therefore the eggs were leathery, the biscuits were much over-brown, and the coffee had boiled too long.

These things did not improve the Commissioner's temper but he ate in silence.

Mrs. Carter was wise—she also remained silent. She watched her husband as he arose from the table and walked to the window.

A fine drizzle was descending and it was impossible to see across the street. "Beastly day," he growled.

After thoroughly soaking himself full of rainy-day misery, he turned from the window with a sigh and went into the library, where he seated himself at his smoking table.

As he raised the lid of the jar where his cigars were kept, an inarticulate exclamation escaped his lips.

"What's the matter?" asked Mrs. Carter, who had followed him.

"The matter is, my dear, that we have a thief in the house."

"Oh, is that all?" sighed Mrs. Carter with relief. "I thought you'd seen a snake or a spider or something in the jar."

Her husband gave her a look which expressed more than he could say.

"There is a thief in the house," he repeated. "I have suspected it and now I am sure. I——"

"But, John," interrupted the wife, "you might be mistaken. You know sometimes you don't realize how much you smoke."

Commissioner Carter smiled a superior smile. "But wait, my dear wife," he said. "Just let me tell you what I have done in this matter. For some time I have thought my cigars disappeared very rapidly, but it has been only within the last few days that I really suspected that anyone was stealing them. But listen. I left this jar full and I haven't taken a single cigar out of it since Monday. This is Thursday, and look at it."

Mrs. Carter looked and agreed that there could be no doubt of a theft.

"What are you going to do about it?" she asked. "It must be one of the servants, although I can't imagine which one."

"Never you mind. Just leave it to me and I'll find out who is doing it. You need only to act as though you suspect nothing," were the instructions given.

That evening the Commissioner of Police smiled as he took the lid from his cigar jar. After unwrapping a package he carried, he emptied the jar of its meager supply and placed the contents of the package within it.

"There," he said, "we'll see how he likes those. They may pucker his mouth some, but it will do him good."

He replaced the lid and went in to dinner.

When Mr. and Mrs. Carter were well into the meal, the library door cautiously opened and a trim little maid entered silently. She went straight to the smoking table, lifted the lid of the jar, and took out four cigars. Having replaced the lid the girl hastened from the room as silently as she had come.

"Are you going out?" asked Mrs. Carter of her husband when they had finished dinner.

"Yes, my dear, I have to go to a meeting of the Police Board to-night. I wish to goodness sake I didn't, but it's absolutely necessary."

"Great Scott," he exclaimed as he looked at his watch, "I'll have to hurry into some other clothes. It's getting late."

Fifteen minutes later as Commissioner Carter came down the front steps to the street, a figure in white disappeared quickly into the basement entrance and a blue-coated policeman walked rapidly around the corner.

The Commissioner was in good humor now—thinking he had played a clever trick on some rogue, so he only smiled to himself as he thought, "Well, I don't blame Brady. Mary is a pretty little thing."

Soon after the Commissioner arrived at the station, matters began to move along. He was just about to take up an important piece of business when he remembered he had not had his after dinner smoke.

"We might as well light up, gentlemen—those of us who want to. I didn't have time for a smoke after dinner, so I'm going to have one now."

He put his hand into first one pocket and then another before he realized he had left his cigars in his other clothes.

Just then he caught sight of a young lieutenant just coming in the door. He beckoned to him and gave him a dollar. "Get me four cigars. Any good twenty-five-cent ones you can get nearby. Hurry back."

The Lieutenant left the room quickly, and as quickly stopped in the hall. "Four, he said," the Lieutenant whispered to himself. "Four, and I've got four in me own pocket that I paid nothing for at all. Why shouldn't a man make an honest dollar? Wouldn't Brady be mad! I wonder——!"

The Lieutenant stopped a moment and an expression of sudden discovery spread over his face.

"Sure, I know where Brady got them. A man don't have a nice little girl for nothin'. No wonder he didn't want to give 'em up—and me about to sell the Commissioner his own cigars. That's a good one."

The man paused a moment and then grinned broadly. "Why not?" he said. "If a man selects his own cigars he ought to like them. It's the safest way."

As the Lieutenant handed the cigars to Commissioner Carter the latter said, "Good, Grant; you're back in a hurry."

He put three cigars in his pocket and struck a match to the fourth.

Bang!

All the men sprang to their feet and those who had noticed that Grant went for the cigars, as soon as they saw that the Commissioner was unhurt, turned fiercely upon the Lieutenant.

"What is the meaning of this?" demanded Carter.

"Well, you see, Sir, I—I—I didn't know they were like that; you know, Sir, I had no idea or I should never in the world——" he stopped, confused.

"You swear that you did not know of the condition of these cigars?"

"Oh, yes, Sir, I swear it."

"Then," said the Commissioner in a loud voice, "Then, where did you buy them?"

The Lieutenant turned pale. "I—I can't tell you, Sir," he answered in a low voice.

A suppressed exclamation went 'round the room.

Commissioner Carter stood staring at Grant. He could scarcely believe that he heard aright.

"You mean to tell me that you dare to stand there and protect the scoundrel who sold you those things?" he asked in a voice that made the Lieutenant tremble. "How am I to know that you didn't know that they were loaded?"

Grant moved uneasily for a moment before he answered.

"Well, I guess I better tell you this much—I didn't buy them—that is, I had them—I mean I bought them from meself. They were given to me and by a fellow who didn't know they were loaded—that is, he didn't exactly give them to me, but I took them and he didn't make any fuss about it. But I won't tell who he was, I'll be discharged first."

Commissioner Carter stood for a while looking at Grant. The man seemed honest and straightforward in his nature, but it wouldn't do to let a thing like that pass.

As he was wondering what was the best thing to do, a thought flashed across his mind.

"Did you see Brady shortly before you came in here this evening?" he asked Grant quickly.

The Lieutenant flushed crimson.

Suddenly Carter realized that the room was filled with listening men, and if the questioning went on much farther and the whole truth was uncovered, the joke would be very much on him. So he said to Grant, very seriously, "Come into the other room with me, I want to have a talk with you alone."

When the door was closed the two men stood facing each other.

"Lieutenant," said the Commissioner with a foolish smile, "the joke is unquestionably on me. You may not see it now in its full beauty, for you're too busy thinking about yourself. But you will see and then you'll laugh very merrily. I'll make a bargain with you. You say nothing and I'll say nothing. What do you say?"

Grant looked a bit bewildered. "Why, yes," he said, "but do you mean to say——?"

"Never mind what I mean to say," said the Commissioner, and, he added under his breath as he left the room, "but I'll keep my cigars locked up after this."

TRAINED ANIMALS

Having wild animals in heavy villain, low comedy and light ingenue roles in their motion pictures is becoming a speciality with the Gaumont Company. To this, there is advantage, inasmuch as animals have little "temperament," have no stage jealousies and there is no child labor law to confront the producer. There have been a number of Gaumont animal films of late, "Attacked by a Lion," "In the Land of the Lions," "The Stolen Cub" and now "An Elephant Sleuth," which will be released Thursday, December 12.

In the latter film we have a real live Jumbo with the displacement of a Dreadnought, acting as a pachyderm Sherlock Holmes. Fully equipped is he with theories of induction and deduction, and as a finder of imprisoned fiancees, is quite in the class of Nick Carter, Allan Pinkerton and our cortemporary Burns. This big leading man simultaneously occupies both up and down stage when he is on the scene, which is most of the time. He is quite a reasonable elephant and thrifty and understands that unnecessary destruction he might commit on the course of his sleuthing would mean a deduction from his salary in the form of bundles of hay. Accordingly, he treads the straight and narrow path, rescues the girl, allows her to get upon his back and returns to his master in time to get the reward.

In the film "In the Land of the Lions," the producers had dangerous conditions. He was no well-tamed lion, house-broken and willing to eat out of or off your hand, but a real rip-snorting, eat 'em alive lion, who would just as leave have an actor served au gratin or a director en casserole as he would a springbok or a gazelle a la cannibal. Anybody who has seen "In the Land of the Lions" is somewhat startled by the realism of the lion's movements. It is not "play-acting" to him and he has no soul for art. He has, however, a well-developed appetite and does not care whether school keeps or not, if he can reach the humans so appetizingly near.

To train a lion, dulled by captivity to go through clumsy acrobatics is a matter of time, nerve and whip, but to penetrate the forests and capture him untamed, unterrified and savagely ferocious because of man's trespass requires colossal courage. Naturally there was much film wasted in getting his lionship to respond to his "cues" and roar his "lines," but it was a good story and the directors were going to get it if they had to shoot all the lions in South Africa. Readily understood it can be that directing actors of the blood-thirsty variety is a problem worthy of highest ability in stagecraft. Directing human actors with their greater proportion of common and preferred stock of human intelligence is ever a source of gray hairs and frayed patience to the stage manager.

Unfortunately for the cost of production, the lions, not owning stock in the Gaumont Company and not being particularly interested in the lofty uplift of motion pictures, refuse to die artificially when the scenario requires it, and accordingly it is necessary to shoot them to carry out the play and to keep the drama from becoming a tragedy. Lions cost money and inasmuch as we cannot artistically stand for two low comedy actors in lion garb running around, they needs be the real tawny jungle variety. The disbursements are heavy. Live lions are worth money, but there is a very bad market for dead ones.

In "The Stolen Cub" we had a mother bear whose cub was stolen from her to awaken maternal passions. A bear has a strong fifty per cent interest in its cub, and the actors in this piece took chances The skill with which the bear was led through the actions of her maternal solicitude was admirable. It was realism itself to see the big, burly, black form pawing the door, lifting its muzzle in the air to howl its sorrow. No bear, Sarah Bernhardt or Edwin Booth, ever died more consummately than did this lorn animal mother of the Canadian woods, and in its last convulsive movements, the contraction and relaxation of its limbs in death throes are master movements of reality.

For pictures less parlous with animals less omnivorous, the Gaumont Company indisputably have an excellent troupe. The animals are particularly happy in the so-called "chase" pictures, they taking delirious delight in the long runs in which the ubiquitous whitewasher on the ladder is upset, the apple-cart empties into the gutter, and the washwoman loses her clean clothes, etc. They, the unsalaried, gambol through these mirthful scenes with a zest inspiring to the human actors who get paid for it. The animals are remarkably amenable to dramatic instruction and seem to prefer taking action in the "something doing" pictures rather than the dull routine of jumping through a hoop or giving a paw.

New York, N. Y.—The International Feature Film Co., Manhattan, motion picture film; capital, $100,000. Incorporators H. Mills and W. Steiner.

PERSONALITIES OF THE PLAYERS

By M. I. MacDONALD

KING BAGGOT

If first impressions are true King Baggot belongs to that category of human curiosities called gentlemen. Curiosities because in New York City, where I live and have my being, they are few and far between. Judging from a ten-minute interview with this popular actor (in pictures and otherwise) he has the true instincts of a gentleman, he feels himself a gentleman, and therefore he is a gentleman and unconsciously impresses those he meets with that fact.

All that day on which the said interview occurred I had been from time to time consoling people who were in trouble, and so glad to do so. All that day people who were sick or hungry, or without means of support, seemed to gravitate toward me. Sometimes we haven't much to give but kind words, and our hearts bleed because we cannot do more. And then on that very day I went to the interview from talking to a man who was not a gentleman—one who was rude and had not one respectful thought for a woman. Therefore it was that King Baggot, with his wholesome personality and respectful manner impressed me just as a big burst of sunshine from a sky of dark clouds would have done.

He didn't say much for me to tell you. When I asked him if he hadn't something more to tell me of himself, he laughed and said, "Oh, just say that we had a nice little chat." But, however, I gleaned a few interesting details that leaked out through the channel of just a "nice little chat."

If you would like to know something of his life history I can tell you a few things that I happen to know. His home town is St. Louis. It was from there that he started out on his stage career. He played in stock for five years in St. Louis. He has had five years with Liebler and Co., and one year with the Schuberts; has played opposite Marguerite Clarke and other stars. Give him three years with the Imp Film Co., in which time he has played in some 160 different picture plays, and you have a brief outline of the last eleven years of the thirty-three which he says he has lived.

King Baggott has probably played a greater number of pictures in the three years which he has been leading man for Imp than any other picture actor. Having always placed him in my mind as a dramatic actor, it was rather startling to hear him declare himself for comedy. "Any fellow can play the lover—take a girl in his arms and kiss her—but you can count the ones that can turn out comedy that will get over." He swims, rides and does all the hundred and one things that a motion picture actor must do, and does them well. And one other thing more interesting than all these, to me, because it is perhaps the rarest accomplishment of all, he is able to turn the crank and grind out a picture of the other folks, if necessary.

This is all I am going to tell you this week, and next week we will haul somebody else over the coals.

KINEMACOLOR

"Jack and the Beanstalk," another number of the remarkable child series which Kinemacolor has been preparing, delighted the critics on Wednesday of this week. It is the old story that the children love, where the wonderful beanstalk shoots up ever so high by magic when little Jack climbs it and is met at the top by the fairy, who leads him to the house of the giant, from whence he brings treasures by proxy of the housekeeper. Every child is familiar with the words of the giant.

"Fee-fi-fo-fum! I smell the blood of an Englishman.
Be he alive or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to bake my bread."

The part of little Jack is taken by a remarkable child actor named Thomas Carnaham. The part of the mother is prettily played by Mrs. Brown.

Other excellent offerings were scenes in "Picturesque North Wales" and the National Capital Horse Show at Washington, D. C.

Chicago, Ill.—Linderoth & Co., architects, have awarded the contracts for a theatre for Mrs. M. M. Peache, owner. Location 5844 Elizabeth street.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION No. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

An open meeting was held by the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1, of G. N. Y., last Monday night at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, and it was beyond a doubt the largest attended since the birth of this organization. The hall was filled to capacity, and it was evident by the gleam upon the faces of the many visitors that they were heart and soul for the welfare of the new movement, and before the meeting was called to order, little groups were seen in different parts of the hall, and in the midst of them were members of No. 1 explaining to the visitors the great advantage they would have in joining this advanced operators' Union No. 1, over all others. At 12:30 a. m. the meeting was called to order by President Robert Goldblatt, and after an opening address was made by that worthy officer, every visiting operator who was not a member up to the present moment, formed a line on one side of the hall, and as fast as the secretary was able to write, every one was given a membership card under the former initiation fee; this applied only to former members of the old auxiliary, and those who were not former members paid the entrance fee upon applications.

Alfred H Saunders, editor of the Moving Picture News and an honorary member of No. 1, delivered an address to the boys in a most masterly manner, and received great applause.

The eminent speaker mentioned a few things regarding improvements in the motion picture industry, and advised the boys to be more careful in their projection, as it is in their power to make or mar the success of the picture. He also commented upon the increasing popularity of No. 1, and the great increase in membership, which, he believed,was due to the method of conducting the business of the organization.

Mr. Fred W. Hochstetter, president of the Hochstetter Utility Company, of 40 East Twelfth street, New York City, was the next speaker introduced to the body. Mr. Hochstetter holds a card of the I. A. T. S. E. though he is in the manufacturing business of educational films. He told the boys that it was his aim to assist them to a higher standard and has contracted with the M. P. Operators' Union No. 1, to supply men to project pictures at various educational meetings throughout the State of New York, and in this manner the funds of the organization will be greatly increased. The films produced and presented by the Hochstetter Utility Company are in five reels, depicting the life of John Bunyan and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress."

Mr. Hochstetter has shown his generosity toward the organization to such an extent that he was made an honorary member by acclamation. Brother Al. Smith, of Stauch's, Coney Island, was the next speaker. His remarks were short but to the point. He informed us that he could not resist the call and is once again "in the fold."

Brother Ralph Knaster spoke of the progress which was being made at the business office, and encouraged the boys to live up to the motto of the organization.

Brother Sam Keplan tickled the boys somewhat and his bay window was very much in evidence. (May it ever increase.)

There were twenty-six new members obligated and as many more applications are yet on file.

The initiation fee now in force from October 21, 1912, is $5.00. Application can be made at the office of the Union, 133 Third avenue, near Fourteenth street. Ralph Knaster, business representative.

QUESTION

Why is it that 16 resignations forwarded to Local No. 35 branch have not been read before that body as per statement made by members of the Branch No. 35?

Perhaps some of the sticklers of parliamentary procedure may be able to answer.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1, of New York, will hold their grand annual entertainment and ball Monday, February 10, 1913, at Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street and Lexington avenue, New York.

Information regarding advertising for the journal of this affair can be obtained at any time at the office of the business representative, 133 Third avenue.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF SPORTING OPERATORS

Sam Citron, a light heavyweight from the East Side, stopped Tom McCloskey of Bangor, Me., in the fourth round of a scheduled ten-round bout which was the feature event of last night's show at the New Star A. C. A. A hard right to the jaw sent McCloskey to the floor about two minutes after the fourth round began, and he did not move a muscle until Referee Patsy Haley had finished the count of ten.

QUESTION BOX

By Mr. R. J. Kay

Mr. Kay.

Dear Sir:—Can you advise me what the trouble may be with my light and how to remedy same. I have a good, clear ,steady light, my throw is 80 feet. I have a 9 x 12 picture and 6½ x 7½ condensers, but have a discolored effect on one side. Respectfully,

M. D.

To Mr. M. D.

This same trouble is an everyday occurrence. Your carbons may be lined up properly, but the trouble may be that your burner is not centered, which causes the arc to be thrown to the side of your lamp house and not to the centre of your condensers.

Dear Mr. Kay, Editor of Question Box.

I would like to know if you are in favor of answering my question regarding operators' unions. I applied for membership in the I. M. P. Operators' Union No. 1, was called for examination, and was notified to call for re-examination in 60 days. I am now a member of the branch and passed the examination with ease. I also passed the city examination and how is it I could not pass the first organization's examination.

Yours truly, M. E.

Mr. M. E.

I don't make a practice of answering union troubles, but state if you were competent you would have passed the examination. I cannot answer for the branch.

I have been informed by the other that initiation fee and dues must be paid before examination. If you don't care to wait for re-examination your money will be refunded immediately. About the city part your card reads: (This is not a certificate of ability to show a good picture.) This is what Union No. 1 wants to guarantee to exhibitors, and that is the reason you must prove your ability to them.

Editor Trouble Box.

Dear Sir:—I am running in an out of town place far from any place which carries supplies. I have Powers No. 5 machine; have only one belt, which broke the other evening, and I was forced to work take-up with one hand while I turned crank with the other. Can you tell me what to do should this occur again. F. B. G.

Westminster Road, Vancouver, British Columbia.

F. B. G., Vancouver, B. C.

To the brother I will state I am proud and very glad at this time to hear from far off British Columbia, and advise you, should you ever be placed in the same position again, take your old belt, though it may be too small to put on in the regular fashion, take out the twist, put your belt on straight and your take-up will be reversed and you will have no further trouble.

NOTICE

Send in your Question to The Question Box, care M. P. News, 30 West Thirteenth street, New York City.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

According to the Philadelphia, Pa., North American, Lillian Russell and her husband, Alexander P. Moore, visited the Lubin studio recently, and the camera clicked off several hundred feet of Lillian while she went through an impromptu pantomime.

* * * *

E. Hesser, of Kinemacolor, left Wednesday for a week in Chicago.

* * * *

The Atlantic Transport liner Minnehaha, arriving Tuesday from London, brought back a portion of the Edison Stock Company, who have been sojourning in England for the purpose of producing English subjects with the genuine English atmosphere. According to one of the New York daily papers they brought back with them some 100,000 feet of English scenery.

* * * *

The Selig Polyscope Company acted as host at their mammoth plant on the northwest side of Chicago during the forenoon of Wednesday, October 16, to nearly seven hundred members who were attending the seventh annual convention of the American Meat Packers' Association in the city. The visiting body made their trip to the plant in some hundred and fifty automobiles with pennants flying and banners waving. At 11 o'clock, as the packers arrived at the Selig plant, a moving picture was made by the Selig cameras of their approach; two hours later this same picture was exhibited to the meat barons at their banquet at the Rienzi Cafe. The packers expressed themselves as delighted at the wonderful knowledge gained by the trip through the Selig institution, and each and everyone will undoubtedly be an enthusiastic follower of Selig pictures in the future.

* * * *

Thomas A. Edison returned to his home in West Orange, N. J., on Tuesday, after attending the funeral of Mrs. Lewis Miller, the mother of Mrs. Edison, in Akron, Ohio.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

On another page of this issue will be found an advertisement relating to a colossal scheme by the American Tobacco Company giving to the moving picture theatres half a million dollars a year. Their scheme seems very feasible to all cigarette smokers. It is to introduce their Tokio Cigarettes, and in each package will be found a coupon, ten of which are redeemable for a five-cent admission, twenty for a ten-cent. Any moving picture house accepting these coupons can get them redeemed at the office of the American Tobacco Company when they total up the value for less than $5.00, or any tobacconist will also redeem these coupons for any value less than $5.00. Above $5.00 the Company gives an additional five per cent on the face value of the coupons. It certainly is an interesting form of advertising and one that will be watched with keen interest by other firms.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH LATEST INSTALLATION

Power's Cameragraph No 6A has been selected for use in the public schools at Anderson, Ind., and at the Laboratory of Hygiene at Burlington, Vt.

GAUMONT ENTERPRISE

J. Roy Hunt, a motion picture camera operator, employed by the Gaumont Company, left New York Saturday, October 19, on the Hamburg-American liner Cleveland, and before returning to the home office will have put a girdle around the world. This journey will occupy a period of several months. Most of the time will be spent in China and Japan although stops of considerable duration will be made in India, Ceylon and the Straits settlement.

This around-the-world film will be shown largely on the Gaumont Weekly and the Gaumont Company's new release, the Saturday "Great Events" film.

Another Gaumont operator will sail from Galveston on the 19th for Central America, where he will remain for several weeks, covering native life and industries of the Latin republics north of Panama and South of Mexico.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

It is announced that the University of Pennsylvania will send, some time during the month of October, an expedition to the upper Amazon River to obtain information concerning the life and industries of the inhabitants in the jungles near the source of the river. The expedition will be in charge of Algot Lange, who spent two years exploring the tributaries of the Amazon. Moving picture cameras will be carried to record the customs, arts and industries of the Indians who live in the almost unexplored country, and phonographs will be used to record their songs, speech and religious ceremonies.

Systematic studies will be made by members of the expedition of the native languages, religious and social systems and decorative arts. The collection will be placed in the museum at the University of Pennsylvania.

* * * *

The Japanese Commissioners to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, Haruki Yamawaki, Goichi Takeda and Yoshikatsu Katayama, who left San Francisco, Cal., on Saturday, September 21st, en route for Japan, after selecting a site for their building at the Exposition, took with them moving pictures of the site selecting ceremonies to be shown to the Emperor and the people of Japan.

* * * *

The "movies" will assist the National Mouth Hygiene Association in an educational campaign in Toledo and other cities for better teeth, improved general health and increased efficiency of public school children.

With a view to establishing in this city a free dental clinic and free dental inspection in the schools, similar to the German system, the Toledo Dental Association will have exhibited in several of the local moving picture shows a film picturing the trouble that toothache made in an hour in the Jones family. Serio-comic situations shown are followed on the film by others showing in detail how it is proposed to carry on the school dental inspection, how defective teeth of children of parents in poor circumstances will be treated at the free clinic, and how a dental nurse will give instructions and see that the orders of the inspecting dentists are enforced.

* * * *

Motion picture men who advertise five pictures for five cents can no longer dupe the public, according to a resolution adopted by the Dayton, Ohio, Exhibitors' League. In the future the exhibitor will advertise the number of reels he has to show and not the number of pictures. There are certain showmen, according to League members, that demand there be honesty and fair dealing in the business, who have been taking in the people and injuring the business of those showmen who try to conduct a legitimate business by the use of legitimate methods. Often there are two or more pictures on a reel. The average exhibitor gives his patrons three reels to a show. But unscrupulous showmen, according to the Dayton League, have not advertised the number of reels they show, but the number of pictures. If they have two split reels for the day, they advertise a programme of four pictures. Vaudeville features are being eliminated not only in Ohio moving picture theatres, but in many other states in the Middle West.

* * * *

Frederick P. Fox is building a house at Shippan Point, near Stamford, Conn., for his own occupancy. He is going to have a theatre in the house in which he will show motion pictures. He proposes to change the pictures twice a week so the innovation may not lose its charm. The moving pictures as a solution of the country life problem in winter, came to him last year, shortly after he moved back to New York. He went to see the "movies" several times a week. They were both interesting and amusing, and since they were part of his winter amusement in the city he could not see why they should not be adapted to country life. So when he came to building his own house up at Shippan Point he decided to have a moving picture theatre in it.

The theatre takes in one end of the house and measures 700 square feet. It is 20 feet wide, about 35 feet long and two stories high, extending from the basement up to the second floor. At one end of the big room is a stage the width of the room and running back 10 feet. The stage may be entered from the outside through a glass door. This door, or rather a series of doors, reaches from the ground to the second story. When the movies are being shown the light from these doors is shut out by shades and folding shutters. The stage, which is a continuation of an inside porch, is also to serve as a conservatory. It is for this reason that the two stories of glass doors were installed. When used as a conservatory the stage may be shut off from the rest of the theatre by accordion doors of mission finished oak extending to the ceiling.

The dining room, which is on the first floor, is carried out a few feet over the theatre floor in the shape of a theatre box, so that the pictures may be enjoyed by guests while at dinner.

MR. THOMAS H. INCE

General Western Manager of the New York Motion Picture Company

Mr. Ince is also vice-president of the Broncho Film Company, producers of the Broncho brand of films, made by the same producer and associates as the formerly original Bison 101 Ranch pictures. Mr. Ince stated to our representative: "You yourself probably know by this time that the trouble with the Universal has been settled, and that the New York Motion Picture Company will not make any more Bison brand of pictures. I want this understood by the gentlemen of the trade, so that in future I will in no way be known or affiliated with the Universal Bison pictures—such original Bison 101 negatives as the company now have on hand, will, I understand, be released under either the trade-mark of Broncho, or the new trade-mark Kaybee, the latter of which is an abbreviated combination of Kessel, Baumann and Balshofer." In this connection Mr. Ince is still personally producing, and directing four other directors, who are assisting him in the work. In the future no single-reel Westerners are to be produced by this company. They are now making two and three-reel pictures exclusively. This naturally alters their story market. They are now in the market for two-reel Western and split reel dramatic comedies for the use of Mr. Mack Sennett's company. Other types of stories they will be unable to consider. Mr Ince called attention to the fact that they are paying a minimum of $50.00 for two-reel stories—single and split reel dramatic comedies accordingly. This statement of scenario prices is no press agent yarn, but is backed by the authority of the officers of the company and is advertised by them in their weekly notice of releases in your own estimable magazine and other publications devoted to the interests of the trade.

A WOMAN ALONE
Majestic release October 29.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

GAUMONT

ZOOLOGICAL SPECIMENS OF THE POND (Oct. 31).—This is a scientific exposition of how the under-water world lives, showing the family affairs of the denizens of the aquatic world. It shows how they have to fight their way through legions of hungry enemies, how they make and wear armor that will render them teeth-proof, how these watery deeps are even more lawless than the streets of New York. It is sugar-coated instruction that a person can take without making a wry face. It is a scientific film, lacking dryness and giving most interesting views of wet objects.

BRUGES, THE VENICE OF THE NORTH.—This film treats of the island city whose pretty canals and deep azure of its skies rival the queen of the Mediterranean.

Both of these films are hand-colored.

CUPID'S LOTTERY (Nov. 5).—A young department store clerk, successful in hooking winners, gains a prize of five thousand dollars from a lottery contest. He obtains a ten-day leave of absence from his employer in order to spend his honanza with a view of seeing, hearing and feeling high life in all its highness. In the course of his prodigality he meets, enamours and becomes enamoured with the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer. His natural graces of deportment enable him to carry on his masquerade successfully. When he discovers that his money is exhausted he writes to his new love and tells her that he cannot call upon her any more but that if she wishes to know the reason, he can be found in a certain store between the conventional hours. Accompanied by her father she goes to the store to unravel the mystery, where they find our hero handling the yardstick in the most approved style. They do not hold any grudge against him for his erstwhile disguise and later invite him to their home as though he were still a Prince of Pilsen. The girl's father has a liking for the young fellow and, wishing to indulge his daughter's weekness for him, accepts him as a son-in-law, and thereupon the business of weddjng bells, old shoes, rice and honeymoons.

LUBIN

A SUBSTITUTE HEIRESS (Nov. 5).—James Stillman, a young Western millionaire, calls upon his New York broker, Arnold Winchester, who invites nim to his country home over the week end. As they are about to leave the office Winchester receives a telegram which prevents carrying out the plan. However, he sends Stillman to his country home alone and sends a telegram to his daughter Emily to entertain him. Emily receives the telegram just as she is about to leave on a short automobile trip with her fiance, William Chase, and a couple of friends. They are all greatly disappointed until Chase suggests dressing Emily's pretty maid, Ruth, in Emily's clothes and letting her play hostess during Emily's absence. The plan is enthusiastically adopted and Ruth is left to entertain Stillman. Stillman arrives and Ruth acts as hostess. They are greatly impressed with each other and hefore Stillman leaves they fall in love. Ruth is left very unhappy, because she believes her love for Stillman is hopeless in view of her station, and Stillman is hrought to earth with a thud soon after when he receives an invitation to Emily Winchester's wedding. He goes to the church and is astonished to find a strange young lady being married as Emily Winchester. He follows the bridal party out of church in a daze, unahle to uderstand the situation. Emily's father sees him and, noticing that there is no recognition hetween him and Emily, asks her if she does not remember Mr. Stillman, whom she entertained at the country home. Emily comprehends and tearfully confesses the deception. Stillman hears that the girl he wants is at the country home and not out of reach, and he does not wait to hear any more. He enthusiastically pumps the hands of the astonished hridal party and rushes off to the Winchester country home. He finds Ruth and, carried away hy his spirits, grahs the astonished young lady in his arms and kisses her. She backs away frightened, but he regains his senses and explains the situation to her, how miserable he has been and how happy to learn that she was not Emily, and asks her to marry him. Ruth's dream comes true and hoth are happy.

THE SHERIFF'S MISTAKE (Nov. 7).—Nellie, the daughter of Thos. Bassett, a ranchman, is sent to the village post-office to get the mail. On her way she crosses a creek and comes face to face with a handsome stranger who has just finished watering his horse. He asks her to direct him to Village View. After receiving the desired information he thanks her and rides away. Nellie proceeds to the post-affice and learns that the stage coach has been held up by a lone bandit. The description tallies with that of the stranger. She gives the matter no further thought until arriving at home with a letter for her father which tells him the foreclosure proceedings are about to be instituted against the property for the sum of $850. Quickly her thoughts revert to the stranger. If a reward is offered she might be able to capture him, receive the reward, and the mortgage could be paid. She tells her father of her plan and both ride to the village in time to see the sheriff and posse start in search of the handit and to see the reward of $1000 posted. She persuades her father to go with her, and together they begin a search of the valley. They follow the trail taken by the supposed outlaw and finally come upon him as the sheriff's posse is passing on a nearhy trail. Two shots fired hy Nellie hring them to the scene and the supposed outlaw is locked up in the village jail. The stranger's protests of innocence struck the breast of Nellie. She determined to sacrifice the reward and help the stranger escape. She rides hack to the jail. He tells her of his lost credentials, a letter that will clear him in the eyes of all. She goes over the trail again in search of the missing document and finally finds it. She also finds the cave of the much-wanted handit. The letter proves to the sheriff that the stranger is a U. S. Secret Service agent. Nellie leads them all to the cave of the handit. He is captured and placed in the hands of the posse. Nellie is assured of the reward and the stranger puts his handcuffs on the pretty ranchman's daughter and makes her his prisoner for life.

AMERICAN

MAIDEN AND MEN (Nov. 4).—A heautifully told story, depicting the evil influence of cheap, trashy novels. Much has been said and written about the evil influence of unwholesome pictures; there is no gainsaying the fact that some literature is not fit to he read hy any one, hut that is no reason why all literature should be condemned, and it will be conclusive that it would be equally unjust to condemn all pictures.

The mind of a child comes to us a perfect hlank, and upon it may he engraved the outline of a nohle character, hut it is equally susceptihle to evil influences. The mind of the child possesses certain inherent qualities which can he developed hy careful training or which lie dormant indefinitely and, perhaps, can never be discovered. The minds of children vary ahout as much as does blank paper, which might he suitahle only for use as scratch paper or a grade well adapted for an autographed de luxe edition of a great parchment.

In the film "Maiden and Men," the principal character is Lola Roland, the only child and sole companion of her aged father in the fastnesses of the hills. Into her hands falls a novel, and the flowery language of the author paints for her hungry soul an ideal that makes her yearn to leave her home. She deserts her father, the nooks and lanes that have become distasteful to her, to seek her ideal of man in the world that has been painted beautiful to her unsophisticated mentality. She lacked the power of discrimination; to her everything new was good. It was a delight to her soul because it was different—until one day came the awakening, the cruel realization that "all is not gold that glitters," the hitter truth that the nooks and lanes of her father's home were Eden to her, the furrowed face of her aged father was the most heautiful to her, because it was true and kind and faithful. Sadder, but wiser, she returned to her aged parent and there finds comfort and joy, her misguided impressions set right by the value of her experience. A strong lesson in psychology.

ECLIPSE—George Kleine

A RACE FOR HONOR (Oct. 30).—Charles Burgess, the proprietor of a large garage, receives a letter from a patron claiming to have left a purse containing $8,000 in one of the cars the evening hefore.

The next day Mr. Gordon, the unfortunate customer, calls for his wallet, hut the money cannot he found. Finger prints and the testimony of the watchman throw suspicion upon Frank, an engineer employed in the establishment, and matters look very grave for the young man, much to the grief of Lucy Burgess, who is secretly in love with him.

Suddenly she remembers that she saw her father enter the garage the night hefore and search several of the cars. Her suspicions are immediately aroused, much as she dislikes to direct them against her parent. Later, seeing her father ride out of the yard in great haste, she feels certain that he is seeking to escape justice. Without hesitation, the courageous girl quickly explains the situation to her sweetheart, and together they start in pursuit in another and swifter car.

The two cars race along at a tremendous speed for many miles, until, finally, when the fugitive is obliged to stop for repairs, the pursuers easily overtake him.

Although furious at first, the older Burgess finally yields to his daughter's earnest pleading and agrees to return the money, therehy saving them all from disgrace.

EDISON

BRINGING HOME THE PUP (Oct. 29).—To bring home a pup against all kinds of odds is laughahle to everyhody except the man who undertakes the task. In this little comedy Mr. and Mrs. Pipp and their small son, Willie, are spending their vacation in the country. Willie Pipp acquires a cute little pup hy trading his watch for it, very much against the wishes of his disgruntled father, who dislikes dogs, but Mrs. Pipp, who runs things, declares her haby boy shall have the pup at any cost and trouble begins to brew. Then difficulties with the dog go from had to worse. The first real trouhle begins when they miss their train to the city on account of the dog. This starts a quarrel which the angry Mr. Pipp seeks to terminate by throwing the pup into the river, exclaiming, "To the dogs with the pup." Little Willie Pipp, not realizing the danger of deep water, jumps in to rescue his little pup. Old Pipp dives in to rescue his litle Pipp and Mrs. Pipp screams for help. They are finally dried out and ready to start again for home, none the worse for their unexpected hath. They succeed in bringing the dog to the city, where more trouble awaits them. No dogs are allowed on the street cars and consequently they have to walk home. In trudging through the park they get into an argument with a policeman on account of the pup, and finally, upon reaching home, the janitor refuses to allow them to enter with the dog, hut Mrs. Pipp soon overrules his ohjections by crossing his palm with silver.

At last the pup is safely installed in their home and all is peace and quiet. There is a final view of little Willie simultaneously saying his prayers and hugging the pup.

COPPER MINES AT BINGHAM, UTAH (Oct. 30).—Bingham, Utah. Ever been there? No? Well, well. Here is a surprise for you. You haven't seen the real West until you have visited this, the largest copper mine in the world, where one company alone has a weekly salary list of Four Hundred Thousand Dollars and a modest yearly income of Twenty-seven Million Dollars. Never been in the city of Bingham, which has the proud distinction of heing six miles long and sixty feet wide? Then just keep your eyes on the motion picture screen and see how they tear down the mountain and also tear it up, digging and blasting it and carrying it away in cars.

Next to the Panama Canal this is the largest engineering operation in the world. Witness twenty-two railroad tracks, one above the other, view the aerial tram carrying hundreds of buckets of gold, silver and copper up over your heads. One might literally say:

Gold to the right of you,
Silver to the left of you,
Copper above you,
While all the valley thundered.

Blast after blast rock the mountain at high noon. Men hurry for shelter when the shrill whistles send forth their warning from mountain peak to rocky pit. Huge steam shovels grasp gold and copper hesprinkled Mother Earth within their iron jaws and lift her roughly into little cars which rush and rock around the mountainsides and then lay their precious hurden down at the smoke-dimmed roaring furnace mouth. Night and day this gigantic toil goes on.

On the same reel:

A SUFFRAGETTE IN SPITE OF HIMSELF.—This is a comedy huilt around a suhject which is at present the chief one of the day in England and hardly less important in this country. How a thoroughly respectahle British householder, hitterly opposed to woman's suffrage, hecomes apparently a violent advocate of the cause, the difficulties this gets him into, finally leading to his arrest, his forcihle rescue hy a band of suffragettes who helieve him their champion, his final arrival home in a torn and dilapidated condition hefore his astonished wife and, ahove all, how the fatal "votes for women" confronts him at the end—all these make the fun fast and furious. It can well he imagined that in such capahle hands the leading parts leave nothing to he desired.

The picture is entirely played in London and the appropriate street hackgrounds (including the famous Trafalgar Square) add greatly to its value.

RELIANCE

A BROTHER'S REQUITAL (Nov. 6).—Hector Gray promises his dying mother that he will always he good to her favorite son, Jim. Jim is inclined to he rather wild, hut despite this fact Hector takes him into husiness and they hecome partners. Jim is engaged to a heautiful girl, Edith. Hector meets her and immediately loses his heart to her. Knowing she is Jim's fiancee he loyally conceals his feelings. He gives Jim the company's funds, hidding him deposit them. On his way to the vaults Jim meets some of his old companions and loses the entire amount. Returning home he confesses this to Hector, who, instead of turning upon the penitent hoy, forgives him. He tells Jim that Edith must never know. She must think that he, Hector, was to hlame, and he will go to Australia and take up his life among strangers. But when Jim sees Edith he breaks down and tells her the whole story. He soon realizes that Edith loves Hector just as Hector loves her. Realizing his own unworthiness he brings them together and insists upon taking all the blame and goes to Australia in Hector's place.

BEDELIA AND THE NEWLYWEDS (Nov. 9).—Anna and Jim, a newly married couple, engage Bedelia to cook for them in their new home. She promises to arrive hright and early, and they get everything ready for her. But she does not put in an appearance until late. And when she does arrive she insists upon heing shown to her room and given time to change her gown. Returning to the kitchen she refuses to do any work except hossing, and she makes Anna and Jim wait upon her. She gives Anna a dish of onions to peel and this makes the pretty little hride cry. When they do not work quickly enough to suit her she covers them with flour and dough and chases them out of the kitchen. They change their clothes and sit down in the dining room, expecting a nice meal. But Bedelia's sweetheart, the policeman, has called, and she forgets all ahout her cooking while she entertains him lavishly to the best in the house, and the newlyweds are almost fainting with hunger in the next room. Finally she remembers them and, loading an immense tray with food she starts to the dining room. She is greeted with great joy, hut as she crosses the threshhold she catches her foot in the carpet and the whole dinner is flung at the feet of the hungry pair. Jim grahs his hat and, taking his wife by the arm, goes off to have their first dinner at Childs.

SPECIAL 3 AND 1 SHEET POSTERS

SPECIAL 3 AND 1 SHEET POSTERS

HERE IT IS A STARTLING TWO REEL FEATURE
MEN WHO DARE
RELEASED WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30TH

RELIANCE

COMING COMING COMING
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30TH, 1912
MEN WHO DARE

SPECIAL 3 AND 1 SHEET POSTERS

SPECIAL 3 AND 1 SHEET POSTERS

COMET

THE JEALOUS WIFE (Nov. 2).—Mrs. Mary Stone is a jealous woman. She is the wife of John Stone, a young and prosperous husiness man, and has every reason in the world to he happy and contented. She has a sweet hahy, a comfortahle home and her hushand just idolizes her. But her suspicion regarding her husband's faithfulness is the only cloud on their domestic horizon. With such a suspicion it is only natural that when a gossiping neighhor comes to her and tells her that her hushand has heen seen out driving with another woman Mrs. Stone helieves that her hushand is untrue. To cement the helief Mrs. Stone has received an anonymous letter to the effect that John is a had and wicked hushand and that he ought to be watched. So Mrs. Stone employs a private detective to shadow him and he reports that he was automohile driving with a strange woman and that the pair visited a jewelry store where Mr. Stone ordered an expensive diamond necklace which the woman tried on and which John eventually purchased for the sum of $2,000. This is the last straw, and the wife decides that it is hest to act. So she leaves her home and goes to her mother. Prior to her departure she has left a note in which she tells him all. When her mother sees her she is at first astonished. Mary reveals the reason of her visit and her mother hursts into laughter. "Why, my dear child," she says, "John is the truest and hest hushand in the world. I was the woman he was out with and the necklace he ordered was for you." At this crisis John enters and much-abashed Mrs. Stone asks to he forgiven, promising at the same time to curh her jealousy.

ECLAIR

FOILING A FORTUNE HUNTER (Nov. 7).—Charles Highby discovers that his daughter is ahout to elope with a strange young man who has heen meeting her in secret. Highby has planned for her to wed Jack Spencer, the junior partner in his husiness, hut instead of hecoming immediately angry, he takes things in his usual calm way and sets ahout an investigation of the new lover, Count Frizelli.

Finding him to he a criminal and a fortune hunter, Highby decides that the hest way to cure his daughter of the infatuation would he to show her his desperate plans, and give her a glimpse of his true character at the same time.

Taking Jack Spencer into his confidence, he arranges for him to take the chauffeur's place during the elopement. Spencer contrives to make DeForrest angry and he shows his true nature throughout most of the ride. The girl is to he hrought to the altar hy threatening her with a pistol.

At the church Highby confronts them, the frightened girl falls into his arms, seeking to he taken home. Frizelli tries to shoot, hut Spencer disarms him. The evidence against him is produced and the hogus count, thoroughly frightened, runs away.

On the same reel:

WHAT DAD DID.—Father, three heautiful daughters and a cook, also four young men, succeed in making this a very amusing comedy.

Father desires to smoke his pipe hut the daughters object, as they are expecting their sweethearts and don't wish to have the odor of the pipe in the room.

Father makes room for his daughters' young men, hut when the cook's sweetheart objects to his heing in the kitchen that is the last straw and father goes on the warpath, and at the end is comfortahly seated in the parlor, very contentedly smoking his pipe.

THE BUSY BEE (Nov. 8).—This film most entertainingly depicts the picturesque industry of apiculture or hee cultivation.

It shows men's ingenuity in furnishing and decoying the hee into a home of its own which is known as a hive or hive-house.

The perfection of these hives is as essential as would he the building of a mansion for a multimillionaire, for hees are workers, and like all real workers, they demand system and facility. So it is necessary to prepare the waxen foundation for the hee's home, or comh, to use the proper word, in a lahoratory. All of which is shown in its various evolutions.

Then are shown the hees at work in their hive, each striving in competition with the others in other separate cells. The Queen Bee is seen and described hy careful suh-titling.

The artifice of hee swarming is carefully portrayed and then is shown the clever manipulations hy which the honey is collected, still leaving the hee his house and structure, in which he will again faithfully perform the same labors in the season to come.

On the same reel:

FUNNICUS' HUNTING EXPLOITS.—Funnicus is hunting, while at his home many of his friends await his coming very impatiently. Suddenly he makes his appearance, his gamebag full—of newspapers. He tells his friends that he actually disdains small game, and to illustrate the story of his wondrous adventures, turns the house topsy-turvy. His wife, alarmed, advises him to go to hed and calm his excited brain.

Nightmares disturh his sleep. He finds himself in Africa, traveling on camel, accompanied by many guides. He arrives at an Arah's camp and jests with the Arahian maidens, who, for revenge, put out his fires in the forest the following night. The fires out, the wild heasts arrive, and he just has time to climh a tree, where he is out of reach of two hig lions, who wait for him at the foot of the tree.

Our great hunter courageously risks his life hy descending from the tree. He tries to strangle the lion hut suddenly awakens and finds himself clutching at his wife's throat.

GOLDEN HAIR (Nov. 10).—Ethel is a pretty milliner. Jack, who is employed in the neighhorhood, is quite in love with pretty Ethel. The two young people become hetrothed.

What gives a strange beauty to Ethel is her wonderful hair. One day while delivering a hat to a wealthy customer, the lady asks her to try the hat on and marvels at Ethel's golden tresses. She offers to buy it, hut, of course,

Ethel refuses, even though offered quite a sum.

Jack receives a letter from his father that he is coming to see him and that he brings good news. Jack is perplexed at the letter and tells Ethel that he will marry her if his father will allow or not.

The proposition the father had to make was to offer his son to the daughter of one of his neighbors, who had a big dowry. He even showed a photograph of the girl to Jack, but instead of answering his father, he went to fetch Ethel and then present her as being his betrothed.

The old peasant found the young girl all right, but his first question was, "How much dowry does she bring." The negative answer he received displeased him, and he refused to allow his son to marry a girl who does not bring a marriage settlement.

When Ethel reached home an idea crossed her mind. She might be able to get the dowry imposed by Jack's father. She knows the lady who offered to buy her hair and goes to her and tells her she consents to sell it. She has received the money and the hairdresser is on the point of cutting the hair when Jack comes in, just in time to prevent her from making the sacrifice. He explains all to the lady, who let Ethel have the money, and Jack and Ethel were married.

On the same reel:

CONSTANTINOPLE.—Showing many interesting and instructive bits of the life and industry of the Turkish capital.

MILANO

A TRAGIC WEDDING (Nov. 2).—Guy Firning, a clever and successful young fellow, is sent to South America to look after the interests of his uncle.

This uncle has a young and beautiful daughter, Renata, with whom the nephew is in love. There is an understanding between the uncle and his nephew, that if Guy is able to place his uncle's business on a satisfactory and profitable footing, he is to receive Renata's hand in marriage.

But Renata does not know this and has placed her affections in the keeping of Jules, a poor clerk.

Guy has been sending satisfactory reports to his uncle at regular intervals and is looking forward to his return home in a short time. At last he writes his uncle that his business affairs are satisfactorily arranged and that he is leaving for home to claim his bride.

It is at this unfortunate time that Renata tells her father of her love for Jules, and he informs her of the arrangement he has made with her cousin Guy, who is on his way to claim her as his bride. Her tears and pleading are of no avail, her father explaining that if if were not for the faithfulness and hard work of Guy they would now be penniless.

Renata, realizing that this is the only means her father has of ever repaying Guy's loyalty, as a dutiful daughter acquiesces to the marriage.

Upon Guy's arrival, the wedding day is announced and Renata manages to arrange an interview with her sweetheart, to explain everything and to say good-bye forever.

The wedding day dawns and Renata is married to the man who loves her, but whose love she cannot return. After the ceremony the guests offer their congratulations to the young couple and, during the confusion, Jules manages to speak to Renata and hand her a note, in which he tells her that he understands the sacrifice she is making and requesting her to destroy his letters, so as not to compromise her future happiness. Upon seeing her husband approaching, Renata hastily hides the note in her corsage, laughs and tries to appear happy.

Guy has arranged to make the honeymoon trip touring through Europe in an automobile, and as the time arrives for their departure, approaches his bride to announce the fact. Leaving the reception hall to prepare for her journey she unconsciously drops the note Jules has passed to her, and her husband, noticing it, picks it up.

His anguish at realizing that he has been accepted as a husband through filial duty and not for love, as he supposed, is pitiful to observe, and anxious to convince himself that he is not mistaken, searches his bride's writing desk and finds the letters Jules had cautioned his sweetheart to destroy.

These letters were innocent epistles in themselves, but conclusively established the fact that Renata loved Jules sincerely.

Insane with jealousy and unrequited love, Guy has difficulty in hiding his condition when approached by his new father-in-law, who urges him to hasten and prepare for his departure with his young bride.

The young couple finally depart in their automobile amid the laughter and congratulations of the guests, who little realize the anguish of these two weary souls.

After driving a few miles, the young husband on a pretext dismisses the chauffeur and drives the car himself. Suddenly resolved to be revenged, Guy drives the machine at the highest possible speed, and when his young wife tries to restrain him, he turns on her with the fury of a maniac and shouts at her that he knows all.

"I can never have you in life, I will have you in death," he cries, and divulges his intention of driving the auto over the high cliffs they are approaching. A desperate struggle by the young bride to prevent her now insane husband from accomplishing his purpose is of no avail.

The madman, in his frenzied strength, subdues the weak woman by his side and speeds the auto over the brink to destruction and death.

The bodies of the two unfortunates are found and all but one attribute the result to an accident.

Jules alone knows that these young lives have been sacrificed to the old French maxim: "Obey thy parents."

NESTOR

MAKING A MAN OF HER (Nov. 1).—The Bar B Ranch is up against it good and hard. Three cooks in succession have left and each cook has taken a susceptible cowboy home with her. The volunteer cooks are a dismal failure and dyspepsia is freely mixed with nasty looks. The ranchman puts down his foot, a number twelve at that: no more women cooks for the Bar B.

The employment agency at the nearest town offers sixty dollars and found for a cook. Emily is young and sweet and awfully hard up. She applies, but is informed that her sex is against her. Passing a second-hand store she resolves that a little thing like that shall not interfere with sixty a month and "found," so she buys a perfectly charming cowboy outfit, dons it, tucks her hair under a cap, returns to the agency and gets the job.

They promise well and Emily's biscuits are dreams in flour and butter. The boss is so pleased with a sample taste that he insists upon Emily joining him with one of his best and blackest cigars. She does so, and experiences the worst symptoms of seasickness.

The rancher's daughter and her chum come to the ranch and all the boys straightway fall in love with them. The girls fall in love with that "pretty boy cook," and when they insist upon visiting the kitchen with the untruthful assertion that they want to make candy the boys look black, and when one of their number takes a peep through the kitchen door and sees the upstart cook in the soothing arms of the two girls their wrath breaks loose and there are rocks ahead for Emily. They do not know, of course, that she has cut her finger and that the sight of blood has caused her to faint or that the girls have sought to give her air and that it has been necessary for Emily to confess. Instead, she begs the girls to keep her secret, and they do.

Emily runs the gauntlet and is finally forced to don the boxing gloves. The boys are astonished when the cook weeps on the daughter's shoulder when she receives a tap on the nose, and they look at their boots and melt away when she takes her cap off and her hair falls down and she gives them a brief but sufficient idea of how she regards them. Jim, with a horror for boy-baiting, has held aloof, and he and Emily keep up the old ranch traditions and get married.

This time the rancher secures the services of a tall lady weighing some 290 pounds. She is as black as the ace of spades and not at all desirable, therefore the epidemic of too many cooks is stayed and the broth is good.

THE COWBOY GUARDIANS (Oct. 29).—A pioneer caravan is attacked by Indians, who greatly outnumber the palefaces. The whole party is massacred, with the exception of a year and one-half-old baby, who, being hidden by its mother, escapes detection.

Whitey is a big, bashfuly cowpuncher, who secretly worships at the shrine of the only eligible woman in camp, a buxom widow, fair, fat and forty. She, in her turn, has made up her mind to overcome Whitey's bashfulness and make him an adoring No. 2.

Whitey is among the cowboys who find the baby. They take it back to camp and resolve to adopt it. The experiment is not altogether successful, for all the boys want to monopolize the babe's attention. They draw lots as to who shall be the child's father, and Whitey wins.

So far so good, but the other boys come to the conclusion that the baby should have a mother, and they bring the widow and Whitey together and congratulate themselves upon a marvelous stroke of diplomacy. The marriage takes place and all is merry as a marriage bell when the smiling baby is placed in Mrs. Whitey's arms. She is interested and asks whose baby it is. The cowboys tactfully tell her it is Whitey's and therefore hers.

Three hundred and thirty pounds of grief-stricken and horrified avoirdupois fall in a faint, which turns to joy when the situation is properly explained.

GEM

THE OLD DOLL MAKER (Oct. 29).—Claude Petreaux is an old doll maker of Nantes, who loves his calling only next to his daughter Lucille, who is the apple of his eye. He has an apprentice, Villon by name, a worthless man, who also loves Lucille. The young folks wish to marry, but Claude denies his permission, believing that the match would bring nothing but unhappiness to them both. Villon persuades Lucille to elope. The old man is broken down with grief and swears that she will never darken his door again; he therefore gives himself up to his beloved calling with even more assiduity than ever in order to forget.

Five years pass. In a distant city the young

MAJESTIC

THE GREATEST PHOTOPLAY TRIUMPH OF THE YEAR

"A WOMAN ALONE"

TUESDAY————A MASTERFUL DRAMATIC PRODUCTION————OCT. 29TH

—LATER OFFERINGS—

Nov. 3—"Weary's Revenge"

Nov. 5—"Cupid on the Job" and "A Day On the Battleship Florida"

Nov. 10—"The Deacon's Shoes" and "His Cook Lady"

Nov. 12—"Dick and Daisy"

The Majestic Motion Picture Co., 540 West 21st Street, New York City

HELLO TOLEDO!

3700 SEATS and S. R. O.

IF YOU HAVE ANY DOUBT ABOUT THE DRAWING POWER OF FILM SUPPLY CO. FILMS

READ THIS LETTER

NEW COLISEUM THEATRE
ASHLAND AVE.

Toledo, O.

Dear Sirs:—

I wish to compliment you on the service you are furnishing the Coliseum, which is the largest Picture Theatre in the U. S., seating 3700. There are thirty to sixty autos in front of the house each night. We show moving pictures only.

Can assure you the Film Supply Co.'s program is the strongest aggregation of manufacturers ever offered an exhibitor.

Signed, W. FOSTER, Mgr.,
New Coliseum Theatre.

LET US HOOK YOU UP TO A LIVE OFFICE

WE HAVE AGENTS IN EVERY LOCALITY

10 REPUTED COMPANIES | 21 REELS WEEKLY | 35 RENTING AGENTS

Film Supply Co. of America

133-135 West 44th St. NEW YORK

people are struggling to make a living. As a doll maker Villon has not achieved success, and he has already begun to descend the steep roads of dissipation.

A little girl, now four years old, has been born to them and is something of an invalid.

In the meantime the old doll maker is beginning to feel that age is getting the better of his efforts and, notwithstanding his fixed determination not to see Lucille again, he begins to long for her presence.

Things have reached an acute stage with the young family. The little girl, while out playing, has befriended a homeless dog and brings him home to the already half-starved household. Villon, in drunken anger at having another mouth to feed, kicks the dog brutally and would put him out of doors, but the little girl takes the dog in her arms and pleads that it may be kept. In this she receives the support of her mother, who has long since grown tired of her recreant husband. In rage he vows that he will never feed them and leaves them to shift for themselves.

The old man, in the meantime, feels that death is near, which increases his longing for a sight of Lucille.

By laborious efforts she paints a miniature of the baby and sends it to her father. He receives this miniature. Sitting in his lonely room he gazes at the childlike face shown in the miniature, which he places on the wall, until his dim old eyes seem to see in it the lineaments af Lucille. He starts up to take it in his arms when the vision disappears.

A sudden resolve takes possession of him. He calls in a notary, disposes of his stock and, using the miniature as a model, he fashions with all his old-time skill a doll and dispatches it to them.

The wolf of starvation has made its appearance to Lucille and her child. She is anxiously awaiting a return to her letter. The packet with the doll arrives which she opens feverishly. The little girl is delighted with it, but the mother is keenly disappointed that no tangible help has been vouchsafed, and gives up in despair. At this time Villon returns, deeply repentant, with promises of reformation, which, womanlike, she accepts. She then tells him of her plea to her father and, to her, the unsatisfactory result. In anger he takes the doll away from the child and throws it out of the window. The little dog runs after it and the little girl sobs piteously for her new toy. The father scolds her and the mother tries in vain to give her comfort.

In the meantime the dog has found the doll in the yard and proceeds to tear it apart, the child seeing this sobs even more piteously than ever at the destruction of her plaything. The mother's heart relents and she bids Villon go and rescue it. He brings it in, in a mangled condition, when to their surprise and delight, they find the concealed money.

They return home to Claude, the old doll-maker, where all is forgiven and great happiness reigns.

THE COLLABORATORS (Oct. 30).—Dick Lemon, an enthusiastic but needy poet, is writing his masterpiece, an epic poem, which he reads to Molly Dripping, the poor servant of the house, and both are delighted with it, when Mrs. Beans, the landlady, comes in and indignantly orders Molly out, and asks the poet for the rent. He regretfully turns out his empty pockets, but points hopefully to the poem. Mrs. Beans not being of an altruistic nature, tells him as he hasn't any money he has to clear out

He proceeds to pack up. Molly is in the kitchen sobbing over the poet's misfortune. Then she remembers he has had nothing to eat. She takes some food from the cupboard, wraps it into paper, takes it to him. He is overcome with gratitude and makes her a present of his poem. An affecting parting takes place. She returns to the kitchen feeling utterly dispirited, when she comes across the rest of the paper she had wrapped the poet's food in. Her eyes happen to glance on an advertisement offering "$1,000 for four lines of poetry advertising Killem's Potted Meat." She reads it again, then takes out the poem given to her. She looks at it, gets an idea, cuts off the first verse, alters it, then hurriedly posts it.

In the meanwhile the poet is seen wandering on the railroad ties. Molly gets a letter from "The Killem Potted Meat Co.," sending her $1,000 for her poem, and offering a position as head of their advertising staff. She instantly throws up her situation, in a funny scene with Mrs. Beans, and is installed in the offices of "The Potted Meat Co.," but alas she cannot write poetry, so she cuts off another verse of the poem and alters it, much to the delight of the manager. The poet is now seen near the city reading a newspaper when he is astounded to see his poem advertising "Potted Meat" and vowing vengeance, he proceeds straight to their offices. Here he finds Molly now in deep disgrace, because the manager wants more poetry and she can't think of any. The poet enters and indignantly asks for the manager. To his utter astonishment he meets Molly there, who explains things and to help her he gets behind the screen and when the manager returns again the poetry is raining upon him, thus making a very happy ending to a very funny story.

REX

AN OLD-FASHIONED MOTHER (Nov. 3).—Silas and Aunt Chloe reside in a fishing hamlet. They receive a letter from their son inviting them to come and reside with them, announcing that he has been married several years. They are in a quandary as to the acceptance of the invitation, but finally decide to go. They make preparations for the journey and Aunt Chloe goes to the garret and takes from the rafters herbs that are hanging there, which she uses for medical purposes, and packs them in her grip. Silas takes an affecting leave of his old fishing cronies, returns home and the old couple go to the city. They are met by the son, who gives them a royal welcome, but their country airs and homespun clothes cannot be tolerated by his aristocratic wife. Arriving at the home of Charles the old couple unpack their grips and among other things Aunt Chloe produces the roots and herbs and explains they are for medical purposes, much to the anger of Louise. The young wife makes it unpleasant for the parents of her husband, much to their sorrow and the humiliation of Charles. Dorothy becomes seriously ill and Aunt Chloe wishes to administer her home remedies but Louise is disgusted and forbids it. The child grows worse and Aunt Chloe takes her roots and herbs to the

EXHIBITORS
WE THANK YOU

For Your Overwhelming Response to Our Film Service Announcements

SO MANY CONTRACTS HAVE BEEN CLOSED

That We Are Unable to Install Service in Any More Houses at the Present Time

APPLICATIONS WILL BE CONSIDERED
IN THE ORDER OF THEIR ARRIVAL

To Insure Service in the Near Future Applications Should Be Made Without Delay to

KINEMACOLOR
FILM SERVICE
1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

kitchen, and in a clandestine manner, steeps them, preparing the medicine. She goes to the sick room and finds the nurse sleeping. Aunt Chloe has her medicine in a fruit jar and keeps vigil with the child and administers the medicine during the night, while the nurse sleeps. This is repeated the following night when the nurse is pleased to be relieved, and the next morning the child is much better and is discovered with her grandmother asleep. Charles comes in and notices the jar of medicine, awakens his mother and she tells him she has cured his child by her humble medicine. They leave and the mother enters and discovers the jar and the child tells her she has taken medicine out of the jar and is almost cured. In their room Silas and Aunt Chloe have decided they are not wanted by Louise and they are packing their grips to return home. Louise enters grateful that the life of her child has been saved by Aunt Chloe, and places her arms around the neck of her mother-in-law and bids them to stay on forever with her.

BIOGRAPH

THE PAINTED LADY (Oct. 24).—The elder daughter has always been her father's favorite because of her strict adherence to his rigid precepts. The younger daughter is rather gay and frivolous, though innocently so, and horrifies her elder sister when the latter catches her in the act of powdering and painting her face. To the mild reprimand of the elder daughter the younger exclaims, "Well, you have to do it if you want to be attractive." The strength of the assertion is proven at the church lawn festival, the younger sister being surrounded by a host of friends while the elder passes the time in almost absolute ostracism. However, a stranger appears at the festival who pretends to be attracted by the elder daughter, she, in turn, being surprised and flattered. This is for a sinister purpose, however, for the stranger is a crook. Under the pretense of affection for the girl he gains her confidence regarding her father's business affairs, and with the knowledge he has acquired, he attempts to rob the house. This attempt works disaster for himself and the girl.

KEYSTONE

MABEL'S LOVERS (Nov. 4).—Mabel has many admirers, and when she arrives at the summer resort she receives a number of proposals of marriage. Unable to decide, she determines to put the men to a test, so before going bathing she fills her stockings with unsightly bumps. When she discards her coat her unsightly limbs cause the men to beat a hasty retreat, with the exception of Black, who peeped when she made herself up. The next day when Mabel appears minus her ugly protruberances Black is the envied of all, while the men who deserted her try to get into her good graces again, but without success.

On the same reel:

AT IT AGAIN.—This film again presents Mack Sennett and Fred Mace in their famous travesty on Sherlock Holmes. Mrs. Smith (Mabel Normand) receives an anonymous letter stating that her husband is untrue to her, and she calls upon the detectives to shadow him. Smith comes home and, finding his wife away, goes out to look for her, in his shirt sleeves. Mrs. Smith points him out to the detectives, and they start on his trail.

In the meantime Larkins, a police captain, is at home with his wife, and goes out to buy some ice cream, also in his shirt sleeves. As Smith enters a house Larkin comes out, just as the detectives turn the corner, and they, thinking Larkin is Smith, follow him. When Larkin returns home his fond wife makes much of him, all of which is noted by the detectives at the window. They finally decide to arrest them, and a furious scene is raised by the indignant Larkin and his wife, but to no avail, for Larkin is dragged off. In the meantime they have notified Mrs. Smith and she is on the way to meet them with three policemen, and Smith himself comes up at the same time. When Larkin and Smith get through with the detectives they have learned the painful lesson that it does not pay for a detective to make a mistake.

BRONCHO

THE MAN THEY SCORNED (Two Reels) (Nov. 6).—This is a big military production, showing the heroism of a man and his sublime self-sacrifice after much oppression. He was a Jew, and his name was Stein, who enlisted in the army. As a raw recruit he was made the victim of rude pranks, and later on he became the butt of ridicule and derision. Hazed and insulted, scorned and derided, his life was made unbearable by the thoughtless soldiers at the post. The only ray of sunshine in his life was the sympathy of little Dolly, the Colonel's daughter, whose childish heart was touched by the abuse of the man, and whose tender little hands brushed away many a bruise from poor Stein's heart. One day, at the corral, he turned upon his tormentors and surprised all by the fury of his attack. Though fighting a score of men he held his own until the Colonel, hearing the fracas, rushed onto the scene. Everybody accused Stein of being the aggressor, and he was sent to the guardhouse. Little Dolly, with tear-stained eyes, brought Stein a bouquet of wild flowers which she had picked, and which she handed to him through the bars.

His imprisonment was ended by an outbreak of Indians, who, in tremendous numbers, were attacking the emigrants and settlers, leaving a trail of death and desolation in their wake. The soldiers, not knowing the strength of the redskins, went gallantly to the fray, but were overwhelmed by the Indians, who suddenly appeared as if by magic and sent volley after volley from behind trees, shrubbery and rocks into the ranks of the soldiers. The troop, with decimated ranks, was compelled to retreat in confusion, every man fleeing for his life. The Colonel's horse was shot down and he was pinned underneath the animal when Stein came thundering by. With a jerk of the reins that threw his horse back on its haunches he wheeled around and came to the Colonel, whom he pulled up and mounted on his horse and, leaping behind him, tried to escape. But the load was too heavy for the animal, and the Indians drew closer and closer. Only one man could escape on the horse, and Stein begged his Colonel to go on alone. The Colonel refused to accept the sacrifice and Stein pleaded with him, telling him he had no one in the world who cared for him while the Colonel had his wife and Dolly. Coming to a rocky hill Stein leaped off the horse and crawled to the top, while the Colonel, giving Stein his pistols, galloped on.

Entrenched behind the rocks Stein fought like a lion. The narrow pass made it impossible for the Indians to rush him and he held his own, picking off the leaders. The bullets are seen striking about him, and finally he is struck. Again and again the bullets hit him, and he is in a dying condition when the soldiers, reinforced by additional troops, charge the redskins and defeat them.

Unconscious, Stein is carried back to the fort and to the Colonel's quarters. Doctors and nurses fight with death for his life, and finally turn the tide in their favor, and Stein is slowly brought out of danger. The soldiers, recognizing the worth of the man, and ashamed of their conduct toward him, gathering underneath his window and at a signal gave three cheers for Stein. Pleased beyond measure, Stein was lifted to the window, where he feebly waved his thanks to the cheering soldiers.

But his cup of happiness was not yet full. The Colonel had recommended his promotion for bravery, and the official commission as sergeant is received. Little Dolly hands this to him with childish glee, and as his eyes swim with tears of happiness he fails to see the Colonel's outstretched hand for a few moments, but finally the men join hands in a clasp that forever wipes out racial prejudice and makes them brothers and soldiers under the same flag

CINES—GEORGE KLEINE

A HEAD FOR A HEAD (Nov. 2) (A Romance laid in the days of the "Reign of Terror").—Beatrice, the beautiful daughter of the rich Marquis Besler, is loved by Vigot, a humble gardener. She proudly repulses his attentions and later even advises her father to discharge the insolent fellow from the estate.

Filled with indignation, Vigot departs for Paris vowing vengeance against these aristocrats who despise him. Is he, a Democrat, not their equal? During the reign of terror Vigot becomes a close follower of Robespierre and the two are known as the Tiger and the Hyena.

The prosecution of the aristocrats is Vigot's opportunity. Informed of the Marquis' whereabouts he orders his arrest and condemnation. On the way to the guillotine in the fatal cart, the Marquis is recognized by Beatrice, his daughter. Her screams attract the notice of the crowd who demand that she, an aristocrat, die also, and she is thrown into prison.

After pleading in vain in her behalf, Vigot finally determines to rescue Beatrice at any cost. By bribery he achieves his purpose, but Beatrice, although filled with gratitude, cannot love him, and the two part, never to meet again.

Her escape soon becomes known and Vigot, after a short trial, is condemned to die at the guillotine. Alas! he has sacrificed his life on the altar of love

KAY-BEE

ON SECRET SERVICE (Two reels) (Nov. 1).—Messrs. Kessel and Baumann make the first release of the New York Motion Picture Co. under the trade-mark of Kay-Bee with a sensational war story, in which everything possible in military sensationalism and dramatic situations, conceivable in a military production, has been included. It is a wonderful story of the Civil War, with amazing battle scenes, booming cannon, bursting shells, terrific explosions and realistic battle scenes. There are scenes of melting tenderness and self-sacrifice; scenes of carnage and death, with hundreds of men engaged in conflict, and scenes of sensationalism, with madly galloping horses in lightning charges. Anna Little, playing the part of the Southern girl whose brother is a spy, makes a wild ride to save her brother; a cannon is blown up with dynamite; Ray Meyers, as the Southern soldier, is making a sensational escape when his horse is shot and turns a complete somersault backwards, and there are many other scenes of startling interest.

Fred Martin is a Southern spy, working between the lines, and daring death every moment. His changes of clothing and uniforms are kept in his negro mammy's shack. A Northern despatch bearer is captured, and the signature to his messages is forged and Martin sent in the dangerous mission of luring the Northern troops into an ambush. He accomplishes this, and a terrible battle results in which the Federals are driven back. The work of Martin is so damaging to the North that plans are laid for his capture, and John Bruce, a secret service man, is assigned to the task. He goes to Martin's home town and presents a forged letter of introduction to the Martins, purporting to be signed by Fred Martin. He is welcomed into the home and, to further his ends, makes love to Anna Martin, winning her heart and her confidence.

While in the Martin home the Northern troops surround the house and Bruce, fearing that his plans to capture Martin will fail if the field is not left clear for him to return, is compelled to make himself known to the Northern officer Fred Martin is expected on a visit that night, so Bruce shows his credentials as a secret service man and instructs the soldiers to secrete themselves about the house. In bidding good-bye to Anna he drops the passport, and she learns the awful truth.

Anna has been expecting her brother, and has given the signal—a candle in the window—that the coast was clear. Gun in hand, Bruce awaits Fred, and the anguished girl sees the spy in the moonlight, crouching behind a bush.

Galloping towards home, Fred is surprised on a bridge by two Northern sentries. Dismounting, he nonchalantly hands them a pass, hoping they will be deceived by the Northern uniform he is wearing. They scan it closely, however, and he realizes that the situation is critical. In swift succession he delivers crushing blows upon the faces of the sentries, and they tumble off the bridge into the water and, leaping on his horse, he gallops away. With swift strokes one of the sentries gets to shore and, leveling his rifle, takes a quick shot at Fred as he goes around a bend in the road, little thinking it will hit the mark. Fred's horse is struck, and leaping into the air it turns a complete somersault backwards and falls on Fred. (This scene is actually shown in the film.) Crushed and hurt, Fred extricates himself from the dying animal and painfully crawls away. The delay has saved him, for the Northern soldiers awaiting him give him up in the early hours of the morning, and when Fred drags himself to the door he is unobserved.

Anna and her mother put Fred to bed. In his wounded condition he is helpless, and Anna realizes that he must be captured unless she saves him. Attempting to leave the house, her way is barred by a Northern sentry. Returning to the house, in her anguished fear for her brother's life, Miss Little does some remarkable acting. Donning her brother's clothes she manages to effect her escape and, leaping on a horse, gallops away.

Bruce has determined upon a bold stroke and, impersonating Fred, he goes to the Union colonel and tells him a detachment of Southern soldiers is nearby, and attempts to lead the Northern soldiers into an ambush. In the meantime Anna is making a wild ride, sparing neither the horse nor herself, and she arrives in time to bare Bruce's plot, and accuse him. On her part, Anna has fallen desperately in love with Bruce, and he has lost his heart to the brave girl, but each buries personal feeling for the sake of their respective countries.

Bruce is arrested and quickly tried and convicted of being a spy. He is led out in the field, and a dozen soldiers face him with leveled rifles. Anna sees the impending execution and with an agonized scream dart across the field, but the rifles thunder a volley and the man she loves falls dead. The picture ends with Anna sobbing over the dead secret service man—a most pathetic scene.

SOLAX

THE OLD LOVE AND THE NEW (Nov. 6).—The boy is a bachelor of thirty who, by diligence and perseverance, is on the road to success. He comes of a poor but hardworking family, his mother being a plain, old-fashioned home-loving body. She has devoted her life to her son.

The boy's success gains him introduction into fashionable and aristocratic circles. He meets the girl and falls in love with her. She is selfish, proud, snobbish, and has a great contempt for her social inferiors. The boy presents her with an engagement ring, and tells her that he wants her to meet his old love, his mother. After many excuses, she finally consents and accompanies him to his mother's cottage. There she views with haughty disdain the humble surroundings and the plain and simple mother, who does everything in her power to win her future daughter-in-law's affection. The girl treats the mother like a servant, and rebukes her severely when she accidentally spills some sugar on her dress. The old mother bursts into tears. The boy resents his fiancee's treatment of his mother. She is furious that he should take sides against her, and in a rage demands that he choose between them. He hesitates a moment between the old love and the new, and then folds his old mother in his arms.

The girl tries to make amends but the boy has discovered her true nature and points to the door. With a haughty toss of her head she passes out of his life forever. Like a little boy, the boy sinks to the floor and lays his head in his mother's lap. She bends and kisses him on the brow.

JUST HATS (Nov. 8).—Billy is a boy who is long in imagination and short in sense. His parents give him up as a good-for-nothing idiot. Billy, on a certain evening, incurs the displeasure of the household by ruining the hat of his sister's beau. The next evening idiotic Billy puts the family in a turmoil. He comes rushing in from the yard, upsets two buckets of water, and sends things flying around the room just because he happens to see a strange-looking hat on the scarecrow. His parents are disgusted with Billy and turn him out of doors—believing that a little hardship will make a man of him.

Billy goes to the city and has a series of ludicrous adventures, and each of his misfortunes are brought about by troublesome hats. Finally, Billy gets a job in the store of a long-lost cousin. His cousin is a retail hatter, and Billy's importance depends on his ability to deliver hats to customers. Billy sets out, carrying about ten boxes. He has quite a time trying to make connections with cars, ferry-boats and omnibuses. Then Billy gets an idea! Having seen his cousin fold up some opera hats, Billy decides that all hats could be telescoped. He immediately proceeds to dispense with the boxes, and crushes derbys and silk hats into pancake shape and puts them all in one box. Billy then finds fault with himself because he hadn't thought of the idea before. Later, Billy is at a loss to understand why folks don't take their hats and why they kick him down stairs.

LUX

OH! MY PIPE (Nov. 1).—These four comical scenes only go to prove how dearly every smoker cherishes his beloved pipe. Smithson is taking home a new clay pipe and, even after being flattened out by a massive steam roller, his first thoughts are for the safety of his pipe. On the same reel

HENPECKED'S BID FOR FREEDOM.—Henpecked decides to escape from the tyranny of woman's rule. At first he contemplates suicide, but after casting off his hat and coat he comes to the conclusion that it would be unwise to ruin a life so precious. He therefore decides to go and make a night of it with the B'hoys, who are delighted to see him.

MAJESTIC

WEARY'S REVENGE (Nov. 3).—Farmer Davis desires Amos Keaton, a neighboring land-owner, for a son-in-law, but Lindy wants Frank Reed, a poor but worthy lad, whom her father refuses to permit in his house, with the consequence of secret meetings. One morning, Amos, a man of mean and evil nature, being tormented by Lindy, vents his temper by brutally whipping a farm boy. A passing tramp interferes, gets the worst of it, and departs with vengeful feelings. That same afternoon, Amos, dressed in his best, starts for Davis' farm to pay Davis a mortgage, that day due. With satchel in hand Davis is about to depart for town, but stays to write Amos a receipt. He thrusts the money into a desk drawer, locking it with a key from his key ring, which he returns to his pocket. Slapping Amos on the back, he bids him remain to find and woo Lindy, after which he hurriedly departs, dropping his keys unnoticed. Amos, picking them up, deliberately opens the desk drawer, taking out the money just paid and receipted, making a stealthy exit. On his homeward way he stumbles and falls, seriously spraining his ankle. There the tramp finds him, a helpless victim. After venting his hatred, the tramp pulls from Amos his hat and long black coat, replacing them for his rags. When Amos sees the coat containing the mortgage money depart with the tramp, he groans in anguish, but Mr. Tramp, unconscious of his newly-acquired prize, might have been a richer man had he not been tempted by the pies placed to cool outside Farmer Davis' pantry window. Cook discovers him in the act and her shriek sends tramp racing through the fields, followed by two farm hands. He sees no way of escape until, turning a bend, runs into a scarecrow. An idea. He strips off its long storm-worn coat and hat, replacing them by the ones just taken from Amos. When his pursuers turn they see no one but a peacefully sleeping hobo, whom they kick off the farm, unable to find the black-coated culprit.

Meanwhile, Davis discovers the loss of his keyring. He turns homeward, where Lindy and Frank, taking advantage of his absence, are occupying the sitting-room. Hearing her father's step, Lindy pushes the forbidden guest behind some draperies. Davis, searching impatiently, brushes aside the curtain, causing Frank to make a dash out and through the door. Davis is a mad man, but when discovering the open drawer and missing money he at once accuses Frank. It looks rather hard for the boy, as Amos, delighted at his rival's predicament, remains silent regarding his stolen coat, and the scarecrow is dumb. A few days later Lindy, walking through the fields with her dog, passes the scarecrow. Rover pulls off its coat, shaking it in play. Lindy, pulling it away, discovers the mistake. Searching the pockets she finds the lost keyring and the stolen money. The receipted bill proves it to be Amos'. When she confronts her father with these proofs of Frank's innocence, the puzzled man makes for Amos' farm, where he succeeds in extracting a confession. So, in disgust at Amos and contrition toward Frank, he withdraws his opposition.

CUPID ON THE JOB (Nov. 5).—"The Woman Haters' Club" is composed of seven dashing young fellows who have been disappointed in love. "The Man Haters' Club," composed of seven beautiful ladies, hire a house next to the men's club. Universal hatred of the opposite sex is cultivated until sweet little Cupid wakes up one fine morning and goes forth from his leafy bed in the woods, bent upon mischief.

Ethel starts from a nearby city to visit the women's club but misses her train and arrives late at night. Cupid arranges things so that she gets into the cellar of the men's club by mistake.

She is discovered by the butler and escorted by the horrid men to the women's club. Cupid sees his chance and works like a beaver. He succeeds in arranging the couples to his liking and, after four days of hard work, drives them all off to church in a body.

Cupid finds the minister working in his garden and whispers a message in his ear which causes him to get very busy and finish up the mischief which Cupid began.

GAUMONT SPECIAL OF ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF ROOSEVELT

The Gaumont Company have obtained the only motion pictures treating of the scenes of the assassination of Colonel Roosevelt, with pictures of his assailant being taken to and from the jail to the courtroom. There will be no other pictures available of the man Schrank until the month of December, when his trial will be held, as until that date he will not be again taken out of his cell. Thus, as far as a motion picture of the assassination is concerned, the Gaumont Weekly current event film is distinct and triumphantly exclusive. The scenes shown on the 150 feet of film are as follows: 1. The Gilpatrick Hotel, in front of which Roosevelt was shot. 2. Main entrance to auditorium where Roosevelt made his speech immediately after shooting. 3. The emergency hospital where Roosevelt's wound was examined and treated. 4. Argyle Hotel, where John Schrank roomed from the time he arrived in Milwaukee on Sunday, October 13, until the shooting. 5. Mr. Clinton Urbugees, who claims the distinction of being the first man to tackle Schrank after the shooting. 6. The county jail where Scrank will be held until his trial in December. 7. Schrank being taken back to jail after preliminary trial. Two scenes of this part. 8. Leaving the jail for the court house with Schrank.

The hundred million-dollar baby, Vinson Walsh McLean, has blossomed out as a motion picture actor. He has posed in a picture entitled "How a Boy of Three Can Be Happy." It was posed for at Bar Harbor while the little fellow played on the beach with his dogs and other pets, and was shown for the first time at the McLean home in Washington, D. C., on Sunday night last.

COMING FROM KLEINE

For Tuesday, "Mosques and Turkish Palaces in Northern Africa," which is a gorgeous display of Oriental architecture in beautiful edifices of the church and palatial homes of the nobility in the cities of Northern Africa. This film also shows the entire process of making straw hats in Florence, Italy.

Completing the reel is another industrial entitled "Venetian Lace Workers." Very interesting.

For Wednesday, the Eclipse offering, "A Race for Honor," describes in a highly dramatic manner how a courageous girl saves the reputation of her father and sweetheart, which the former so thoughtlessly risked, from a terrible disgrace.

"A Head for a Head" is the Saturday Cines. Laid in the days of the French Revolution, the film certainly reflects the horrors and terrors of that awful period in history. The story deals with the experiences of Vigot, a poor gardener's son, who becomes an ardent follower of the great leader of the revolutionary party, Robespierre.

CAMERAPHONE TALKING PICTURE
FILMS, RECORDS AND MACHINES
FOR SALE
G. E. EMERSON
537 CENTRAL AVENUE, NEWARK, N. J.

KINEMACOLOR

At the offices of the Kinemacolor Company of America it was said that the tremendous response to their film service announcement had not only immediatcly contracted for all their present ability to supply service, but that applications have been received in great number calling for installations two and three months away. Wherever the Kinemacolor film service has been instituted its triumph has proven instantaneous, and as each one subscribing has the exclusive right for his town, it has meant a big increase in business for the houses fortunate enough to secure it.

From David Miles, at the Hollywood Kinemacolor Studios, at Los Angeles, Cal., comes word that the company of fifty has arrived there in safety, and that work has already been started. Mr. Miles also remarks in his letter that he can use any number of good light comedy scenarios, and the 1600 Broadway, New York, offices are advertising that they pay the highest prices in the country and only "headliners" wanted.

AMBROSIO PRODUCES "SIEGFRIED"

"Siegfried," one of the famous ring (Der Ring des Nibelungen) from the pen of Richard Wagner, was produced for the first time at Baireuth, on the 16th of August, 1876. Essentially a musical production, it is rather difficult to imagine its lending itself with grace to the moving picture. Surrounded with the grandeur, the etherialism, the unexcelled harmonies of the wonderful Wagner chord combinations, Siegfried delights and creates anew the enthusiasm of Wagnerites, bringing added worshippers to the shrine of the great composer. And yet we find in the three-reel Ambrosia production of the theme something so artistic, so satisfying that we marvel at ourselves as we sit in silent admiration of a difficult production so splendidly staged.

What could be more beautiful in photographic effect than the disappearance of the Rhine Maidens into the river as they scamper from the greensward down its banks. One moment you see the light limbed nymphs clad in floating, gauzy draperies, flitting gracefully about; the next moment they scamper toward the river and are gone, with not even a tell-tale ripple on the water to denote their whereabouts.

The adaptability to the role of the actor who plays the part of "Siegfried" was a question of discussion among the critics who witnessed the first exhibition of the production. This, however, is more or less a matter of opinion.

This production will be reviewed in full in our next issue, with illustrations.

OUR LECTURES STIMULATES BUSINESS

CHAMPIONSHIP BASE BALL GAMES
21 Slides Plain $5.00
Colored 10.00
35 Slides Plain 8.75
Colored 17.50
With lecture or self-explaining, specify which desired.
Handsome one-sheets free with each set.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF ROOSEVELT
21 Slides Plain $5.00
With lecture or self-explaining. Colored 10.00

NEW YORK POLICE SCANDAL AND BECKER TRIAL
21 Slides Plain $5.00
Colored 10.00
40 Slides Plain 10.00
Colored 20.00
With lecture or self-explaining. Advance slide and handsome one-sheet posters free with each set.

BALKAN STATES WAR AGAINST TURKEY
21 Slides Plain $5.00
With lecture or self-explaining. Colored 10.00

SPECIAL OFFER
Political Slides. Three slides: Taft, Wilson and Roosevelt.
Plain for 50c., Colored 75c.
All our slides are produced from genuine photographs copyrighted by the National Press Syndicate from whom we hold exclusive rigbts. Compare the quality of our slides with others. Our modern chemical processes with skilled experts produce perfect results.

SEND FOR OUR NEW CATALOGUE. IT'S FREE.
Many new subjects that will interest you.

Panama Canal	Our Navy
The Pope and the Vatican	Our Army
Trip to Holy Land	Life of Roosevelt
Pilgrim's Progress	Sing Sing Prison
	Great Naval Review

A. J. CLAPHAM, 130 W. 37th St., New York

PICTURE MUSIC

ERNST J. LUZ

The following is a facsimile of a clipping taken from the want column of a metropolitan daily:

Pianist wanted—An A-1 pianist wanted for moving pictures. Price no object. Call between 10 and 12 o'clock.

Such an ad would tend to show the exhibitor's desires in improving the music to the picture and the "Price no object" does show the musician's benefit in improved music for the picture, and should be an inducement to every musician to modernize his playing and put forth his best efforts in the uplifting of the work and preparing himself and acquainting himself with the possibilities which will ultimately bring him into the "Price no object" class. By doing this the musician will not only materially benefit himself financially but he will have the pleasure of being flattered in his work, not degraded, and he will find the work less laborious and more interesting.

With a view of helping the exhibitor and musician to bring about these better results, I shall write a few articles on "Toning the picture" and effect playing for picture action, giving you simple methods, hoping to hear from all that may not thoroughly understand their meaning or those having any difficulty in producing the proper results.

By toning a picture is meant the colorateur or shading and to accomplish this it requires first that you create the habit of playing a neutral volume of tone, from which you can get a fortissimo or pianissimo with proper effect at any time necessary. By making a close study you will find the greater portion of most pictures consists of introductory and descriptive action, for which this neutral playing is very essential, allowing you a wide latitude in accentuating any unusual action that may arise without requiring you to break into a number for creating effect. As a rule any action of note running through these introductory or descriptive scenes have no direct bearing on the plot and are portrayed in the picture only to accentuate the demeanor or moral weight of the character in the ensuing plot. By using any other than the "Toning Method" to accentuate such action, you are simply cheapening your effect music unnecessarily, and have nothing new or unusual for the accentuating of the real climaxes or such action as is positively necessary to plot and picture realism.

This "Toning Method" is also applicable to your tempos used for neutral playing. Always using a tempo in your numbers from which you can diminish or hurry as required, always remembering that the action you are accentuating must have some bearing on the picture plot or story, and is common only in introductory and descriptive action. For climax numbers and dramatic situations positively necessary to plot you should have in your repertoire numbers suited for such effect, of which there are thousands at present published.

By a slight study of this toning method you will find that it creates an opportunity for properly rendering at least three or four good numbers to all pictures without losing any effects, giving the picture a melodious surrounding and keeping your auditors in a neutral temperament from which you can create the big dramatic or pathetic effects required, creating a decided realism for the picture action as well as having a telling effect upon the audience.

The "Toning Method" will therefore make possible three important factors necessary for good and entertaining "Picture Music," viz.: the rendition of pleasing numbers in their entirety, the creating of minor action effects without marring a composition and the means of retaining a strictly neutral temperament from which alone it is possible to create the proper heavy dramatic and other picture effects necessary for the elevating of "Picture Music."

It would be utterly impossible for me to describe all action to which toning is effective, for a certain amount of originality will be necessary until the producers see fit to give us temperamental plots, which will give a means of knowing what tempo or numbers will allow for the toning required in its rendition, at the same time giving suggestions as to effective toning possible, not suggestions as to musical titles with which to burlesque the picture. I will, however, give you a few illustrations of simple effects which will have weight with your auditors, place you in the "Price no object" class and effects that you will find opportunity to use without the aid of temperamental plots while rendering memorized numbers.

In this issue you will find a plot laid for a Pathe Release of October 16th, "Lass of Gloucester," in which No. 2 allows for much toning. The character Betty has fallen in love with a city stranger and the very touch of her country betrothed is repulsive to her. This action is very realistic and pronounced in this picture and can be made musically effective by either of two extremes, viz.: by an abrupt pause of two or three seconds or by a heavy accentuated ritard in your playing. You will find that a waltz movemenr is being played which will allow for either effect. Should you be playing a sustained movement when action occurs, divide your notes into quarters should you desire the ritard effect.

In "Gentleman Joe," a Lubin release of October 15th, while rendering No. 3 Tom is hit by a piece of silver and a lengthy pause is advised before going into No. 4. Upon this action the possibilities of the whole picture rests. From the time that Tom is hit while at the telephone until he staggers back to the table the picture creates a doubt as to what will happen next, and your pause accentuates that doubt at the same time giving you a neutral opportunity of making effective a new line of action which opens at this very point in the picture.

When you note in a march number the suggestion, hurried or hurried effect, it means that action accrues during its rendition in which the hurrying of the number creates the necessary toning. In Westerns you will find a very effective toning for your galop used in chase numbers as follows: If cue given shows a scene of the one to be pursued open P. playing ff at all times when the pursuers are on the screen, dropping to a P when the one chased is on. Lubin's release of October 5th, "His Life," offers an excellent opportunity for this kind of toning. At the leader cue "The Masked Ball," a hilarious two-step for dancing is played, as the flash-in of the sentimental ecenes of mother appear it is only necessary to drop to PP. to create the required effect, going back to the ff as the ballroom scene is on. The greater your contrast the greater your effect. In playing sentimental or pathetic numbers you will have no trouble in toning, for when they are well rendered we usually say they are played with feeling or expression, and there is no necessity for deviating from this rule, only to state that you should allow the picture to suggest that expression. Don't try to imitate horsehoofs, chicken crows, etc., etc., on the piano, for you can't do it and no one else ever could, and by so trying you simply make a joke of yourself and the picture in the eyes of the thinking classes. There are many more instances of effective toning I could give, but if you bear in mind the following facts, many opportunities will naturally suggest themselves. Don't cheapen your effects by shading irrelevant action, and tone only such action as has a direct bearing on the character or plot. All toning necessary can be done by a marked ritard or forscendo pause, an extreme PP or FF for contrast effects, and a diminishing or hurrying of tempos. Don't confuse toning to action with dramatic effects, for they are in no way similar. Dramatic effects stand alone in all pictures and require certain numbers Toning of other numbers is the means by which you save your dramatic numbers for those scenes which need be made more effective or realistic. By following the temperamental plots set up each week you will easily create the toning habit, for where toning is very essential in a number it will be so stated and suggestive help given. In any and all methods which could be suggested for universally better "Picture Music" it will still be a fact that the method's perfection will only be realized with the adoption of musical plots of a temperamental nature.

MUSICAL PLOTS

By Ernest Luz.

A few rules governing their use.

The cues given will allow for natural ending of strains, unless "Leader" cue, in which case a quick seque should be made unless otherwise stated. Avoid Overtures and Potpourris in their entirety; each picture creates its own selection or potpourri. The cues are so stated as to give you both a prompt and direct cue. You are safe in making seque as soon as you are positive of your prompt cue. Avoid introductions to numbers unless otherwise stated. Avoid the shading of numbers as printed, an even mezzo forte being the best. From this you can get both pp and ff shadings with effect according to the demands of picture action. When shading is positively essential you will find words "Tone to action." Avoid the use of books. They are not practical for setting-up. In playing numbers following a certain line of action drop to pp in case there is a cut-in of flash scenes. For playing recopy plots legibly on large paper and fasten by clasp to right of music stand or piano. Read the Film Stories in this magazine as it will familiarize you with the cues. Studio projection would allow for material improvement in set-ups. We are always ready to hear from you and explain any difficulties you may have with these plots or otherwise. If personal reply is requested enclose stamped envelope.

UNDER FALSE COLORS

Edison Drama. Released Oct. 8.

Set-up

1. Waltz (Descriptive dancing)
2. Caprice.
3. Waltz. (Dreamy)
4. March 6/8. (Lively)

Cues.

Play 1 until agreement written by Brookfield on screen.
Play 2 until Brookfield throws money on Johann's table.
Play 3 until leader "There's many a slip twixt cup and lip."
Play 4 until end. I

PASSING GYPSIES

Pathe Drama. Released Oct. 9.

Set-Up.

1. Gypsy Characteristic Numbers. (Light)
2. Dramatic Agitato.
3. Waltz.
4. Gypsy number. Mazurka. La Zsigana. Bohm.

Cues.

Play 1 until Mariola gives doped drink to farmer.
Play 2 until Mariola and farmer off screen after struggle.
Play 3 until Mariola exits after reuniting farmer and wife.
Play 4 until end. (Very light and gay.)

Note:—No. 1 is very long. Open with 2/4 number once through then 3/4 Mazurka once through, then play 2/4 characteristic until cue.

THE COMBINATION OF THE SAFE

Kalem Drama. Released Oct. 14.

Set-Up.

1. March.
2. Waltz. (Legato)
3. Dramatic Pizzicato. (Sneaky)
4. March 2/4. (Hurried)
5. Waltz. (Sentimental)
6. Dramatic Pizzicato. (Sneaky)
7. March 2/4. One that can be played very fast.
8. Sentimental number.

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "A guilty conscience."
Play 2 until leader "That night."
Play 3 until leader "The next day Weston finds," etc.
Play 4 until detective exits from office. (Open P. f as clerks on. P. when detective questions.)
Play 5 until detective exits from room. Weston's home. (Faster as Weston hears parrot.)

Play 6 until leader "Weston prepares to leave country."
Play 7 until detective and Weston capture Harrison on steamer's deck. (Very fast as detective and Weston in auto.)
Play 8 until end.

GENTLEMAN JOE

Lubin Drama. Released Oct. 15.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Descriptive)
2. Dramatic Pizzicato. (Sneaky music)
3. Dramatic Agitato. (Light)
4. Dramatic Hurry. (Struggle)
5. Caprice. (Slow)
6. Waltz.
7. Dramatic. (Agitato) (Light)
8. Waltz. (Sentimental Legato)

Cues.

Play 1 until Gentleman Joe entering Tom's room, subdued light.
Play 2 until Tom gets revolver after hearing burglar.
Play 3 until Gentleman Joe throws silver, hits Tom. (Abrupt pause as Tom is hit. Pause until Tom staggers to table.)
Play 4 until struggle over.
Play 5 until leader "At home of her friend." (Quick seque)
Play 6 until Gentleman Joe enters his own room.
Play 7 until detective handcuffs Gentleman Joe.
Play 8 until end.

THE OPIUM SMUGGLERS

Selig Drama. Released Oct. 15.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Descriptive)
2. March. (4/4 cut time)
3. Dramatic Agitato. (Light)
4. March 2/4. (Hurried)
5. Waltz.
6. Dramatic Agitato. (Light, Long)
7. Dramatic Hurry. (Struggle)
8. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until Captain Bob rides top of hill, dismounts, looks through glasses.
Play 2 until driver of smugglers' team holds up hands.
Play 3 until Captain Bob drives team off screen.
Play 4 until line riders headquarters. Exterior.
Play 5 until Captain Bob enters Kitty's room.
Play 6 until smuggler lays watch on table, Kitty's room.
Play 7 until smuggler is handcuffed by Bob, Kitty's room.
Play 8 until end.

MRS. LIPPERER'S LODGERS

Vitagraph Release. Oct. 15.

Set-Up.

1. Novelette. (Melodious)
2. Waltz. English. (Descriptive)
3. Sentimental. Tosti's Good-Bye)
4. Waltz. (Legato)
5. Mysterioso. (8 Bars Heavy)
6. Pathetic. (Long. Theme in minor key)

Cues.

Play 1 until major in front of Mrs. Lipperer's home.
Play 2 until Edson gets note calling him away.
Play 3 until leader "Still no word."
Play 4 until Edson's letter on screen. (Quick seque)
Play 5 eight bars only, slow.
Play 6 until end. (Very plaintive)
Note:—Quick seque not necessary from 3 to 4.

THE LASS OF GLOUCESTER

Pathe Drama. Released Oct. 16.

Set-Up.

1. Idyll. (Gavotte tempo, Paul Lincke style)
2. Waltz. (Descriptive)
3. Caprice (Slow legato)
4. Dramatic. (Agitato)
5. Dramatic. (Hurry. Struggle. Short)
6. March 2/4. (Hurried)
7. Dramatic. (Hurry. Heavy)
8. Waltz

Cues.

Play 1 until Betty puts fishing nets on her shoulder.
Play 2 until Betty and father enter home after leaving John. (Tone action)
Play 3 until Betty climbs through window to elope.
Play 4 until stranger puts hand violently on John's shoulder.
Play 5 until Betty and stranger at rowboat.
Play 6 until oilstove in sailing boat upsets. (Very P. as scene of Betty's room flashed.)
Play 7 until John rescues Betty from sailboat.
Play 8 until end. (Open bright. Slow and sentimental at interior scene.)
Note:—In No 2 tone Betty's action as she repulses John.

REMOVING SUNKEN VESSELS
and
LIKE KNIGHTS OF OLD

Edison. Released Oct. 16.

Set-Up.

1. March songs or descriptive number. (About 6 min.)
2. Waltz. (Descriptive)
3. Processional or Roman Grand March.
4. Minuet. (Dancing)
5. Dramatic Agitato. (Heavy)
6. Dramatic Agitato (Light. Duel music)
7. Waltz. Slow)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader title "Like Knights of Old."
Play 2 until girl falls asleep in chair.
Play 3 until leader "Headsman is her friend." (P. and f as to action.)
Play 4 until Fitzherbert enters among dancers.
Play 5 until Fitzherbert draws sword.
Play 6 until Fitzherbert wounded.
Play 7 until end.
Note:—During No. 3 two bugle calls or fanfares are effective at leader "Fitzherbert gets bad news" and after messenger off screen at tent scene. With orch, calls can be made by cornet without stopping number. Orch. playing very P.

TAMING A BACHELOR

Comet. Released Oct. 14.

Set-Up.

1. Intermezzo. (Polka movement)
2. Waltz. (Descriptive)
3. Two-Step. (Lively)

Second Half Reel. SCENIC

4. Waltz. (Medley or operatic)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Father, I bet I can tame," etc.
Play 2 until leader "Entirely recovered"
Play 3 until end. First half reel.
Play 4 until end. Second half reel.
Note:—Quick seques not necessary.

THE PROMISE

American Film Co. Released Oct. 14.

Set-Up.

1. March 6/8.
2. March 2/4.
3. Waltz. (Descriptive)
4. Dramatic Agitato
5. March 2/4. (Hurried)
6. Sentimental number.
7. Waltz.
8. Pathetic.

Cues.

Play 1 until girl and cowboys mount horses.
Play 2 until cowgirl on rock scene with fisher maiden and lover.
Play 3 until cowboy embraces fisher girl. Cabin exterior (Quick seque)
Play 4 until shot fired. (Make abrupt pause 10 seconds.)
Play 5 until cowboys off screen fisher girl cabin.
Play 6 until leader "Love calls her back."
Play 7 until leader "I love you but I promised," etc. (Open lively. Slow and legato as girl on horseback alone on screen.)
Play 8 until end. (Slow)

ON ACCOUNT OF A HANDKERCHIEF
and
THE BUG AND THE COUNT

Reliance. Released Oct. 16.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Lively)
2. Intermezzo Two-Step (Lively)
3. Dramatic Agitato. (Light)
4. March 6/8.

Second Half Reel

5. Popular Song Rags. (Medley) (Very long)
6. Oh! What a beautiful dream.

Cues.

Play 1 until Kitty finds handkerchief in her room.
Play 2 until Kitty and Jack enter Miss Inwood's room.
Play 3 until police enter Miss Inwood's room
Play 4 until end of 1st half reel.
Play 5 until leader "Gee! That was some dream."
Play 6 until end.

THE SHERIFF'S ADOPTED CHILD

Broncho Drama. Released Oct. 16.

Set-Up.

1. Pathetic.
2. Waltz. (Slow)
3. March 2/4. (Lively, hurried)
4. Galop.
5. Waltz. (Lively)
6. Caprice. (Slow)
7. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until bandit walks through underbrush with money bag.
Play 2 until leader "On the trail."
Play 3 until second shot fired.
Play 4 until bandit captured.
Play 5 until leader "The bandit consents to the adoption," etc.
Play 6 until boy brings mail to sheriff and wife.
Play 7 until end.
Note:—Effect toning possible in all numbers

SLIDES

¶ Announcement - Advertising, something that pleases the eye. Slides like you can't buy without you follow the crowd to

Niagara Slide Company
Lockport, N. Y.
Catalog Free Box N

The Art of Scenario Writing
By WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT
And 1 Year's Subscription to Moving Picture News for $2.00

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—The Bowstring (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—The Ship of Lions.....

AMERICAN

Oct. 23—The Way of the Transgressor (Dr).1000
Oct. 24—The Wooers of Mountain Kate (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 28—One-Two-Three, or the Story of a Wager (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—Chiquita, the Dancer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Wanderer (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—Maiden and Men (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 7—God's Unfortunate (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 9—The Starhucks (two reels) (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 11—Man's Calling (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 14—The Intrusion at Lompoc (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 16—Jim Bentley's Adventure (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 18—The Thief's Wife (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 21—The Would-Be Heir (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—The Idyll of Hawaii (Dr.).....1000

AMMEX

Oct. 2—Ashes of Memory (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—Getting in Strong (Com.).....
Oct. 9—Woman Haters (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Mission Maestro (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—A Redeemed Reputation (Dr.)....
Oct. 30—Brand of Cain (Dr.).....

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail .....
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line .....
Oct. 4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct. 11—The Sergeant's Boy.....
Oct. 18—The Vengeance of Fate (2 reels) (Mil.) .....
Oct. 25—The Colonel's Ward (2 reels).....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Oct. 15—Star-Eyes Strategy (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—Early Days in the West (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 22—Hunted Down (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—A Daughter of the Redskins (2 reels) .....
Oct. 29—The Cowboy Guardians (Dr.).....
Nov. 2—Trapper Bill, King of Scouts (2 reels .....
Nov. 5—A Red Man's Love (Dr.).....
Nov. 9—An Indian Ishmael (Dr.).....

BRONCHO

Oct. 2—For the Honor of the 7th (Mil.)..
Oct. 9—An Indian Legend.....
Oct. 16—The Sheriff's Adopted Child (Dr.).
Oct. 23—The Story of the Savage Modock Mine .....
Oct. 30—How Shorty Kept His Word.....
Nov. 6—The Man They Scored (2 reels)....

CHAMPION

Sept. 30—Her Whole Story (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—To Err is Human (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—The Girl in the Gingham Gown (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Thy Will Be Done.....
Oct. 26—Sue (Dr.) .....
Nov. 4—A Tramp's Strategy (Dr. Com.)...

COMET

Oct. 7—"'Ostler Joe" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Double Debt (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Taming a Bachelor (Com.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Romance of the Rockies (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 21—She Married a Hero (Com.).....1000
Oct. 26—The Mule Ranch Mystery (W. Dr.).1000
Oct. 28—Dooley's Triumph (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—A Tempest in a Teapot (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—A Four-Cornered Wedding (Com.).1000

CRYSTAL

Oct. 20—Bella's Beaux (Com.).....
Oct. 20—The Only Woman in Town (Com.)
Oct. 27—A Pair of Fools.....
Oct. 27—The Blonde Lady .....
Nov. 3—O, Such a Night (Com.)..... 525
Nov. 3—Marriage a la Carte (Com.)..... 475
Nov. 10—The Gypsy Flirt.....
Nov. 10—Man Wanted.....

ECLAIR

Oct. 8—Surprising Eliza (Com.) .....
Oct. 10—A Choice by Accident (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 13—The White Bonnet (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—The Hoodoo Letter (Com.) .....

Feet

Oct. 15—One on Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)....
Oct. 20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)..
Oct. 22—The Home Coming .....
Oct. 24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)..
Oct. 27—Brusia (Travel) .....
Oct. 29—Rosie (Com.) .....
Oct. 31—The Transgression of Deacon Jones (Com.) .....
Nov. 3—Aunt Bridget (Com.) .....
Nov. 5—Silent Jim .....
Nov. 7—Foiling a Fortune Hunter.....
Nov. 7—What Father Did.....
Nov. 10—Golden Hair.....
Nov. 10—Constantinople .....

GREAT NORTHERN

Sept. 28—A Sly Servant (Com.)..... 314
Oct. 5—I Am Going Out for a Shave (Com.) 726
Oct. 5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)..... 253
Oct. 7—The Black Chancellor (3 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 26—The Angling Widow (Com.)..... 976
Nov. 2—The Lottery Prize (Com.)..... 534
Nov. 2—An Unsuccessful Flirtation (Com.) 466

GAUMONT

Oct. 3—Zigoto to the Rescue.....
Oct. 5—Zigoto Drives a Locomotive.....
Oct. 8—Love's Test .....
Oct. 10—The Tie Eeternal .....
Oct. 12—The Cotton Industry .....
Oct. 15—Beethoven .....
Oct. 17—The Legend of Cagliostro.....
Oct. 19—A Modern Cinderella.....
Oct. 22—A Country Scandal.....
Oct. 24—Love and Calino Marries a Suffragette .....
Oct. 26—Zigoto Has a Good Heart.....
Oct. 29—A Domestic Treasure .....
Oct. 29—The Gorges of Alhuquerque.....
Nov. 1—Zoological Specimens of the Pond..
Nov. 1—Bruges, the Venice of the North....

GEM

Sept. 24—The Legend of Montmarte (Dr.)..
Oct. 1—The Convict's Return .....
Oct. 8—Orphans (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—What the Bell Told (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—The Woman in White (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 29—The Old Dollmaker (Dr.).....
Nov. 5—The Better Part (Dr.).....

IMP

Oct. 17—The Fugitives (Dr.).....
Oct. 19—The Postman .....
Oct. 19—Eventful Bargain Day.....
Oct. 21—The Pickaninnies and the Watermelon (Com.) .....
Oct. 24—King the Detective and the Smugglers .....
Oct. 26—Joe the Pirate.....
Oct. 26—Early in the Morning.....
Oct. 28—Yvonne, the Foreign Spy (Dr.).....
Oct. 31—John Sterling, Alderman (2 reel Dr.) .....
Nov. 2—Ferdie Be Brave .....
Nov. 2—Pres. Taft at the County Fair.....
Nov. 4—A Strange Case (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—Leah the Forsaken (3 reels Dr.)..
Nov. 9—Half Shot.....
Nov. 9—How Ned Got the Raise.....

ITALA

Sept. 22—A Naughty Boy (Com.).....
Sept. 29—His First Lawsuit (Com.).....
Sept. 29—A Nail in the Shoe (Com.).....
Oct. 6—Too Many Children (Com. Dr.)...
Nov. 1—Souls in Torture (Dr.).....2000

KAY-BEE

Nov. 1—On Secret Service (2 reels).....

KEYSTONE

Oct. 14—Stolen Glory (Com.).....
Oct. 21—The Ambitious Butler.....
Nov. 1—The Grocery Clerk's Romance.....
Oct. 28—At Coney Island .....
Nov. 4—Mabel's Lovers.....
Nov. 4—At It Again.....

KINEMACOLOR

Sept. 28—Bee Culture (Scientific).....
Sept. 28—Tulip Studies (Scientific).....
Oct. 5—An American Invasion (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—American Fashions .....
Oct. 5—Picturesque Scenes on the Potomac River (Sc.).....

LUX
By Prieur.

Oct. 18—His Nurse (Dr.)..... 918
Oct. 25—Stick It John (Com.)..... 445
Oct. 25—All Through a Bank Note (Com.).. 524

Feet

Nov. 1—Oh! My Pipe (Com.) 331
Nov. 1—Henpecked's Bid for Freedom (Com.) 652
Nov. 8—Spiffkins East Frogs (Com.)..... 475
Nov. 8—A Magnetic Personality (Com.).... 455

MAJESTIC

Oct. 27—The Tree Imp (Com. Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—A Woman Alone (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 3—Weary's Revenge .....
Nov. 5—Cupid on the Job (Com.)..... 500
His Dress Suit (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 10—The Deacon's Shoes (Com.)..... 500
His Cook Lady (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 12—Dick and Daisy (Com.).....1000

MILANO

Oct. 12—The Gypsy Spy (2 reels) (Dr.)....
Oct. 19—The Blind Man's Dog (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—Kelly Goes to War.....
Oct. 26—A Three-Cornered Wedding Journey
Nov. 2—A Tragic Wedding (Dr.).....
Nov. 9—Her Masterpiece (2 reel Dr.).....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Oct. 14—I Owe You $10.00 (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Patsy's Mistake (Com.).....
Oct. 18—Her Friend, The Doctor (Com.)..
Oct. 21—Betty's Bandit (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Border Parson (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Lady Barber of Roaring Gulch
Oct. 28—The Call of the Desert (W. Dr.).
Oct. 30—Fatty's Big Mix-up (Com.).....
Nov. 1—Making a Man of Her (Com.)....
Nov. 4—United We Stand (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—His Little Partner (Dr.).....
Nov. 8—Sharps and Chaps (Com.).....

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Oct. 11—On the Danger Line (Dr.).....
Oct. 16—The Golden Rod.....
Oct. 16—Does It Pay.....
Oct. 18—The Sealed Envelope (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Skeleton (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—Just a Woman (Dr.).....
Oct. 30—The Collaborators (Com.).....
Nov. 1—A Dreamland Tragedy .....
Nov. 6—The Railroad and the Widow (Dr.)
Nov. 8—The First Glass (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Oct. 16—The Bug and the Count (Com.)... 500
Oct. 19—The Organ Grinder's Ward (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 23—Johnny on the Spot (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 23—How Jack Won Out (Com.)..... 500
Oct. 26—A Wireless Miracle (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—Men Who Dare (2 reels).....
Nov. 2—Trials of Faith .....
Nov. 6—A Brother's Requital (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 9—Bedelia and the Newlyweds (Com.).1000
Nov. 13—The Faith Healers (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 16—Virgin of the Fire (Dr.).....1000

REX

Oct. 13—When Twenty Is in Love.....
Oct. 17—The Wedding March (Dr.).....
Oct. 20—Leaves in the Storm (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—A Kentucky Feud (Dr.).....
Oct. 27—Through a Higher Power (Dr.)...
Oct. 31—Careful Nursing (Com.).....
Nov. 3—An Old-Fashioned Mother (Dr.)...
Nov. 7—Honor of the Family (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—A Galley Slave's Romance (Dr.)...

SOLAX

Oct. 18—The Maverick (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The High Cost of Living.....
Oct. 25—The Idol Worshipper.....
Oct. 30—The Clue on This Hearth (Dr.)....
Nov. 1—Making an American Citizen (Dr.).
Oct. 30—Making an American Citizen (Dr.)
Nov. 1—At the 'Phone.....
Nov. 6—The New Love and the Old.....
Nov. 8—Just Hats.....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Oct. 22—Through the Flames.....
Oct. 25—In a Garden.....
Oct. 27—Taking Care of Baby.....
Oct. 27—Mary's Goat .....
Oct. 29—Put Yourself in His Place (2 reels)
Nov. 1—The Little Girl Next Door.....
Nov. 3—Petticoat Camp.....
Nov. 5—The Ladder of Life.....
Nov. 8—Through the Flames .....
Nov. 10—A Noise Like a Fortune.....
Nov. 12—The Country's Prize Baby.....
Nov. 15—In Time of Peril.....

VICTOR

Oct. 4—Tangled Relations .....
Oct. 11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.) .....
Oct. 18—The Cross-roads (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Angel of the Studio (Dr.)....
Nov. 1—The Redemption of Riverton (Dr.).
Nov. 8—Sisters (Dr.).....

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Sept. 30—So Near Yet So Far (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—A Feud in the Kentucky Hills (Dr.)
Oct. 7—The Line at Hogan's (Com.).....
Oct. 7—A Ten-Karat Hero (Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Chief's Blanket (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—In the Aisles of the Wild (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 17—A Limited Divorce (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Like the Cat, They Came Back (Com.) .....
Oct. 21—The One She Loved (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—The Painted Lady (Dr.).....
Oct. 28—At the Basket Picnic (Com.).....
Oct. 28—A Real Estate Deal (Com.).....
Oct. 31—The Musketeers of Pig Alley (Dr.)

CINES

C. Kleine

Oct. 12—Trailing the Counterfeiters (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 15—The Adventure of the Scarecrow (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 19—Among the Mountains of Calahria (Scenic) 400
Oct. 19—An Ahhreviated Honeymoon (Com.) 600
Oct. 22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.) 250
Oct. 22—The Invited Guest (Com.)..... 750
Oct. 26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.).....1005
Oct. 29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.) 400
Oct. 29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.). 450
Oct. 29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.).... 150
Nov. 2—A Head for a Head (Hist. Dr.)....1100
Nov. 5—The Golden Shell of Palermo, (Sc.) 300 and Love versus Gratitude (Dr.)... 700
Nov. 9—No Fool Like an Old Fool (Com. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 12—On the Firing Line (War Dr.)....1050
Nov. 16—Life and Industries in Aden Campo (Educ.) 400
Nov. 16—The Old Actor's Vision (Dr.)..... 600
Nov. 19—The Magic Elixir (Com.)..... 650
Nov. 19—Caught With the Goods (Com.).... 350
Nov. 23—Mafredonia, So. Italy (Sc.).....
Nov. 23—Two Afflicted Hearts (Com.)..... 700

EDISON

Sept. 28—'Ostler Joe (Dr.).....1000
Sept. 30—Calumet "K" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 1—The Girl From the Country (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 2—Olympic Games, Pittsburgh, Y. M. C. A. (Des.) 300
Oct. 2—The Green-Eyed Monster (Com.).. 700
Oct. 4—Cashmere (Sc.) 1000
Oct. 5—The Usurer's Grip (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 7—A Curahle Disease (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 8—Under False Colors (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.) 1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.) 1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)..1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.) 650
Oct. 16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.). 350
Oct. 16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)..... 650
Oct. 18—The Foundling (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.).. 350
Oct. 16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)..... 650
Oct. 18—The Foundling (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—Kitty at Boarding School (Com.).. 650
Oct. 21—Mother Goose in a Sixteenth Century Theatre (Com.)..... 350
Oct. 22—At the Masquerade Ball (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—At Home in the Water (Top.)..... 400
Oct. 23—The Boy Rangers (Com.)..... 600
Oct. 25—The Affair at Raynor's (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 26—Young Mrs. Eaton (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 28—The Land Beyond the Sunset (Dr.).1000
Oct. 29—Burma, Rangoon, India (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 29—Bringing Home the Pup (Com.).... 650
Oct. 30—Copper Mines at Bingham, Utah (Sc.) 400
Oct. 30—A Suffragette in Spite of Himself (Com.) 600
Nov. 1—A Bahy's Shoe (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—Bobhy's Dream (Com.)..... 375
Nov. 2—For Professional Services (Com.).. 625

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Sept. 25—The Adventure of the Button (Com. Dr.) .....
Sept. 26—A Little Louder, Please (Com.)....
Sept. 27—The Voice of Conscience (Dr.)....
Sept. 28—An Indian Sunheam (Dr.).....
Oct. 1—Ghosts (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—Well Matched (Com.).....
Oct. 3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)..
Oct. 4—Terrihle Teddy (Com.).....1000
Oct. 5—Love on Tough Luck Ranch (Com.).1000
Oct. 8—Alkali Ike Stung (Com.) 1000
Oct. 9—The Rehellion of Mandy (Com.)...1000
Oct. 10—The End of the Feud (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Not on the Circus Program (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 12—The Shotgun Ranchman (Dr.)....1000

Feet

Oct. 15—A Mistaken Calling (Com.).....
Oct. 16—The Grassville Girls (Com.) 1000
Oct. 17—The Snare (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 18—The Warning Hand (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—The Outlaw's Sarcifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Tomhoy of "Bar Z" (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 23—Bringing Father Around (Com.)....1000
Oct. 24—The Thrifty Parson (Com.).....1000
Oct. 25—Sunshine (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 26—The Ranch Girl's Trial (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—Miss Simkin's Summer Boarder (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—The Letter (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Fisherman's Luck (Com.).....1000
Nov. 1—The Moving Finger (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—The Mother of the Ranch (Dr.)....1000

LUBIN

Oct. 8—The Moonshiner's Daughter .....
Oct. 10—The Players .....
Oct. 11—Mr. Fixit (Com.) .....
Oct. 11—The German Singers (Com.).....
Oct. 12—The Cringer .....
Oct. 14—The Uprising .....
Oct. 15—Gentleman Joe .....
Oct. 17—Red Saunder's Sacrifice.....
Oct. 18—Rube's Mistake .....
Oct. 18—Meeting Mamie's Mother.....
Oct. 19—Caught Bluffing .....
Oct. 19—The Sporting Editor .....
Oct. 21—Just Maine Folks .....
Oct. 22—In the Service of the State.....
Oct. 24—The Old Chess Players.....
Oct. 25—The Noodle Industry (Ind.).....
Oct. 25—Down With the Men (Com.).....
Oct. 28—An Irish Girl's Love (Com.).....
Oct. 29—Parson James (Dr.) .....
Oct. 31—The Heavenly Voice (Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Fixing a Flirt (Com.) .....
Nov. 2—The Family Next Door (Dr.).....
Nov. 4—Juan and Juanita (Dr.).....
Nov. 5—The Substitute Heiress (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—The Sheriff's Mistake (Dr.).....
Nov. 8—Felix at the Ball (Com.).....
Nov. 8—An Accidental Millionaire (Com.)..
Nov. 9—The Water Rats (Dr.).....
Nov. 11—The Way of the Mountains (Dr.)..
Nov. 12—At the Rainhow's End (Dr.).....

G. MELIES

Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West .....
Oct. 10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—A Son's Example (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 7—The Smuggler's Prisoner (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 14—Value Received (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 21—The Governor's Clemency (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 28—Linked by Fate (Dr.) 1000
Dec. 5—The Sheriff's Pro-Tem (Dr.).....1000

PATHE FRERES

Oct. 1—A Well-Washed House .....
Oct. 1—Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm (Edu.) .....
Oct. 2—At the Burglar's Command (Com.)
Oct. 3—Theodore Roosevelt .....
Oct. 3—Experiments with Liquid Air.....
Oct. 4—A Ship Boy's Grip (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—A Redman's Loyalty (Dr.).....
Oct. 7—Pathe's Weekly No. 41.....
Oct. 8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.).....
Oct. 8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)..
Oct. 9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—His Country Before All (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Naughty Marietta (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Pathe's Weekly, No. 42.....
Oct. 15—Max Fights a Duel (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Valley of Chevreuse, France (Tr.) .....
Oct. 16—The Lass of Clauster (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Striped Bathing Suit (Com.)...
Oct. 17—Sub-marine Fauna (Oceanic) .....
Oct. 18—The Rubber Industry in Malaysia (Ind.) .....
Oct. 18—The Convertihle Auto (Trick).....
Oct. 19—Misleading Evidence (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Pathe's Weekly No. 43.....
Oct. 22—The End of Louis XI (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Old Toledo (Travel).....
Oct. 23—The Simple Life (Com.).....
Oct. 24—Little Raven's Sweetheart (Dr.)...
Oct. 25—Tom Thumh (Trick).....
Oct. 25—The Hermit Crah.....
Oct. 26—The Light That Failed (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—Olympic Games, Stockholm, Sweden, 1912 .....
Oct. 28—Pathe's Weekly, No. 44.....
Oct. 28—Frenzied Finance (Dr.).....
Oct. 29—Whiffles, Cubic Artist (Com.).....
Oct. 29—In the Tyrol—The Arlberg Valley (Travel) .....
Oct. 30—A Mamma Wanted (Com.).....
Oct. 31—Jim's Partner (W. Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Tragedy at the Court of Milan (Dr.)
Nov. 2—Wifey's Investment (Com.).....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Oct. 11—His Mother's Picture (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Redskin Raiders (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—The Combination of the Safe (Dr.).1000
Oct. 16—Paying the Board Bill (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Central Park, New York (Sc.).....
Oct. 18—The Plot that Failed (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—The Rival Engineers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—The County Fair (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Peril of the Cliffs (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Girl in the Cahoose (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—New York Puhlic School Drills and Dances (Edu.) .....
Oct. 26—Death Valley Scotty's Mine (Dr.).1000
Oct. 28—The Power of a Hymn (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—The Strange Story of Elsie Mason (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 1—Pat the Soothsayer (Com.).....
Nov. 1—The American Rhine (Sc.).....
Nov. 2—The Skinflint (Dr.).....1000

SELIG

Oct. 24—The Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Biwa Canal, and Shooting the Rapids of the Katsuragawa, Japan (Edu.) .....
Oct. 25—Getting Atmosphere (Com.).....1000
Oct. 28—A Fisherhoy's Faith (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—Jim's Vindication (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—A Heart in Rags (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 31—Her Bitter Lesson (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 1—His Wedding Eve (Com.).....1000
Nov. 4—The Voice of Warning (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 5—The Dynamiters (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—Her Education (Com.) 1000
Nov. 7—Carmen of the Isles (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 8—The Legend of the Lost Arrow (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 8—Enchanting Japan (Edu.) 1000
Nov. 11 Saved hy Fire.....1000
Nov. 12—Between Love and the Law.....1000
Nov. 13—The Lost Inheritance.....1000
Nov. 14—Old Songs and Memories.....1000
Nov. 15—Shanghaied 1000
Nov. 18—A Man Among Men.....1000
Nov. 19—The Saint and the Siwash.....1000
Nov. 20—Atala. Adapted from the French Classic of Chateauhriand.....1000
Nov. 21—The Fire-Fighter's Love.....1000
Nov. 22—Mike's Brainstorm.....1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Oct. 2—A Trip Through Belgium (Travel) 500
Oct. 2—A Foe to Race Suicide (Com.).... 500
Oct. 9—Through Derbyshire Dales (Sc.)... 300
Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)..... 700
Oct. 16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)..... 995
Oct. 16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic) 300
Oct. 23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)..... 400
Oct. 23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)... 300
Oct. 30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)..... 975
Nov. 6—The Queen of Spades (Dr.).....1007
Nov. 13—Specimens of Lizards and Frogs (Edu.) 300
Nov. 13—The Town of Cognac, France, and Its Brandy Industry (Edu.).... 400
Nov. 13—Reviewing French Troops hy Airship (Topical) 300
Nov. 20—The Masqueraders (Dr.) 1000

VITAGRAPH

Oct. 8—Scenes Along River Lee (Dr.)..... 300
Oct. 8—The Godmother (Com.) 700
Oct. 9—When Persistency and Obstinacy meet (Com.) 1000
Oct. 10—As Fate Would Have It (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Mammoth Life Savers (Com.).....1000
Oct. 11—Her Father's Hat (Com.) 1000
Oct. 12—When California Was Young (Dr.).1000
Oct. 14—Every Inch a Man (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 15—Mrs. Lirriper's Lodger (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—An Elephant on His Hands (Com.).1000
Oct. 17—Parade and Gun Drill, Ft. Hamilton (Topical) 300
Oct. 17—Father's Hot Toddy (Com.)..... 700
Oct. 18—A Mistake in Spelling (Com. Dr.).1000
Oct. 19—Bunny All at Sea (Com.).....1000
Oct. 21—Four Days a Widow (Com.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Spirit of the Range 1000
Oct. 23—An Expensive Shine and Scenes of Irish Life in Dublin 1000
Oct. 24—The Toymaker 1000
Oct. 25—Faithful Unto Death 1000
Oct. 26—Into the Furnace Fire.....1000
Oct. 28—None But the Brave Deserve the Fair 1000
Oct. 29—Bunny at the Derhy and Just Luck.1000
Oct. 30—Poet and Peasant 1000
Oct. 31—On the Line of Peril (Mil.).....1000
Nov. 1—Lessons in Courtship (Com.).....1000
Nov. 2—Bettina's Substitute (Com.).....1000
Nov. 2—In the Garden Fair (Com. Dr.)....1000
Nov. 4—His Official Appointment (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 5—The Face or the Voice (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 6—Michael McShane, Matchmaker (Com.)..... 1000
Nov. 7—Out of the Shadow (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 8—A Modern Atlanta (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 9—The Hand Bag (Com.).....1000
Nov. 9—Arahian Sports (Top.).....

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

NOTICE

Studio Managers. For sale, at an attractive figure, fifteen Aristo Lamps, five Kliegel Lamps, very similar to Aristos. All are in guaranteed working order. Very slightly used. Inspection solicited. Apply ECLAIR FILM CO., 225 W. 42nd St., New York City.

MAKE YOUR OWN MOVING PICTURE CAMERA
LET US FURNISH THE PARTS
BIGGEST SPORT IN ALL THE WORLD
100 POINTERS on big money-making stunts, repairing, operating and care of the Moving Picture Camera. Price $2.50
Let us develop your films.
Improved M. P. Machine parts Catalogue, Testimonials, etc.
LAVEZZI MACHINE WORKS, 2940 Herndon St., CHICAGO

Highest Prices Paid for SCENARIOS
WE WANT
HEADLINERS
COMEDIES Receive Special Attention
KINEMACOLOR COMPANY
1604 Broadway New York

MAKE YOUR OWN SLIDES
WITHOUT AID OF PHOTOGRAPHY
From Newspaper Cuts, Post Cards, Etc. Announcement Slides, Advertising Slides, Slides from Political Office Seekers' Cards, just the thing for elections. Slides can be made in a few minutes, plain or in colors. Where colored picture is used, colors will appear on slide same as in original. Complete outfit and directions, $1.00.
MIDLAND TRANSPARENCY CO.
313 Ramge Bldg. Dept. N Omaha, Neb.

BE UP-TO-DATE
Subscribe for the Leading Moving Picture Trade Publication
Moving Picture News

CHAUFFEUR'S COMPLETE OUTFIT SACRIFICED. Consisting elegant mink fur lined coat, Persian lamb collar, $35; pair of elegant bear robes $15 each, raccoon cap $5, pair of fur gloves $4, pair of goggles 50c., 1 pair leather leggins $3.50. Will sell separately or the lot, all new, never worn; original price $225.
G. CHASE, 118 East 28th St., New York.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL
A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.
Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST
The Cleveland Leader
Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DO YOU WANT A FILM PRODUCED?
Let us show you how.
Local Pictures made or taken.
Camera and Camera man Rented.
Motion pictures Cameras for Sale.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFG'S CO., Inc.
248 West 35th St., New York City.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING
PHOTO
ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 1817 1813 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD
YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.
J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at 101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.
THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

Have You An Idea?

Are You a Writer of Scenarios?

So many letters with crude scripts have come to us for our editor to advise upon that it takes up too much time; some of the writers enclose a dollar for advice. We have always returned script, letters and money, asking the sender to forward writings to the various manufacturers. Some have written to us complaining about their treatment at the hand of some schools of scenario writing, and requesting us to open a page for this work. This is also too much for our capacity. We have therefore made arrangements with our Miss Virginia West, whose stories appear each week, and who from her training in scenario writing and dramatic school, is fully qualified to criticise and advise, and Wm. Lord Wright, who as author of "The Art of Scenario Writing," and of the column "For those who worry o'er plots and plays," is capable of handling this branch.

The fee is One Dollar per Script.

The Moving Picture News stands pre-eminently America's leading cinematograph weekly, is read by every man in the industry, circulates in all the leading universities and colleges and is the "Vade Mecum" of the wide awake advertiser.

New subscribers to the Moving Picture News enclosing $2.00 for one year's subscription and script, with return postage, can have full criticism on one script free.

Cinematograph Publishing Co.

30 West 13th Street =:= =:= NEW YORK

PATHE CAMERA

Four Magazines, Carrying Case, Zeiss-Tessar Lens, Brand New, For Sale. Price $285.00. Will ship privilege of examination 25% down. Address A. A., 31 W. 46th St., New York City.

IF you want to keep your name and product before the Moving Picture Trade ADVERTISE in the MOVING PICTURE NEWS

FREE

Christmas Dinners

FOR

300,000 POOR PEOPLE

Will be supplied by The Salvation Army

Throughout the United States

Will you help by sending a donation, no matter how small

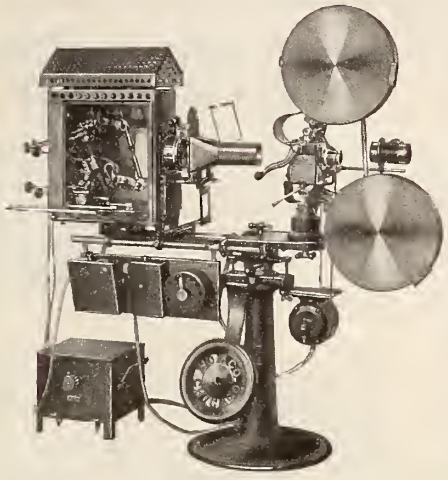
TO COMMANDER MISS BOOTH

118 W. 14th St., New York City

Western States, Comm. Estill, 669 S. State St., Chicago

The Only True Test The Test of Service

RUN TWELVE HOURS PER DAY FOR ONE YEAR WITHOUT ONE REPAIR



FALLS CITIES AMUSEMENT CO.
NOVELTY THEATRE

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 9th, 1912.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:—

One year ago today I made a statement that I could run the MOTIOGRAPH machine in the Novelty Theatre a year, without any repairs, which I think is a good record.

This I did, and they were run on an average of 12 hours every day in the year.

Yours very truly,
Ernest Carpenter.

DON'T STRAIN YOUR IMAGINATION and buy a machine only on the Advertising Value.

VALUE THAT CAN'T BE SHOWN and proven, value which is imagined, is a delusion.

YOU NEED NOT STRETCH your imagination to realize that solid steel "Gig Made" Gears will outwear a cheap "type" metal gear with a highly polished nickel-plated face.

THE GUARANTEE ON THE 1913 MODEL THE MOST LIBERAL OF ALL

YOU CAN BUY DIRECT FROM THE FACTORY OR FROM RELIABLE DEALERS EVERYWHERE

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING CO.

568 W. RANDOLPH STREET :: :: CHICAGO, ILL.

For reference as to Quality consult the following: The Vitagraph Co. of America, The Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America, The Powers Picture Plays Co., Nestor Co., Thanhouser Co., Rex, Champion, Melies, Gaumont, St. Louis Motion Picture Co., Kinemacolor Co. of America, N. Y. Motion Picture Co., Bison, Crystal Film Co., Universal Film Mfg. Co., Solax Co., Kalem Co.

Corcoran Moving Picture Tanks

Develop your films to perfection. Save Time and Reduce Your Expenses by using a "Corcoran Film Development Tank." All up-to-date houses have installed the "Corcoran System."

Send for Price List No. 5

A. J. CORCORAN, Inc.
No. 9½ JOHN ST., NEW YORK CITY

No other Trade Mark means so much to music lovers as these Columbia music notes

They are more than a commercial trade-mark—they are a symbol.

They mean music in the biggest sense of the word—every kind of music; every class of music.

They mean music for every taste. They mean music for everybody. And always they mean the best in every class.

Columbia product brings to you the music of great singers, great players, great choruses, great orchestras, just as that music is produced. Nothing is lost—the very temperament and personality of the artist are recorded. With Columbia instruments there is no limit to your home music. All the great artists who have made records, without exception, can be heard at their best on the Columbia Graphophone or Grafonola.

See our nearest dealer for new catalogues of Columbia Graphophones, Grafonolas and Columbia Double-Disc Records, or write to us direct.

COLUMBIA Phonograph Co., General

Manufacturers of the Dictaphone.

Box 221, Tribune Building, New York

Toronto: McKinnon Building. London: Earlsfield, S. W.

Wherever we are not actively represented, we are prepared to consider the granting of exclusive selling rights.

EXHIBITORS

$500,000.00 A YEAR FOR MOVING PICTURE THEATRES

GIVEN BY

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

WITH

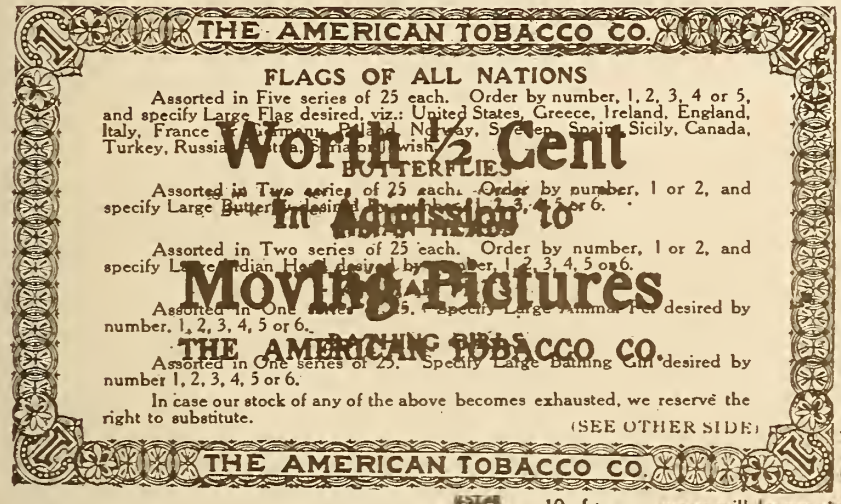
TOKIO

CIGARETTES

THIS MEANS MONEY TO YOU

WILL BRING YOU TRADE YOU HAVE NEVER HAD

Back



THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
FLAGS OF ALL NATIONS
Assorted in Five series of 25 each. Order by number, 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5, and specify Large Flag desired, viz.: United States, Greece, Ireland, England, Italy, France, Germany, Poland, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Sicily, Canada, Turkey, Russia, Austria, Servia or Jewish.
BUTTERFLIES
Assorted in Two series of 25 each. Order by number, 1 or 2, and specify Large Butterfly desired by number, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6.
INDIAN HEADS
Assorted in Two series of 25 each. Order by number, 1 or 2, and specify Large Indian Head desired by number, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6.
ANIMALS
Assorted in One series of 25. Specify Large Animal Pet desired by number, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6.
BATHING BELLES
Assorted in One series of 25. Specify Large Bathing Girl desired by number 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6.
In case our stock of any of the above becomes exhausted, we reserve the right to substitute.
(SEE OTHER SIDE)
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
Worth ½ Cent
In Admission to Moving Pictures

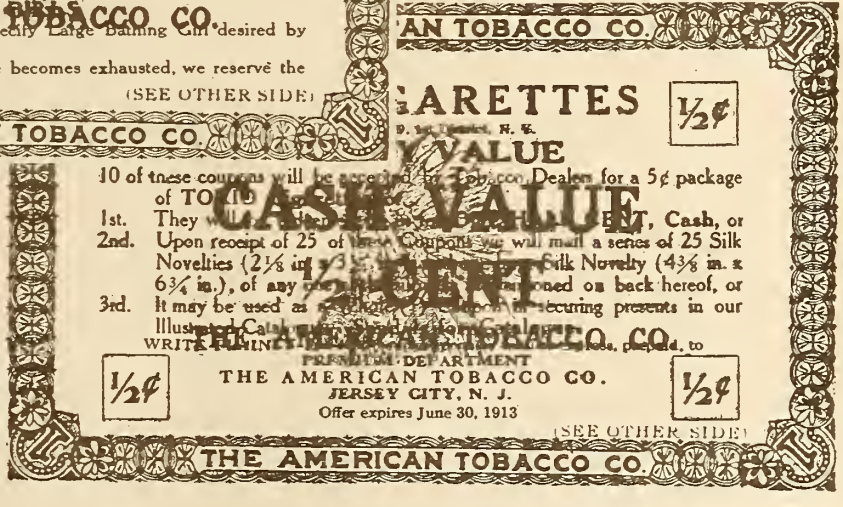
FAC-SIMILE OF THE COUPON ISSUED IN EACH PACKAGE OF TOKIO CIGARETTES.

10 ARE EQUAL TO 5 CENTS

Front



AN TOBACCO CO.
ARETTES
½¢
VALUE
10 of these coupons will be accepted by Tobacco Dealers for a 5¢ package of TOKIO
1st. They will be redeemed at Face Value in Premiums, Cash, or
2nd. Upon receipt of 25 of these Coupons we will mail a series of 25 Silk Novelties (2⅛ in. x 3⅛ in.) Silk Novelty (4⅜ in. x 6¾ in.), of any kind mentioned on back hereof, or
3rd. It may be used as a credit in securing presents in our Illustrated Catalogue.
WRITE PLAINLY. Coupons, Catalogues, etc., prepaid, to PREMIUM DEPARTMENT
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
Offer expires June 30, 1913
CASH VALUE
½¢
½¢
(SEE OTHER SIDE)
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. WILL REDEEM ANY QUANTITY OF TOKIO COUPONS AT FACE VALUE.

If you have not already heard of this, send for a circular explaining the proposition in full. Fill out the corner of this page, cut it off and forward it to

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

111 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

I am the manager of the under mentioned theatre and desire to hear of your proposition in full.

Name.....
Theatre.....
Address .....
Town ....
State.....
M. P. News

A Striking AMBROSIO Production in 3 Reels

SIEGFRIED

THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF THE PRODUCER
OF THE WORLD'S BIGGEST PRODUCTIONS

10c PER FOOT

NO RESTRICTIONS

RELEASED DEC. 15

10c PER FOOT

NO RESTRICTIONS

RELEASED DEC. 15

SPECIAL—8 SHEET, 3 SHEET, 1 SHEET POSTERS
ALSO SPECIALLY ARRANGED MUSIC
SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

AMBROSIO AMERICAN CO.

15 East 26th Street 'Phone 7876 Mad. Sq. New York City

NOV 7 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
NOV 7 1912
PERIODICAL DIVISION

VOLUME VI
No. 18

NOVEMBER 2
1912

PRICE
TEN
CENTS

"THE MIRACLE"
Feature Film of the
New York Film Co.

MAJESTIC

A STUPENDOUS TWO-REEL PRODUCTION OF

2 REEL FEATURE

"HAZEL KIRKE"

FROM THE FAMOUS BOOK BY STEELE MACKAYE

REGULAR RELEASE — SUNDAY, NOV. 17th

2 REEL FEATURE

GET THIS!

COMMENCING THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21st

A New Split-Reel Comedy Release

NOTE—THIS THIRD MAJESTIC RELEASE WILL FILL THE POPULAR DEMAND FOR MAJESTIC SHORT COMEDIES WHICH ARE BOX-OFFICE WINNERS ALL OVER THE WORLD—THEY ARE FULL OF LAUGHS AND LAUGHS GET MONEY BECAUSE EVERYBODY LOVES TO LAUGH.

LOOK!

SUNDAY "WEARY'S REVENGE" NOV. 3d

REPLETE WITH INTENSELY DRAMATIC ACTION, CLEVER COMEDY AND EXQUISITE SCENERY

The Majestic Motion Picture Co.

540 WEST 21st STREET, NEW YORK

RELIANCE
PHOTO PLAYS
UPLIFT, EDUCATE AND AMUSE
ALL CLASSES

RELIANCE.

RELIANCE
PHOTO PLAYS
DEPICT HUMAN NATURE IN PANTOMIME

The Trials of Faith

A MASTERPIECE IN 1000 FEET

RELEASE SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2

A STIRRING STORY OF EARLY NEW ENGLAND
LOVE, INTRIGUE AND WITCHCRAFT
HOW FRIENDSHIP TO A REDSKIN IS REPAID AT A PSYCHOLOGICAL MOMENT

DRAMA

A Brother's Requital

BROTHERLY TENDERNESS AND SELF-SACRIFICE SUPERBLY ACTED.

Release Wed., Nov. 6

A TWO REEL FEATURE EVERY OTHER WEDNESDAY

COMEDY

Bedelia and the Newly Weds

CORKING CONVULSIVE COMEDY. EVERY FOOT A LAUGH.

Release Sat., Nov. 9

DON'T MISS THIS { Don Caesar de Bazan IN TWO REELS

The Faith Healer

A DRAMA THAT WILL APPEAL TO EVERY SERIOUS MINDED PERSON.

Release Wed., Nov. 13

SPECIAL 3 AND 1 SHEET POSTERS FOR ALL OUR TWO REEL FEATURES

The Virgin of the Fire

THRILLING AND ARTISTICALLY SENSATIONAL.

WILL CREATE A NEW ERA IN CINEMATOGRAPHY.

Release Sat., Nov. 16

RELIANCE STUDIOS 540 West 21st Street NEW YORK

A Striking AMBROSIO Production in 3 Reels

SIEGFRIED

THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF THE PRODUCER
OF THE WORLD'S BIGGEST PRODUCTIONS

10c PER FOOT

NO RESTRICTIONS

RELEASED DEC. 15

10c PER FOOT

NO RESTRICTIONS

RELEASED DEC. 15

SPECIAL—8 SHEET, 3 SHEET, 1 SHEET POSTERS
ALSO SPECIALLY ARRANGED MUSIC
SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

AMBROSIO AMERICAN CO.

15 East 26th Street 'Phone 7876 Mad. Sq. New York City

KAY-BEE FILMS

"When Lee Surrenders"

Two Reels. RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8

Thrilling story of the Civil War. Wonderful Battles. $2000 worth of powder burned on this film.

Coming! "The Invaders" Coming!

Three Reels. RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29

Produced by the same Company, horses, actors, soldiers, Indians, paraphernalia and equipment, and directed by the same man—Thos. H. Ince—as

"Custer's Last Fight"

but on a bigger, grander and more colossal scale. A marvelous film.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO., 150 East 14th Street, New York City

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., New York, Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND

Supported by a Strong Company

FORD STERLING
FRED MACE

"The Deacon's Troubles" and "A Temperamental Husband"

A Split Reel. RELEASED MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY

150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"Mary of the Mines"

One Reel. RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

LETTERS OF SELF-MADE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

United States,
Nov. 2, 1912.

Film Supply Co. of America,
133 W. 44th St., New York City.

Gentlemen:—Pleasing one's audience is profitable and costs no more. It is merely a matter of recognizing and ordering pictures of quality. But I should worry if my competitors lose business by neglecting to get Gaumont Films? Enter my order for The Gaumont Weekly, and the following:

Saturday, November 9th—THE LAND O' COTTON and Topical
Tuesday, November 12th—AN ADVENTUROUS ADOPTION
Thursday, November 14th—THE PRICE OF PARADISE
Saturday, November 16th—ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS AT CINCINNATI and TOPICAL
Tuesday, November 19th—A BROKEN IDOL and BATTLE PRACTICE ON A CRUISER
Thursday, November 21st—OLGA THE ADVENTURESS

Knowingly yours,
THE DISCERNING EXHIBITOR

EXTRAORDINARY SENSATIONAL FEATURE FILM

Dr. GAR-EL-HAMA

3 REELS THE DAREDEVIL CRIMINAL 3 REELS

SEQUEL TO "THE DEAD MAN'S CHILD"

A FEATURE FILM IN EVERY SENSE OF THE WORD. A concentration of successful, sensational and startling events never before attempted. EVERY INCH A THRILL. The intensely interesting plot, the faultless photography which characterizes all our productions, and the perfect and realistic acting of the participants in this drama, all combine to insure for it an enthusiastic reception unprecedented in the annals of the Great Northern Film Company.

ELABORATE 6-SHEET, 3-SHEET AND 1-SHEET LITHOGRAPHS, HIGH-CLASS LOBBY DISPLAY PHOTOGRAPHS, DESCRIPTIVE BOOKLETS, ETC.

Territorial Rights now selling at attractive prices. Be quick to seize this opportunity of securing a real feature that will be the talk of the trade. First come first served. Our films are copyrighted. Infringements will be vigorously prosecuted.

Great Northern Film Co., 7 EAST 14th STREET NEW YORK CITY

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

CLB260075

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI November 2, 1912 Number 18

SCHOOLS?

In the issue of October 12th I wrote on "Schools." In that article I meant every word I said, and after carefully perusing it, there is not a single word I will take back; but just to show I am not at all prejudiced or biased, I am publishing herewith a letter in answer to that editorial:

"The first article my eyes fell on was that of Alfred H. Saunders, in which he writes so scathingly of 'Schools.' Why generalize, and class the good with the bad, making them suffer alike?

"I want to tell you, and any one else who has such distorted notions, that all of the scenario schools are not what you picture them. I count the school whose course of instruction in picture play writing I took up as one of my best friends, and instead of feeling that I was 'held up' for the $10 I paid as a fee, I would not wish it back if I had paid twice the amount. On the other hand, I do not consider myself one of the 'easy marks,' not being as a rule very easily separated from my money. Without bragging about myself, I feel that I have been comparatively successful in the business world, and have a sufficient idea of the value of money not to part with it unless I have some reason to think that I will get full value.

"I had written several picture plays, submitted them, and they always came back, with a curt rejection slip, giving no definite idea as to what was wrong with them. I had good reason to believe that they were a great deal better than many plays which had been produced, and so I would not give up. I read the advertisement of the school in question, sent for their literature, and became a student of their course. It must have been very beneficial to me, for since completing it, every one of the rejected scenarios has found a sale, and some by the very companies who had refused them previously.

"In no instance did this school make any promise that they did not live up to, which lets them out on your 'false pretences' statement. Moreover, they constantly encouraged and assisted me, even going so far as to suggest changes in my plots that would enable me to work them out so that they would stand a better chance for acceptance. They certainly taught me the form, and gave me a keener insight into what to write, and what to avoid, and what success I have had, I feel that I owe to their teaching entirely, for though my ideas were good, they did not bring me checks.

"One of your contemporaries openly, frankly and honestly states that the Scenario School is bound to be of benefit to the amateur, because it teaches him the construction of the picture play, although he does criticise some schools who turn out unfinished pupils, yet tell them their work will be salable. His first statement is at least fair to the honest schools, and his criticism may be ungrounded, for who knows whether any school sets its stamp of approval on the work of a student or not?

"As to the 'gullible public'—well there will always be the gullible ones,—whether they are buying a correspondence course or a gold mine, and if they did not send their money to the scenario schools, they would be sending it somewhere else, trying to get something for nothing—and then crying about it. The schools must advertise, like any other business enterprise, if they would prosper; they can not pick and choose their students, any more than any other school or college. Did it ever occur to your Mr. Saunders, that the so-called legitimate schools and colleges will enroll any student who makes application. Does he think they take into consideration whether the would-be student has any special talent for stenography, bookkeeping, or any other branch? When I was studying shorthand there were in my class pupils whom I knew would never make stenographers; without the first idea of correct English, grammar or spelling. Yet a very highly reputed college would turn them out as graduates who would never be able to hold a position as stenographer, and would finally revert to the 'Typist' class—where they could have gone in the first place without taking any course.

"Naturally I am interested in the moving picture play, and all that pertains to it, and so I read everything on the subject that comes to hand; but I fail to see where a magazine which comes out and gives the first page to such a biased opinion (whether because of ignorance of the subject or otherwise) as your October 12th issue contains. Give advice to the layman if advice you must give, but 'be sure you are right—then go ahead.'"

After reading the above, my readers will please take particular note of my correspondent's remarks, especially that portion where he says I have given "a biased opinion (whether because of ignorance or otherwise) as your October 12th issue contains. Give advice to the layman if advice you must give, but 'be sure you are right—then go ahead." I think I can follow this as the crux of the argument. I am not biased, nor am I ignorant, otherwise I would not have written as I did, and will say this, that in all my experience of the Cinematograph industry I have never met with such a lot of bold-faced easy money-getters as appear at the present day; and the dupes are many. It is these dupes I am trying to save. It is a great pity my correspondent did not give the names of the schools he considers honest, and if he will give me the list I will gladly publish them, so that none of my readers may be deceived; it was only because "I was right,—and knew I was right,—that I went ahead," but taking at random from the list of my correspondence I will revert to another letter in which my correspondent says:

> "I wish I were a philanthropic millionaire; I would endow a film concern who should consult with the Board of Education, and build according to their needs; then we should indeed have the moving picture machine installed in every schoolroom. However, I am taking too much of your time. Let me, however, thank you for your editorial on 'Schools.' I know several who have been trapped. I was not myself because I read the synopsis, and saw a sample scenario published in your paper. I saw that after all there is only a certain scheme, and important as it is, nothing more. And as you say, an illiterate person could not catch that scheme, however long he might strive. I am sending your editorial to a splendidly honest West Indian in Brooklyn, who was about to take an operator's course by mail. Thank you for saving his hard-earned money.

I would very much sooner take the opinion of my latter correspondent than I would of the former, and yet both bear the honest stamp.

The subject of "schools" is one that I would like to see aired, all the good brought to the front, and the bad eliminated, especially such actors, schools and agencies as I referred to in the editorial. I believe this, that by careful reading of the synopses published in our columns every week, and watching the pictures, any one with intelligence will be able to write a scenario round his or her own ideas. It is not every one who can make a scenario writer, as witness the number of rejections that take place every day. I was in a studio this past week and saw come in by the mail between 150 and 200 scenarios, and the previous week's rejections amounted to something like 400 unsuitable subjects; a general consensus of opinion seems to show that only about 5 per cent or at the outside 6 per cent of the submitted scripts are accepted. It is only the most intelligent of the writers who have any chance in the field.

While on this point let me particularly point out that only those scenarios which are typewritten are read, and the numberless hand-written ones go back without comment.

Alfred H. Saunders.

A NEW MOVE BY A WESTERN HUSTLER

We take pleasure in announcing the opening of a general Eastern sales, distributing and repairs branch for the Motiograph machines in New York City. The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company have leased a loft at 30 East Twenty-third street, and will commence business November 1, 1912.

The establishing of this Eastern branch, including a fully equipped repair shop is in line with the hustling policy of the Motiograph makers in extending repair facilities in the Eastern and New England States.

It is the purpose of the Motiograph makers to carry a full and complete line of machines, mechanisms and all repair parts in New York stock, and as soon as the demand justifies, a competent repair man will be sent from the factory in Chicago.

The appointment of Fred A. Clark to the position of manager of the Eastern office is in recognition of his services in the territory to be cared for by his office.

We are asked to extend a cordial invitation to all to pay a visit to the Eastern office of this well-known machine, where their latest product, the 1913 Model Motiograph, will be demonstrated, beginning with their opening on Nov. 1, 1912.

Mr. Woodward, vice-president and general manager of the factory, is spending two or three weeks in the East, with headquarters at the Imperial Hotel, New York City.

SCREEN CLUB

Meetings of the board of governors of the Screen Club were called recently by President King Baggot. Reports from several committees were heard.

President Baggot appointed the following standing committees:

Membership—King Baggot, chairman; John Bunny, Calder Johnstone, Harry R. Raver, C. A. Willat, Herbert Brenon and C. Jay Williams.

House—John Bunny, chairman; Harry R. Raver, C. A. Willat, J. H. Gerhardt, James Kirkwood and Hopp Hadley.

Auditing—J. H. Gerhardt, chairman; Joe Miles and Charles M. Seay.

Ways and Means—John Bunny, chairman; Calder Johnstone, Harry R. Raver, C. A. Willat, Herbert Brenon, Oscar Apfel.

Relief—Tefft Johnson, chairman; Henry Walthall, William Steiner, Charles Handworth and Hal Wilson.

Entertainment—Victor Smith, chairman; George Terwilliger, Harry R. Raver, Pierce Kingsley, J. H. Gerhardt, Darwin Karr, Maurice Costello, Calder Johnstone, C. Jay Williams, William Robert Daly, Arthur Johnson, G. F. Blaisdell, Bert Adler, P. Thad Volkmann, T. Hays Hunter, William Garwood, Charles Abrams, Alfred H. Saunders, C. A. Willat, Hopp Hadley and William Quirk.

Press—Calder Johnstone, chairman; G. F. Blaisdell, S. Spedon.

Educational—C. Jay Williams, Carl A. Laemmle and Herbert Blache.

Arts, Literature and Records—Eustis H. Ball, chairman; John Bunny, S. M. Spedon, Calder Johnstone, C. A. Willat and Harry R. Raver.

Saturday, October 26, a meeting of the club was held at Bryant Hall, where reports of officers were received. The treasurer reported most favorably regarding the finances of the club, which now show four figures. The report was made by J. H. Gerhardt, acting as treasurer in the absence of C. A. Willat, who is now at Los Angeles on business.

The corresponding secretary, Calder Johnstone, read many letters from all over the country, in which were expression of the highest approval of what the officers and the board of governors have accomplished. Mr. Johnstone also reported a membership of more than 200 in good standing, and stated that reports from the coast were most favorable for the establishing of a branch of the Screen Club in that vicinity. He stated that many letters had been received from players, directors and others in California, all of whom either made application to join or sent their entrance fee and first six months' dues as proof of their intentions.

Harry R. Raver read the minutes of the last meeting, which were duly accepted and gave a pleasing report of the club's progress as viewed by the recording secretary.

The most interesting report of all was that made by President Baggot regarding the club's first home. Mr. Baggot stated that the home was almost ready for occupany, the decorations being finished and the carpets laid. The furniture will be moved in and members may enter the home October 31. He said no one could appreciate the amount of work that had been done by those who have accomplished this.

Fewer than eight weeks have passed since the club was started. More than two hundred have been enrolled. The club has been duly incorporated and chartered. It has selected and furnished its home, and has raised enough funds to pay its current and outlaying expenses with enough left to keep it going for nearly a year and without a dollar's indebtedness, which is not covered by funds in bank.

GAUMONT BALKAN WAR PICTURES

The Gaumont Company, appreciating the possibilities of the conflict raging in the Balkans between Turkey and the Allies becoming strife involving all Europe, have camera men with both the Ottoman forces and the attacking armies. With all expedition this film will be hurried to America, and will be given prominence in the Gaumont Weekly current event film and the Saturday "Great Events" film. The courage of the Gaumont operators is almost proverbial, and it is assured that the pictures taken of these sanguinary scenes will be vivid and stirring.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

The Cincinnati municipal pictures that were taken by the Animated Weekly and the Gaumont Weekly, are being shown to packed houses at the Olympic Theatre every afternoon and night. Over four thousand feet of film of the scenes of activity of Cincinnati and the Zoological Garden will be shown at the Olympic Theatre for two weeks. The Olympic Theatre is located on Seventh street between Walnut and Main; seats 1,400. Mr. Neff has rented the Olympic Theatre for two weeks to show the Cincinnati pictures.

The municipal pictures are pronounced to be the finest and most perfect municipal pictures ever taken, and the municipality of Cincinnati is greatly pleased with them. The pictures were taken under the direction of Mr. M. A. Neff by Mr. C. M. Peters, camera man representing the Gaumont Weekly, and Mr. Freeman Owens, camera man representing the Animated Weekly.

President Neff has issued an official call for a state meeting of the exhibitors of Massachusetts to be held in the City of Boston on the 18th of November, 1912. The exhibitors of Massachusetts are enthusiastic and realize the importance of effecting a state organization at an early date. The benefits to be derived from a state organization are apparent to all motion picture exhibitors who have given the matter consideration. The Massachusetts convention will be a grand success as the exhibitors are thoroughly aroused, and feel that they must organize to protect their interests. An invitation is extended to every exhibitor in the state of Massachusetts, and other New England states will be welcome. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is growing rapidly, new states are coming in, and arrangements are being made to organize every state in the Union in the near future. A national vice-president, a state president, a state vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and treasurer will be elected at the Boston convention.

Greetings to the Exhibitors of the State of Massachusetts

A state convention of the motion picture exhibitors of the State of Massachusetts is called to meet in Boston on the 18th day of November. Every exhibitor in the state is not only invited, but urged to attend the convention. The convention is called for the purpose of organizing a state league, which will be affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Greetings to the Exhibitors of the State of Iowa

The officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of Iowa have called a meeting to meet in Des Moines on the 3d and 4th of December. 1912. The call has the endorsement of the national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The motion picture exhibitors of Iowa are not only invited to attend the Des Moines convention but are urged to attend it. The convention is held for the purpose of completing a thorough organization, and every exhibitor in the state is invited. A program will be published later.

Greetings to the Exhibitors of the State of Nebraska

A state convention of the motion picture exhibitors of the State of Nebraska is called to meet in Omaha on the 5th and 6th of December. Every exhibitor in the state is not only invited, but urged to attend the convention. The convention is called for the purpose of organizing a state league which will be affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

A meeting of the motion picture exhibitors of the State of West Virginia will be held on the 17th and 18th of December at Huntington, W. Va. There will be big doings and much important business transacted Many prominent exhibitors throughout the country will attend this gathering. The meeting is called by M. M. Wear, state president, and L. R. Thomas, state secretary. There will probably be a new treasurer and first vice-president elected at this convention. President Neff will attend the convention.

J. PARKER READ RETURNS FROM WEST

J. Parker Read, Jr., has returned from a successful trip to the West, where he closed several more contracts for "The Garden of Allah." Mr. Read also brought with his some interesting Western films, and is at present in Washington, D. C., arranging for another big production.

SPLENDID EXHIBITION OF GREAT NORTHERN FEATURES

An exhibition of Great Northern feature films which astounded press representatives and other interested ones, was given at the projection rooms of the Film Supply Co. on Wednesday afternoon. Four different subjects, each two thousand feet in length, were shown of exceptional commercial value—subjects that money has been expended upon in order to produce the finest results. These will be reviewed individually in later issues as their release dates come due.

BIG BUSINESS AHEAD FOR "LIFE OF JOHN BUNYAN" AND "PILGRIM'S PROGRESS"

It was our intention to reproduce in this issue for the benefit of our readers several scenes from the film production of "The Life of John Bunyan" and "Pilgrim's Progress," as produced by the Hochstetter Utility Company, 40 East Twelfth street, and which would serve to convey some idea of the remarkable artistic touch given to every inch of the film by the director, Francis Powers, and his able support in a company of competent players. Owing to lack of space, however, we were obliged to delay the appearance until our next issue.

Among those who took part in the production there was not one who was not a tried artist, from Oland Warner, the talented Swedish artist, who played the lead in both portions of the productions, down.

Although thus far the film has been exhibited only for the press, contracts for it have already been closed. The Hochstetter Utility Company have been especially fortunate in securing the services of William Calhoun, formerly of Kinemacolor, as their contracting agent. Mr. Calhoun is a man of large experience in the show business, both as manager and actor. Being thoroughly conversant with the dramatic end of the business, and also possessing adequate knowledge of the chemical and mechanical portion of the film business, he is in a position to know whereof he speaks, therefore his commendation of the Bunyan film should carry with it the truth of his convictions.

It is a remarkable thing in connection with the Hochstetter camera that pictures taken in the twilight or even in the rain are quite as satisfactory as those taken in the sunlight or high lights of the studio. It is a fact that one of the most remarkable scenes in the "Pilgrim's Progress," depicting the Man of Despair, was taken on a rainy day. Other scenes of the picture play have been taken at twilight.

"The Life of John Bunyan" and "Pilgrim's Progress" in its fine interesting reels is of such a remarkable combination of dramatic action and religious atmosphere that it adapts itself to church and theatre alike. Therefore there can be no question of its success as a film production.

EXHIBITORS SUE TO RECOVER LICENSE FEES

M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, announces that Attorney General Hogan will file at Columbus a suit to recover from two film concerns all the money paid by Independent moving picture show proprietors within the last four years.

There are 600 members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in Ohio. A suit has been filed against the alleged moving picture trust in Texas and a receiver appointed at Austin, Tex. The moving picture owners want back the $2 a week license fee each of them has paid during the four years to manufacturers of films.

Neff asserts that similar suits will be filed in many States in the next few days in a national war on the larger motion picture interests who have, in the past, levied a weekly license fee of $2 on the Independents.

Marriage Bells

"Ring a ding, ding, ding." Is this the way they go? I sincerely hope that the best of chimes rang out, when my good friend Bernard Michael Corbett, of the Kinetograph Sales Department, Thomas A. Edison, Inc, was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Miss Emma Violet Chapman, of Boston, Mass, on Wednesday, October 30, 1912. I send the happy pair my heartiest good wishes.

Bloomington, Ill.—C. B Burkhardt will convert the old Opera House at Homer into a modern playhouse.

THE STRENGH OF THE INDUSTRY

By Lindsay Bancroft

The moving picture industry has outlived the longest term allotted to it by the pessimistic prophets of ten years ago.

As has been remarked by the editor of the News, even among the film manufacturers there has been great surprise at the continual growth of the popularity of the picture play.

Just why cinematography is here to stay would be answered in a dozen ways by a dozen people: but there is one phase of the present condition of the industry that is often overlooked. It is the number of industries

Affected or Created by the motion picture.

The fact that nearly all the raw film is supplied by two or three firms in this country does not alter the significant fact that over ten million feet of film per week used in the United States alone is a considerable item in the business of celluloid making. So far-reaching is the insistent, important and regular demand that even the production of gun cotton itself has felt the wave of prosperity.

In a lesser degree, but still distinctly traceable, the chemical industry has had to increase the production of the silver base, the gelatin, and the coal tar products used in various departments of the modern wonder business.

There is not a branch of the printer's art that does not receive its quota from the success of cinematography.

At least two big firms devote almost their entire plant to the production of lithographic posters that describe (however vaguely or extravagantly) the moving picture play.

Half tones by thousands are used and cast aside: the "chalk-man" of the daily paper has found a fillip to his waning importance, and weird and wonderful are the linear adornments of the whole page film notices when he is through with them.

An Eastern novelty firm of national repute has placed two men on the road to visit only moving picture theatres, to sell premiums, souvenirs etc., for the delection of

His Majesty the American Citizen

The express companies certainly "get theirs"—more's the pity. I once started to figure out the amount paid in express-age for films alone in one week, but gave up the task and defeated myself at a game of chess as a more profitable recreation (to me).

The wages paid to employes of a theatre are a mysteriously varying quantity, yet in the aggregate they are so important that a certain mail-order firm is now compiling a list of theatre employes, and preparing a "money-getting" circular with which to separate them from some of their earnings.

The building trades have directly benefited by the erection of several thousand new structures. When a capitalist or property owner decides on erecting a new theatre, he now puts up a modern, class A structure of attractive appearance, and the adjacent property must perforce be improved to keep pace with it.

Realty men who have business property to sell or lease, now use the allurement, where possible,

"Close to Moving Picture Theatre"

I call to mind a case in a Pacific Coast city where in the last three and one-half years the erection of two picture houses has helped boost the property between them from

$110 to $275 a Front Foot

This is different from the days when nearness to the nickelodeon was a detriment to a store.

One of the strangest—and yet perhaps most natural—effects of the motion picture is its Influence on Architecture

I do not refer in any way to the decorative schemes of theatre fronts and the like, but to the building of modern American homes.

Out here in California, where the rigors of winter are a joke, it is possible to build an all-the-year-round bungalow of a few boards and shingles, then call in Nature to do the outside embellishment and run a riot of color over the whole.

Here may be seen some of the most wonderful, and some of the craziest ideas of the budding architect carried into effect. But as surely as repeated impressions will form a clear and definite concept in the mind, the showing of has had its effect on architectural design. In the authentic views of some of the Old World cities, the permanent picture records of the massive building of other days, the angles and escarpments of castle, chalet or cathedral; the black oak beams and white plaster of the English home of the Elizabethan period, the perspective value of winding pathway and rock built terrace; in all these things, presented to him again and again with the added interest of living motion, the student of architecture has before him lessons it would take him years to acquire by travel.

Foreign Films

The consequence is that one sees less of that wanton vandalism that attempts to blend the severity of a Tudor design with the cheap and tawdry mill work of the "clar bo'd" variety.

The electrical trades have benefitted greatly, both directly and indirectly, from the motion picture. Not only are the theatres good customers of the power companies, but in the more important branch of electrical fittings the moving picture theatre is an important item to the local firm.

The evolution of that fearful device, the hand organ, and its final metamorphosis into the is the direct result of the modern American demand for a glorified sort of noise maker.

Electric Orchestra

The improvement in these instruments in the last few years is little short of marvelous.

A few days ago I visited the factory of the American Photoplayer Co.

at Berkeley, Cal.

The prejudice of a real music lover against all forms of mechanically produced music, added to a deep-rooted and permanent abhorrence of rag time was mine in great degree and I entered the place ready to kick at anything and everything.

But how little we know of the other fellow's game! Instead of the blatant bellowing of brass bugles, there was absolute silence, save for the distant whirring sound of a band saw: The erection floor held some of the most exquisite pieces of woodwork in the form of cabinets and cases for the various instruments I had ever seen, and in one corner the workmen were engaged putting in place the last pieces of a $10,000 creation.

It was this instrument, representing the last word in electro-mechano-musical achievement, that I was to hear at its first trial.

The operator seated himself on the organ stool, and started the roll. No sound came from the motor, and so perfectly did the interior mechanism work, that when the opening strains of a Tannhauser overture were played on the open diapasons and flutes somewhere in the inside of the cabinet the mechanism was forgotten.

Through all the varying "tempo" and expression the ear revelled in the classic music that has never been surpassed. A Spanish bolero followed, and never did Castilian maiden wield so cleverly the castanets as this all but thinking instrument accentuated the rhythm. Much more there was, but this is not the place to dwell on it.

The point I wish to make is—everything is possible, even mechanical music better than the hand variety—when cinematography so decrees.

And what has placed this power at the bidding of this, the world's newest industry?

Simply the one important fact that the success of the moving picture industry and its permanence are founded on and bulwarked by

The Dimes of Democracy

It is the PEOPLE'S happiness that is concerned: it is the PEOPLE's pockets that willingly pay the piper; and in the final analysis, notwithstanding all the "patent companies," all the bickerings and strife among the producers, all the extravagant laudings of individual films,

The People Will Say

what shall and shall not be; for herein lies a concerted force more mighty than the most effective political machine ever devised.

In a near issue I will treat of the political significance of the picture.

Pasadena, Cal.—A moving picture house will be opened up in the Strifler Building.

Aurora, Ill.—William Morse will reopen the old Star Theatre in the Hunt Block in East Main street.

Muskegon, Mich.—Harry L. Johnson Antigo Wis. has purchased the Princess Theatre and will remodel same.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT FILM MERITS

VITAGRAPH

"Bunny at the Derby" is full of "Bunny" smiles and frowns, and "every little movement" of the comedy favorite "Bunny" delights the audience. It is Bunny taking a young woman to the Derby. The young woman had lamented the fact that she had no fine clothes to go with, so Bunny proceeds to buy her some, gets a donkey carriage and so the two do the Derby. Tired out after a strenuous day they are seen on the home stretch, heads together, fast asleep, nid-nodding behind the donkey, who straggles along at his own gait.

"Just Luck" stars Henry T. Morey in a most convincing manner as to his ability as a comedian of the best type. "Henry" of the story buys an accident policy with his last ten dollars, but is particularly unfortunate in bringing about a situation whereby he may derive some benefit from it; street cars, automobiles and all destruction dealing conveyances stop short the moment they see Henry in their path. However, after handing in his policy in disgust, the first thing he does is to fall down stairs and break his leg. The film is bubbling with mirth all through.

"An Expensive Shine" is particularly pleasing as a comedy. Miss Flora Finch, the well-known Vitagraph comedienne, is the "scream" of the piece, and delights the audience in her impersonation of the heiress who puts her beautiful jewelled necklace in the toe of her shoes, which accidentally gets put out for a shine without her knowledge. The entire incidental performance is exceedingly funny.

AMERICAN

"God's Unfortunate" is a triumph for Pauline Bush. Her work in this particular film is worthy of the highest praise. It is the story of a girl trying to escape from the old life. She wanders out in God's green fields and meets with the simple country folk who make her welcome. She falls in love with the hero of the story, but the shadow of the old life tracking her even then, she is about to give up her love and move on, when the bad man in the question is killed, and then all goes well. The dramatic work and the simplicity of the atmosphere is very satisfying.

"Maiden and Men" is a strong psychological study—a film with a strong moral lesson for any young woman. It is the story of a young girl, who, enamoured of the life she reads of in cheap novels, leaves her aged father and tastes of the bitterness of its reality, and of her return to him a better and a wiser girl.

KEYSTONE

"Mabel's Lovers" is very funny even though it may savor of too much foolishness. Nevertheless it will create many a laugh.

MAJESTIC

"A Woman Alone," another of Mabel Trunelle's triumphs. It is the story of a woman who has married unfortunately, and her struggles to keep even with the race, and her final happy union with a man who is a man.

LUX

"Oh! My Pipe" is a rather remarkable bit of farce-comedy. Some remarkable photographic tricks have been brought into play in this film, and it does appear the most wonderful thing how Smithson does get his new clay pipe home in safety. And it is indeed comically sad to see the destruction of the pipe after it is safely landed within the fold.

"Henpecked's Bid for Freedom," on the same reel, is another farce-comedy. It, however, is not in the race with the former.

GEM

"The Old Doll Maker" is one of the most touching and most artistic of the modern regular releases. The story is the same old one of a forbidden love and an elopement, of poverty afterward, and a return to the old father, and of his sacrifice. It is a delight in production and in photography.

KALEM

"The Power of a Hymn" has a touch of the old home sentiment. It is the story of two boys left motherless. They are adopted by a kind-hearted old judge. However, in spite of the gentle training, one of them goes on the downward track, runs away from home and becomes a criminal. In after years when the old judge has died and the eldest of the two boys has taken his place the recreant brother is brought for trial before him. Not having seen one another since boyhood, they do not recognize each other, and so it is that brother sentences brother to a term in prison. The convict at last released determines to avenge himself on the judge, but as he is about to perpetrate another crime he hears his brother playing the old hymn that their mother taught them both. There is a reunion and all is well.

SELIG

"The Peril of the Cliffs" is a drama excellently worked out, full of tense situations, beautiful scenic bits, and altogether satisfactory as an entertainer.

ESSANAY

"The Thrifty Parson" is one of the prettiest and smoothest of comedies. The "thrifty parson" is accused of diminishing the woodpile of a neighbor, and is therefore asked by his congregation to resign. This incident, however, brings about a little romance for the parson, for one of the female members volunteers to watch the woodpile with him for one night to catch the thief, who proves to be a negro, and therefrom the wedding ceremony which takes place soon afterward.

"Miss Simkins' Summer Boarder" is a scream. It is just as funny as can be. It is just good, clean comedy.

SOLAX

"Making an American Citizen" is a film that is of use. It is good in every sense of the word. It is the story of a foreigner who came to America with his young wife, expecting her to do the work of gaining a livelihood while he sat idle. He abuses her shamefully, but the American man eventually hammers him into shape, teaching him a lesson or two which he does not easily forget. A good moral atmosphere is kept topmost the entire length of the film. This is without a doubt the best of recent Solax productions, and is a credit to the trade as well as to the Solax Company.

"At the Phone" is a thriller. It is a burglar story which is not offensive, but, on the contrary, is most satisfactory in detail.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTES

A European business man informs an American consular officer that he desires to enter into business relations with the leading American manufacturers of cinematograph films. Correspondence with the inquirer should be in French.

* * * *

Hiram Abrams, of the Hiram Abrams Film Exchange, Portland, Maine, was one of the 400 who received invitations to attend the special entertainment tendered President Taft at the Dreamland Theatre, Beverly, Mass., on Monday afternoon. The invitation was received from Arthur Edward Kilham, secretary to President Taft.

* * * *

The annual dinner of the Lubin Baseball Club was given at the Majestic Hotel, Philadelphia, on Thursday, October 17th. Nearly 100 plates were in order and the banquet was a most successful function. Siegmund Lubin and Ira Lowry and all of the heads of departments were present. The menu furnished by the hotel was excellent and appropriate speeches were in order. After the Cafe Noir, a very talented vaudeville and picture show was given on the stage, all of the performers being members of the Lubin Stock Companies and many of the numbers being new and arranged especially for the occasion. The management of the affair was under the direction of William Kerry and Joseph Smiley, who are entitled to thanks for the perfect and picturesque arrangements.

* * * *

Mr. William Duncan, leading man and producer of the Selig Colorado Company, who was seriously injured during the production of a recent Western picture in which he was accidentally shot in the chest, has so far recovered from his painful wounds that his doctors have finally allowed him to resume his duties with the company and he will start upon the production of a new picture next Monday.

* * * *

Through the courtesy of the Selig Polyscope Co. Mr. Hobart Bosworth, one of Selig's most popular leading men, will appear in the production of Austin Adams' great play "The Landslide," which will be presented at the Lyceum Theatre in Los Angeles next week. Supporting Mr. Bosworth will be Lucretia Del Valle, Norval MacGregor, Laura Oakley, Louis Morrison, Elizabeth DeWitt and others. Later the play will be taken East for production.

* * * *

Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co., has left for a business trip to the Coast. He will stop at Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. At Santa Barbara, where are located the Western studios of the company, he will arrange for a new series of pictures.

* * * *

The famous home of the De La Guerras', built in 1828 by Don Jose de la Guerra y Noriega in Santa Barbara, Cal., is being used in the American Film Co.'s release entitled "Her Own Country."

* * * *

The offer of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Player Film Co., to pay $50,000 for the exclusive picture rights of the big English melodrama "The Whip," which comes from Drury Lane, London, to the Manhattan Opera House shortly after election, is said to be the most acceptable bid filed and probably will receive favorable consideration.

"The Whip" is considered especially desirable for motion picture purposes because of the incessant action that runs through it and the numerous sensational incidents such as the automobile smash up, the railroad collision, the horse race, etc. The pictures will be taken at a series of dress rehearsals before the American premiere and will be "released" for presentation after its New York run.

* * * *

Albert W. Hale, director with the Thanhouser Company, has left that concern to take up the same line of work with the Majestic Company. Mr. Hale was responsible for such notable Thanhouser productions as "Letters of a Lifetime" and "The Birth of the Lotus Blossom," and takes with him the best wishes of Mr. Thanhouser, Mr. Hite and the entire Thanhouser organization.

* * * *

Chas. H. Weston, late of the "Bison 101," is putting on clever 500-foot comedies for the Majestic. Mr. Weston was with Maude Adams for five years and staged "The Show Girl" in Australia for J. C. Williamson.

* * * *

It is said that the finest success William J. Bauman has had in moving pictures is exhibited in "The Starbucks," which has been produced under his direction for the American Film Co., with Opie Read, the author of the story, in the leading role.

Opie Read is well described in the following paragraph:

"One of the most versatile men of to-day—lecturer, dramatist, novelist, author, philosopher, humorist, actor—a most pleasing mixture of man—about fifty years of age—six feet three inches tall and two hundred and fifty pounds in weight—a genius of herculean proportions, both mentally and physically. He is a Tennessean by birth, a North Carolinian by heredity, a Kentuckian by education. He would not comb his hair or brush his clothes, nor make an extra bow even if he were to speak before the King of England. In Arkansas Mr. Read was editor of the Arkansas Traveler, one of the famous papers when Bill Nye and others of his class were at their best. His experiences have been many and of a varied nature and his previous successes presage for him a grand climax before the moving picture camera."

"THE ACCESSION OF DALY'S THEATRE AND ITS SIGNIFICANCE TO THE SILENT DRAMA"

By Robert Grau

DALY'S THEATRE, a playhouse of more historic value than any yet standing in this country is to revert to the silent drama exclusively on Monday next.

Ye Gods! but this is indeed a sermon in itself, and one that should go straight to the vital spot, for I must confess that with all of the amazing development of a new industry, this epochal upheaval I did not expect.

What an object lesson this astounding announcement is for the men who yet tempt fate along the older lines, in the once lucrative field of the theatre—the home of Ada Rehan, Clara Morris and Fanny Davenport; where Louis Waller, one of the world's most distinguished players, has come a cropper twice within a single month in an effort to provide compelling stage material with which to attract an indifferent public—a public that is no longer lying awake nights to buy seats for the playhouses.

Across the way from Daly's yet stands the historic Wallack's. Will it pass also to the camera man? Stranger things can happen.

To the present writer, by far the most significant phase of the announcement in regard to Daly's Theatre, is the clearly apparent intention of Marcus Loew to create a chain of model playhouses where moving pictures, unhampered with vaudeville acts will be the attraction. The great success of the Herald Square Theatre undoubtedly provided Mr. Loew with the incentive to expand, and here we have a man who recognizes at last that the moving picture will achieve its greatest results when separated from the line of endeavor known as "Pop" vaudeville.

After Daly's—what? We know that the Century Theatre—that superb playhouse founded by our men of great wealth—would have reverted to Mr. Loew a year ago, but for the existence of a two-year lease to Liebler & Company, and yet it is in just such theatres that the moving picture of tomorrow will be housed. In the very town where I happen to reside (Mount Vernon, N. Y.,) F. F. Proctor has already broken ground for a million dollar theatre to be dedicated this spring. To the lay reader this statement may indicate merely a state of progress in a city that many persons believe will eventually be the "New Harlem" of Greater New York, but to those who delve deeper into things the Proctor enterprise represents the inauguration of a new era, wherein the once despised showman—who not so long ago had no standing with business men—we now find affiliated not only with representative business men, but with the local government, for be it known that the erection of Mr. Proctor's new theatre in Mount Vernon has so impressed the people of that city that a Civic Centre is to arise within a year—four magnificent public buildings, each to require—like the Proctor playhouse—a complete square block.

There you have it!

Such is to be the mode of procedure in all of the cities where Mr. Proctor has playhouses. In these cities five years ago there was no play-going public save that which would be attracted to the New York City houses, but the advent of the greater moving picture changed all that, and the outlook at this time is for a chain of costly and modern amusement edifices, equal to any in the world today. Thus we are brought to realize that, while the manufacturers of film are straining every effort to continue the uplift by their productions on the screen, such men as Marcus Loew, William Fox and Frank Montgomery may be relied upon to extend co-operation from the exhibitors' side of the progress. Hence the Daly's Theatre announcement is merely emphasizing, in a sentimental way, a condition existing throughout the country, and which is not likely to show the least sign of retrogression.

The present writer in a previous contribution gave expression to a theory now held generally by theatrical men, to the effect that another season such as that of 1911-12 could not be survived even by those producers of plays whose proprietorship of playhouses has prevented disaster. The present season in New York City has been unique in that more successes have been achieved than in previous years, but only the exceptionally great plays can survive. This is so true that seven theatres have already been dark for periods for the reason that plays of reasonable merit lacked the necessary "punch" to attract even a hundred dollar house, and it is also true that not all of the exceptionally great plays are profitable to the producers.

But it is only in New York City, with its vast floating population, where even a few of the theatres are prospering. Outside the city conditions show no improvement, and it will be interesting to watch the developments as the returns come in from now until the opening of the new year. One playhouse on upper Broadway, having fixed charges of $100,000 a year, has been closed for two months because its owners can find nothing in the way of a play to justify opening.

With more successes than in any previous year in a quarter of a century, the pace is such that there is no medium business recorded in theatredom, and, as all of the enduring "hits" are required to provide attractions for New York, the rest of the country must be satisfied with old material. Therefore, it is not surprising that Daly's Theatre has had to capitulate or that such men as Mr. Proctor and Mr. Loew are indicating by their operations that the day is near when the distinction between the regular theatres and those of the silent drama will be solely that of the prices of admission.

N. Y. FILM CO. SCORE WITH "THE MIRACLE"

With the advent of "The Miracle" into America in picture play form, the motion picture has made one of its most decisive steps forward. It is possibly the most flawless motion picture production that has made its appearance in motion picturedom. "The Miracle" is an absolute delight. The action, the work of production, each individual portion is a marvel in itself. It is a tremendous success as an artistic production, and it is going to be a success as a money getter, judging from the rapidity with which orders are being received for it by the New York Film Company, 12 Union Square, New York City. The State rights for New Jersey have been sold to the True Feature Film Company, and for New York state to the Theatre Film Company. Several other states have already been sold, but it has not yet been confided to us by whom they are being handled. Splendid posters are being prepared for advertising purposes from one sheet to twenty sheets. It has also been announced that "The Miracle" will not for the present be exhibited in the smaller picture houses, but will be confined to houses whose admission fee is from 25 cents upward.

Every person taking part in "The Miracle" has individual ability. This is one of the reasons why the film production is such an artistic success. And it is quite probable that in no motion picture production has there ever been shown such a display of magnificent old-time architecture as in "The Miracle." In it is displayed the finesse of dramatic action—action that is so true to life that even the unsophisticated could not fail to feel the sincerity of every individual touch.

The New York Film Company are indeed to be congratulated upon securing such a glorious proposition to place before the American public.

House built by F. J. Grandon, one of the Lubin directors, to be burned down for a photo-play. The people in the picture are the members of the company who played the rôles of the rescuers and rescued. The house was a heap of ashes in less than 30 minutes. The scene was taken on Siegmund Lubin's Betzwood estate.

"THE TRIBAL LAW"

"101" Bison for Nov. 16th

The above is one of the most remarkable film productions in many respects that we have reviewed in some time. The scenes of the picture, dealing principally with the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, have an educational value apart from the story, showing the customs and industries of the Hopi tribe, their method of preparing meal for food, etc.

The story is that of a Hopi maiden who was wooed and won by an Apache brave. The chief of that warlike tribe was outraged and made it an excuse to attack the Hopis. The latter were taken by surprise and many of the Hopis were suffocated by the building of a green-wood fire at the entrance to the Pueblo. The old Hopi chief made a law, whilst grieving over the ruins and the dead, that "any Hopi woman who weds an Apache must die."

After many years have passed a pretty little maiden among the Hopis named Starlight is wooed by the Chief Gray Wolf, who has made up his mind to secure her for himself.

However, "there's many a slip 'twixt cup and lip" and Jose Seville, a splendid specimen of a young Apache brave, who has graduated from Carlisle and is attached to a party of surveyors operating in the Hopi country, comes upon the scene. One day Jose rides out to hunt, and whilst leading his horse he comes across a trap laid to snare some wild animal. He trips, kicks the sapling connected with the trap and releases the heavy stone which pins him to the ground. He shouts again and again, and after some hours of suffering his cries are heard by little Starlight, the Hopi maiden. She is searching for herbs and answers with a call, the sweetest music poor Jose had ever heard. Running to him she tears the sapling away, pries the huge stone from Jose's leg, assists him to his horse which she brings from where it is grazing nearby, and takes him home to her Pueblo, caring for him until his recovery. He proposes to the little Indian maiden and is accepted. Unfortunately for their peace of mind the scene is witnessed by the disappointed and revengeful Gray Wolf. He is determined that he will not relinguish Starlight without exhausting every trick and subterfuge at his command. He schemes, but can find no excuse for opening hostilities.

The mating day arrives and the young couple are wed according to Hopi customs amid much feasting and ceremony.

Their joy is to be short-lived, however. On the morrow Starlight asks her man to change to the Hopi tribal costume. He is pleased with the suggestion and arrays himself in Hopi trappings. He stands before Starlight with pride and is amazed when he sees the horror depicted upon Starlight's face when she sees the tribal mark of the Apaches on his breast.

Gray Wolf peering through the window sees it also and, glad of an opportunity, immediately begins to make trouble. The lovers are interrupted by the entrance of several silent, stern warriors, who lead them out. The dread offense is explained to Jose, who fights desperately to save his squaw. He is bound to a post and forced to witness the stoning of his beloved as she runs the gauntlet and the torture of the pine splinters after she is bound and tied to a post. The girl faints and is thrown into a chamber in the Pueblo to starve, while Jose is bound to a post by the door, there to suffer a lingering death.

Crouching Panther, a Hopi Indian who previous to the above happening has been bitten by a rattlesnake, and whose life has been saved by the good offices of Jose, who cleansed and incarcerated the wound, sees the terrible proceeding and shows his gratitude by helping them to escape.

Miss Marguerita Fisher, who takes the role of Starlight, the Hopi maiden, is a delight in the part.

NEW CHICAGO OFFICES OF THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS ESTABLISHED

It is with much pleasure we introduce our readers to our Chicago representative and announce the opening of new offices of the Moving Picture News at 9 LaSalle street, suite 201, which will be in charge of Mr. Oscar J. Hazel. Advertisers, exhibitors, exchange men and all our friends are invited to call or request Mr. Hazel to call on them if in need of any information concerning the Moving Picture News. The 'phone numbers are Bell, Randolph 784 and Automatic 32676.

MAJESTIC RELEASES THEIR THIRD REEL

Commercing Thursday, November 21st, the Majestic Motion Picture Company will release a split-reel of slap-stick comedy. Great care has been exercised in selecting comedians to put this work over, and the lovers of good comedy and hearty laughs will now have a chance to have their demands satisfied.

RELIANCE ADDS ANOTHER FEATURE

From now on the Reliance Company will release a two-reel feature every other Wednesday, commencing with "Don Cæsar de Bazan" on Wednesday November 20th.

A BROTHER'S REQUITAL
Reliance release November 6.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

Ladies and gentlemen, we wish to introduce to you upon this appropriate occasion our friend and fellow citizen, Mr. C. B. Hoadley. (Applause.) Mr. Hoadley, familiarly known to his admiring confreres as "Pop" Hoadley, broke into the newspaper business when quite young, became the friend of John L. Sullivan and William Jennings Bryan, is on speaking terms with "Cap" Anson, of baseball fame, and ultimately hooked up with the moving picture game. On moonlight nights, the Toledo Press Club boys assemble on the banks of the rippling Maumee River and strike the barbershop chord something like this:

"For he's a jolly, good fellow—
A good fellow! (bass)
Yes, he's a jolly good fellow—
Good fellow! (baritone)
For he's a mighty good fellow—
Good fellow!
Which n-o-b-o-d-y c-a-n d-e-n-y. (Full strength)

The boys refer to "Pop" Hoadley, who is away off there in New Yawk, and, all jokes to the discard, they think he is a good fellow, too!

But as Woodrow Wilson would say, let us resume. Let us cast an eagle eye over the career of C. B. Hoadley and garner some highlights therefrom which will interest and entertain our hosts of readers.

The subject of our sparkling sketch first strode into the calcium in Toledo, Ohio. He was sporting editor of the old Toledo Commercial and also doubled in brass occasionally as city and telegraph editors.

The Red Sox are not the only professionals inclined to double plays. Any simon pure newspaperman can do it. After Mr. Hoadley has interviewed such notables as Felix A. Vincent, the Cherry Sisters, Billy Sunday and Amos Rusey for the Commercial, he went over to the Toledo Bee and ground out Sunday feature stuff. He was as busy as the proverbial bee and often dashed off stinging editorials as a side line. Our hero then affiliated with the Toledo Blade and gained fame and fortune by not mentioning the fact that "Petroleum V. Nashby" founded that sheet. Then Hoadley got into the political pot up to his neck.

C. B. HOADLEY

It is touching to hear him relate his experiences on Bryan's March to the Sea in '96. The Commoner consulted Hoadley on every important question and it is said that W. J. B. gives Mr. Hoadley no small credit for the outcome of that strenuous free silver knock-down-and-drag-out. Mr Hoadley also reported the National Democratic convention at Chicago that same momentous year, and the literary shots he fired were heard around the world, more or less.

But it was as a political editorial writer that our mutual friend shone in splendor. It is a fierce game, and Mr. Hoadley sums up his political editorship thusly:

Threatened l'ckings	81
Licked	1
Licked the other fellow	2
Draw	1
Shot at	1
Missed	1
Contempt of court	1
Escaped jail sentence	1
Wrote up judge	1
Elected to office	1
Quit politics	1
Stayed quit	1
Regretted it	0
Married	1

Total—but we expect to give the complete total in just a few short moments.

Retiring from politics, Mr. Hoadley took up the literature of baseball. It is a difficult profession and the literary style is something akin to that of Chaucer, only more so. Mr. Hoadley got so that he could give a graphic account of the ninth inning in the true spirit. An example

> Matty served a floater and Jones whiffed the atmosphere. However, he connected with the third bender, placing the sphere afar into the left garden. He ambled to first sack, annexed second, and then snatched the third cushion when Jackson tossed the leather fenceward.

It's the right sort of dope, and C. B. H. was promoted to official scorer at Toledo for the American Association for quite a while.

It takes a man with the nerve of T. R. to cut loose and become a magazine contributor. You often hear the polite term of free lance writer. Frequently the true meaning of such an occupation is free lunch. No free lunch for Hoadley. Not at all. He made good as a magazine muckraker from the very first splutter of the pen and filled in the gaps with The-Man-Living-in-the-Tree-Top features for New York Sunday newspapers.

About this time the doings in Filmland interested C. B. H. He liked to go to picture shows and thought many of the plots were rather punk. Many have thought likewise and have also labored under the delusion that they could write better picture plays than the ones they have seen on the screen. Hoadley was different. He didn't think anything about it. He knew he could write better ones. To think was to act and the action brought results in the shape of an offer from the Imp Films Company. Hoadley became script editor for Carl Laemmle.

Since that time C. B. Hoadley has become well known in pictureland. After a successful year with Imp as editor and publicity man, he worked for Champion, Great Northern Film Company, Powers Picture Play Company, and was recently promoted to editor of the central script clearing house of the Universal Film Company. He has conducted the duties of each position faithfully and well and there is no more popular editor and author in the moving picture business to-day than Hoadley. He has written many of the picture play successes, has read probably as many scripts as any of them, and has assisted many aspiring picture playwrights along the highway to success.

WEARY'S REVENGE
Majestic release November 3rd.

Mr. Hoadley, his estimable wife and Hoadley, Jr., live in classic Weehawken, N. J., a state to which script editors seem partial. He is always found on the job and with his jovial personality and hustling qualities, he makes life's walk easy to others.

Manufacturers, fellow editors, exchangemen and script writers, one and all, have a warm spot in their hearts for kindly "Pop" Hoadley, and he has a warm spot in his heart for them. Hoadley has been through the journalistic mill and wouldn't trade off those experiences with William Jennings Bryan, John L. Sullivan and the rest for real estate in the Florida everglades.

And the Toledo Press Club members watch the metropolitan career of Brother Hoadley admiringly. A photograph of the honorary member, similar to the one we produce on this page, hangs in a conspicuous place within the clubrooms. And we don't blame the Maumeeites; it's inspiring to have such a genial appearing photo to gaze upon.

So, we guess this will be all for this "take," friend Hoadley.

PICTURE SHOWS TO REDEEM CIGARETTE COUPONS

Very shortly it will be possible to purchase admission to motion picture theatres all over the country with coupons which the American Tobacco Company will give away with Tokio cigarettes.

This is the result of a novel advertising scheme, concocted by Captain Fritz Du Quesne, which will put $500,000 a year in the hands of motion picture theatre proprietors, according to the present plans, and $1,000,000 a year if the demand warrants it. In fact, $1,000,000 worth of coupons have been ordered printed, and will be held in abeyance pending a demand for them.

Heretofore the American Tobacco Company has given away yearly $500,000 worth of coupons with Tokio cigarettes. Each pack contains a coupon worth half a cent, redeemable in money or merchandise. Many of these have not been cashed, many forgeries have been put out and the coupons have come back in a very soiled state. This has been because there has not been enough places at which to cash the coupons.

Now, the plan is to make every moving picture house a station at which the coupons may be cashed. All managers who will agree to accept ten coupons for a five-cent ticket or twenty for a ten-cent ticket may get the actual cash from the American Tobacco Company, which will redeem them at an increase of 5 per cent more than their face value in $5 lots. Thus the moving picture men will, in a short time, realize 5 per cent in return for their carrying the paper of the American Tobacco Company.

To further the scheme and show the doubtful that Tokio cigarettes are good cigarettes the American Tobacco Company will send every moving picture show proprietor who writes them ten packages of Tokios free. The proposition advanced is a bona fide one, and every effort will be made to push it, as it is in the interests of the tobacco people, the showmen, cigarette smokers and moving picture patrons.

AMBROSIO COMPANY PRODUCES EXCELLENT THREE-REEL SUBJECT

The time has arrived when we may expect the most remarkable results in motion picture photography: we must be startled at nothing, for the era of the motion picture is upon us. Satisfied no longer with the ordinary one-reel production, the ambition of the manufacturers is being evidenced in the choice of difficult subjects. To produce difficult themes satisfactorily in moving pictures they are obliged to employ not only competent actors and actresses, but the man at the helm —the director—must be capable of amanaging the reins of his particular end of the business with extraordinary deftness. "Siegfried," Ambrosio's three-reel production for December 15th, bears evidence of careful production.

"Siegfried" is one of the quartet of operas known as Der Ring des Nibelungen, the remaining three being Das Rheingold, Die Walküre, and Gotterdämmerung. The libretto of Der Ring des Nibelungen was arranged by Wagner himself from an epic poem whose story belongs in its primitive form to the whole Teutonic race, and although each individual one is as long as an ordinary opera, together they form one colossal whole.

In choosing "Siegfried" Ambrosio displayed excellent judgment, although, as we said in our last issue, it is a theme difficult of adaptation to the moving picture; and yet it is surprising what has been accomplished with it by the Ambrosio Company. The main theme is the same old story of misplaced love, bitter denunciations, and then the working out of the revenge of the injured one. Hearing a bard sing of the charms of the beautiful Princess Crimilde, Siegfried, determined to find her, starts out on horseback to the castle of her brother, Gunther, to ask permission to press his suit with the princess. Gunther consents on condition that Siegfried will rescue the Princess Brunnhilde, whom he loves, from the castle where she abides and which is surrounded with flames. Armed with the magic sword, presented to him by Gunther, Siegfried accomplishes the rescue of the Princess Brunnhilde, who immediately falls in love with him. Siegfried, however, marries Crimilde, and Gunther marries Brunnhilde, much to the displeasure of the latter, who insists on making advances to Siegfried. Brunnhilde, finding that her love is scorned, plots against him with Hagen, an old courtier, who follows him to the spring where he goes to drink and stabs him. Crimilde in turn seeks to avenge the death of her beloved and personally leads an army of soldiers against Brunnhilde, destroying with fire the castle of Gunther and Brunnhilde.

Some of the scenes in the picture play are exceptionally fine, and Ambrosio is to be congratulated upon its success in putting in picture form one of the most beautiful of the Wagner operas.

Chicago, Ill.—1640 West Sixty-ninth street, one-story brick theatre; C. Wacker, 1636 West Thirty-ninth street; Worthman & Steinbach, architects; N. Cherr, mason; E. Muehler, carpenter.

CUPID ON THE JOB
Majestic release November 5th.

SHERWOOD'S THEATRE ON FULTON STREET

By M. I. MacDonald

On Fulton street east of Broadway, is a bookshop where Mr. R. E. Sherwood has sold books for several years. Some time ago a sign appeared in his shop window; its wording, which attracted a good deal of attention, denoted that as there was now little money to be made in selling books, the owner of the shop had decided to go into the moving picture business. By and by we found that a moving picture show had really crowded itself into one half of the bookshop. To-day we find the owner of the shop, like a boy with a new plaything, sitting in front of the little theatre himself selling tickets.

The bookseller, in personality quite apart from the common herd, presents a unique appearance sitting in the rustic entrance to the theatre dealing out tickets and hauling in coin. In front of him, standing in orderly line, are the boys of the neighborhood who haven't the price of a ticket in their pockets. These boys are allowed by the proprietor to peer through the little front window behind his ticket desk. The window blind is only drawn down when the boys, misbehaving, crowd too near and inconvenience the passers in and out. While I sat perched on a stool at Mr. Sherwood's side, chatting to him as he sold tickets, one boy whose hands and face were very, very dirty, and who persisted in overstepping the line was told, "You must stay back or I will draw the curtain; and besides I do not want boys around whose faces and hands are in the condition that yours are in."

R. E. SHERWOOD

Mr. Sherwood has announced that all children who come with clean hands and faces will be allowed in free after six o'clock, when accompanied by their parents, "And you never saw such a bright looking lot of children in your life as come around here at night," said Mr. Sherwood.

While I sat there conversing with him, which was between four and five in the afternoon, a little boy, looking very neat and clean, passed shyly in front of the little theatre. He held by the hand a little girl as neat and clean as himself. They walked slowly along until Mr. Sherwood's eye happened to light on them. They had evidently been there before, for as soon as he saw them he called out cheerily, "Hello there! come along!" The children hesitated shyly. "Come on—you can go in!" he told them the second time, and slowly and smilingly the children walked hand in hand into the picture house—into paradise.

The incident brought the tears to my eyes. It seemed such a pleasant, tender touch in this big, hard city. The act of the shopkeeper might pass unnoticed by many, but it made an impression on me, and I feel sure it made a much greater impression on those two children; and the little grain of kindness will germinate in the heart of the little boy, and bear fruit some day when he is a big man, and in the heart of the little girl when she has grown to be a woman.

The bookseller tells me he has learned many things since he has opened a picture show of his own. One of the things that he has come to realize is the necessity of appropriate music as an accompaniment to the pictures. And for this reason he rehearses his films every morning, and arranges the musical program himself. "The first pianist I had," said he, "played well, as regards technique, and the rendition of individual numbers, but he seemed to have no idea of adapting the music to the pictures; for instance, for a picture of which Joan of Arc was the subject, at the burning of Joan at the stake, as sure as I look you in the face, he played, 'There'll be a hot time in the old town to-night.' And for a picture which dealt with as serious a question as the appropriating of money that her husband had stolen from the bank in which he was employed, for the buying of fine clothes, when the woman walked in with the hat she had bought with part of the money, he played 'Where did you get that hat.'"

THE SHERWOOD THEATRE

Not only does Mr. Sherwood arrange the musical program himself, but he gives character impersonations at intervals between pictures, showing first the picture of the character which he is going to impersonate in a slide. Such men as Mark Twain, Kipling and others are among his impersonations. This work he is well versed in, having followed the stage for some fourteen years. Miss Easter Higbee, a young lady with a very charming soprano voice, assists in the entertaining of the crowds that flock to the Sherwood Theatre. Such selections as "Silver Threads Among the Gold," "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls," that are pleasantly reminiscent to the older people, and new to the youthful portion of the audience, are thought by Mr. Sherwood to be more satisfactory than some of the newer popular melodies.

The accompaning illustrations will tell you better than I can of the bright, intelligent face of the bookseller, and of the unique front which he has given his theatre. The interior is well arranged. It contains only 274 seats, but these seats are not crowded together—there is plenty of room to sit comfortably. There is also an extra aisle, so that people entering need not disturb others unnecessarily in getting to their seats. Bits of bric-a-brac and statuary are arranged on the narrow shelf that follows around the sides. The room is softly lighted, and when the choruses of the illustrated songs are sung, musical bells chime forth in sweet tones the melodies as they are sung, and a bright lighted clock tells the time of day. A rest room is provided on the first floor for the ladies, while downstairs is to be found a nicely equipped smoking-room for the gentlemen furnished in mission style.

This little theatre was fitted up by Mr. Sherwood with a view of meeting the wants of the people who live down in that district of the city, and who have no place to go to be entertained. It has been open only a short time, but even now its good work is beginning to tell in the clean, bright faces of the children who come there after school and of an evening. It is also a boon to the business men of Broadway, Wall street, and in fact of every street of that downtown section.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Ronly Company, moving picture theatre. Capital, $1.000. Directors: Samuel Rhonheimer, Rose Rhonheimer, Benjamin Lyons.

Troy, N. Y.—Majestic Amusement Co. to engage in the moving and vaudeville business. Capital, $5,000. Directors: Jacob C. Rosenthal, Julius H. Boyer and Nathan Rosenthal.

TITLES PAR EXCELLENCE, AS A SALES TALK

Photography and story superlative have been the two points argued by film salesmen. The Gaumont Company are now advancing the merits of their product by reference to the strength of the titles and sub-titles of their pictures. Embellishment of pictures by apt, clever headings has been proved by consensus of praise to be well worthy of concentrated attention. Thus in the extension of the company's business the sales manager has opportunity of ejecting new life and novelty into his business-getting letters and conversation. To be able to tell an exhibitor that one's pictures have titles that really tell something, and tell it well, is a talking point found to reach the mark. Audiences are bound to get more pleasure from pictures whose text matter is congruous with the photography and the story, titles which strengthen the atmosphere and spirit of the delineation, adding point, verve and connection. The Gaumont Company have in mind a titling contest to be participated in by the companies distributing through the Film Supply Company, which contest would be judged and decided by the film reviewers from the trade papers.

BECK HOME AGAIN

Busy Mr. Beck (better known as the "Special Event") is back home again, "hale and hearty," bringing with him some beautiful negatives of Western life.

His first remark, on arriving at the office was, "Well, where to next?" Several telegrams were handed him asking him to come and take pictures of the towns; so we can look for him to be gone again in a few days.

Several more of these trips, and Mr. Beck will be a real Westerner and possibly a candidate for Mayor in one of the Western towns, but Mr. Beck says, "No, never; not as long as there is a Screen Club in New York."

Pomona, Cal—A contract has been let for the erection of an open air theatre for Ganesha Park. Cost, $40,000.

TRIALS OF FAITH
Reliance release November 2.

"THE HONOR OF THE FIRM"
Eclair Release of November 12

Clever, clear-cut action with nicely balanced heart interest, marks the "Honor of the Firm," a little story of modern American business life, produced by the Eclair Company, released November 12th.

The work of Mr. Vaughan as the faithful old manager, and that of Miss Goodstadt, who plays the daughter, certainly carries conviction, and the entire cast is especially well balanced.

The idea covers the discharge of the firms's old manager by the son of the deceased president, who has taken his father's place. A friend of the son is made manager.

Speculations of the new manager put the firm in jeopardy, which fact comes to the knowledge of the old manager from his daughter, who had overheard a conversation at a banquet, where she was playing as a paid entertainer.

The old manager had been asked by the dying president to always preserve the firm's good name, and even though discharged by the son he has a feeling of responsibility in the matter.

He adopts some high handed tactics to save the son from ruin in spite of himself, and not only mortgages his home, but takes some hazardous risks. But his good judgment and prompt action save the day.

The young head of the firm tries at every turn to stop the old manager's plans and the action is fast, and the interest exceptionally well held.

It is not the greatest picture we have ever seen, but it is more than just good, and is essentially American, a feature that is standing out plainly in the American Eclair releases.

The action of the son fighting the old manager, when they were both aiming at the same goal, saving the firm, takes the melodramatic scenes out of ordinay class by giving us a villain who is not a villain, consequently giving a touch of humor with the happy ending.

THE NEWMAN MANUFACTURING CO.

The Newman Mfg. Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, at 101 and 103 Fourth avenue, New York City, have contracted to furnish all of Jake Wells' circuit of theatres with all their brass work, which contracts represent quite a tidy sum. Business is so very good with this firm, who are the largest manufacturers of this kind of goods, making a specialty of brass theatre fixtures of every description, such as brass poster and photo frames, brass easels, brass push plates, brass rails, brass program signs, that they are, of necessity, compelled to operate their plant till 9 p. m. daily. Their New York store, in charge of Messrs. S. & E. C. Newman, at 101 and 103 Fourth avenue, has lined up quite a number of theatres during the past month in the Eastern and New England States. This firm furnished all brass rail work and brass lobby display frames and easels to the new Colonial Theatre, in Dayton, Ohio, one of the prettiest theatres in the country. The Newman Mfg. Co. were selected for this work on account of the high class of work they turn out; and the excellent reputation they bear, having been established since 1882, thirty years.

THE COLLABORATORS

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Gem Release)

THE time was Spring. In the third floor, rear, hall bedroom of Mrs. Bean's boarding house, one Richard Lemon was cognizant of the fact.

Under his shabby coat and torn shirt, his poet's heart felt the call and struggled to pour itself out in rhyme. Now, indeed, the young man's fancy turned to thoughts of love. From love his thoughts most naturally drifted into love's own vehicle of expression and then—alas it must be said—he thought of what this same vehicle might do in the way of filling his poetic stomach and paying his long-neglected room rent.

Alas, it pained his very soul to think of such a sordid thing as food. For such as that he was not born. And yet—and yet—the lamb that gamboled on the green insisted upon floating before his eyes upon a platter, surrounded by green peas.

With eyes—and mouth—moist from the great hopes arising within him, he labored over the last few stanzas of what he felt to be his masterpiece.

A tap sounded upon his chamber door. In languishing tones our poet cried "Come in"

'Twas Molly Dripping of the kitchen below.

"My beauteous one," whispered Lemon in ecstasy, "you have come to give me inspiration for my ending. Come, sit where I can gaze into your eyes."

Molly obeyed.

"Now I shall read you what I have written this morning:

'And now the clouds began to roll
From o'er the heads of the young pair,
And hand in hand among the flowers
They walked across the meadow fair.'"

"Ah—h," sighed Molly.

"Yes, 'tis beautiful, but wait. Listen."

'They came beside a little stream,
Where he with manly strength did bend
And lift the maid and jump across
And then they both their way did wend.'"

"Oh, it's just grand," whispered Molly.

"And you, my love, have inspired it all. Come to my arms."

Lemon was just about to give Molly a good hug when, without ceremony the door opened and in stormed Mrs. Bean.

"Molly, what are you doing here? Go to the kitchen," demanded Mrs. Bean in a voice that made the girl tremble.

"My dear madame," said Lemon haughtily, "you do not realize that this sweet girl has been the inspiration of a poet."

"She'd better be the inspiration of the pies for dinner," snapped the landlady. "And for you, Mr. Lemon, you will have to pay your rent or leave. You may be able to live on poetry, but I can't. My stomach needs something stronger."

"But I have no—a—no—ready cash at present," answered Mr. Lemon. "If you will wait until I have added about three stanzas to my great poem I am sure I shall be able to pay you in a very short while.

"No!" cried Mrs. Bean. "You will have to go at once. Molly, you go to the kitchen."

Molly Dripping went weeping to the kitchen.

What, oh, what should she ever do without her poet?

As she sat leaning her arms upon the kitchen table, lost in her misery, a sudden thought came to her. Her poet had had nothing to eat that day and he had no money.

Straight to the cupboard she went, and a few moments all its contents that were wrappable were wrapped in a paper.

Silently Molly crept upstairs and listened at the door of Lemon. All was quiet save a slight sound of moving around the room. Quickly she opened and closed the door and flew to her lover-poet's arms.

"Here," she said, thrusting the package into his hand.

"Ah," he exclaimed when he had peeped within, "Ah, my love has brought me food to sustain my body while my soul pours itself forth in wondrous verse. Oh, thoughtful love."

He paused for breath. "Now, what shall I give thee in sweet remembrance? It must be the greatest thing I have. Ah, I know. 'T must be me masterpiece!"

With a stride to the table he picked up his manuscript and laid it in Molly Dripping's hand.

"Not this," said she with awe.

"Yes. Some day we'll have it printed but now you must keep it for me. I can write plenty more."

So Richard Lemon went out into the cold, unappreciative world and Molly Dripping back to her kitchen.

Thoughts of her poet mingled with the recipe for pies and his image formed in the steam that arose from the dish water. Molly was very sad.

When she had dragged through the dish-washing and was about to sweep the dirt on the kitchen floor behind the stove, Molly's eye fell upon a fragment of paper from the one in which she had wrapped her poet's food. She picked it up and read, and read again. The Killem Potted Meat Company offered a prize of $1,000 for the best lines of poetry advertising their potted meats.

Oh, if her poet could only see that! She clasped her hands to her breast. Something rustled. She drew forth the masterpiece and unfolded it. An idea was slowly drawing upon Molly's mind.

She sat down and read the first stanza:

"The spring has come, the time of year
When lovers fond and sweet
Wander along the shady lanes
And find the rustic seat."

How beautiful, thought Molly. And to think that it was spring and her poet-lover had gone. But those thoughts were crowded out by the new idea that was growing.

Yes, she would do it. She would try to change some of the words to fit the occasion and see if she could win the prize.

She got a pencil and paper and began:

"Of course I'll have to end with Killem's Potted Meat," she said to herself. "Let me see—there ought to be something about picnics for you take potted meat to picnics. Well, let me see."

She wrote and she rubbed out many times, but at last smiled in triumph. She read instead of the first stanza of the poem, the following:

"The time has come for good picnics,
When lovers fond and sweet
Wander along the shady lanes
With some Killem's Potted Meat."

Molly was elated. Quickly she placed her verse in an envelope and posted it.

At last after much weary waiting there came to Molly an envelope with the name of "Killem Potted Meat Company" upon it.

Her heart stood still. Was it her poetry come back again as she had been fearing it would? Or could it be—dare she hope for one moment that it was—a check?

Tremblingly she opened the envelope. Joy of joys, a check for $1,000 fell into her hand. She had won the prize—her poet had won the prize.

But what was that long letter about?

Molly read and then sank into a chair. She didn't know whether to laugh or cry. The Killem Company offered her a position as head of their advertising staff.

Should she take it? Why not? Of course she couldn't write poetry, but didn't she have all those dozens of stanzas that she could change to fit the needs of the Killem Company? And wouldn't she be able to save quite a sum by the time the last stanza was used? Molly thought so. At least she was willing to risk it. So she straightway went to Mrs. Bean.

"I'm going to leave," she told the mistress of the house.

"What for, Molly?"

"I'm not going to cook any more. I'm going to write poetry."

"You're what?" almost screamed Mrs. Bean. "Do you mean to tell me that that idiotic Lemon has turned your head?"

"Please do not speak so disrespectful of my gentleman friend, m'am. I've been offered a position to write poetry right along and I'm going to do it till I run out."

"Well, if you write like that Lemon of yours, you'll be run out after the first day," retorted Mrs. Bean.

"What do you know about poetry?"

"Well, I don't know much, it's true, but I know his is rot for I read some he left on the table."

"He says genius always is misunderstood, so I ain't going to say another word. I'm going to pack my things."

Molly bounced off up the stairs and Mrs. Bean shook her head sadly and said: "You ought to be going to Bellevue. Your head's got something loose as sure as I'm born."

In spite of Mrs. Bean's opinion of Molly's sanity, she was received at the offices of the Killem Company with great deference. The next morning she was seated at a desk in a room of her own.

The precious poem she locked securely in a drawer, and removed it only when she had to copy another stanza for business purposes.

The first thing she did when settled in her office, was to begin on the necessary changes for the second stanza. It read:

"Sitting down the maiden sighs
And gazes at her feet.
He wonders what will please her most
And fast his heart does beat."

The first two lines would do, Molly thought, just as they were. The third line—well, he ought to know what would please her most if it's Killem's meat. Why not change "wonders" to "knows just," so that it would read: "He knows just what will please her most"? The last line was easy.

So the stanza read:

"Sitting down the maiden sighs
And gazes at her feet.
He knows just what will please her most
And gives her Killem's Meat."

The manager was delighted. "Why this will tell a regular little story if you keep on," he said.

"Oh, yes," answered Molly quite carelessly, "that is my idea. I have the whole thing planned out."

"That is splendid," said the manager. "We were certainly lucky to secure your services."

So Molly went on working from day to day and from week to week, telling the story of the two lovers and the potted meat. Sometimes it was ham, sometimes veal and sometimes tongue. Once it was chicken, but that was very difficult.

Molly worked on from time to time—not daring to think what she was to do on the day that must come, the day when she would have no more poetry.

Nearer and nearer came the fatal day and at last it arrived. The manager came into Molly's room when she was sitting quietly waiting for the sword to drop.

"Miss Dripping, that little story in verse was very successful," he said. "It has brought so many orders. We wish to raise your salary if you can continue to do such valuable work for us. You no doubt have some new ideas for future verses. I'll be in just after the noon hour and you can outline them to me."

Poor Molly sat and sat. When noon came she still continued to sit. Her mind was a blank. She had no idea what she was going to say to the manager when he returned.

Suddenly she heard loud talking in the room outside. First the office boy and then—Oh, could it be? Molly sprang to her feet just as the door burst open and her poet strided into the room.

He stopped in the center of the floor. "My lost love!" he exclaimed. "How do you come here? I am seeking the scoundrel who has desecrated my poem with potted meat."

"Wait, dear, till I explain," and Molly told the whole story.

"And you really got a thousand dollars for the first stanza?"

"Yes, and fifty dollars a week since I came here. I would not have done it, only I thought I could save enough for us to get married on, and then you would have something to eat while you write poetry."

"My thoughtful one. Suppose we go out to lunch now."

"Oh, I forgot!" cried Molly. "I've used up all your verses and the manager will be here in a few minutes to hear my ideas for more verses. You must help me. Get behind the screen and then we will plan what we will say."

Lemon closed his eyes a moment. "Ah," he said, "I have it. Our hero will be an explorer, and everywhere he goes he will find that Killem's Potted Meat has been there before him."

The manager arrived and Molly, with occasional whispered hints told the manager her plan.

"That is fine, Miss Dripping. If it turns out as I feel sure it will we shall raise your salary to seventy-five dollars a week."

"Now, my dear," said Molly, when she and Lemon were alone again, "I'll keep the place and you can write the poetry. It won't take long to write this and you will have time to write what you want to beside. But you must write the potted meat."

"Yes, my love, my inspiration, let us go now and replenish our bodies so that the beauty of our souls may shine forth in verse. I knew that I would succeed if I only had a little courage and patience. Genius must be recognized at last."

Chicago, Ill.—A contract has been let for the erection of a new theatre on Sheridan Road, cost $50,000. Located between Albion and North Shore.

THE day has passed when any audience should be compelled to endure the nervous strain and discomfort caused by looking at rainy, flickery or otherwise defective films.

If you use the Hochstetter Re-developing, Cleaning and Softening Process, you will satisfy your exhibitors and the public in general, and also increase your trade at the same time.

Convince yourself at our expense.

HOCHSTETTER UTILITY CO.,
40 East 12th Street, New York City.

SILENT JIM
Eclair (two reel) release November 5th.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

INTRODUCING MRS. BREUIL

REALLY, Mrs. Hartmann Breuil, editor Vitagraph Company of America, needs no introduction to the script writers, but just the same we introduce her with great pleasure to readers of this department. This is her initial appearance, but we have hopes that she will favor us with other contributions from time to time. Mrs. Breuil is one of the most versatile and clever of writers of picture plays. Known in literary circles as Beta Breuil, she has achieved an enviable reputation in various branches of literary work. She is the author of such picture plays as: "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "On Board a Tramp Steamer," "Auld Lang Syne," "Nellie's Farm" and numerous other star playlets. Mrs. Breuil gives the needs of the Vitagraph Company in the following interesting communication:

MRS. HARTMANN BREUIL

> Vitagraph needs vary but little during the year. There is more demand for two and three-reel subjects, highly dramatic, of original plot, and short five hundred feet comedies than any other form of scenario. We continually find "beginners" who have the necessary scenario "germ" and are always looking for new contributors. My advice to beginners must read like an old, old story. "Find something plausible, original and dramatic and send it in with synopsis, giving full detail of plot and in the most terse language possible." We have many complaints at the promptness with which we return manuscripts not desired. A reader and assistant were engaged in Vitagraph editorial department more than a year ago in order that there might be no delay in the return of scripts which we cannot use. And yet, strange to say, many complaints are received from people whose scenarios have been returned after being considered the same day on which we received them. Aspiring script writers seem to have an idea that we editors stand in line awaiting the coming postman, then seize the scripts and read and re-read them for at least a week before we appreciate their good qualities. In buying scripts, it is always a case of "survival of the fittest." Each author has an equal chance with the Vitagraph; the story and not the author is the main consideration.

"The story and not the author is the main consideration." Honestly, we have never heard the entire case put so pertinently and convincingly. Scribes nursing the "favored writer" bug should let that terse assertion sink into their headpieces. Then another striking thought from Mrs. Breuil: We have noticed the peculiar twist of logic ladled out by a large number of script writers and we receive letters every day on the subject. Many will write in to complain that an editor has held their scripts for two months and in the same mail come complaining that editors are returning scripts the same day as received by them. If a script is held two months, it is being seriously considered. Let that script alone. If a script is returned promptly, it means a reader has read the synopsis and action and finds the plot unavailable for that particular company. It is the reader's business to cull out unavailable scripts and put the more meritorious up to the editor-in-chief.

"WHY THE SCENE PLOT?"

The above is the title of an interesting article from the pen of R. D. Armstrong, whose script, "The Crucifix of Destiny," won second prize in the recent contest conducted by the Powers Picture Play Company. The article appears in The Photoplay Author and we take the liberty of using some of the suggestions of Mr. Armstrong as contained in his contribution. He writes:

> What picture playwright who has sold a picture play and seen the production on the screen found it to be exactly in accordance with his visualization? How closely did the director follow his scene-plot choosing the backgrounds the author had named? Were he to take his carbon copy to the theatre to view the production and follow the action on the screen he would most surely see scenes produced that were not in his original conception. Why? Because the backgrounds that he had suggested in his script do not exist in reality for they are the product of his own imagination whereas the director who produces the story must find backgrounds that really exist. Now then, why the scene plot at all? Of course, it is customary to submit a logical sequence of action in scenes for the convenience of some directors, but it is best to avoid any direct concrete thing or place for a background, unless you know of its convenient existence, for the producer in mind. My humble advice to writers is: put your thought and care into a clear, concise synopsis, in the form of a short narrative, avoiding dialogue and while brevity is to be desired, do not let this open sesame to the understanding of the director suffer by only trying to cover two hundred and fifty words of synopsis. Forget the audience in the theatre and endeavor to inspire the manuscript reader with the spirit of your idea.

AN INTERESTING ARGUMENT

Mr. Armstrong's argument is an interesting one and forcefully put, but we fear that so long as the three-page script and the one thousand foot reel are in vogue that the lengthy synopsis will not be favored by editorial readers. We also firmly believe that the plot of any thousand feet play can be excellently outlined in a synopsis of two hundred and fifty or three hundred words. Telling your story briefly and at the same time graphically is a fine art and is just one item of expert writing. A country correspondent once queried the night editor of a metropolitan newspaper as follows: "Congressman Jones shot and killed. Big story. 1,000." (Meaning one thousand words.) Back came this order over the wire: "Send 100. Story of Creation was told in 500." We are with Mr. Armstrong in his desire for scripts carrying more detailed action. Many a writer cuts out vivid and valuable visualization in order to conform with the tailor-made playlet scissored to market length. However, we hope the time is soon coming when a script worth 1200 feet, or 1,500 feet or 1,750 feet will be given that length, for the sake of artistic endeavor and plausibility. We notice that Thanhouser has released an over length script believing the play worth the 1,500 feet. We congratulate Thanhouser.

REPORT UNFOUNDED

A report has been circulated that Lawrence S. McCloskey has severed his connection with the Lubin Manufacturing Company. The report is unfounded. Mr. McCloskey's services as scenario editor for Lubin are greatly valued by that company and he is right on the job. His many friends among script writers who appreciate his fair and square treatment will be overjoyed to learn the news. The Lubin Company cannot understand how such rumor came to take wings.

A PLAINT FROM A "PLOTTER"

Along the Pacific Coast there seemeth to be a host of mightily successful "plotters" who furnish scripts to Eastern manufacturers. We received a communication from a well-known writer at Los Angeles, Cal., last week and we are going to publish it. Los Angeles writes:

> I am wondering if the blacklist for the "Idea Thief" you mention as being kept by some film companies may not work considerable injustice to some innocent picture play writers. If proof positive can be established that a writer has absolutely stolen his plots or ideas, then he should be blacklisted. But how can this be positively proven? You may say it is easy, but I do not think so unless some companies reform themselves. I am trying hard and honestly and am no idea purloiner. Still, I see how I might be called one in some instances. Several times I have had scenarios "lost, strayed or stolen" in submitting them. At least they never came back and this from no failure to provide postage, either. I am working these same plots over to resubmit. Now suppose before these revamped ones find acceptance the original idea, worked over, appears on the screen? Then I am accused of stealing an idea, although that idea was originally mine. This has occurred and may occur again.

The writer goes on to mention one company which announces a release similar to the story the writer says he submitted and after four months consideration it was returned to him. He also mentions having trouble with several "mushroom" concerns in the script line. To the reader, widely read, it is easy enough to detect the idea thief. When an out and out steal from the Red Book, Saturday Evening Post, back numbers of the Popular Magazine, and the copyrighted novels comes along, it can be readily detected. Those writers who think they can "put over" such a plot should always remember that there are others just as well educated, just as well read and just as "bright" as they are. If certain companies do not give you fair service, stop submitting work to them. You are not obliged to invite them to read your scripts. In working over those plots which you say failed to come home, send a registered letter to the companies in question stating that you have withdrawn the scripts and will submit them elsewhere. However, be sure that these concerns you score are not preparing a check for you to be forwarded near release date. Of course, you will have trouble with "mushroom" picture concerns. Good judgment should caution you to stick to the established manufacturers and to those editors in whom you have confidence.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION No. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

The next regular meeting of the M. P. M. Operators Union No. 1 of New York will be held on Monday, November 4, 1912, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, at 12 o'clock, midnight. All members are requested to be present as very important business will be put before the body.

* * * *

NOTICE TO ALL OPERATORS

Thalia Music Hall, an East Side theatre presenting motion pictures and vaudeville, situated at 236 Broome street, and owned by Mr. Koppleman, had been placed upon the unfair list by the Jewish Variety Actors Union No. 5, affiliated with the A. F. of L. and the Central Federated Union of New York. A committee of the actors' union came to the last meeting of the M. P. M. Operators Union No. 1 and reported a lockout at the Thalia Music Hall and that non-union acts were employed there. The Operators Union No. 1 took immediate action and ordered the business representative to look after the trouble. Business Representative Ralph Knaster went to the proprietor of the theatre to try and settle the trouble and Mr. Koppleman did not want to take in union acts, and after forty-eight hours' notice business representative of No. 1 called the operator, Al. Harrison, also Mr. Moe Albert, the manager, out of the theatre and told them they must quit work and report at the office at 133 Third avenue.

One of the scab actors appeared upon the stage to tell the audience that the machine was out of order and it would take the rest of the day to make repairs. Whereupon a woman that overheard the conversation in the office got up and yelled, "It is a lie, the machine is O. K. Why don't the boss pay the working men living wages, you scab? Your boss is too stingy to live." This took place on Thursday, October 24th, and the same day Mr. A. Cogut, business representative for the actors' union, telephoned to Mr. Harold Williams, delegate of the Spotlight Operators Union, Local No. 35, and asked that no man from that union should be sent down to work at this theatre, and was promised that no man would be sent out on that particular job. But Mr. Jacob Winnick, a member of the Branch No. 35, heard about this trouble, went in to the theatre, told the proprietor not to worry and gave a card of No. 35 and said: "You call up my union and they will send you a man, but he must say that he met the boss on the street and got the job that way so as to cover up his union's or No. 35 dirty trickery. A young lady at the theatre marked down the telephone number so as to give the information to business representative of No. 1 and the next day it proved to be true. A No. 35 Union scab was on the job; his name is Edward Richney, moving picture operator's city license No. 1280 and union card No. 123, Branch No. 35, I. A. T. S. E.

Strike sympathizers laid hold of Richney as he was going home at night and the next day Thalia Music Hall was again dark. Great credit is due to Mr. Moe Albert, the manager of this theatre, for it was he that went into the theatre and conversed with the scab actors and caused them to take their pictures and costumes out and leave the job. Mr. Koppleman, the owner of the theatre, was always an enemy of union labor, for he had many strikes during the past three years when he was producing variety at his theatre and he had always been successful in winning his strikes. But since the pictures are in his theatre this strike was settled in short order. The proprietor called up the actors and operators unions on Monday, October 28th, at 5 o'clock P. M., and settled all matters.

Other news will be noted in a letter sent to President Robert Goldblatt by Mr. Richardson and answer to same which appears in this issue.

RALPH KNASTER,
Editor of Chat and Business Representative of No. 1 of N. Y.

NOTICE.—Subscribe for the Moving Picture News, which gives all the news that's fit to print of the moving picture industry. For information apply to M. P. News, No. 30 West 13th street or to Mr. Ralph Knaster, office 133 Third avenue, New York City.

Mr. J. O. Snowden will open his new moving picture theatre at 879 East 180th street, Bronx, on or about October 31, 1912. Instead of naming the house himself he has decided to give the public a chance by having a contest for which he will give a prize of $10.00 to the winner. Mr. Snowden also states that he will run nothing but the best of Independent films.

A new theatre has been opened on Seventh avenue near 132nd street, New York City. The house is a very pretty one and seats 1,800. An operator was engaged through the office of the M. P. M. Operators Union No. 1 of New York. This new theatre is owned by the same company operating the Crescent Theatre on 135th street near Fifth avenue.

MR. OPERATOR, READ THIS AND THINK IT OVER

Questions Answered

Sometime since I promised to ask certain questions of Branch No. 2, Local Union 35. The questions were (a) Has the operator the right to operate a spot light when same is placed outside of his operating room? (b) If Branch No. 1 and Branch No. 2, of Local Union No. 35, have equal rights and each is entitled to govern its own affairs, how is it that Branch No. 2 cannot elect its own officers? I have propounded these questions to the Executive Board of Local Union 35 with the following result: Question A: Technically the operator has no such right, since spotlights are entirely within the jurisdiction of Branch No. 1. Branch No. 1, however, without relinquishing its technical right, in practice concedes to Branch No. 2 men the right to operate a spotlight located outside the operating room, provided the same be used in conjunction with their show. Question B: This is a matter which can only be done by President Shay, upon recommendation of Branch 1, but President Shay has already intimated in open meeting that if the orderly meetings and the present exceedingly satisfactory state of affairs continues to exist he hopes that Branch No. 1 will soon recommend to him that Branch 2 be given the right to elect their own officers. The Executive Board informed me positively that about the first of the year they would make this recommendation. It may, therefore, be expected that in the early part of 1913 Branch No. 2 will elect its own officers, with the possible exception of the president. I myself suggested to the Executive Board that it would be inadvisable to turn the presidency over to Branch No. 2 until such time as the orderliness of the meetings have become firmly established. Whether the Executive Board will adopt my suggestion in this respect, I cannot say, but I hope they will. The meetings of Branch No. 2 so far are a credit to that organization, and if those meetings continue I have great hopes that in the comparatively near future New York will have a strong and thoroughly effective operators' union, containing within its ranks every competent operator in the city.

President Goldblatt's Reply

The above is a letter I received in answer to two questions I asked F. H. Richardson, a very active member of the M. P. O. Branch of Local 35, I. A. T. S. E., although having waited a long time for this answer. But the saying is that everything comes to those that wait and it was well worth waiting for.

Now, Mr. Operator, is it any wonder to you after you read the above letter why a number of operators who were formerly members of the ill-fated auxiliary of Local No 35 formed an independent M. P. O. union in Greater New York, an organization that guarantees full representation to all its members in return for taxation, and that is more than we get as members of the past auxiliary of Local 35, and that is something the members of the Branch of Local No. 35 are not getting, and they cannot deny that. It is positively laughable to read that Local No. 35 has promised to recommend to President Shay, of the I. A. T. S. E., that members of the branch be given the right to govern themselves, with the possible exception of the president, providing the members of said branch learn to conduct their meeting in an orderly manner. "How do you like such a proposition?" Rather a surprise to me to learn that they are not orderly.

Well, I don't doubt that for one instant, but I prophesy that they will become much worse until such time when they get their rights and that is either amalgamation with Local No. 35 or a direct charter from the I. A. T. S. E., and I can safely say that either one or the other they will positively get.

During a conversation with several members of the so-called branch they said that if the independent organization keeps up its good work that Local No. 35 will be compelled to concede to the operators their just demand. I've made a careful study of the many branch members that I come in contact with, also analyzed their attitude toward their branch and Local No. 35. I discovered without surprise that they are greater enemies to Local No. 35 than anyone has any idea of.

It reminds me of the war between Russia and Japan. Japan would have stood absolutely no chance to win had the Russian soldiers and sailors fought with a spirit of patriotism toward their country. The Russian soldiers were compelled to fight for the benefit of their oppressors (the Royal Family), and knowing that there would be no gain for them by so doing, consequently mutiny followed. I would, therefore, suggest to Local No. 35 to hesitate before it is too late, because the enemies are growing more powerful at every breath, and we will continue progressing, for our cause is a just one, and justice is acknowledged as well as being supported by all honest men, and with such strength I assure the members of the Branch and Local 35 and all operators of New York that we are bound to win. Local No. 35 cannot improve the conditions of the operators until such time when they will rid themselves of the Independent union which is existing in New York, and the only remedy that I would recommend is that you give them that which you have held for many years and promised to turn over to them, that which rightfully belongs to them, and them only. You will never subdue the enemy by the tactics you are using, such as trying to take his bread and butter away, when you know deep down in your heart that the stand which he took during his membership of the past auxiliary was a just one. Therefore, I would suggest that you should follow the old adage: You can catch more flies with honey than with vinegar.

How sad it is to hear that Local No. 35 will go begging to President Shay, of the I. A. T. S. E., to permit the branch to govern their own affairs, and if such is granted those responsible will no doubt think themselves very charitable. Let us go back as far as the Washington convention of the I. A. T. S. E. in 1910, to which I was delegate representing the M. P. operators of the former auxiliary. My mission there was to try and procure a direct charter for the operators. Local No. 35 was the worst opposition I had, but I shall never forget one man who took the stand for the operators which I represented, a man who believed the same as I did, and fought the same. He was in favor of the operators getting justice and has proven same by action. In return he won my confidence and I have always looked to him as a sort of redeemer. The man I am referring to is none other than President Charles C. Shay, of the I. A. T. S. E. And he, unfortunately, is the man responsible for the present conditions existing in New York. And this is what we got for going out for nine months in sympathy strike for the benefit of Local No. 1, of which President Shay is a member. I am happy to say that I've received many letters from the different locals of the I. A. T. S. E. promising to use all efforts at the next convention in our behalf. Come, operators, one and all join our ranks and fight for justice.

ROBT. GOLDBLATT, Pres.

PICTURE MUSIC

ERNST LUZ

After having attained the toning habit, whereby you are enabled to give the picture a melodious surrounding, you will find the next most important possibility for picture effect to be in the "Dramatic" music. In theatrical productions this music is usually classed as dramatic and melodramatic, both being important, while in the picture the "Dramatic" is very essential for effect, the "Melodramatic" being usually taken care of in the standard compositions you play such as sentimental, pathetic or plaintive numbers. Melodramatic numbers in staged productions usually accompany speeches and as the pictures do not speak it is necessary that the meaning of such speeches be portrayed in pantomime scenes making them lengthy in most instances, therefore allowing you to play a composition in its entirety and avoid the necessity of tiring your audience by the continued repetition of a short theme. In staged productions the "Dramatic" accompanies the action, consequently it is the dramatic we need for the picture as the picture portrays only action.

Most dramatic actors receive their inspiration and temperament from the music in working out these dramatic situations, and many times I have heard them say, "If you don't bring out that number and make the correct seque, the whole scene will fall flat," and the same can be said for the picture. Unless the dramatic scenes are worked out correctly in the picture they lose their entire effect and this can only be done in most scenes by using seque numbers as is done in stage productions.

I will not say that a dramatic situation in the picture show is never worked out correctly, but I can truthfully say that I have never heard a seque number used and I do see some pictures.

To make my coming explanations as simple as possible I will divide this dramatic music into the four commonly used parts, viz.: Pizzicato (sneaky music), agitato, hurry and mysterioso. The pizzicato or sneaky music accompanies that part of the scene wherein a sneaky entrance is made for the purpose of committing crime. The agitato is used to illustrate unusual agitation or in anticipating impending danger. The hurry is the number upon which the greatest dramatic effect depends and it is written in many forms and styles so as to portray duels, struggles, storms, battles or any other tumultuous or violent action. This number is important and needs some thought, for not any hurry will make all of the above action effective. Hurries which will allow for a light rendition and in which the bass is not too prominent are good for duels, which action is usually light. A similar hurry in which the bass is more prominent is good for struggles. For storms the bass should lay in unison at regular intervals, and for battles use as tumultuous a number as possible.

The mysterioso has the most beautiful effect of all when properly placed. The mysterioso should always be a 4-4 Andante movement, the theme laying in the bass accompanied by a tremolo in the treble. It gives the effect its name implies, viz., mysterious. It should be used for such dramatic action, usually quiet, wherein the ensuing action is in doubt, for proper picture effect. By using it in a moderato tempo it can also be effectively used in anticipating a storm or battle hurry on any ensuing noisy dramatic action in which many characters participate and which is of a heavy nature.

To illustrate the necessity of seque numbers for dramatic effects, I will take a well-known little story and set it to music in seque form, viz.:

"The family has retired for the night, and a burglar sees his opportunity and makes a sneaky entrance through the window into a dark room. While committing the burglary he is heard by the master of the house, who hurriedly gets out of bed, gets his revolver and goes to reconnoiter, when he is seen by the burglar, who would, rather than lose his freedom, risk his life; a struggle ensues during which the revolver is discharged and the burglar is shot, the master then recognizing in the burglar his own brother." To give the above the proper musical setting you would be required to play a dramatic pizzicato until the master of the house heard the noise, whereupon you would seque into an agitato until the burglar saw the master, then seque into a suitable hurry for the struggle and a plaintive number after the shot. The seque is more necessary to the picture than to the staged drama, for in a staged portrayal of above story the action of the one scene alone would be given while the picture portrays all the action and scenes surrounding or leading up to the burglary.

There are many different forms into which these dramatic numbers can be placed which is determined by the noisy or quiet effects apparent in the dramatic action of the picture. After having acquainted yourself with the different dramatic numbers essential to picture playing you will readily understand which seque numbers are necessary, for each number is creative of a higher tension temperament and the gradual power put into your dramatic effect music is what creates the climax which always appears at the end of such a seque number, this same climax is likely to carry the burden of the whole picture story, and the more forcibly you impress it upon your audience, the more appreciated the picture will be.

There is a tendency among picture players to use only dramatic agitatos and try to tone them to action, thereby losing many good effects and gaining for themselves a thumping reputation. The nature of the agitato and pizzicato is such that they will not allow for heavy playing for they accompany quiet action and are always played P. The hurry is the very opposite for it is naturally noisy and consequently accompanies heavy action allowing you to artistically use all the ff necessary.

The mysterioso is the one and only dramatic number that allows for toning and shading, and many beautiful effects are created thereby. There are many dramatic numbers published such as I have described and while they are not published in practical picture playing form still you can by the playing of the different styled numbers immediately recognize their temperamental and tension value, and there being a similarity in all of them you will have no difficulty in memorizing sufficiently for playing the average picture.

These dramatic numbers are all in minor keys and are for effective playing only, consequently the more melodious your descriptive playing the more effective will be your dramatic music when required. You will find in the plots given each week many set-ups in which seque dramatic numbers are essential and by making a study of one of them when you are afforded the opportunity you will readily recognize their value in picture playing, at the same time realizing the value of musical plots in the better musical portrayal of a picture. It would be impossible for me to give illustrations of all the many possibilities in this style of effective playing, but you will find after a study of the numbers I have described that the picture will naturally suggest many of them.

In the near future I hope to be able to announce to you some numbers gotten up in practical picture playing form, whereby you will be able to get the required effects without an unnecessary amount of high nerve tension, which I know to be telling and injurious to the health of the ambitious picture player. Among the musical plots in this issue you will find a set-up for Kalem's release of October 28th, "The Power of a Hymn." You will find a novel dramatic seque which is very effective and beautiful and the climax of this picture cannot be too highly praised, and certainly gives the musician an opportunity to show his worth as a picture player.

MUSICAL PLOTS

By Ernest Luz.

A few rules governing their use.

The cues given will allow for natural ending of strains, unless "Leader" cue, in which case a quick seque should be made unless otherwise stated. Avoid Overtures and Potpourris in their entirety; each picture creates its own selection or potpourri. The cues are so stated as to give you both a prompt and direct cue. You are safe in making seque as soon as you are positive of your prompt cue. Avoid introductions to numbers unless otherwise stated. Avoid the shading of numbers as printed, an even mezzo forte being the best. From this you can get both pp and ff shadings with effect according to the demands of picture action. When shading is positively essential you will find words "Tone to action." Avoid the use of books. They are not practical for setting-up. In playing numbers following a certain line of action drop to pp in case there is a cut-in of flash scenes. For playing recopy plots legibly on large paper and fasten by clasp to right of music stand or piano. Read the Film Stories in this magazine as it will familiarize you with the cues. Studio projection would allow for material improvement in set-ups. We are always ready to hear from you and explain any difficulties you may have with these plots or otherwise. If personal reply is requested enclose stamped envelope.

THE ONE SHE LOVED

Biograph. Release Oct. 21.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Descriptive)
2. Caprice. (Slow)
3. Sentimental.
4. Waltz. (Slow-Legato)

Cues.

Play 1 until wife enters husband's study.
Play 2 until wife falls crying at post after seeing stenographer in husband's arms.
Play 3 until wife with baby goes with stranger. (Exterior gate scene.)
Play 4 until end.

AFFAIR AT RAYNOR'S

Edison. Release Oct. 25.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz.
2. 2/4 March.
3. Caprice.
4. Dram. Pizzicato.
5. Agitato. (Light)
6. Hurry. (Struggle)
7. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until Wilson puts pencil marks on Mary's work.
Play 2 until leader "Mary tries to explain her suspicions," etc.
Play 3 until immediately after cabaret scene when Mary has gun.
Play 4 until Wilson finds he can't open safe.
Play 5 until Wilson sees Mary.

Open P.

Play 6 until police and Raynor enter office.
Play 7 until end.

THE POWER OF A HYMN

Kalem. Release Oct. 28.

Set-Up.

1. Sacred Song. (Short)
2. Waltz. (Slow-Legato)
3. Sentimental.
4. Caprice. (Slow-Legato)
5. Mysterioso. (Dramatic)
6. March 6/8. (Lively)
7. Pathetic.
8. Waltz. (Descriptive)
9. Dram. Pizzicato.
10. Agitato. (Very Piano)
11. Sacred Song. (Short)
12. Dram. Mysterioso.
13. Pathetic.
14. Sacred Song.

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "After the mother's death," etc.
Play 2 until minister and boy on at crap game.
Play 3 until minister and boys walking, street scene.
Play 4 until Tom closes small suit case.
Play 5 until leader "25 years after," etc.
Play 6 until leader "George not knowing the prisoner is his brother," etc.
Play 7 until Tom sits alone in prison cell.
Play 8 until George exits after kissing child good night.
Play 9 until Tom hides behind chair.
Play 10 until George sits down at piano. Very light.
Play 11 until George from piano.
Play 12 until Tom speaks to George.
Play 13 until Tom puts arms around brother George's shoulders.

A FISHERBOY'S FAITH
Selig. Release Oct. 28.

Set-Up.

1. Waltz. (Descriptive)
2. Sentimental. (Love)
3. Caprice. (Open Slow Legato)
4. Waltz. (Legato)
5. Sentimental. (Descriptive)
6. Agitato Dram.
7. Pathetic.

Cues.

Play 1 until fisherboy on screen after Amanda packing.
Play 2 until leader "Amanda leaves for mainland."
Play 3 until leader "On with the new."
Play 4 until leader "On her first visit home Amanda realizes," etc.
Play 5 until city lover stands outside life boats on steamer's deck.
Play 6 until city lover rescued.
Play 7 until end.

BUNNY AT THE DERBY
and
JUST LUCK
Vitagraph. Release Oct. 29.

Set-Up.

1. Medley 4/4 Rags.
2. Galop.
3. Waltz. (Medley)

2nd Half Reel

4. 2/4 March Rags.
5. Waltz. (Medley)

Cues.

Play 1 until Bunny points to race course.
Play 2 until Bunny on when horse and colt on screen.
Play 3 until end 1st half reel.
Play 4 until bum lays helpless on sidewalk.
Play 5 until end.

Note:—Do not use medley selections. You will have better results with song, march, schottische or waltz arrangements.

FATALITY, or TRAGEDY OF THE PARISIAN STAGE
Eclair Feature.

Part I—Set-Up.

1. Sentimental number.
2. Slow Waltz.
3. Two-Step. (Dancing)
4. Waltz. (Slow-Legato)
5. Wedding March. (Lohengrin)
6. Pathetic. (Short)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Under the careful and tender care of Cecil," etc.
Play 2 until leader "Asks to be taken to the Florist Ball."
Play 3 until leader "Austin Dow advises Susanne to go on stage."
Play 4 until leader "The wedding day."

Play P. entire 1st scene.

Play 5 until Gilbert's note on screen.
Play 6 until end.

Part II—Set-Up.

1. Pathetic.
2. High-class Song. (Singing)
3. Pathetic.
4. Minuet.
5. Waltz. (Slow)
6. Spanish Dance. (Habenera 2/4)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "A painful step."
Play 2 until Gilbert stops playing piano, interrupted by father. Make abrupt pause in playing.
Play 3 until leader "A rich man wins the graces of Susanne. (Tone to Susanne and father action.)
Play 4 until leader "Cecil reads that Susanne is to be given a reception."
Play 5 until dancer walks front from supper table.
Play 6 until few seconds after dance. then chord to end.

Part III—Set-Up.

1. Agitato. (Light)
2. Dram. Hurry. (Struggle-Light)
3. Sentimental number.
4. Agitato. (Light)
5. Pathetic.
6. Hurry.
7. Pathetic.
8. Hurry. (Tumult)
9. Plaintive.
10. Waltz. (Legato)
11. Wedding March. (Mendelssohn)

Cues.

Play 1 until Cecil lays hands on Susanne.
Play 2 until Cecil removed from screen.
Play 3 until Cecil jumps from boat into river.
Play 4 until Cecil rescued.
Play 5 until Gilbert on in Susanne's rooms. (Open P. cres. to action.)
Play 6 until Gilbert taken away by police.
Play 7 until leader "Fire breaks out in theatre. (P. as dressing room scene on.)
Play 8 until Susanne on stage among dead.
Play 9 until leader "Cecil learns that the rich man has withdrawn his complaint."
Play 10 until Cecil and Gilbert embrace.
Play 11 until end.

YVONNES, THE FOREIGN SPY
Imp. Release Oct. 28.

Set-Up.

1. 2/4 Intermezzo. (Light melodious)
2. Waltz.
3. Caprice. (Slow)
4. Agitato. (Light)
5. 2/4 March. (Hurried)
6. Hurry. (Heavy) (Long)
7. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until American introduced to Yvonnes.
Play 2 until auto stops where family is being dispossessed.
Play 3 until Yvonne and American seated on settee. Yvonne's apartment.
Play 4 until leader "The following day."
Play 5 until three foreigners rap at American's door. (Open P.)
Play 6 until foreigners arrested. (P. as boy alone on screen.) Catch boy's fall from fire escape.
Play 7 until end.

ROSIE
Eclair Comedy. Released Oct. 29.

Set-Up.

1. 4/4 Medley.
2. Waltz.
3. 2/4 March.
4. Waltz.
5. 2/4 March.
6. Love Ballad. (Slow Waltz Tempo)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Heartbroken Exile."
Play 2 until Mary gets into rowboat.
Play 3 until leader "Night on the island."
Play 4 until John catches fish.
Play 5 until leader "Just as the sun went down."
Play 6 until end.

Note:—All medley numbers can be used, yet the scenic effects are too good to cheapen by a continuous medley.

ALL FOR LOVE
Victor. Release Oct. 13.

Set-Up.

1. Spanish Waltz.
2. Pathetic.
3. Waltz. (Descriptive)
4. Polka movement. (Bright)
5. Caprice.
6. Waltz. (Slow-Legato)
7. Sentimental number.

Cues.

Play 1 until old musician falls exhausted at gate. (P. after 1st scene.)
Play 2 until leader "Three years later Flo a member of the family."
Play 3 until Flo and vaudeville manager exit off rock.
Play 4 until leader "Next day. 'I expect to see you soon.'"
Play 5 until guardian congratulates Flo at the stage wings.
Play 6 until guardian seated on bench after consenting to Flo's marriage.
Play 7 until end.

Note:—Keep even tempo for No. 3 as Flo at different time does a fancy step dance.

CALL OF THE DESERT
Nestor. Release Oct. 28.

Set-Up.

1. Polka Movement. (Slow)
2. Waltz. (Legato)
3. Sentimental number.
4. Caprice. (Slow-Legato)
5. Waltz.

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Swelldom. A square peg," etc.
Play 2 until leader "How dare you interfere?"
Play 3 until leader "Ben answered the call."
Play 4 until leader "Bill's strategem works."
Play 5 until end. (f at reconciliation.)

HALLBERG'S NEW A. C. TO D. C. RECTIFIER-ECONOMIZER

Recognizing the necessity of a rectifier for the control of projector arc lamps, that while giving the required light would do away with the bad features of Mercury Arc Rectifiers, Mr. J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man" has for the past two years been experimenting with his Rectifier-Economizer. He now announces that the same is perfected, and he is prepared to deliver the same to change alternating single phase current to direct current at the arc, and that his Rectifier-Economizer is adjustable to deliver from 30 to 60 amperes direct current to arc. It gives a brilliant, white, flat field—just what is wanted by the moving picture man. Has no mercury bulbs to break or burn out, no movable parts, no relays or tripping coils, and is practically indestructible. The device must be seen to be appreciated, and Mr. Hallberg will be glad to demonstrate his Rectifier-Economizer to interested parties at his office.

Chicago, Ill.—Michigan avenue, near One Hundred and Tenth street; William G Carnegie, architect, 59 East Madison street, has awarded the general contract for a theatre building to Seiffert Bros.

Hartford City, Ind.—A contract has been let for six moving picture theatres in this city.

KLEINE'S CINES AND ECLIPSE RELEASES
For Week Ending November 9th

For Tuesday a Cines entitled "Love vs. Gratitude." The story deals with a love affair between a wealthy young nobleman and a pretty actress who is a woman of the highest ideals, and has plenty of dramatic interest.

To complete the reel The Golden Shell of Palermo is a beautiful travelogue which takes us on a journey along the poetical Palermo shores where the scenery is simply delightful.

The Eclipse offering for Wednesday is a unique but fascinating film entirely original in subject matter as a screen production; the title is "The Queen of Spades." An ambitious young reporter is assigned to investigate a curious suicide club called The Friends of Plato. He joins the organization just in time to attend a meeting of the members where he is selected to be the one to fulfill the purpose of the club, namely, to end his mortal existence. The scene of his terror in the room with the barred windows through which he is able to see the "death-watch," a quartet of ghastly figures, and his intense relief when his friends come to the rescue will hold the rapt attention of any audience. The characterization of the reporter and the president of the club are especially well executed.

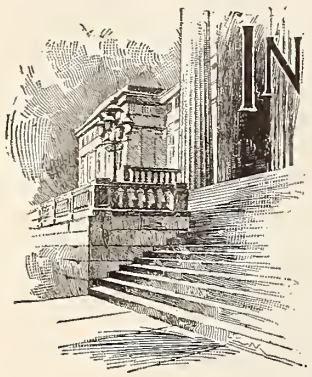
For the Saturday Cines, "No Fool Like an Old Fool" is a comedy-drama which contains many humorous situations. The final discomfiture of the old miser who tries to outrival his nephew in winning the affections of a charming but unsophisticated neighbor's daughter will provoke many laughs.

New York, N. Y.—The Standard Motion Picture Co. of American motion pictures; capital $300,000. Incorporator, Robert Jarlin, 1476 Ilkins avenue.

Janesville, Wis.—Ford, Boos & Sherer was awarded the contract for the new Apollo theatre.

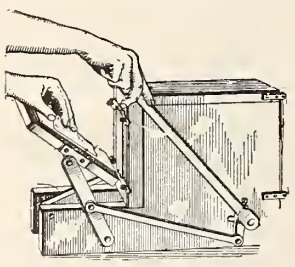
INNOVATIVE

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Especially for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City



IN the Patent Office there is renewed hope and expectation because of the fact that at the last session of Congress $10,000 was appropriated to enable the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency to thoroughly investigate this important department, and report as to methods, personnel, equipment, building, etc. With a surplus over expenditures of more than $7,000,000 in its favor, the Patent Office is certainly entitled to consideration and relief, in the interest of inventors generally and the comfort and health of those compelled to "do time" in the antiquated, delapidated old structure, begun in 1838, and added to and patched up from time to time in inadequate attempts to meet requirements. The building is a veritable fire trap containing tons upon tons of inflammable matter stored away in every nook and corner. And the worst of it is, that among this accumulation of inflammable matter are the secret archives and other invaluable documents and records, the loss of which would create incalculable confusion and disaster in many lines of industry. Among the documents thus jeopardized are not only the original papers in all patent cases, but also the records of deeds of assignment of titles of invention. Furthermore, only recently many tons of valuable papers had to be removed from the basement in a rotted condition, owing to dampness. Under present congested conditions the work of the department and the interests of inventors are unreasonably handicapped, and relief can only be attained by the provision of adequate quarters.

It is proposed to make the new Patent Office a fitting companion structure to the beautiful Library of Congress, and on a site adjoining the latter. This arrangement would be appropriate and logical as bringing into close relation two governmental institutions which are of kindred purpose and fostered by the same clause of the Constitution. The proximity of the structure would greatly facilitate research, as the scientific and technical library of the Patent Office would be supplemented by books and records in the Congressional Library, which is also the home of the Copyright Office.



Patent No. 1,039,874, issued to A. S. Witter and Omer A. Gordon, of Waterville, Wash; Gordon assigning to Witter.

The object of the invention is to afford a small portable compact printing device of cheap and simple construction (adapted to the requirements of either natural or artificial light) which may be quickly and conveniently manipulated, and from which the prints may be automatically discharged. In operation a sheet of printing paper is laid on the swinging platen in which the negative is mounted and the lever is moved downward, bringing the platen against the end of the casing through which the light is admitted. After an exposure of a proper time, the movement of the lever is reversed, releasing the platen, etc.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas recently held that a "hog" which had taken passage with a common carrier was entitled to "refreshments" en route. (St. Louis Southwest Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 142 Southwestern Reporter, 168.) Thus the domesticated descendants of the wild boar enjoy "equal rights" with the human variety, and "equality" has received another boost upward. It seems that everybody's doing it now.

The Wrights and others have succeeded in levelling the atmosphere; and Edison is trying to equalize matters by building houses for the poor for a few dollars per dozen; while our mothers, wives and daughters are asserting their equality as citizens and demanding political rights equivalent to those of their tyrannical fathers, husbands and sons. But there is compensation in all things, for we even read that "All lawyers go to heaven, regardless of their worth,

For the very simple reason that they got their hell on earth."

Patent No. 1,040,036, to Harry B. Shaffer, of Altoona, Pennsylvania, is for a process for producing artistic photographic backgrounds without the aid of skilled labor. Instead of retouching each negative to form a desired background as heretofore, by this new method, the same background may be conveniently applied to any number of negatives. A pen sketch of the desired background is first made, from which a zinc etching or engraving is produced, and from the latter a rubber stereotype is prepared. From this an imprint in soluble ink is then obtained on clear glass, and this may be modified by addition or elimination by means of the soluble blendable ink used. In printing, a negative is superposed on this glass background.

The Societa Anonima Milano-Films, Bovisa, near Milan, Italy, has applied for registration of the adjoining trade-mark for cinematograph films. No claim is made to the words "Societa Anonima Milano-Films" nor to "Bovisa presso Milano." Use is claimed since about 1912.

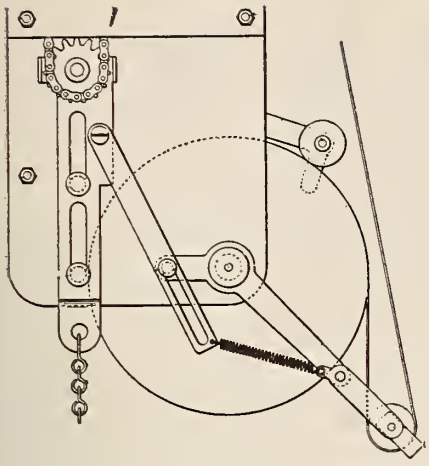
L. Gevert & Co., Vieux-Deu, near Antwerp, Belgium, make application for registration of "Etral" as a mark for photographic goods and apparatus, used since November, 1911.

"Velventina" was refused registration over "Velvet" for same class of goods.

In re Majestic Motion Picture Co. v. Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co., Justice Henry Bischoff of the New York Supreme Court has ruled in favor of the defendant, as will be seen from the following quotation from the decision rendered, to wit:

"From the allegations it appears that this defendant corporation has built up a trade of distributing motion picture films in the interests of firms affiliated with it, and has refused to the plaintiff the use of its channels of distribution, except at a rate of payment excessive of the charge made to its affiliated firms for the same service. In other words, the plaintiff asserts the right to compel those concerns in a private, lawful enterprise, to receive it as an associate and give it the benefit of a trade built up through efforts which it has not seen fit to make for its own independent benefit. In matters closely touching the public interest, a monopoly of trade, to the exclusion of one whose service might further the public good, may be regulated or restrained, but the subject matter of this action—a distribution of motion picture films—is not within this class of publicity."

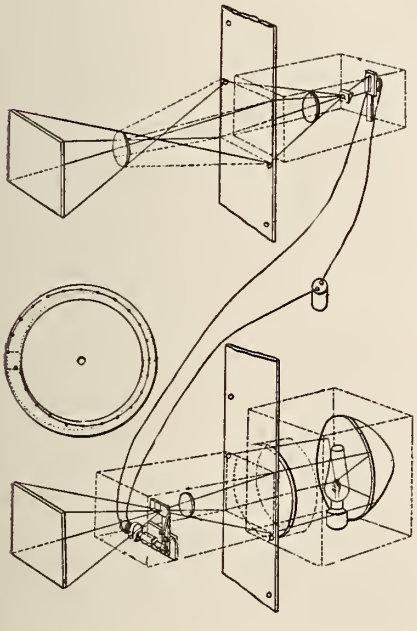
A contemporary asserts that unctuous John Bunny is anxious to do serious stunts—play Hamlet, and so forth. "Angels and ministers of grace defend us!" Funny Bunny. "Oh, that this too, too solid flesh would melt."



Patent No. 1,039,212, to W. L. Sullivan, of Ferguson, Mo., assignor to the Temco Mfg. Co., of St. Louis, Mo., a corporation of Missouri.

This invention relates to ticket vending machines, the principal object being to provide means for unwinding a sufficient number of tickets from the ticket roll to slacken the ticket between the ticket roll and the feeding drum, so as to prevent the pins borne by the drum from tearing or mutilating the tickets during the operation of feeding same from the machine. The accompanying view represents a side elevation of part of a ticket-vending and registering machine with the unwind means attached thereto.

"Dower is the widow's last plank in her shipwreck." (Engle v. Engle, 3 West Virginia 246). Then, to follow the simile, to marry a widow is to rescue a shipwrecked mariner on the sea of matrimony, and possibly to precipitate an additional marry-time disaster.



Patent No. 1,040,110, issued to Anders Christian Anderson and Lauritz Sophus Anderson of Copenhagen, Denmark, is for a System of Transmitting Images to a Distance, and if it accomplishes all that is claimed for it, it is a wonderful and epochal invention.

Not only are images reproduced at a distance, but color and movement are also duplicated. The accompanying perspecto-diadram illustrates symbolically the installation collectively, comprising a transmitting station and a receiving station connected by an electric circuit. The circular insert shows an endless ray intercepter in lieu of a ribbon. The upper part of the diagram represents the transmitting station, the lower the reproduction station. These comprise two similar apparatus functioning simultaneously, their synchronous movements being regulated by electrically actuated clock work interposed in the electric circuit. As in the D'Albe's optophone noted last week, selenium plays an important part in this system, its sensitiveness to light and change of electrical resistance under variations thereof being utilized at both the transmitting and receiving stations. At the receiving station the rays from a scene or object pass through a lens to a rapidly moving ribbon, opaque except at certain perforated points diagonally arranged. These holes are spaced apart in such manner that only one point can be located at each instant within the field of the image in the dark chamber of which the traveling ribbon forms the rear. The luminous rays passing through the perforations in the ribbon are directed by a lens to a prism. The rays of the spectrum are thus produced on a rotating disc. Opposite the spectrum and against the disc is placed a selenium cell. Openings in the disc correspond to the width of each colored band, while their distance apart corresponds to the total length of the spectrum. There is thus only one opening that can be located at each instant in front of the spectrum. The electric current transmitted by the selenium cell actuates an electromagnet at the receiving station, where the rays from a light projector are separated by means of a duplicate perforated traveling screen, and other accessories—the coloration being effected by transparent bands representing the spectrum and worked synchronously with the spectrum wave-transmitting means at the receiving station. The speed of the apparatus employed is necessarily very rapid.

Only a general idea of the modus operandi and results claimed can be here afforded as the specification of the patent is very long and intricate, and must be resorted to for details. Used in conjunction with the telephone, it is claimed that it is possible by this means to see as well as hear a person at the other end of the line. By means of an interpreter it will be possible either to see or to talk by employing only the telephone wire. Finally, the apparatus can be employed for verifying documents at a distance, for exhibiting samples, machines and objects in motion, etc. It can also be employed in the army, not to mention passing events and theatrical representations.

The inventors claim specifically the method of transmitting colored images to a distance, which comprises projecting an image of the object, point by point, on a selenium cell, separating the rays falling on said cell, as regards their color, projecting rays on a screen in correspondence with the aforesaid projection of the image, varying the intensity of such light rays in accordance with the changes in the selenium cell, and varying the color of said rays in correspondence with the aforesaid separation of the rays.

At the banquet of the American Iron and Steel Institute, held in Pittsburgh this week, moving pictures showing the progress of iron ore from the mine to the moulder were displayed. Another evidence of the utilitarian value of the "Movies."

They are also becoming of importance as an adjunct to the study of disease, as witness the fact that in Philadelphia recently Dr. Theodore H. Weisenberg, of the Medico Chirurgical College, exhibited a remarkable series of motion pictures of cases of nervous diseases, to an audience of two hundred physicians and surgeons. The motion pictures were made and furnished by Sigmond Loubin, who is deeply interested in the use of the art for the advancement of science.

Judging from the manifest attention and approval bestowed by the public on scientific films generally, it is a wonder that self-interest does not prompt their more frequent projection upon the screen aside from their unquestionable educational value.

A Moving Picture

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of the Moving Picture News.

Geo. Wm. Miatt

(Full copies of any of the above forwarded for ten cents each. Order by number.)

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

VITAGRAPH

AN OFFICIAL APPOINTMENT (Nov. 4).—From his Virginia Home, Colonel Armistead accompanied by his faithful servant, Amber, travels to Washington, where the Colonel has made application for an appointment in the State Department. Arriving in Washington the Colonel finds a reasonable boarding house and sets out for the State Department office. He finds little encouragement there. Day after day he makes the trip to the department office. The young clerks make fun of the old man and his troubles. Time goes on until, with no money to pay rent or food, the old man is threatened with starvation. His faithful old servant, Amber, takes his fiddle to a street corner and plays, thereby collecting enough to pay the landlady. In the meantime the clerks at the department office decide to play a joke on the old man. They fake up an official appointment and send it to the Colonel. The Colonel is overjoyed and rushes as fast as his old limbs can carry him to the office. On the way he stops a runaway horse, ignorant of the fact that the frightened young lady in the vehicle is the daughter of the Secretary of State. She thanks him kindly and drives off. He goes to the office and there learns of the joke played upon him. It almost breaks his heart. He goes home with bowed head.

Soon after, the Secretary's daughter calls at her father's office to tell him of her deliverance from certain death. There she discovers the bunch of violets which her father had that morning purchased for her, and which she had, in turn, given the old gentleman who had stopped her horse. He had dropped them in the office on learning of the hoax. She coaxes her father to write her deliverer another and legitimate appointment, which the latter does. She arrives with the genuine paper, just too late. The Colonel has gone to fill an appointment in the service of his Creator.

THE FACE OR THE VOICE (Nov. 5).—Beauty is only skin deep, but it certainly attracts people, and that is the reason Undine Borden always secures the attention of others. Her sister Myna is not so fair to look upon, but she possesses a cultivated voice that charms and entrances her hearers. Robert Hale, a young millionaire, passing their home, hears Myna singing. He listens attentively, and after she has finished Undine happens to come to the window. He believes the voice must be associated with the beautiful face. He bows to her, and through this incident they become acquainted. He wooes her, and every time he calls to see her asks her to sing, but she always evades his request, pleading sore throat or some other indisposition. Finally she arranges with Myna to deceive Mr. Hale. She tells him that she will sing for him in the choir-loft of the village church and her sister Myna will play the organ for her, while he sits in one of the pews below. This plan is carried out. While she stands at the choir-rail in the choir-loft, Myna not only plays but sings a beautiful anthem which her sister pretends to sing. Mr. Hale is so impressed by Undine's accomplishment his admiration is unbounded. Poor Myna feels as though she had aided and abetted a fraud. She wanders away by herself into the woods and alone she reflectively sings the anthem.

Hale, who has just left Undine, is passing through the woods and overhears the sweet notes of Myna's song. He hastens to her side and there learns for himself the deception perpetrated upon him. He then realizes the difference between Undine and Myna, and that it is not only the voice that attracted him, but that it is her own sweet self. He is not long in rejecting Undine and declaring his intention of marrying her sister, Myna.

CRYSTAL

THE GYPSY FLIRT (Nov. 10).—Chester and Mabel are out walking. They meet Carlotta and Pedro, wandering gypsies. Carlotta tells Mabel's fortune and makes quite an impression on Chester, and he also has his fortune told. The next day they meet again and Mabel catches Chester in the act of kissing the pretty Gypsy girl. Insanely jealous, Mabel plans to teach Chester a lesson. She meets Pedro and pays him to make love to her in front of Chester. They come upon Chester hugging Carlotta, and Pedro, waxing wroth, chases Chester with a knife. Carlotta attacks Mabel and both the girls and the men engage the other in combat with the Gypsies victorious. Finally Pedro explains to Carlotta and all ends happily, when a moment before tumult reigned.

Here, again, Miss Pearl White as the Gypsy girl, adds another great portrayal to her many successes, making one of the best comedies of the season.

On the same reel:

MAN WANTED.—Miss Finch writes to a matrimonial agency for a husband. The agency sends Mr. I. S. Sharp with a letter of introduction. He loses the letter. Chester Barnett, a fresh young drummer, finds the letter and visits the house. He meets Miss Finch's niece, Irene, and is very much taken up with her. She explains that the letter is for her aunt and inflicts Miss Finch on Chester. Miss Finch goes to get something for Chester to drink, but he escapes before her return, and goes into the garden with Irene. Meanwhile the real Sharp arrives, and he and Chester have quite an altercation as to who is who. Just then a telegram arrives from the matrimonial agency explaining that Sharp is a bigamist, and to please hold him until the police arrive. Miss Finch sends for the constable, who arrives, and being unable to determine who is Sharp, takes both Chester and Sharp to the lock-up. Irene then finds Chester's valise with his name on it and thus effects his release. He makes love to Irene and Miss Finch being left to her own resources, continues her untiring efforts to find a man.

An original farce, with thrills of laughter running through it without cessation.

RELIANCE

THE FAITH HEALER (Nov. 13).—John Morton who loses his eyesight, discovers that his wife loves another man, who returns her affection. Rather than spoil her happiness and realizing she no longer cares for him, he goes away that she may get a divorce and be free. Alone, he wanders into the mountains, where he is found by a girl, Jess, who seeing he is blind, takes him to her father's cabin. Morton develops an ability to cure the poor, simple mountain folk by praying over them. They have faith in him and his prayers and he never fails them. He becomes famous all through the mountains as the Faith Healer. Richard Mason, the man Morton's former wife is now married to, is stricken with paralysis. His wife takes him to a sanitarium in the mountains in the hope of having him cured. It so happens that this place is located very near where Morton is performing his wonderful miracles. Jess, seeing the sick man, suggests to his wife that she send for Morton. Without knowing whom it is he is called upon to heal, Morton starts for the sanitarium. His former wife recognizes him at once, and fearing he will refuse to attend her husband if he knows who he is, she keeps very quiet. But the Faith Healer soons finds out his patient's identity. He opens his Bible and prays—but the man who was not a believer and whose life was not simple and good like the mountain people's dies as Morton reads the last verse.

THE VIRGIN OF THE FIRE (Nov. 16).—During the cave-man period, some 20,000 years ago, Myrh, a virgin of the tribe in charge of the sacred fire, meets Wanah, a young warrior belonging to another tribe. She flees through the woods with Wanah in hot pursuit. He falls down a cliff and is hurt. She, woman like, annoyed he should have given up the chase so soon, looks down and sees him lying unconscious. She drags him into the cave where he is attended. During his convalescence, Wanah explores the neighborhood and sees a tribe of small eaters crawling among the rocks and preparing to attack the small group of women left alone in the caves. He comes to the rescue and is injured. When he recovers he hears that Myrh was taken by the black men. Regardless of his injuries he follows and, hiding behind some bushes, he flings his spears at them, and frightens them so that they run away, leaving the girl. Wanah is about to make off with her when the black men discover he is alone and return to the fight. He bids the girl run away and decides to sacrifice his life for her. The girl meets her own tribe and urges them to hurry back to Wanah's rescue. There is a fierce battle, after which the tribe of black men is exterminated. Upon the death of the old chief, Wanah is elected to his place and he selected Myrh as his bride.

BIOGRAPH

AT THE BASKET PICNIC (Oct. 28).—Dave is invited to the Sunday school basket picnic and calls for his girl on the way out, but in the school yard he meets his hated rival, a well-dressed chap, who is quite attractive to the village maidens. Dave excels in one thing over the well-dressed chap—pugilistic qualifications which he makes use of in whipping his rival, but by so doing he disgraces himself before the pastor and pupils of the school. Later on, however, Dave is given a chance to prove himself a hero in the eyes of all.

On the same reel:

A REAL ESTATE DEAL.—Two clerks, who are in love with their employer's daughter, are given a chance to prove their mettle by the father. The plan is as follows: The clerk who disposes of a certain piece of property which has been on their books for a long time will be considered the daughter's accepted suitor. Off they start, vying with each other in their alluring persuasions to the several customers who go in search of real estate. Their strenuous endeavors are the source of extremely comic situations.

THE MUSKETEERS OF PIG ALLEY (Oct. 31).—Much is printed from time to time in the newspapers of the workings of the gangsters, but the public gains but a vague idea of the actual facts. Hence, this picture production, which does not run very strong as to plot, is simply intended to show vividly the doings of the gangster type of people. Much has been done, and is still being done, to wipe out this evil which has long been a menace to the respectable citizen, and this picture shows the situation as it is, and the extreme necessity for radical action on the part of the authorities. While the theme of the story is decidedly interesting, it also serves as a consistent vehicle to present the facts.

"LUX"

OH! MY PIPE (Nov. 1).—These few comical scenes only go to prove how dearly every smoker cherishes his beloved pipe. Smithson is taking home a new clay pipe and, even after being flattened out by a massive steam roller, his first thoughts are for the safety of his pipe.

On the same reel:

HENPECKED'S BID FOR FREEDOM.—Henpecked decides to escape from the tyranny of women's rule. At first he contemplates suicide, but after casting off his hat and coat he comes to the conclusion that it would be unwise to ruin a life so precious. He therefore decides to go and make a night of it with the B'hoys, who are delighted to see him.

ESSANAY

THE LETTER (Oct. 30).—Carleton Kirby, a thieving politician, offers Senator Denton ten thousand dollars to vote for his bill in the Senate. Denton refuses and angrily dismisses Kirby from the house. Later in the day, however, Denton changes his mind and writes Kirby a letter agreeing to vote for the bill if the offer still holds good. This letter he neglects to mail and leaves it in his desk. Called out of town, Denton is seated in the railway station when his disorganized brain conjures up a vision of himself on the floor of the Senate, congratulated first by his colleagues for putting the bill through and then, as the price of his vote is discovered, surrounded by a

KINEMACOLOR
FILM SERVICE
TREMENDOUS SUCCESS
IN EVERY HOUSE WHERE INSTALLED
Write for Testimonials from Satisfied Customers
Kinemacolor 1600 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

cursing, angry mob, who threaten his very life. Hastening to a telegraph office, Denton wires his daughter, Renee, to destroy the letter in his desk addressed to Kirby. Winslow, a friend of Kirby's, discovers the contents of the wire, hastens to Denton's home, secures the incriminating letter, substitutes a blank in its place, and takes the paper at once to Kirby, who conceals it in the top of his hollow walking stick for safety. The theft is discovered and Denton realizes he is trapped. A detective is employed, but fails to find the letter in Kirby's house. To save her father, Renee now adopts the disguise of a lady agent, hires a tough to shoot and scream under Kirby's window and, in the excitement, secures the letter from the hollow cane. Returning home she restores it to her father who, with a prayer of thanksgiving in his heart, takes her in his arms and gives thanks for bis salvation.

"THE FISHERMAN'S LUCK" (Oct. 31).—Fishley and his daughter arrive at the summer resort, and Dolores is introduced to Mr. Steppling, who plays at the summer theatre. Fishley discovers them together one morning and angrily orders Steppling to cease his attentions. Steppling tells his troubles to his friend Calvert, and waits an opportunity to get even with Fishley. It comes when the old man dons his fishing togs and hikes down to the brook to catch a few live ones. Tacking a sign lettered "No fishing allowed," to a nearby tree, Steppling disguises as a constable and Calvert rigs up as a tramp. Each now secures a string of fish, then Steppling interrupts old Fishley and starts to place him under arrest. In the excitement Fishley falls in the brook, scrambles out and takes wildly to his heels. Removing his disguise Steppling hastens after him and finds him buying Calvert's string of fish. Old Fishley is now given the surprise of his life when Calvert removes his disguise, but Steppling agrees to keep it a secret if Fishley will allow him to court Dolores. Fishley agrees, they present him with both strings of fish, and he is telling the greatest fish story on record at the hotel when Steppling's former sweetheart exposes the whole scheme by telling she saw the boys give Fishley the fish. Therefore, all parties are badly stung.

GAUMONT

THE EMPEROR'S MESSAGE (Nov. 7).—Napoleon en route to one of his campaigns stops at the castle of a beautiful marchioness. Disregarding for the moment the lures of war, he disports himself with the lady and her retinue, in the course of which he developed a very friendly feeling for the marchioness. As he goes away to join his command, she asks that in the hour of battle he send her a message. As the carnage is about to begin, Napoleon delivers the promised message to a gunner-boy and tells him to take it to the haven of his happiness. The gunner-boy is reluctant to leave on the eve of battle. On his way to the marchioness' castle, he is ambushed by the enemy, but faithful to the emperor he drags himself, wounded, with the love message safe in his bosom. As he delivers it he falls unconscious. The battle won, Napoleon returns to the scene of his pleasures. He finds his lady somewhat cool in her reception. The answer is found in her depression because of the serious illness of the bearer of the Emperor's message, who, to bring pleasure to her, had endangered his life. She parts the curtains unveiling the wounded hero as he lies on the bed convalescent. The Emperor signalizes his appreciation by pinning the cross of the Legion of Honor upon the breast of the faithful boy.

THE ADVENTUROUS ADOPTION (Nov. 12).—Our young friend Jimmie forms a sudden attachment for a little waif in the streets whom he finds playing an accordion for alms. The little urchin, late that night, rises from his pallet and goes to serenade his new friend. Jimmie makes a rope of the bed-clothes up which clambers the ragged Arcbie. Disregarding the formalities of undressing, Jimmie puts Archie in his own immaculate bed, dirty shoes and all, while he himself sleeps upon the mat like a faithful Towser. In the morning Jimmie hides Archie in a closet until he should have returned from school. In the evening when he arrives, the key to the closet is missing. There is an interchange of notes and Archie directs Jimmie to go to his nefarious companions, who have the somewhat sinister occupation of second-story men, and tell them of Archie's imprisonment. The two rascals come as requested and with alacrity. They tie Jimmie to the bed and prepare to rob the house, when the redoubtful Archie upsets the closet upon the bold pair, pinning them to the floor. Archie then releases Jimmie. A policeman arrives at the propitious moment and collars the two miscreants, whereupon Archie is dubbed a real fellow and is adopted therewith.

Evidence of the part the Gaumont Weekly takes in the moulding of public opinion and of its value in foretelling the future is the fact that in its issue No. 5, released April 5, was published a picture of William Sulzer, naming him as the probable candidate for the governorship of New York State on the Democratic ticket. That these pictures, viewed by thousands in the Empire State and elsewhere did much to form opinion and influence minds toward the selection of Congressman Sulzer for gubernatorial honors, is indubitable. It illustrates the power of a new press. It also exemplifies modernity in prophecy. In earlier days prophecy could only be heralded orally. With the advent of the printing press, it crept into cold type. Now we have the face of the man and fragments of his life seen, weighed and decided upon by the people who have power to make him.

AMERICAN

MAN'S CALLING (Nov. 11).—To the public, who views the American release, entitled "Man's Calling," it will be a matter of great interest to know that this picture contains much of historic interest of the days of early California. The Mission, used as a background, was founded December 4, 1786, two years after the death of the devoted padre, Junipero Serra, who had often expressed the hope that a Mission would be established at this place. December 4th, being the day of the blessed Saint Barbara, the cross was raised and blessed and the Mission dedicated in her name. The ceremonies were not completed at this time as Fages, the Governor, was absent and he had ordered operations to be suspended until his arrival. On his return the first mass was said by Padre Paterna, a sermon was preached by Lasuen, and thus was completed the founding of la Mission de Santa Barbara Virjen y Martir. The church, 18 x 20 feet, was completed in 1789, and by the end of 1790 there were numerous Mission buildings well built of adobe and roofed with tile. On November 10, 1793, Van Couver anchored at Santa Barbara, where he was courteously received by the Commandant Goycoechea, and hospitably entertained by the Padres of the Franciscan order, who saw the importance of a favorable impression to be made upon visiting foreigners. Padre Antonio Paterna, the founder and a pioneer of 1771, died in 1793 at Santa Barbara Mission. In 1793 was erected the church, or Mission, shown in this picture, also the enclosures for the cemetery, where the early fathers of the Mission, together with some 5,000 Indian converts, sleep.

Man's vocation is not always one of choice; it is more often one of circumstances. This story illustrates the fallacy of parents selecting, without regard to the natural inclination or ability of the child, a line of pursuit or means of livelihood, which accounts for the large number of dismal failures in life. In this instance, the father of John Wallace, prompted by his religious fervor, urges the boy to enter a monastery. John obligingly acquiesces and starts on the journey, but later changes his mind, seeks employment on a farm and subesquently marries. Old man Wallace often meditates about his boy and watches the pilgrimage of the padres, hoping to get a glimpse of his son.

John finally visits his father in company with his wife and child. The disappointment of the father is intense, but the sight of his grandchild softens his heart and he yields to nobler sentiment.

The beautiful detail of this story will be appreciated.

THE INTRUSION OF LOMPOC (Nov. 4).—Lompoc, a quiet little inland town, moves peacefully along from week to week, with little more excitement than the flutter of the leaves. The stage-coach rolls up to one hotel each day and the usual quota of visitors arrive and depart with mechanical precision until one day a typical gambler, of pleasing manner, appeared and wrought consternation in the hearts of a number of the fair sex, aroused the jealousy of the local swains and the undying hatred of a former victim. There was a period of excitement entirely foreign to the little community of home lovers. When the excitement was over there were a few sadder folk in Lompoc, a few more ardent lovers, the town had rid itself of a great evil, which promised to undermine the welfare of the community, the atmosphere of Lompoc had been purified and the old rhythm was resumed.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 45—1912 (Nov. 4).

ANNE BOLEYN (Nov. 5).—An epoch-making occurrence, and one of the most important in all history, is herein recounted with a faithfulness to detail which makes it tense, dramatic and entertaining. The perfect coloring gives the atmosphere of grandeur which is prevalent in the palaces of kings. It is the story of King Henry VIII of England and his infatuation for Anne Boleyn, which resulted in the founding of a new religion.

BROKEN HEARTS (Nov. 6).—The sale of his copper mine, although the happiest event in the life of Jim Brooks, came near to proving the saddest. His attempt to surprise his wife arouses her suspicion, and becoming heartbroken over what she considered her husband's faithfulness, she attempted suicide. Jim's Indian man servant drags her from the railroad track just as the train thunders past. Brooks returns from the city loaded down with presents for his wife, only to find a note of rebuke from her. All his dreams of happiness are shattered in a moment, but the Indian succeeds in bringing the estranged couple together and, after a word of explanation, they settle down to enjoy their good fortune.

VICTIMS OF FATE (Nov. 7).—Lieut. Somers, military attache to the American Embassy at Japan, marries a Japanese girl, and they live happily until the Lieutenant is ordered back to America. His wife, of course, expects to return with him, but he informs her that their marriage must terminate in the regular course provided for by Japanese custom. The girl is heartbroken. Her brother, Count Nidsuka, calls at her home after the Lieutenant has gone to the United States, but finds only her body and a note explaining that her husband has forsaken her. The Japanese vows vengeance.

When Somers returns to Washington he renews his acquaintance with the pretty daughter of General Meeker, and they are soon to be married. Count Nidsuka, who has followed the Lieutenant from Japan, presents his card to General Meeker and tells him of the Lieutenant's action and the tragedy which it caused. The General is furious, for Somers has been courting his daughter, and he calls Somers before him. The Lieutenant, confronted by the Japanese, confesses his duplicity and surrenders his sword.

On the same reel:

DINAN, FRANCE.—The beautiful scenes in this quaint old town are conveyed to the audience in an excellent manner by artistic coloring and superb photography.

HALF A PINT OF MILK (Nov. 8).—The adventures of an awkward husband in securing a pint of milk for the baby, as shown in this film, are highly amusing, and the leading rôle is well played by a clever comedian.

On the same reel:

THE SCARAB.—An interesting study of a very useful insect at its work.

On the same reel:

A TRIP UP THE ELBE.—A little journey up the beautiful Elbe, which is the rendezvous for the pleasure seekers of Central Germany.

BUSTER TO THE RESCUE (Nov. 9).—Mrs. Morton, a widow, is in charge of the post-office at Blissville, Arizona. The office is visited one day by two desperadoes, who bind and gag Mrs. Morton and her baby daughter, but her young son, Buster, gets away and hurries to summon the sheriff. In order that the crime will be covered, the bandits set fire to the house, but with Buster in the lead the sheriff and his posse return, rescue Mrs. Morton and the little girl, extinguish the blaze and, with the assistance of a faithful dog, trace and capture the two desperadoes. The riding of little Buster Morton in this film will bring your audience to their feet.

EDISON

A ROMANCE OF THE RAILS (Nov. 5).—The thrilling rescue of the miserly old Barton from almost certain death before a locomotive is sufficiently strong to recommend "A Romance of the Rails," but when the strong characterizations given by some of the favorite Edison players are added to this, the film is certainly one of unusual strength.

Old Silas Barton has lived for thirty years in a cottage owned by the Central & Southern Railroad. Having had no use for the property the company has paid no attention to it, but when a new spur is contemplated Barton is ordered to vacate. He refuses, and the legal department of the road threatens to forcibly eject him.

The location being near one of the division headquarters, Frank Denning, assistant to the superintendent, is sent as the company's representative. He meets Barton's niece, who keeps house for the old man. She is young and pretty and Denning's disagreeable task is made doubly so by his having to tell her his mission.

During the time that intervenes between the first notice to vacate and the final ejectment order, Denning and Alice learn to love each other and he is a steady caller, but always unknown to the uncle.

When Barton is handed the notice of ejectment he foolishly connects the agent Denning with the order and threatens revenge on him. He has heard Denning tell Alice that he has business further up the road but will return on his velocipede later. The old man locks the doors and nails the windows down—takes his revolver and starts out to revenge himself upon the young man by shooting him from under the bridge. Alice, realizing his object, breaks through the window and follows a few moments later.

As Barton crosses the high trestle his foot goes through the ties and his leg is broken, just as the express is due.

Denning, returning from up the track, sees his plight from a distance, races madly to him and carries him to safety just as the train rushes by.

The shock is fatal to Barton and he succumbs, but not before realizing his unfairness toward Denning and giving Alice his hoarded wealth as he joins her hand to that of the man she loves.

A QUEEN FOR A DAY (Nov. 6).—The black savages in the wilds of Africa should be taught a religion, so Deacon Jones claims, and, being a missionary, he started for Africa with his daughter and her fat colored maid. On the same ship is a party of young men bound for the same spot on a hunting expedition. One of the young men falls in love with the missionary's daughter, and she with him, but their courtship is broken off abruptly when they reach the shores of their destination. There they part company, each going his and her way, the young suitor promising to call on her in the immediate future.

In a lonely pass the missionary, his daughter and maid are captured by a band of Zulus and are taken to the camp before their chief, a wild-eyed ferocious savage. The latter falls desperately in love with the colored maid and compels her to become queen of the Zulus. While the ceremonies are in progress the young suitor is brought in a captive. After a brief council the Zulus seem determined to put the white captive to death. The new Queen now strikes a brilliant idea which makes it possible for them to escape, and accordingly she signifies her desire to be executioner. This is granted by the chief. Taking advantage of their superstitious nature she manages by a clever ruse to lead the captives uninjured to freedom. Their escape is soon discovered by the Zulus, who pursue them and almost recapture them. After several hairbreadth escapes they arrive safely at the mission, where a miniature battle occurs. Good marksmanship and trusty rifles are too much for the Zulus and they flee in wild disorder.

Danger has now passed and the young lovers are brought happily together, while the colored maid, who was Queen for a day, is the heroine of the hour.

LUBIN

THE WATER RATS (Nov. 9).—Bill Graw is the leader of the Water Rats, a gang of thieves infesting the water front. While ill, he is kicked out by his gang. He attempts to steal a locket from Elsie, daughter of Dane, a tugboat captain. He is caught, but is befriended by Elsie, and for her he cherishes a dog-like devotion and gratitude. Bill, restored to health and the chiefship of his gang, saves Elsie from the thugs. Tom Williams, Elsie's sweetheart, is a young police officer. He determines to break up the Water Rats gang. Surprising them at work, he opens fire, but his fire is returned and the thieves are about to escape when assistance, brought by Elsie, arrives. The Water Rats seize a motor boat and flee; the police give chase in Dane's tug, with Elsie at the wheel. There is a fierce running fight until the gangsters' ammunition is exhausted. Bill jumps from the motor boat and swims ashore. Williams follows him, the tug continuing the pursuit of the motor boat. On shore Bill and Williams grapple. Bill is victorious, and is choking Williams to death when the locket which Bill attempted to steal and which Elsie subsequently gave Williams, identifies the officer as Elsie's sweetheart. Bill sees that escape is impossible. He thinks to show his gratitude to Elsie by doing Williams a good turn, and clasps handcuffs on his own wrists. Meanwhile the tug has overtaken and captured the motor boat, and now returns for Williams. Williams, still unconscious when found, is supposed to have handcuffed his man before giving out. Williams is promoted and receives a handsome reward. Captain Dane gets over an original dislike for Williams and the love affair ends happily.

THE WAY OF THE MOUNTAINS (Nov. 11).—Don Allen and Bob Taylor, two young mountaineers, love Mary Beall, a lass of the hills. Tommy, Mary's little brother, favors Bob, much to the chagrin of Don. Later Mary goes down to a water hole to get a bucket of water when Don spies her and determines to declare his love. He follows her and in his rough way endeavors to force his love upon her. She repels him. Bob, who has been hunting in the hills, hears her scream and rushes to her assistance, besting Don. The favored one then escorts her home. Don waits his opportunity to get even, and when Bob leaves the house he shoots at his enemy, misses him, and kills Tommy, the girl's little brother. Bob turns the body over to a relative of the family and follows Don. Coming up to him on horseback, they have a gruelling fight. Don, overcoming Bob, throws him over his head to the ground, leaving him for dead, rides back to the Beall home, telling them that Bob did the shooting. Mary, who is determined to avenge her brother's death, comes upon Bob and assists him to reach home in time to give the lie to Don's testimony. Don is taken out by the rough mountaineers and one can easily guess his finish, and we leave Bob and Mary and the father with their dead.

ECLIPSE—George Kleine

THE QUEEN OF SPADES (Nov. 6).—Frank Pryor, an ambitious young reporter, is assigned to investigate a mysterious suicide club called the "Friends of Plato." He "gets busy" immediately and persuades his friend Mr. Davis to introduce him to the club.

The president of the organization places before him a set of rules which declare that each member shall agree to put an end to his life when it shall be so decided by lot. Pryor willingly affixes his signature to an application for membership.

It happens that a meeting is just about to be held to decide who is to be the "fortunate one." Pryor and the others group themselves around a table while the president proceeds slowly to deal out a deck of cards to the members, who, with bated breath, hesitate to examine them for fear they shall draw the fatal Queen of Spades. Round and round go the cards until finally Frank draws the fatal card. The others, after congratulating him, quietly file out of the room, leaving him a pistol to do the deed. The affair now appears very serious, but he cannot escape. His consternation is increased by the appearance of four masked figures who peer in at him through the barred windows.

When he has about given up all hope, Mr. Davis and several friends come and rescue him from his terrible plight.

CINES—George Kleine

LOVE vs. GRATITUDE (Nov. 5).—Grace is an actress of great beauty and charming personality. George is her most devoted admirer. She likes George as a comrade, but cannot make up her mind to regard him in any other way.

One day Grace receives a visit from a dear friend, Irene Ferri, who asks her assistance, explaining that her father is unable to meet a note and is threatened with bankruptcy.

Grace is sympathetic, but helpless. Suddenly a happy thought occurs to her: She will send for George and ask his opinion. Without hesitation the generous-hearted fellow agrees to take up the note and thus save Irene's parents from disgrace. Needless to say, he is overwhelmed with expressions of gratitude from the two girls.

Soon afterwards, taking courage again, he declares his love for Grace, and she, remembering his generosity, accepts him. Seeing her motive, he, in turn, refuses, saying that he loves her too well to accept gratitude in place of affection.

They part in silence. But several weeks later George receives a note from Grace requesting him to call. When he asks what she has to say to him, she says nothing, but a reply is not necessary; he can read the answer in her eyes.

On the same reel:

THE GOLDEN SHELL OF PALERMO (SICILY) (Nov. 5).—We are taken on a delightful trip along the poetical Palermo shores, during which we are able to view many of the most beautiful sights of the island, culminating with a glorious sunset scene in the "Golden Shell" on a summer evening.

REX

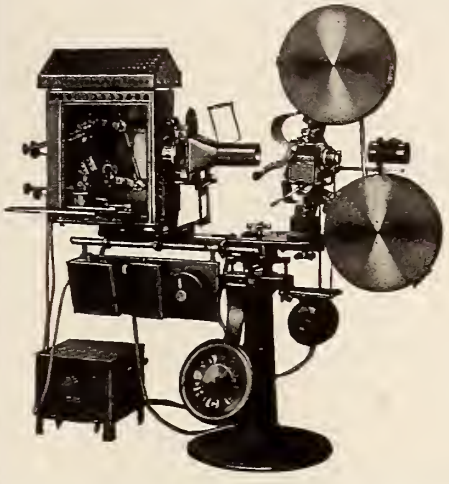
THE HONOR OF THE FAMILY (Nov. 7).—Claude the elder brother, is heir to the estates of Sir James by reason of the laws of England. He is a rogue and spendthrift. Gerald, the younger brother, leaves England to seek his fortune in America, being the recipient of a remittance at stated intervals. He goes to the mountains of the West and engages in mining. There he meets Marja and admires the girl. Claude comes to visit him, sees the girl, remarks her comeliness and marks her for his own. Gerald notices this and, knowing his brother, warns him to let the girl alone. Marja is infatuated with the well-dressed visitor and is easily influenced. She consents to a secret marriage and Claude returns to England, promising to come back and claim her. Some months later Gerald proposes marriage to the girl and she sobbingly tells him she has married Claude. Gerald remains silent and does not denounce his brother. Marja does not hear from Claude but Gerald receives a paper from London announcing the marriage of Claude to a society woman, and he is furious with rage. Marja, broken-hearted over the silence of Claude, attempts suicide by throwing herself from an eminence and is found by Gerald, a cripple for life. He goes to civilization and purchases a wheel chair that she may get about. Her father dies and Gerald takes her to his cabin, he sleeping outside in a tent. She grieves for Claude and he writes her a letter purporting to come from Claude, sending her some money and breathing love and devotion, and she is happy for a time. Gerald receives a letter from his father announcing the death of Claude and calling him home to assume his position as the heir of the estates of Sir James. Gerald places the letter in his pocket together with the newspaper account of the marriage of Claude and decides not to return to England but to remain and care for the lawful wife of his brother, whom he has grown to love fondly. Some time afterward he goes to his mine, wheeling the girl along with him. He wheels her to the mouth of the shaft and leaves her, after throwing his coat over the arm of her chair. His devotion has caused her to love him. She tries to change her position and the coat falls to the ground. She picks it up and the letter from England and the paper falls out. She reads the announcement of the marriage of Claude and then, feeling justified, she reads the letter announcing the death of Claude and of Gerald being heir to the estates and a gentleman. She reflects and then draws the forged letter from her bosom and sees that it was written after the announcement of the marriage. It is all revealed to her. The sacrifice of Gerald—the double duty, love and a desire to uphold the honor of the proud English family. She cries to Gerald but cannot make him hear. In her desperation she tries to wheel her chair down the slope and it is overturned. Her cries bring Gerald and when he comes she shows him the newspaper and the letter. He is silent. He cannot explain. She reaches out her arms to him and is clasped to his heart.

CHAMPION

A TRAMP'S STRATEGY (Nov. 4).—Hiram Blackmore has a daughter whom he is desirous to see marry Sam Mercer, a country lad, who lacks much in the way of manly spirit. The daughter is in love with a young salesman, Bob Moore, who makes frequent visits to her town. This love affair is strongly opposed by the girl's father and mother. The parents see the contents of one of Bob's letters to their daughter, in which he tells of his intention to ask them for their daughter's hand. On his arrival in town the parents forbid Julia seeing her sweetheart, but the girl, rebellious, is on hand to greet her sweetheart as he gets off the train. The lovers decide to make one last atempt at gaining Julia's parents' consent, but are unsuccessful. The young

The Only True Test
The Test of Service

RUN TWELVE HOURS PER DAY FOR ONE YEAR WITHOUT ONE REPAIR



FALLS CITIES AMUSEMENT CO.
NOVELTY THEATRE

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 9th, 1912.

The Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:—

One year ago today I made a statement that I could run the MOTIOGRAPH machine in the Novelty Theatre a year, without any repairs, which I think is a good record.

This I did, and they were run on an average of 12 hours every day in the year.

Yours very truly,
Ernest Carpenter.

DON'T STRAIN YOUR IMAGINATION and buy a machine only on the Advertising Value.

VALUE THAT CAN'T BE SHOWN and proven, value which is imagined, is a delusion.

YOU NEED NOT STRETCH your imagination to realize that solid steel "Gig Made" Gears will outwear a cheap "type" metal gear with a highly polished nickel-plated face.

THE GUARANTEE ON THE 1913 MODEL THE MOST LIBERAL OF ALL

YOU CAN BUY DIRECT FROM THE FACTORY OR FROM RELIABLE DEALERS EVERYWHERE

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING CO.
568 W. RANDOLPH STREET :: :: CHICAGO, ILL.

OTTAWA TALKS
FROM THE REX THEATRE

FILM SUPPLY COMPANY
New York

Gentlemen:-

Your prompt and courteous co-operation in reply to my letter induced me to decide in favor of your films and I am very much pleased.

I will send you photos of the inside of the theatre so you can see for yourself what we are doing.

Thanking you and assuring you of our support. I am,

Yours,

Harry DeWitt Carr,
Manager Rex Theatre

LET US HOOK YOU UP TO A LIVE SERVICE

Our Exclusive Agents are everywhere. Write for name of nearest office

Film Supply Co. of America

133-135-137 West 44th St. NEW YORK

DISTRIBUTING TEN ESTABLISHED FILM BRANDS

man is ordered away from the Blackmores' home, much to the satisfaction of Sam Mercer. Julia steals away from the house to meet Bob. Sam sees her and tries to prevent her from meeting Bob, and for his pains receives a thrashing from Bob, who arrives in time to save Julia from Sam's annoyance. The young couple plan an elopement and are overheard by Boston Willie, a jovial tramp who had been resting behind a hedge. The tramp disturbs the lovers in their planning and, informing them that he had overheard their talk, offers a solution for their difficulties. Bob and Julia resent the tramp's interference at first, but the tramp's jovial manner wins the couple, who are only too glad to welcome any suggestion that will aid them to obtain the consent of Julia's parents. The tramp tells them of his plan, which Bob and Julia agree to follow out. Later in the day Bob meets the tramp and is taken to a ramshackle country house, presumably to talk over their plans. Mr. Blackmore sees the tramp go in the building, which arouses his curiosity. He goes to the ramshackle building and, peering through the door, sees Bob tied hand and foot and the tramp standing over him. Mr. Blackmore overhears the tramp declare that he has not long to live and, believing that Bob is in the hands of a desperate villain who may take his life at any moment, rushes away to seek help, and he comes across Sam, who is driving along the road. He begs him to aid him capture the desperado, but Sam balks, and as Mr. Blackmore is not over-brave himself jumps in the wagon and he and Sam drive to town. Coming up to the town hotel the excited pair explain Bob's impending death. The sheriff and others pile into the wagon and drive toward the scene of the tragedy at breakneck speed. After a few mishaps the party arrive at the house. The tramp, seeing the arrival of the sheriff and party, escapes. The men break into the house and find Bob in an exhausted condition. They relieve him of the rope which binds him. Bob, very faint, thanks the men for their rescue. Mr. Blackmore makes it known to Bob that he is the one that is responsible for him being rescued. Bob is very profuse in his thanks. The excited sheriff and men take the trail after the desperado, leaving Sam and Mr. Blackmore with Bob. Mr. Blackmore, so satisfied by what he thinks is a brave act on his part, changes his attitude toward Bob and offers to take him to his home to recuperate as Bob appears to have broken down. Bob accepts Mr. Blackmore's offer and is taken to his home. Bob's affair with the tramp has given Mr. Blackmore an opportunity of becoming a hero, so he feels kindly toward the young man, who does much to inflate the old man's head by continually thanking him for his brave and timely rescue. The father overhears Bob tell Julia that he can't elope with her, as it would be very ungrateful on his part to treat the man who saved his life in such a manner. This causes Julia to cry and Mr. Blackmore, coming forward, tells the young man he will not stand in their way, that he will give his consent gladly. Bob and Julia are overjoyed and Bob produces a marriage license asks if he can marry Julia at once, as he was prepared to elope with her and had secured a marriage license. Mr. Blackmore agrees to the young folks, wishes, as also does his wife. Parson Jamison, passing the house at this time, is called in to perform the ceremony. In the meantime the sheriff and the men have been chasing the tramp and, after several mishaps, finally capture him. The tramp is brought to Mr. Blackmore's home just after the marriage has been performed. The tramp is brought before Mr. Blackmore, who identifies him. The tramp is about to be taken to jail when Bob, coming on the scene, explains to Mr. Blackmore the tramp's scheme to obtain his consent. Bob tells that it was their object to have Mr. Blackmore rescue him from a probable death, and once they had established Mr. Blackmore as a hero it would be very easy to get into his good graces, eventually obtaining his consent. Mr. Blackmore realizes that he has been the victim of a scheme and becomes furious, but the humor of the situation appeals to him and he forgives the young couple. The sheriff leaves after having his palm warmed with a bill of large denomination. The tramp, seeing that his scheme has worked out well, takes his leave after hearty thanks from Julia and Bob.

"101" BISON

A REDMAN'S LOVE (Nov. 5).—Lucy, the daughter of Major Brown, takes a ride beyond the stockade. She allows her horse to wander away and it is followed and caught by a young Indian warrior, Swift Deer, who sees her safely back to the fort. He worships the lovely "pale face."

The trader, Alden, covets Blue Bird, Red Bear's squaw, and, attempting to make love to her, is attacked by the warrior, whom he kills. The Indians swear death to all pale faces and take the warpath. Swift Deer decides to warn the fort, but seeing Lucy in the arms of Corporal Taylor, his sullen anger is aroused and he joins his tribe.

The Indians seize their opportunity when a large company start from the garrison on scouting duty. The fort is surprised and hard pressed. Swift Deer digs a trench under the stockade and crawls through, intent upon killing Taylor and Lucy. Lucy sees him and runs to him as a friend. Her ingenuity disarms Swift Deer and he resolves to save her. He leads her through the trench and together they ride away and meet the Major and his company. On the way the Indian sways and falls, and Lucy sees that he has been badly wounded when crawling through the trench. She proceeds alone and meets the cavalry, who dash up to the fort and rescue the decimated garrison.

Swift Deer dies, happy to have done the pale face lady a service.

GEM

THE BETTER PART (Nov. 5).—Lawrence, the son of wealthy parents, meets Miriam on a highway. He is attracted by her beauty and sweetness and upon a second meeting invites her to the country fair. While they are taking in the exhibits some of the playful rubes begin throwing confetti and some of it is thrown in Miriam's eyes.

Lawrence takes her home. The country physician is called. He recommends a specialist be sent for. Lawrence persuades Miriam and her mother to allow him to assume the expense. He then goes home and tells his father of his love for Miriam. The father angrily dismisses him.

The specialist arrives. Miriam's eyes are bandaged with the strict command that the bandage should not be removed for three days if she is to regain her sight permanently.

Larry, the following day, is thrown from his horse over the edge of a cliff. He grabs hold of some small shrubs and hanging there calls for help. Miriam hears Larry's call and gets up frightened and gropes her way out of the house. As she draws closer to the place from which the cries had come, she listens intently for a repetition of the cry for help. In great anguish she snatches the bandage from her eyes, sees Larry, grasps his arm and calls for help. Larry's father, walking down the road, hears her call and rushes to the scene, and he and Miriam together pull Larry up to safe ground. The father turns and calls to Miriam. She turns in the direction of his voice and staggers toward him, for she has become totally blind. The father, realizing the terrible sacrifice she has made for his son, goes to her, takes her in his arms and gives her to Larry and, though blind, she snuggles contentedly in Larry's arms.

IMP

HOW NED GOT THE RAISE (Nov. 9).—Ned Elliott, a young clerk, is engaged to be married. His salary is not large enough to support a wife and he asks his employer for a "raise," which is refused. The same thing occurs several times and with each refusal Ned postpones his marriage. In despair he concocts a scheme to make his employer give him the coveted raise. He takes a bright young maid who works at his boarding house into his confidence.

Knowing that Mr. Hadley, his employer, is a flirt and that Mrs. Hadley is extremely jealous, Ned plans to have Mary, the maid, come to Hadley's office and declare herself his (Hadley's) wife. Ned arranges it so that Mrs. Hadley arrives on the scene at the same time. A series of most laughable incidents follow Mary's entrance in Hadley's office, ending with Ned getting his raise. But the raise is such that—well—it would spoil the splendid finish of the story to tell it. Suffice to say that a real comedy surprise is furnished the auditor and Ned as well as his co-conspirator Mary are rewarded in a manner that justifies the undertaking of trying to "raise" Ned's salary.

NESTOR

"SHARPS AND CHAPS" (Nov. 8).—Professor De Risque is anxious to escape for a time the too solicitous attention of Madame De Risque, arrives at Roaring Gulch and noting that the town numbers some very pretty girls among its population, he hangs out his shingle announcing the fact that he teaches the piano and violin.

The professor is charming and the young ladies are impressionable, they readily desert the constant cowboys for the plausible professor. De Risque starts in to put the local pianos at a premium.

The cowboys get their heads together and plan a counter-move. They hire a music teacher in the person of piquant Mademoiselle Dulcie, and install her in an adjoining office to De Risque. The boys express a preference for the trombone and the clarionette and find that it is necessary to practice hard, especially when the professor is making soulful harmony with one of the village belles.

Complications naturally ensue. The professor spoils the lovely symmetry of his hair by tearing it, Mademoiselle Dulcie makes successful love to her stalwart pupils. The girls give their opinion of Dulcie, and the boys desert their physical culture exercises in order to save their breath for the trombone.

A two-fold crisis occurs. Mademoiselle has all the boys literally at her dainty feet. She sends for her husband, who is a jewelry drummer. He arrives and sells the boys engagement rings at double seaside-resort prices, and after Dulcie has received a proposal and a ring from each of the boys, she departs with her hubby and sends the boys her regards and thanks.

Madame De Risque traces the professor and leads him kindly but very firmly from the picture, whilst the boys play the triumphant march from some celebrated composer, in several keys. They present such a martial appearance that the girls just naturally succumb and fall in love with them all over again.

MILANO

"HER MASTERPIECE" (Nov. 9).—Prince Orloff, a member of the Russian nobility, is the father of two handsome and talented daughters. Princess Marinka and Princess Sonia.

The youngest daughter, Marinka, is engaged to be married to Waldimar, a young Russian nobleman. Unknown to the young couple, the elder sister, Sonia, is madly in love with Waldimar and insanely jealous of the love the young man bears her sister and Marinka's talent as an artist.

Marinka is working on a picture, which she declares is going to be her masterpiece, and her fiance is posing for her as the central figure in the painting. Prince Orloff, of course, is very proud of his young daughter's ability, and Waldimar is enthusiastic about the remarkable genius she is showing in her latest picture.

The girls are very fond of riding and on their numerous trips into the country are accompanied by their groom, Ivan. One day when Marinka was too busy putting the finishing touches on her picture to go with her sister, Sonia went riding alone, followed by the groom. This young man has long been in love with Sonia, but has never dared express it, owing to the great difference in their positions, but this day he is unable to control himself, and when they stop to rest, pleads his love, only to be met with scorn and a lash across the face, administered by Sonia with her riding whip.

Returning home, she finds that the committee of the Moscow Fine Arts Exhibition has accorded Marinka's picture a place at the coming exhibition. Of course Waldimar shows his delight at this step toward a public acknowledgment of Marinka's talent, but this only incenses Sonia, for she thinks, "Here is Marinka, not only to become a famous artist, but also the wife of Waldimar, while I who love him so desperately, cannot even have the love I bear him returned."

For days Sonia allows herself to think of nothing else, brooding most of the time alone in the library, trying to forget her grievance by reading some of the old books her father has been collecting for years.

Happy Marinka receives word from the art committee, telling her that her picture has been awarded the grand prize and her father then announces that the marriage of Marinka and Waldimar will take place the day following that on which the prize is presented.

Sonia is beside herself with rage, thinking that now she will have to give up all hope of ever winning Waldimar's love, but recalling something she has read in one of the old books, decides to make use of the suggestion, hoping that there may still be a chance to win the young man from her sister.

Under pretence of beginning to love the groom, Ivan, Sonia makes him promise to carry out her wishes, a kiss to be the payment.. She gives the groom a bottle of solution and instructs him to wait his chance and pour it over her sister's painting.

The day of the presentation of the prizes arrives and a notable assemblage has gathered to witness the event. The committee draw aside the draperies protecting Marinka's masterpiece, "The Grand Amen," and are amazed, for the beautiful painting, representing months of loving work, was nothing but a streaked mass of pigment.

Marinka, whose whole soul was in the picture, receives a fatal shock, for when she observes how her masterpiece has been destroyed, she collapses and in a few days passes into another world, the skill of the most eminent physicians being of no avail, her illness, a broken heart, being incurable.

Her disloyal sister had not anticipated the frightful consequences of her treachery, but nevertheless, in her cold-hearted way, thought she saw in her sister's death an opportunity to win the love of the man she was infatuated with, now that Marinka was out of the way.

But Sonia is to meet with a terrible disappointment, for Waldimar, crazed with grief, over the casket of his beloved sweetheart, accuses Sonia of having destroyed the masterpiece and being the cause of her sister's death, and thereby lost the respect of the man she loved.

MAJESTIC

"THE DEACON'S SHOES" (Nov. 10).—The Deacon's wife persuades him to buy a new pair of shoes, but he refuses to allow her to throw his old shoes away. A tramp calls at the house and tells such a sad hard luck story that she gives him the shoes. He sits down behind a barn to put the shoes on, leaving the old ones on the ground. Before he has walked far, the shoes hurt his feet so that he takes them off and carries them in his hand. He steals a chicken from a farm yard and drops the deacon's old shoes in his flight. The farmers have had so many chickens stolen that they put blood hounds on the thief's track, using the shoes as a clue. The blood hounds lead the farmers up to the back door of the deacon's house and he is accused of chicken stealing. His wife confesses that she gave the old shoes to a tramp and the dogs are put on the right track. The tramp is finally caught as he is about to make a hearty meal of the chicken, and the deacon vindicated.

On the same reel:

"HIS COOK LADY."—Bill Williams is a crank. His poor little wife does everything in her power to please him, but he finds fault with her and bullies her continually. Her cooking drives him into a rage and he tells her to hire a cook. Spike Jones, an ex-prize fighter, looks in the morning paper for a job and copies William's address in mistake. When Mrs. Williams tells him she wants a cook who will teach her bully of a husband a lesson, he makes a bargain with her to dress up as a woman and act as her cook long enough to open up her husband's eyes by closing them.

He takes his place as Czar of the kitchen and when Williams arrives home and kicks because his dinner is not ready, the fun begins. His cook "lady" makes him eat dishes that nearly choke him, but he is afraid to refuse. By the time "Spike" is through with him he is so cowed that his little wife has no trouble managing him, and he is glad to settle down as a humble, appreciative husband.

DICK AND DAISY (Nov. 12).—Dick and Daisy are a young married couple, fairly prosperous and very happy. Dick, through lack of business at his office, loses his good position. For a whole week he tries to get work but with no success. Daisy and he decide to discharge the maid—Daisy agrees to do all the work herself. Her first meal is a dismal failure—and it ends in a quarrel—their first. She is angry because Dick will not eat the impossible food—he angry because she is so unreasonable. However, they make up and he decides to go out and look for work. He wants to press his suit—but she in good humor says she will do it for him and burns it terribly. He is angered at this and slams out of the house. She, resenting this attitude, and forgetting how discouraged he is, decides to be independent. She looks for work and gets a job answering the telephone. That day Dick meets an old friend of his who has a job for him. It is as office manager with the same people who have that day hired Daisy. She sees her husband coming in and dodges. He, getting the position, has occasion to call on the 'phone. He recognizes his wife's voice as being vaguely familiar and he is puzzling out who she is, as she is trying with every effort to disguise her voice. He goes out into the outer office to look her over, and finally discovers it is Daisy. He bids her leave at once. She indignantly refuses. He is all upset and cannot work until he has an idea. He sends her out a slip with the words "You are discharged" upon it. When Daisy tries to get into the office to argue with him she meets a sign "Busy—Cannot be disturbed." There is nothing for her to do but go home. Home she finds her disordered house and the breakfast dishes still on the table. She resolves to learn something about the house before she goes out seeking employment elsewhere and starts in to clean up. Dick arrives—not at all sure of his welcome. But everything is made up and Dick and Daisy look forward to a happy future.

KEYSTONE

A TEMPERAMENTAL HUSBAND (Nov. 11).—Brown is temperamental—and jealous. He goes to business, and tips the maid to watch his wife carefully. In his absence his wife's brother calls, whom he has never seen. The maid, spying, sees the affectionate greeting of the brother and sister, and runs to town to tell Brown.

Mrs. Brown has turned away an evil-looking tramp, and when her little girl does not respond to her calls she jumps at the conclusion that the little one has been kidnapped, and calls the police. The rural guardians of the peace make haste to reach the Brown home on bicycles, and in the meantime the child returns home.

After many difficulties Brown gets to his house, and peeping through the window sees his wife sitting on her brother's lap. Drawing a revolver he is about to shoot the unknown man when the police arrive. In fear and trembling they approach Brown, who has picked up his little girl, and whom they think is the kidnapper. After many amusing efforts Brown is captured and beaten unconscious with clubs. When he comes to he sees his wife and her brother standing over him and makes a dash for the brother. Explanations are quickly made, and he then turns upon the police and gives them a dose of the same medicine they gave him.

On the same reel:

THE DEACON'S TROUBLES.—The Deacon is a reformer, and is appointed the head of the Purity League, composed of the homely old maids of the town. A poster of a beautiful Oriental dancer is condemned by the league, and the Deacon pastes a large paper over the offending limbs, but impulsively kisses the pictured girl on the lips.

The Deacon goes to an amusement park and there sees the original of the poster, attired in abbreviated costume, standing on a platform during a ballyhoo, and sneaks in and gets a front seat. The dancer's efforts are met with a storm of applause from the deacon, who meets the girl after the show and becomes badly smitten, and in a moment of weakness is persuaded to have his tintype taken with the girl in costume.

Some time later the show hits the Deacon's home town, and the Purity League tries to prevent the performance. The arguments with the management reach an exciting stage when the girl comes up and shows the picture of the Deacon. The Leaguers turn upon him, strip him of his badge and assist his wife in teaching him a thorough lesson.

KAY-BEE

WHEN LEE SURRENDERS (Two Reels) (Nov. 8).—This picture plunges into sensationalism from the opening scene, surprising the spectator with a wonderful battle in which cannons roar and belch, cavalry and infantry execute brilliant maneuvers and the Confederate and Union soldiers face each other in a bitter struggle.

Bursting bombs rend the air, throwing the earth up in clouds when they strike the ground. Horses and riders come tumbling down in heaps. For a while the spectator simply gazes in awe at the marvelous spectacle, and then his admiration is aroused by Capt. Blake, who leads his men hither and thither, regardless of the carnival of death which is going on about him and beside him.

From her porch Nellie Morton watches the conflict, her Southern heart stirred by the sight. Carried away by the battle, she laughs hysterically when the boys in gray gain an advantage, and weeps when they are driven back.

A bursting bomb drops close to Capt. Blake and horse and rider are dashed to the ground. He extricates himself from the dying animal and, sorely wounded, drags himself from the field. Staggering across the Morton lawn he falls heavily on a bench.

Nellie seizes a pistol and runs out, commanding the hated Yankee to move on. With a ghastly smile he bows and staggers to his feet, and their eyes meet. The suppressed look of pain in his face and the wound in his forehead melt Nellie's heart, and impulsively she throws the gun away and offers to assist Blake. With the assistance of Rastus, the old colored servant, the captain is carried into the house and his coat is removed. With tender hands Nellie binds his wounds, helped by her mother.

The setting sun brings a cessation of hostilities between the two armies, and a troop of Confederate soldiers are camped near the Morton home. The officers are seen approaching, and Nellie bids Blake hide upstairs. Her old, white-haired father returns and offers the hospitality of his home to the soldiers, who enter into a conference regarding the plan of action the following day. Blake's coat is found lying on the floor and suspicion is aroused. Nellie tries to shield Blake, but is finally made to confess that he is upstairs. An intensely dramatic scene is presented as she stands with her back to the door in a vain effort to save the Northern boy.

Blake strains his ears to listen and, finding his presence is known, climbs through the attic onto the roof and drops to the ground. The Southern sentry is knocked senseless with a rock, and Blake quickly puts on the unconscious man's uniform and stands guard with the rifle. The baffled pursuers rush out of the house past the sentry and as soon as they have gone he plunges into the night.

The next day a company of Northern soldiers come to the house. Again the coat is seen, and old Morton is accused of having killed an officer, and is arrested and thrown in prison, where he is seen a month later, huddled in the pen-like yard with hundreds of others, awaiting the death to which he has been condemned.

In the meantime Blake is again with his company, and is seen in battle. The fighting is waged fiercely, the Confederates holding a bridge, which holds back the Union soldiers, and Blake makes a desperate effort to take it. One by one the cannon are captured, and the remaining one is destroyed by a well-placed shell which tosses the huge gun into the air hundreds of feet, and with a rousing cheer the Union boys sweep across the bridge to victory.

Nellie goes to the Colonel and pleads for her father's life, but the evidence shows that he was condemned for having killed an unknown Northern officer and he cannot interfere. The stern old soldier almost breaks down before the anguished pleading of the girl, and is compelled to leave the room, and with tears streaming down her face she departs. As she goes out the door, blinded by her tears, she almost bumps into an officer who is exultantly coming to report his victory, and Blake recognizes her first. She quickly tells her story and, accompanied by Blake, returns to the Colonel's quarters, where arrangements are made for her father's release. The meeting between father and daughter is most pathetic, presenting dramatic rendition seldom seen.

Blake asks Nellie to marry him and she promises to "When Lee surrenders." She and her father go back to their home and Blake continues fighting until the close of the war, when he rejoins his mother.

He is overjoyed one day to receive three words from Nellie, saying "Lee has surrendered." And while he holds his proud mother in his arms and tells her of the little Southern girl who is to be her new daughter alternate scenes are shown of Nellie and her old father awaiting the coming of the Northern soldier boy.

BRONCHO

MARY OF THE MINES (Nov. 13).—Mary is the daughter of a prospector, who doggedly works a claim without success. Hale, a handsome young miner whom fortune has favored, falls in love with Mary, and he performs many acts of kindness, even secretly salting the old man's mine with gold nuggets. Mary hesitates to accept Hale's offer of marriage, owing to a previous attachment she has had for Jack Norton, in the East. Her father is fatally injured by a landslide, and on his deathbed asks Mary to marry Hale, which she does. Later, Norton appears on the scene and persuades her that she would be happier in the East. She decides to leave Hale, but his generosity in equally dividing his gold with her rather shakes her determination. Norton steals Hale's gold, and as Mary goes to the bank in the settlement to exchange her nuggets for coin, she sees Norton ahead of her and recognizes the bag. Calling the sheriff she denounces Norton and, brought to a realization of her husband's goodness, she effects a touching reconciliation.

POWERS

THE FIRST GLASS (Nov. 8).—A lonesome old woman, a pitiful wreck of what was once beautiful, sat in a cafe lost in dreams of yesterday. It was old Sarah, the belle of long ago, now a victim of drink.

At a table near her sat two youths and two girls. One of the girls, as her manner showed, had trodden the path before. The other, Fritzi, was only just learning. An untouched glass of liquor was on the table before her. She was listening to the urgings of her companions, but she was uncertain—it was her first.

And old Sarah sat and watched the girl and the untouched glass. In Fritzi she saw herself as in bygone days. In herself she saw the girl as to-morrow. At last the girl, weakening under the chidings of her companions, drank. An instinct that had long been smoldering within old Sarah burst afire again. She had long ago given up her own battle with the beast—DRINK—but now she would fight to save another. At first her efforts to save the girl seemed futile. She has met only with the chidings and rebukes of the other three, but later, seated beside old Sarah, apart from her companions the girl hears the warning. Sarah tells her that she, too, once was a beautiful young girl and life was a long, happy dream until, like the girl, she sipped the wine of a little glass, her first—then it seemed the happiness and sunshine of her life began to slip away. A terrible craving beast had been born within her at the drinking of that little first glass. It had driven her down and down until it had left her as the girl then saw her.

Her story finished—Saran's battle is won—the inevitable future that awaits her has been pictured to the girl, who turns back upon the road she had begun to travel, and old Sarah, left alone to go her way, sighs and says, "I could save others, myself I cannot save."

SOLAX

FLESH AND BLOOD (Two-Reel Feature).—With a terseness that was characteristic, Flannery, the head of the detective bureau, told "Baldy" Barnes, one of his best operatives, the facts in the sensational jewel robbery—the third robbery in a series, each one of which was more daring and law-defying than the others preceding it. While his chief spoke to him with stern decision, Barnes discerned an undercurrent of emotion—a pleading entreaty that mutely spoke a volume, more than the mere formal command to go out and do his duty. Baldy felt that on him depended the honor of the "Secret Service."

Barnes walked out of his chief's office with his jaws set, his hands deep in his pockets, and his hat far back covering his little fringe of gray hair. His record of twenty years in the Secret Service was clean and honorable. He was determined to show the newspapers and the public that not all detectives and policemen are "dubs." On his way home he reviewed the facts in the mysterious case and, although he had no traceable clue, he outlined a plan of campaign.

Barnes arrives home about dinner time. In his modest way he informs his wife of his important assignment, and while she is elated with the prospect of her husband attaining the highest place in his profession. Barnes' son, Stephen, a morbid and nervous young man, receives his father's announcement with an ill-concealed sinking feeling, bordering on collapse. The boy makes his excuses and goes to his room. Both father and mother are concerned over their son's condition.

Of late he had been acting rather queerly, and his increasing morbidity occasioned many family councils—they did not know that chorus girls were to blame.

Before leaving, Barnes decides to go to his son's room. At his son's door, Barnes, the detective, and not the father, hears suspicious and stealthy movements. He looks through the keyhole and then sees his own flesh and blood hiding valuable jewels in a violin case. With the ferocity of a panther about to spring on its prey, Barnes pounds on the door, demanding admission. In panic the son escapes through the window, just as his father breaks down the door. A pursuit ensues.

Stephen tries to hide in the den of a "fence" (a man who buys stolen goods) but his father trails him successfully. The "fence," however, helps him escape through the scuttle to the roof of the next house. The detective is not outwitted. Although far advanced in years he nimbly follows, revolver in hand. Over chimneys, across wide and perilous airshafts, up and down steep ladders. Barnes presses on until, in desperation, he shoots and hits. The son reels near the edge of a tin cornice and falls down four stories.

Stephen is brought to his house in a dying condition. A number of breaks in his fall saves him from immediate death. Barnes rushes in, and to his grief-stricken wife he blurts out the whole story.

"Yes," she says scornfully, "you did your duty to your office—but where is your duty to me, and your child?. Away, don't touch me! You're a murderer!"

Barnes shows that his heart is almost broken, but with resignation he goes to his superiors and gives himself up, assuming the responsibility for his son's crime.

After several months elapse, Stephen is convalescing. He hears of the trial of his father, and with new-born manliness comes forward and shoulders the blame, and exonerates his father.

(Superb acting and intensely dramatic situations make this feature one of the most remarkable stories on the screen.)

THE PRODIGAL WIFE (Nov. 13).—Mrs. James Clements moves in society and this costs money. Her husband indulges her extravagances until she demands $500 with which to purchase a pearl necklace. He gives her the money but she notices that he does so under silent protest. This makes her think. Her thoughts are thrown on the screen. She sees her stock broker husband on the verge of bankruptcy through her own extravagance. In a last attempt to save himself he plays the cotton market and is ruined. He commits suicide in order that his wife may be protected with his heavy life insurance. He leaves a letter telling her that her extravagance has ruined him. When she realizes that his blood is on her hands she is overcome with remorse and loses her reason, dying a raving maniac in an insane asylum.

Mrs. Clements shakes off this nightmare and with a sigh of relief resolves to change her mode of life.

ECLAIR

THEIR CHILDREN'S APPROVAL (Nov. 14).—A widow and widower decide to marry. He has a son, and she has a daughter in a convent, to whom they are respectively devoted, and whose approval they wish, but they don't know how to break the news and arrange things. Finally he sends a telegram to Dick calling him home, and she sends one to Angele. The two children duly start, and Dick happens to catch the boat Angele is on. It is a case of love at first sight, and finally they become acquainted. Convent-bred Angele will not tell her name or allow him to disclose his. The case progresses on both sides, and when they reach their destination, they part at her command, she promising to be his if he can find her.

The widower acquaints his son with the news and takes him to call on his future stepmother. Angele is out and misses them. Dick isn't very enthusiastic, and manages to depart at the first chance. Later Angele comes in and meets her future step-father. She is, of course, polite, but apparently doesn't approve any more than Dick. Both children try to dissuade their parents from taking the step, but to no avail. The wedding day arrives and Dick and Angele are coaxed and dragged by their respective parents to the minister's. They meet and it is hard to say which of the four is most astonished. In the excitement Dick whispers a few words to Angele and disappears, while Angele conveniently has hysterics and delays matters until Dick returns and slyly shows her he has a license. The wedding is the next thing, but Angele and Dick step before their astonished parents. They remonstrate, but are calmly informed if they withhold their approval Dick and Angele withhold theirs, so they are forced to give in, and the double wedding goes on.

SEA ANEMONES (Nov. 15).—All vegetable life agitates a strange fauna. At first sight one would believe it to be in the presence of varied sea plants, but a serious study of the subject allows us to classify them in those transitory species which in natural history link the animal kingdom to the plant kingdom.

In certain seas the corals, madrepores or authozoaires, form immense multi-colored forests. In the numberless species of zoophytes some are very curious to observe. For instance, the Asteria, or star fish, which moves very slowly; the acinia, commonly called the sea anemone on account of its brilliant colors and its resemblance to that flower; in fact, the sea anemone, like the living coral, attracts with its thousand tentacles and by learned evolutions, the prey it is looking for, then closes up on it as soon as the victim is caught.

WHICH IS IT? Animated vegetation or animals which vegetate?

On the same reel:

AN UNFORESEEN EVENT.—Fickle and faithless, like all noblemen of his time, our Marquis even tries to make love to his pretty laundress, Margot. He dreams of making himself handsome to please her and goes to the barber every day for that reason alone. Now pretty Margot has a lover who cannot endure the presence of a rival, even though he be rich and noble.

He, Marquis, entrusts his valet, Lucre, to bring Margot a bouquet in which this note is concealed: "My dear Margot: I will expect you this evening in the grove by the park." Unfortunately, Lucre meets the Marchioness on his way; she takes the bouquet from him and, of course, finds the note.

Then she gives the order to the valet to give the bouquet to the girl and not to tell anything to his master. So Lucre does not say anything to the Marquis and when night came and our nobleman went to meet the pretty Margot he was quite surprised to meet—his own wife.

A CRIMINAL IN SPITE OF HIMSELF (Nov. 17).—Louis Moriot bids farewell to his bachelor life. A former sweetheart becomes enraged and after Moriot leaves the room, she promises to "get even" with him. She reads in the paper that the notorious burglar, Louis Moriot, is still at large. Strange similarity of names. She immediately cuts it out and sends it to innocent Louis Moriot's fiancee's family with a letter of introduction.

Meanwhile, Louis Moriot is received by his future relatives who are all well pleased with him. He and his affianced, Bertha, go for a walk.

While they are out a letter is delivered. It is the one enclosing the clipping. Stupefaction! The uncle offers to act as spokesman for the family, but hardly had he tried to speak to Louis Moriot than he gets frightened and runs away and poor Moriot cannot understand why everyone fears him. Meanwhile, the uncle meets a policeman and explains everything to him. They arrest Moriot. Bertha tries to rescue her lover but they take her away from the miserable man. She goes away and meets a newsboy who is announcing the arrest of the notorious burglar, Louis Moriot, and his picture appears in the paper. It does not resemble Bertha's lover in the least. Louis is let free but only forgives those who offended him through his love for Bertha.

On the same reel:

THE HARBOR OF OPORTO.—Which shows that more than the world-famed wine called Port comprises the industries of this fascinating seaport.

THANHOUSER

A NOISE LIKE A FORTUNE (Nov. 10).—He was an energetic young farmer, and he thoroughly realized why he couldn't pay expenses. He needed up-to-date farming implements. He didn't have them; he didn't have the money to buy them, and he had absolutely no credit. It was particularly unfortunate because he was in love with the daughter of the local magnate, and the said magnate absolutely declined to welcome him as a member of the family.

In desperation the young farmer wrote to a distant cousin whom he had not seen since he was a child, earnestly requesting a loan of $200. In reply he received a letter from the cousin's executors, informing him that the old man was dead and "had left him not a cent." It was also explained the estate of the deceased was valued at $200,000.

The farmer threw the letter from him in despair, and decided to go to the city to make a last final hunt for funds. While he was in the house, his aged and shrewd farmhand came along, saw the letter, picked it up and, being a countryman, as it was not addressed to him, he read it. He was sorry for his employer, for he really liked the young man, and he suddenly conceived a way to help him. He took the letter, carefully erased the words "not a" and substituted the one important word "every." Then he managed to drop the letter just outside a rural railway station and, as he had hoped, the news that the young farmer had inherited $200,000 was soon known by every one in the village. When the farmer returned from the city, disappointed at not having raised the loan, he was surprised and touched by the warmth of his reception. Every one greeted him cordially, while the father-in-law he hoped for was especially affectionate. The magnate beamed upon him, insisted upon loaning him money "for present expenses," and with this cash the young man was enabled to put his farm in good order and have a very profitable year. The magnate grew more and more proud of him and was delighted to find that the young man was still willing to marry the village girl.

As the young farmer was thrifty and uniformly successful his father-in-law never knew that the $200,000 fortune was simply the result of a farmhand's skilled use of a pen.

The farmhand never told his secret, but neighbors wondered why he chuckled more than usual, especially when the pompous village magnate strolled proudly by.

THE COUNTY'S PRIZE BABY (Nov. 12).—The wife was thoroughly happy, for her husband was well-to-do and she liked living on a farm. The man, however, was ambitious, and the first quarrel of the couple was directly due to the fact that he was sent to the state legislature.

At the capital the man met several natty officials, and he learned from them how to dress and carry himself in good society. The wife saw the wives of these men, but seemingly had no ambition to be stylishly groomed as they were; in fact, she was distinctly dowdy, and spent all her time looking after her baby.

The husband entertained a number of society people one night and was shocked and vexed with the appearance his wife presented. When the guests had departed he scolded her savagely, telling her that instead of being a help to him in his ambitions she was really a drag. The woman, heartbroken and angry, left her husband's roof an hour later, taking her baby with her, and vowed she would never return to him again. The husband accepted her decision, for he really thought that life without the shabby little woman would be far better for him.

Three years later the husband was a congressman, with his eye on a seat in the United States Senate. In the course of his campaign he attended a country fair in a distant part of the state and made himself very agreeable to every one he met. The officials asked him to be judge at a baby show, and he promptly accepted.

All sorts of babies were there, and the task of picking out the finest one had elements of difficulty. The congressman, however, made up his mind very promptly. His eyes lighted on one child and from that moment none of the others could compare with her. She was a little girl, bright and pretty, and made friends with the congressman at once. There was a charm about her he could realize but not explain. She got the blue ribbon, and he would have bestowed it upon her regardless of whether it affected his political fortunes or not. It was explained to him that the child came under the name of "added starters." She had drifted into the place, desiring to enter her doll, but had been coaxed into accepting a seat on the platform.

The child's mother, who had lost her in the crowds on the fair grounds, came rushing in at this point and clasped the child in her arms. She then turned to the congressman, and husband and wife looked into each other's eyes. During the years of separation each had been convinced that the blame was not all on one side, and their beautiful little daughter furnished an additional reason for reconciliation.

Husband and wife took up life's battle together again. He was more patient with her and she conquered her dowdiness and became the fair companion of an enterprising, progressive statesman.

IN TIME OF PERIL (Nov. 15).—The railroad foreman had a pretty daughter, and one of their neighbors, a prosperous farmer, fell in love with her. She accepted his attentions, and the course of love seemed smooth until a young civil engineer arrived from the city to take charge of the section of the work on which the girl's father was employed.

The engineer was a handsome, well-groomed chap, and he took a fancy to the country girl. She was flattered by his suit, and was gradually weaned away from her country sweetheart. The farmer did all he could to regain his true love, but for a time his affections seemed hopeless.

The girl had a little brother whom she greatly loved. With him she went one day to where the railroaders were at work and was shyly happy when the engineer proposed that they take a walk so he could point out what was being accomplished. The boy accompanied them, but soon strolled away and wandered out on the big trestle which spanned the valley. His departure was unnoticed and he had nearly reached the middle of the structure before he noticed that a train was rapidly approaching. In an effort to escape he stumbled and fell and was unable to get out of the way of the engine that was rapidly approaching him. The girl saw her brother's peril and tried to go to his assistance but was held back by the cowardly engineer, who told her the train was so near that it meant certain death to venture upon the trestle.

In the meantime the young farmer was driving along the road on his way home and was just about to pass under the trestle when he heard the cries from above and realized the child's peril. There was no time for delay, so he promptly climbed up one of the poles of the structure, reaching the top of the trestle when the train was only a few feet away. He seized the helpless boy with one arm, grasped one of the ties with the other, and hung in space while the train crashed along above them.

Later when the boy was returned to his weeping sister the engineer attempted to explain, but the girl, whose eyes had been opened, waved him off and drove away with her country sweetheart, who, in time of peril, had proven he was the man who could be relied upon.

DATA FROM MANUFACTURERS' LIST OF RELEASES

INDEPENDENT

AMBROSIO

Feet

June 28—Benares, the Sacred City.....
July 17—The Airman .....
July 17—The Legend of the Chrysanthemum
Sept. 25—Arabian Infamy (Dr.) .....
Oct. 2—The Bowstring (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—The Ship of Lions.....
Nov. 13.—The Siren's Call to Duty (Dr.).....

AMERICAN

Oct. 23—The Way of the Transgressor (Dr).1000
Oct. 24—The Wooers of Mountain Kate (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 28—One-Two-Three, or the Story of a Wager (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—Chiquita, the Dancer (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Wanderer (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—Maiden and Men (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 7—God's Unfortunate (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 9—The Starbucks (two reels) (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 11—Man's Calling (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 14—The Intrusion at Lompoc (Dr.)..1000
Nov. 16—Jim Bentley's Adventure (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 18—The Thief's Wife (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 21—The Would-Be Heir (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 23—The Idyll of Hawaii (Dr.).....1000

AMMEX

Oct. 2—Ashes of Memory (Dr.).....
Oct. 9—Getting in Strong (Com.).....
Oct. 9—Woman Haters (Com.).....
Oct. 16—Mission Maestro (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—A Redeemed Reputation (Dr.)....
Oct. 30—Brand of Cain (Dr.).....

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. "101 Bison"

Sept. 24—The Hidden Trail .....
Sept. 27—On the Firing Line .....
Oct. 4—Custer's Last Fight (3 reels) (Hist.)
Oct. 11—The Sergeant's Boy.....
Oct. 18—The Vengeance of Fate (2 reels) (Mil.) .....
Oct. 25—The Colonel's Ward (2 reels).....

BISON (UNIVERSAL)

Oct. 19—Early Days in the West (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 22—Hunted Down (Dr.).....
Oct. 26—A Daughter of the Redskins (2 reels) .....
Oct. 29—The Cowboy Guardians (Dr.).....
Nov. 2—Trapper Bill, King of Scouts (2 reels .....
Nov. 5—A Red Man's Love (Dr.).....
Nov. 9—An Indian Ishmael (Dr.).....
Nov. 12—Blackfoot's Conspiracy (Ind. Dr.)...
Nov. 16—The Tribal Law (2-reel Dr.) .....

BRONCHO

Oct. 9—An Indian Legend.....
Oct. 16—The Sheriff's Adopted Child (Dr.).
Oct. 23—The Story of the Savage Modock Mine .....
Oct. 30—How Shorty Kept His Word.....
Nov. 6—The Man They Scored (2 reels)....
Nov. 13—Mary of the Mines.....

CHAMPION

Oct. 7—To Err is Human (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—The Girl in the Gingham Gown (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Thy Will Be Done.....
Oct. 26—Sue (Dr.) .....
Nov. 4—A Tramp's Strategy (Dr. Com.)...
Nov. 11—A Protege of Uncle Sam (2-reel Dr.)

COMET

Oct. 7—"'Ostler Joe" (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 12—The Double Debt (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Taming a Bachelor (Com.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Romance of the Rockies (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 21—She Married a Hero (Com.).....1000
Oct. 26—The Mule Ranch Mystery (W. Dr.).1000
Oct. 28—Dooley's Triumph (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—A Tempest in a Teapot (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—A Four-Cornered Wedding (Com.).1000

CRYSTAL

Oct. 27—A Pair of Fools.....
Oct. 27—The Blonde Lady .....
Nov. 3—O, Such a Night (Com.)..... 525
Nov. 3—Marriage a la Carte (Com.)..... 475
Nov. 10—The Gypsy Flirt.....
Nov. 10—Man Wanted.....
Nov. 17—The Chorus Girl.....
Nov. 17.—Her Old Love.....

ECLAIR

Oct. 15—One on Jones (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Caprices of Fortune (2 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 20—The Old Professor (Com. Dr.)....
Oct. 20—Sulphur Industry in Sicily (Edu.)..
Oct. 22—The Home Coming .....
Oct. 24—Making Uncle Jealous (Com. Dr.)..
Oct. 27—Gontran's Love Stratagem (Com.)..
Oct. 27—Brusia (Travel) .....
Oct. 29—Rosie (Com.) .....
Oct. 31—The Transgression of Deacon Jones (Com.) .....
Nov. 3—Aunt Bridget (Com.) .....
Nov. 5—Silent Jim .....
Nov. 7—Foiling a Fortune Hunter.....
Nov. 7—What Father Did.....
Nov. 10—Golden Hair.....
Nov. 10—Constantinople .....
Nov. 12—For the Honor of the Firm (Dr.)...
Nov. 14—Their Children's Approval (Com.)...
Nov. 17—A Criminal in Spite of Himself...
Nov. 17—Oporto and Its Harbor.....

GREAT NORTHERN

Oct. 5—The Tramp's Revenge (Com.)..... 253
Oct. 7—The Black Chancellor (3 reels) (Dr.)
Oct. 26—The Angling Widow (Com.)..... 976
Nov. 2—The Lottery Prize (Com.)..... 534
Nov. 2—An Unsuccessful Flirtation (Com.) 466
Nov. 9—The Lost Stud (Com.)..... 649
Nov. 9—The Disturbed Sentry (Com.)..... 351

GAUMONT

Oct. 19—A Modern Cinderella.....
Oct. 22—A Country Scandal.....
Oct. 24—Love and Calino Marries a Suffragette .....
Oct. 26—Zigoto Has a Good Heart.....
Oct. 29—A Domestic Treasure .....
Oct. 29—The Gorges of Albuquerque.....
Oct. 31—The Emperor's Message.....
Nov. 2—Castles of Bavaria .....
Nov. 5—Cupid's Lottery .....
Nov. 7—Zoological Specimens of Pond Life...
Nov. 7—Bruges, the Venice of the North...
Nov. 9—Bolivian Army .....
Nov. 12—An Adventurous Adoption.....
Nov. 14—The Price of Paradise.....
Nov. 16—Zoological Gardens at Cincinnati..

GEM

Oct. 1—The Convict's Return .....
Oct. 8—Orphans (Dr.) .....
Oct. 15—What the Bell Told (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—The Woman in White (2 reel Dr.)
Oct. 29—The Old Dollmaker (Dr.).....
Nov. 5—The Better Part (Dr.).....
Nov. 12—The Lighting of Love's Way (Dr.)

IMP

Oct. 19—Eventful Bargain Day.....
Oct. 24—King the Detective and the Smugglers .....
Oct. 26—Joe the Pirate.....
Oct. 26—Early in the Morning.....
Oct. 28—Yvonne, the Foreign Spy (Dr.).....
Oct. 31—John Sterling, Alderman (2 reel Dr.) .....
Nov. 2—Ferdie Be Brave .....
Nov. 2—Pres. Taft at the County Fair.....
Nov. 4—A Strange Case (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—Leah the Forsaken (3 reels Dr.)..
Nov. 9—Half Shot.....
Nov. 9—How Ned Got the Raise.....
Nov. 11—When Cupid Runs Wild (Com.)...
Nov. 14—Officer 174 (Dr.).....
Nov. 16—Ole, the Hypnotist.....
Nov. 16—Just Like the West.....

ITALA

Nov. 25—The Horror of Sin (Dr.).....1000
Dec. 2—Too Much Beauty (Com.)..... 600
Dec. 2—A Spider in the Brain (Com.)..... 370
Dec. 9—Peeping Tom (Com.)..... 700
Dec. 9—Keeping in Style (Com.)..... 300

KAY-BEE

Nov. 1—On Secret Service (2 reels).....
Nov. 8—When Lee Surrenders (2 reels).....

KEYSTONE

Nov. 1—The Grocery Clerk's Romance.....
Oct. 28—At Coney Island .....
Nov. 4—Mabel's Lovers.....
Nov. 4—At It Again.....
Nov. 11—A Temperamental Husband.....
Nov. 11—The Deacon's Troubles.....

KINEMACOLOR

Sept. 28—Bee Culture (Scientific).....
Sept. 28—Tulip Studies (Scientific) .....
Oct. 5—An American Invasion (Dr.).....
Oct. 5—American Fashions .....
Oct. 5—Picturesque Scenes on the Potomac River (Sc.).....

LUX

By Prieur.

Nov. 1—Oh! My Pipe (Com.) 331
Nov. 1—Henpecked's Bid for Freedom (Com.) 652
Nov. 8—Spiffkins East Frogs (Com.)..... 475
Nov. 8—A Magnetic Personality (Com.).... 455
Nov. 16—Boxing Under Difficulties (Com.).. 288
Nov. 16—The Adventures of a Handsome Young Man (Com.)..... 691

MAJESTIC

Nov. 10—The Deacon's Shoes (Com.)..... 500
His Cook Lady (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 12—Dick and Daisy (Com.).....1000
Nov. 5—A Day on the Battleship Florida....
Nov. 17—Hazel Kirke (Dr.).....2000
Nov. 19—Two of a Kind (Com.).....1000
Nov. 21—Poor Finney (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 21—Oh, You Baby (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 24—An Old Love Letter (Com. Dr)...1000

MILANO

Oct. 26—Kelly Goes to War.....
Oct. 26—A Three-Cornered Wedding Journey
Nov. 2—A Tragic Wedding (Dr.).....
Nov. 9—Her Masterpiece (2 reel Dr.).....
Nov. 16—The Bewitched Bandbox.....
Nov. 16—Kelly on a Tight Rope.....

NESTOR FILM COMPANY

Oct. 21—Betty's Bandit (W. Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Border Parson (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Lady Barber of Roaring Gulch
Oct. 28—The Call of the Desert (W. Dr.).
Oct. 30—Fatty's Big Mix-up (Com.).....
Nov. 1—Making a Man of Her (Com.)....
Nov. 4—United We Stand (Dr.).....
Nov. 6—His Little Partner (Dr.).....
Nov. 8—Sharps and Chaps (Com.).....
Nov. 11—A White Lie (Dr.).....
Nov. 13—Dad's Mistake (W. Com.).....
Nov. 15—A Cowgirl Cinderella (W. Com.)...

POWERS' PICTURE PLAYS

Oct. 16—The Golden Rod.....
Oct. 16—Does It Pay.....
Oct. 18—The Sealed Envelope (Dr.).....
Oct. 23—The Skeleton (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—Just a Woman (Dr.).....
Oct. 30—The Collaborators (Com.).....
Nov. 1—A Dreamland Tragedy .....
Nov. 6—The Railroad and the Widow (Dr.)
Nov. 8—The First Glass (Dr.).....
Nov. 13—A Cowboy's Leap Year (W. Com.)..
Nov. 15—His Career (Dr.).....

RELIANCE

Oct. 26—A Wireless Miracle (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—Men Who Dare (2 reels).....
Nov. 2—Trials of Faith .....
Nov. 6—A Brother's Requital (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 9—Bedelia and the Newlyweds (Com.).1000
Nov. 13—The Faith Healers (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 16—Virgin of the Fire (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 20—Don Caesar de Bazan (Dr.).....2000
Nov. 23—Father (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 27—Bedelia Has a Toothache (Com.)....1000
Nov. 30—Brother of the Bat (Com. Dr.)....1000

REX

Oct. 20—Leaves in the Storm (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—A Kentucky Feud (Dr.).....
Oct. 27—Through a Higher Power (Dr.)....
Oct. 31—Careful Nursing (Com.).....
Nov. 3—An Old-Fashioned Mother (Dr.)....
Nov. 7—Honor of the Family (Dr.).....
Nov. 10—A Galley Slave's Romance (Dr.)...
Nov. 14—Camping Out (Com.).....
Nov. 17—A Mother's Awakening (Dr.).....

SOLAX

Oct. 25—The Idol Worshipper.....
Oct. 30—Making an American Citizen (Dr.)
Nov. 1—At the 'Phone.....
Nov. 6—The New Love and the Old.....
Nov. 8—Just Hats.....
Nov. 13—The Prodigal Wife (Dr.).....
Nov. 15—Flesh and Blood (2-reel Dr.).....

THANHOUSER COMPANY.

Nov. 3—Petticoat Camp.....
Nov. 5—The Ladder of Life.....
Nov. 8—Through the Flames .....
Nov. 10—A Noise Like a Fortune.....
Nov. 12—The Country's Prize Baby.....
Nov. 15—In Time of Peril.....
Nov. 17—Frankfurters and Quail.....
Nov. 19—Miss Jaku of Tokio.....
Nov. 22—Cross Your Heart.....
Nov. 24—The Truant's Doom.....
Nov. 26—The Thunderbolt .....
Nov. 29—Forest Rose (2 reels).....

VICTOR

Oct. 11—Betty's Nightmare (Com.) .....
Oct. 18—The Cross-roads (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—The Angel of the Studio (Dr.)....
Nov. 1—The Redemption of Riverton (Dr.).
Nov. 8—Sisters (Dr.).....
Nov. 15—The Lady Leone (2-reel Dr.).....

"Agfa"

Celluloid Positive Celluloid Negative
AND
NON-FLAM POSITIVE
(Made Under License of the Patentee)

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.
15 E. 26th St. NEW YORK
Tel.: Mad. Sq. 7876. Cable: Rawfilm New York

TO LEASE
Moving Picture Theatre that is making 10,000 a year over all expenses will bear closest investigation, address P. Rosencranz, Ft. William, Ontario, Canada.

IT WILL TAKE
$8,000 TO HANDLE THIS

MAKE YOUR OWN MOVING PICTURE CAMERA
LET US FURNISH THE PARTS
BIGGEST SPORT IN ALL THE WORLD
100 POINTERS on big money-making stunts, repairing, operating and care of the Moving Picture Camera. Price $2.50
Let us develop your films.
Improved M. P. Machine parts Catalogue, Testimonials, etc.
LAVEZZI MACHINE WORKS, 2940 Herndon St., CHICAGO

Highest Prices Paid for SCENARIOS
WE WANT
HEADLINERS
COMEDIES Receive Special Attention
KINEMACOLOR COMPANY
1604 Broadway New York

MAKE YOUR OWN SLIDES
WITHOUT AID OF PHOTOGRAPHY
From Newspaper Cuts, Post Cards, Etc. Announcement Slides, Advertising Slides, Slides from Political Office Seekers' Cards, just the thing for elections. Slides can be made in a few minutes, plain or in colors. Where colored picture is used, colors will appear on slide same as in original. Complete outfit and directions, $1.00.
MIDLAND TRANSPARENCY CO.
313 Ramge Bldg. Dept. N Omaha, Neb.

BE UP-TO-DATE
Subscribe for the Leading Moving Picture Trade Publication
Moving Picture News

CHAUFFEUR'S COMPLETE OUTFIT SACRIFICED. Consisting elegant mink fur lined coat, Persian lamb collar, $35; pair of elegant bear robes $15 each, raccoon cap $5, pair of fur gloves $4, pair of goggles 50c., 1 pair leather leggins $3.50. Will sell separately or the lot, all new, never worn; original price $225.
G. CHASE, 118 East 28th St., New York.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF CHINATOWN
Or THE YELLOW PERIL
A 3000-Foot Drama. Six styles lithographs, photos and heralds.
Exclusive Territory
NEW YORK FILM CO.
12 Union Sq. New York

MANUFACTURERS—
STATE RIGHT SELLERS—
MACHINE AND SUPPLY MEN—
WANT TO REACH THE EXHIBITORS AND PICTURE-GOERS OF THE MIDDLEWEST
The Cleveland Leader
Maintains a Consistent and Progressive Photo-Play Department in its Sunday Edition that is read by everyone who is interested in any phase of the Moving Picture Business. Advertising rates on application. Address
EDITOR MOVING PICTURE DEPT., THE CLEVELAND LEADER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DO YOU WANT A FILM PRODUCED?
Let us show you how.
Local Pictures made or taken.
Camera and Camera man Rented.
Motion pictures Cameras for Sale.
SPECIAL EVENT FILM MFG'S CO., Inc.
248 West 35th St., New York City.

DESIGNING
ENGRAVING
ELECTROTYPING
HARDING
PHOTO
ENGRAVING CO.
8-10 WEST 13TH ST.
NEAR
FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
TELEPHONE 1817 1818 CHELSEA

NEW MACHINES FOR OLD
YOU Know Your Old Machine Projects a Poor Picture.
I Know My Exchange Proposition Will Overcome Your Trouble.
I Am Jobber of Edison, Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Standard Machines and will Exchange any make.
Write At Once, Giving Make, Style, Manufacturer's Number, Age and Condition of Your Machine. I WILL DO THE REST. State Make of Current Saver, and I Will Make Exchange Proposition for HALLBERG ECONOMIZER.
Electric Fans For Either A.C. or D.C., $7.50 and Up.
Exhaust Fans for Either A.C. or D.C., $15.00 and Up.
Complete Line of OPERA CHAIRS and All Supplies for M. P. Theatre.
I Equip Your Theatre Completely.
Send 25c. Stamps for my Complete Motion Picture Catalogue, the Reference Book.
J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23d St. New York City.
Write for Catalogue No. 2.

Make Your Lobby Display Attractive

There is nothing more fascinating to the public than a bright brass frame to display your photos or posters.
We make Lobby and Theatre Fixtures and Brass Rails of every description.
Don't fail to visit our complete Show Rooms at
101-103 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.
Write for Catalog.
Established 1882.
THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.
715-721 Sycamore St., Cincinnati, O.

LICENSEES OF PATENTS CO.

BIOGRAPH

Feet

Oct. 7—A Ten-Karat Hero (Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Chief's Blanket (Dr.).....
Oct. 14—In the Aisles of the Wild (Dr.)...1000
Oct. 17—A Limited Divorce (Com.).....
Oct. 17—Like the Cat, They Came Back (Com.) .....
Oct. 21—The One She Loved (Dr.).....
Oct. 24—The Painted Lady (Dr.).....
Oct. 28—At the Basket Picnic (Com.).....
Oct. 28—A Real Estate Deal (Com.).....
Oct. 31—The Musketeers of Pig Alley (Dr.)
Nov. 4—Heredity (Dr.) .....
Nov. 7—His Auto's Maiden Trip (Com.)....
Nov. 7—The Clubman and the Crook (Com.)..

CINES

C. Kleine

Oct. 22—Ascoli Piceno, Southern Italy (Sc.) 250
Oct. 22—The Invited Guest (Com.)..... 750
Oct. 26—A Turn of Fortune (Dr.).....1005
Oct. 29—Straw Hats—Made in Florence, Italy (Edu.) 400
Oct. 29—Mosques and Turkish Palaces (Sc.). 450
Oct. 29—Venetian Lace Workers (Edu.)..... 150
Nov. 2—A Head for a Head (Hist. Dr.)....1100
Nov. 5—The Golden Shell of Palermo, (Sc.) 300 and Love versus Gratitude (Dr.)... 700
Nov. 9—No Fool Like an Old Fool (Com. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 12—On the Firing Line (War Dr.)....1050
Nov. 16—Life and Industries in Aden Campo (Educ.) 400
Nov. 16—The Old Actor's Vision (Dr.)..... 600
Nov. 19—The Magic Elixir (Com.)..... 650
Nov. 19—Caught With the Goods (Com.).... 350
Nov. 23—Mafredonia, So. Italy (Sc.).....
Nov. 23—Two Afflicted Hearts (Com.)..... 700
Nov. 26—The Beautiful Valley of the Tronto (Sc.) 250
Nov. 26—All on a Summer's Day (Com.).... 750
Nov. 30—Corneto Tarquinia, Central Italy (Sc.) 450
Nov. 30—A Comedy of Errors (Com.)..... 550

EDISON

Oct. 9—Uncle Mun and the Minister (Com.) 1000
Oct. 11—The Charge of the Light Brigade (Dr.) 1025
Oct. 12—A Fresh Air Romance (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 14—Outwitting the Professor (Com.)..1000
Oct. 15—Glimpses of Bermuda (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 15—The Widow's Second Marriage (Com.) 650
Oct. 16—Removing Sunken Vessels (Top.).. 350
Oct. 16—Like Knights of Old (Com.)..... 650
Oct. 18—The Foundling (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—A Soldier's Duty (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—Kitty at Boarding School (Com.).. 650
Oct. 21—Mother Goose in a Sixteenth Century Theatre (Com.)..... 350
Oct. 22—At the Masquerade Ball (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—At Home in the Water (Top.)..... 400
Oct. 23—The Boy Rangers (Com.)..... 600
Oct. 25—The Affair at Raynor's (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 26—Young Mrs. Eaton (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 28—The Land Beyond the Sunset (Dr.).1000
Oct. 29—Burma, Rangoon, India (Sc.)..... 350
Oct. 29—Bringing Home the Pup (Com.).... 650
Oct. 30—Copper Mines at Bingham, Utah (Sc.) 400
Oct. 30—A Suffragette in Spite of Himself (Com.) 600
Nov. 1—A Baby's Shoe (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—Bobby's Dream (Com.)..... 375
Nov. 2—For Professional Services (Com.).. 625
Nov. 4—New Member of the Life-Saving Crew (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 5—A Romance of the Rails (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—A Queen for a Day (Com.).....1000
Nov. 8—Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming (Sc.) 1000
Nov. 9—A Doctor for an Hour (Com.)....1000
Nov. 11—The Non-Commissioned Officer (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 12—Salt Lake City, Utah and Its Surroundings (Sc.) 500
Nov. 12—Linked Together (Com.)..... 500
Nov. 13—A Thrilling Rescue by "Uncle Mun" (Com.) 1000
Nov. 15—The Old Reporter (Dr.).....1000

ESSANAY FILM CO.

Oct. 2—Well Matched (Com.).....
Oct. 3—The Redemption of Slivers (Dr.)..
Oct. 4—Terrible Teddy (Com.).....1000
Oct. 5—Love on Tough Luck Ranch (Com.).1000
Oct. 8—Alkali Ike Stung (Com.) 1000
Oct. 9—The Rebellion of Mandy (Com.)...1000
Oct. 10—The End of the Feud (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Not on the Circus Program (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 12—The Shotgun Ranchman (Dr.)....1000
Oct. 15—A Mistaken Calling (Com.).....
Oct. 16—The Grassville Girls (Com.) 1000
Oct. 17—The Snare (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 18—The Warning Hand (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 19—The Outlaw's Sarcifice (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Tomboy of "Bar Z" (Dr.)....1000

Feet

Oct. 23—Bringing Father Around (Com.)....1000
Oct. 24—The Thrifty Parson (Com.).....1000
Oct. 25—Sunsbine (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 26—The Ranch Girl's Trial (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—Miss Simkin's Summer Boarder (Com.) 1000
Oct. 30—The Letter (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—The Fisherman's Luck (Com.).....1000
Nov. 1—The Moving Finger (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 2—The Mother of the Ranch (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 5—Chains (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 6—A Money? (Com.).....1000
Nov. 7—The Ranchman's Anniversary (Com. Dr.) 1000
Nov. 8—When Wealth Torments (Com.).....1000
Nov. 9—An Indian's Friendship (Dr.).....1000

LUBIN

Oct. 14—The Uprising .....
Oct. 15—Gentleman Joe .....
Oct. 17—Red Saunder's Sacrifice.....
Oct. 18—Rube's Mistake .....
Oct. 18—Meeting Mamie's Mother.....
Oct. 19—Caught Bluffing .....
Oct. 19—The Sporting Editor .....
Oct. 21—Just Maine Folks .....
Oct. 22—In the Service of the State.....
Oct. 24—The Old Chess Players.....
Oct. 25—The Noodle Industry (Ind.).....
Oct. 25—Down With the Men (Com.).....
Oct. 28—An Irish Girl's Love (Com.).....
Oct. 29—Parson James (Dr.) .....
Oct. 31—The Heavenly Voice (Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Fixing a Flirt (Com.) .....
Nov. 2—The Family Next Door (Dr.).....
Nov. 4—Juan and Juanita (Dr.).....
Nov. 5—The Substitute Heiress (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—The Sheriff's Mistake (Dr.).....
Nov. 8—Felix at the Ball (Com.).....
Nov. 8—An Accidental Millionaire (Com.)..
Nov. 9—The Water Rats (Dr.).....
Nov. 11—The Way of the Mountains (Dr.)..
Nov. 12—At the Rainbow's End (Dr.).....
Nov. 14—The Country School Teacher (Com. Dr.) .....
Nov. 15—The Slate Industry (Ind.).....
Nov. 15—Suitors and Suit Cases (Com.).....
Nov. 16—Chief White Eagle (Dr.).....

G. MELIES

Sept. 26—The Beach Combers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 3—A Western Coquette (Dr.).....
Oct. 3—Clearing Land for Farming in the West .....
Oct. 10—Forgive Us Our Trespasses (Dr.)..1000
Oct. 17—Judgment of the Sea (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 24—A Son's Example (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 31—Wrongly Accused (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 7—The Smuggler's Prisoner (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 14—Value Received (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 21—The Governor's Clemency (Dr.)....1000
Nov. 28—Linked by Fate (Dr.) 1000
Dec. 5—The Sheriff's Pro-Tem (Dr.).....1000

PATHE FRERES

Oct. 8—Amongst Many Loves (Com.).....
Oct. 8—The Trianons, Versailles (Travel)..
Oct. 9—Passing Gypsies (Dr. Com.).....
Oct. 10—The Horse Thieves (Dr.).....
Oct. 11—His Country Before All (Dr.).....
Oct. 12—Naughty Marietta (Com.).....
Oct. 14—Pathe's Weekly, No. 42.....
Oct. 15—Max Fights a Duel (Com.).....
Oct. 15—The Valley of Chevreuse, France (Tr.) .....
Oct. 16—The Lass of Clauster (Dr.).....
Oct. 17—The Striped Bathing Suit (Com.)...
Oct. 17—Sub-marine Fauna (Oceanic) .....
Oct. 18—The Rubber Industry in Malaysia (Ind.) .....
Oct. 18—The Convertible Auto (Trick).....
Oct. 19—Misleading Evidence (Dr.) .....
Oct. 21—Pathe's Weekly No. 43.....
Oct. 22—The End of Louis XI (Dr.).....
Oct. 22—Old Toledo (Travel).....
Oct. 23—The Simple Life (Com.).....
Oct. 24—Little Raven's Sweetheart (Dr.)...
Oct. 25—Tom Thumb (Trick).....
Oct. 25—The Hermit Crab.....
Oct. 24—Olympic Games, Stockholm, Sweden, 1912 .....
Oct. 28—Pathe's Weekly, No. 44.....
Oct. 28—Frenzied Finance (Dr.).....
Oct. 29—Whiffles, Cubic Artist (Com.).....
Oct. 29—In the Tyrol—The Arlberg Valley (Travel) .....
Oct. 30—A Mamma Wanted (Com.).....
Oct. 31—Jim's Partner (W. Dr.).....
Nov. 1—Tragedy at the Court of Milan (Dr.)
Nov. 2—Wifey's Investment (Com.).....
Oct. 26—United States Armada.....
Nov. 4—Pathe's Weekly No. 45.....
Nov. 5—Anne Boleyn (Hist. Dr.).....
Nov. 6—Broken Hearts (W. Dr. Com.).....
Nov. 7—Victims of Fate (Dr.).....
Nov. 7—Dinan, France (Travel).....
Nov. 8—Half a Pint of Milk (Com.).....
Nov. 8—The Scarab .....
Nov. 8—A Trip up the Elbe (Travel).....
Nov. 9—Buster to the Rescue (W. Dr.).....

KALEM CO.

Feet

Oct. 19—The Rival Engineers (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 21—The County Fair (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 23—The Peril of the Cliffs (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Girl in the Caboose (Dr.).....
Oct. 25—New York Public School Drills and Dances (Edu.) .....
Oct. 26—Death Valley Scotty's Mine (Dr.).1000
Oct. 28—The Power of a Hymn (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—The Strange Story of Elsie Mason (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 1—Pat the Soothsayer (Com.).....
Nov. 1—The American Rhine (Sc.).....
Nov. 2—The Skinflint (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 4—Mountain Dew (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—The Mystery of Grandfather's Clock (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 8—The Pony Express Girl (Dr.).....
Nov. 8—Brave Old Bill (Dr.).....
Nov. 9—The Fraud at the Hope Mine (Dr.)..1000

SELIG

Oct. 24—The Awakening (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 25—The Biwa Canal, and Shooting the Rapids of the Katsuragawa, Japan (Edu.) .....
Oct. 25—Getting Atmospbere (Com.).....1000
Oct. 28—A Fisherboy's Faitb (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 29—Jim's Vindication (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 30—A Heart in Rags (Dr.) 1000
Oct. 31—Her Bitter Lesson (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 1—His Wedding Eve (Com.).....1000
Nov. 4—The Voice of Warning (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 5—The Dynamiters (W. Dr.).....1000
Nov. 6—Her Education (Com.) 1000
Nov. 7—Carmen of the Isles (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 8—The Legend of the Lost Arrow (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 8—Enchanting Japan (Edu.) 1000
Nov. 11—Saved by Fire.....1000
Nov. 12—Between Love and the Law.....1000
Nov. 13—The Lost Inheritance.....1000
Nov. 14—Old Songs and Memories.....1000
Nov. 15—Shanghaied 1000
Nov. 18—A Man Among Men.....1000
Nov. 19—The Saint and the Siwash.....1000
Nov. 20—Atala. Adapted from the French Classic of Chateaubriand.....1000
Nov. 21—The Fire-Fighter's Love.....1000
Nov. 22—Mike's Brainstorm.....1000

URBAN ECLIPSE

G. Kleine

Oct. 9—A Roman's Conversion (Dr.)..... 700
Oct. 16—The Missing Locket (Dr.)..... 995
Oct. 16—In the Ossau Valley (Pyrennes, France) (Scenic) 300
Oct. 23—Making Briar Pipes (Edu.)..... 400
Oct. 23—A Persistent Fly-Swatter (Com.)... 300
Oct. 30—A Race of Honor (Dr.)..... 975
Nov. 6—The Queen of Spades (Dr.).....1007
Nov. 13—Specimens of Lizards and Frogs (Edu.) 300
Nov. 13—The Town of Cognac, France, and Its Brandy Industry (Edu.).... 400
Nov. 13—Reviewing French Troops by Airship (Topical) 300
Nov. 20—The Masqueraders (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 27—Trebizond and Surroundings, Asia Minor (Sc.) 500
Nov. 27—A Man for a Day (Com.)..... 500

VITAGRAPH

Oct. 8—Scenes Along River Lee (Dr.)..... 300
Oct. 8—The Godmother (Com.) 700
Oct. 9—When Persistency and Obstinacy meet (Com.) 1000
Oct. 10—As Fate Would Have It (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 11—Mammoth Life Savers (Com.).....1000
Oct. 11—Her Father's Hat (Com.) 1000
Oct. 12—When California Was Young (Dr.).1000
Oct. 14—Every Inch a Man (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 15—Mrs. Lirriper's Lodger (Dr.).....1000
Oct. 16—An Elephant on His Hands (Com.).1000
Oct. 17—Parade and Gun Drill, Ft. Hamilton (Topical) 300
Oct. 17—Father's Hot Toddy (Com.)..... 700
Oct. 18—A Mistake in Spelling (Com. Dr.).1000
Oct. 19—Bunny All at Sea (Com.).....1000
Oct. 21—Four Days a Widow (Com.).....1000
Oct. 22—The Spirit of the Range 1000
Oct. 23—An Expensive Shine and Scenes of Irisb Life in Dublin 1000
Oct. 24—The Toymaker 1000
Oct. 25—Faithful Unto Death 1000
Oct. 26—Into tbe Furnace Fire.....1000
Oct. 28—None But the Brave Deserve tbe Fair 1000
Oct. 29—Bunny at the Derby and Just Luck.1000
Oct. 30—Poet and Peasant 1000
Oct. 31—On the Line of Peril (Mil.).....1000
Nov. 1—Lessons in Courtship (Com.).....1000
Nov. 2—Bettina's Substitute (Com.).....1000
Nov. 2—In the Garden Fair (Com. Dr.)....1000
Nov. 4—His Official Appointment (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 5—The Face or the Voice (Dr.) 1000
Nov. 6—Michael McShane, Matchmaker (Com.).....1000
Nov. 7—Out of the Shadow (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 8—A Modern Atlanta (Dr.).....1000
Nov. 9—The Hand Bag (Com.).....1000
Nov. 9—Arabian Sports (Top.).....

ECLAIR

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 12

"The Honor of the Firm"

A drama that is different—that is better.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14

"Their Children's Approval"

With the rarest of bewitching travel scenes worked in between.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

The educational sensation among film releases

"Sea Anemones"
Highly scientific.
Plainly instructive.

SPLIT REEL

"An Unforeseen Event"
Fun at its supreme height.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 17

"A Criminal in Spite of Himself"

on the same reel THE HARBOR OF OPORTO, WHICH IS ECLAIR-PERFECT

ECLAIR FILM COMPANY, 225 WEST 42d STREET NEW YORK CITY

ECLAIR FILMS PARIS

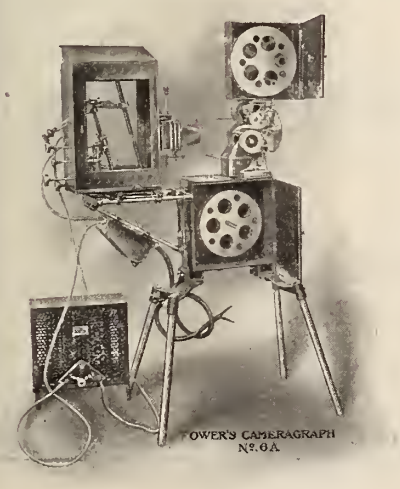
STANDARD FILMS

ADVERTISERS GET RESULTS

FROM THE MOVING PICTURE NEWS The Only Educational Paper in the Industry

OUR PRODUCT POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6A THE RESULT

THE PERFECT MOVING PICTURE MACHINE



POWER'S NO. 6A—our latest model—has advanced the moving picture machine to the highest known point of mechanical excellence. It is simply perfect as well as perfectly simple, both in the adjustments of its mechanism and the ease of operation.

It will work 365 days in the year, and the last day will find it there, on the job.

Another thing: A POWER'S NO. 6A can be run at any speed desired; slow, without creating flicker, or high speed without causing undue additional wear on the parts.

Our patented loop setter device (costing but $10.00 extra) removes one of the most annoying obstacles known to moving picture projection. It resets the lower loop automatically without stopping the machine, thus DOING AWAY WITH THE DARK SCREEN AND BROKEN PICTURES.

THIS DEVICE IS FOUND ONLY IN POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH.

Let us send you catalogue D giving full details.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY
90 GOLD STREET, NEW YORK

For fifteen years the leading makers of motion picture machines.

EASTMAN

motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

MIATT PROCURES PATENTS

1868-1912

G. W. MIATT, Counselor at Law

Solicitor of U. S. and Foreign Patents, Etc.

Offices: TEMPLE COURT,
5 and 7 Beekman St., Corner of Nassau St.
Phone 5437 Cortlandt.
Residence, 431 Riverside Drive,
Phone 3390 Morningside.
NEW YORK CITY.

SUPERB EXHIBITION OF ACTING

FLESH and BLOOD

A sensational detective story with snappy incidents and "heart-interest" situations. Peerless Pantomine with a cast including all our Solax favorites.

TWO REELS
RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

Barnes, the detective, feels that the honor of the Secret Service is at stake when he is given an assignment to trace down the third of a series of daring robberies that have been baffling the secret service. When he discovers that his morbid son is guilty of theft, he hesitates between his duty to his profession and his duty to his family.

The Advertising Matter Includes

one-sheets, three-sheets, heralds, announcements, slides and other miscellaneous material. Write for samples.

OTHER ONE REEL FEATURES

THE PRODIGAL WIFE

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOV. 13

A COMEDY OF ERRORS

RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOV. 20

Solax Company

LEMOINE AVENUE, FORT LEE, NEW JERSEY

EXHIBITORS

$500,000.00 A YEAR FOR MOVING PICTURE THEATRES

GIVEN BY

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

WITH

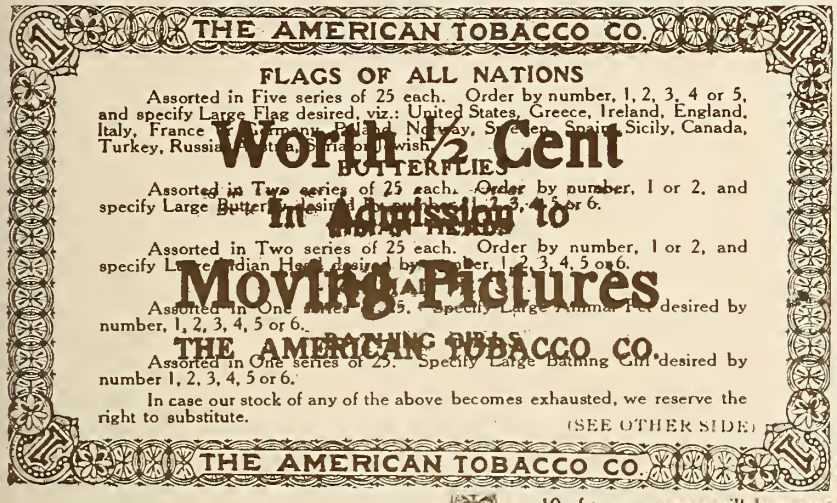
TOKIO

CIGARETTES

THIS MEANS MONEY TO YOU

WILL BRING YOU TRADE YOU HAVE NEVER HAD

Back



THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
FLAGS OF ALL NATIONS
Assorted in Five series of 25 each. Order by number, 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5, and specify Large Flag desired, viz.: United States, Greece, Ireland, England, Italy, France, Germany, Poland, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Sicily, Canada, Turkey, Russia, Switzerland, Scotland, Wish
Worth ½ Cent
In Admission to Moving Pictures
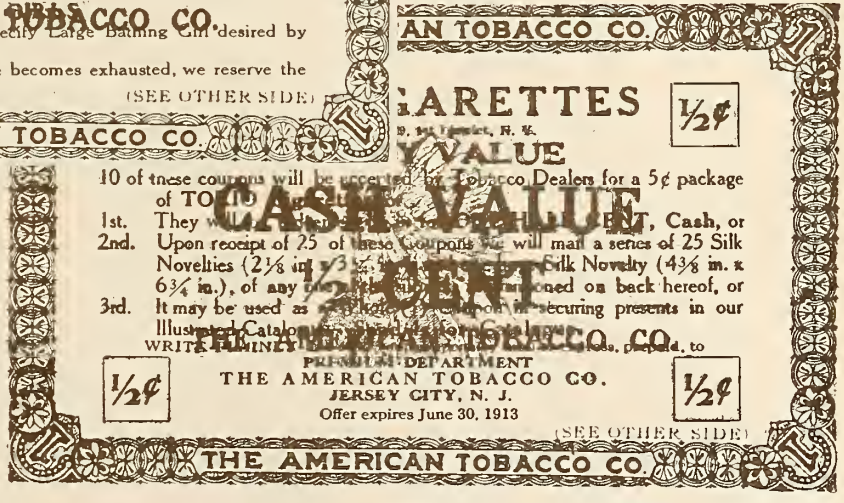
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
Assorted in One series of 25. Specify Large Bathing Girl desired by number 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6.
In case our stock of any of the above becomes exhausted, we reserve the right to substitute.
(SEE OTHER SIDE)
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

FAC-SIMILE OF THE COUPON ISSUED IN EACH PACKAGE OF TOKIO CIGARETTES.

10 ARE EQUAL TO 5 CENTS

Front



AN TOBACCO CO.
ARETTES
½¢
VALUE
10 of these coupons will be accepted by Tobacco Dealers for a 5¢ package of TO
1st. They will
2nd. Upon receipt of 25 of these Coupons we will mail a series of 25 Silk Novelties (2⅛ in. x 3⅛ in.), of any Silk Novelty (4⅜ in. x 6¾ in.), of any mentioned on back hereof, or 3rd. It may be used as securing presents in our Illustrated Catalog
CASH VALUE
½ CENT
WRITE PLAINLY
PREMIUM DEPARTMENT
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
Offer expires June 30, 1913
½¢
½¢
(SEE OTHER SIDE)
THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. WILL REDEEM ANY QUANTITY OF TOKIO COUPONS AT FACE VALUE.

If you have not already heard of this, send for a circular explaining the proposition in full. Fill out the corner of this page, cut it off and forward it to

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

111 FIFTH AVENUE

NEW YORK CITY

I am the manager of the under mentioned theatre and desire to hear of your proposition in full.

Name. .....

Theatre. .....

Address .....

Town .....

State. .....

M. P. News

WARNING--- This photoplay has been duly copyrighted, and we will prosecute all infringements of our rights.

This wonderful musical photoplay will be the greatest money-getter ever produced. Music has been especially arranged and composed for this play and helps to make it a unique exhibition. Is 4,200 feet long, in four acts. Will announce release date in next issue. Will have one-half sheets, 1-sheets, 3-sheets, 6-sheets, 8-sheets and 12-sheets; several styles of each size. Will allow full fare and expenses of trip to purchasers of STATE RIGHTS for any part of the United States and Canada.

NEW YORK FILM COMPANY

12 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK CITY

NOV 14 1912

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

VOLUME VI
No. 19

NOVEMBER 9
1912

GERTRUDE ROBINSON
Reliance Film Co.

PRICE
TEN
CENTS

The Majestic Motion Picture Company

PRESENTS A BEAUTIFUL TWO REEL PRODUCTION OF

HAZEL KIRKE

THE WELL KNOWN DRAMA BY STEELE MACKAYE

SUNDAY — HAZEL RESTORED TO HER FATHER — NOV. 17th

AS ORIGINALLY PRODUCED AT THE Herald Square Theatre, New York

AND PLAYED ALL OVER THE CIVILIZED WORLD

A NOTABLE TWO REEL FEATURE

WONDERFULLY STAGED AND PERFECTLY ACTED

The Majestic Studios

540 WEST 21st STREET, NEW YORK

RELIANCE

WEDNESDAY The FAITH HEALER NOV. 13th

BELIEF IN THE POWER OF PRAYER HEALS THE SIMPLE MOUNTAIN FOLK

MARK THIS DATE—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16th

SOMETHING ABSOLUTELY NEW

RELEASE DAY OF

"THE VIRGIN OF THE FIRE"

A DRAMA OF THE STONE AGE

BEGINNING A NEW ERA IN THE HISTORY OF PHOTOPLAY PRODUCTIONS

WED., NOV. 20th

"Don Caesar de Bazan"

IN TWO REELS

ABREAST

RELIANCE.

OF THE TIMES

A BEAUTIFUL LINE OF SPECIAL 3 and 1 SHEET POSTERS

RELIANCE STUDIOS, 540 West 21st Street, New York

HISTORICAL PAGEANT of 1912

Great Events in Nation's History in 3500 Feet of Film

Gorgeous Array of Costumes

SCENE FROM HISTORICAL PAGEANT—QUAKER SETTLERS

Send 25 cents for Historical Pageant Book of Words ⁂ We also have a seventy-two page book of music for each and every scene in the film. Sold at 25 cents ⁂ ⁂ ⁂

Made by the HISTORICAL PAGEANT FILM

GENERAL FILM PU

H. A. SPANUTH
President

145 WEST 45th STREE

GREATEST STATES RIGHTS PROPOSITION YET OFFERED

Brilliantly Spectacular and Educational

$500,000 PRODUCTION

SCENE FROM TOURNAMENT OF THE BLENDED ROSE

Five Thousand Performers, Three Hundred Horses, 150 Real Carlisle Indians Books, Post Cards, Lobby Frames, Photos, Three Sheets, Eight Sheets, Twenty-four Sheets

orld's Rights Sold Exclusively By and Through

LICITY & SALES CO.

NEW YORK CITY

H. W. EBANN
Secretary

KAY-BEE FILMS

Coming! "The Invaders" Coming!

Three Reels. RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29

Produced by the same Company, horses, actors, soldiers, Indians, paraphernalia and equipment, and directed by the same man—Thos. H. Ince—as

"Custer's Last Fight"

but on a bigger, grander and more colossal scale. A marvelous film.

"The Altar of Death"

Sensational Indian and Military Subject in Two Reels—a Mountain Blown up with Powder

RELEASED FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO., 150 East 14th Street, New York City

Mutual Film Corporation, 60 Wall St., New York, Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada

KEYSTONE FILMS

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND

Supported by a Strong Company

FORD STERLING
FRED MACE

"The Rivals" and "Mr. Fixit"

A Split Reel. RELEASED MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18

KEYSTONE FILM COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

BRONCHO FILMS

"The Civilian"

Two Reel Military Drama. RELEASED WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20

BRONCHO MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
150 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 60 WALL ST., Sole Agents for United States and Canada

In writing to advertisers please mention "MOVING PICTURE NEWS"

CA6260280

"THE CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE ARE COPYRIGHTED"

The Moving Picture News

INCORPORATING

Moving Picture Tales

AMERICA'S LEADING CINEMATOGRAPH WEEKLY

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY

The CINEMATOGRAPH PUBLISHING COMPANY, 30 West Thirteenth Street, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone, 4092 Chelsea

ALFRED H. SAUNDERS, Editor (20 years Expert in Cinematography).

This newspaper is owned and published by the Cinematograph Publishing Company, a New York corporation. Office and principal place of business No. 30 West 13th Street, New York. Alfred H. Saunders, President: John A. Wilkens, Secretary, and W. M. Petingale, Treasurer. The address of the officers is the office of the newspaper.

SUBSCRIPTION: $2.00 per year. Postpaid in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Canada and Foreign Countries: $2.50 per year. All communications should be addressed to The Moving Picture News, 30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City. ADVERTISING RATES: $60 per page, $30 ½-page, $15 ¼-page, single column $20, $2 per inch. Discounts, 20% 12; 10% 6; 5% 3 months.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post Office.

Volume VI November 9, 1912 Number 19

CINEMATOGRAPHY AS AN EDUCATIONAL AGENT

TALKING with a prominent educationalist a little while ago, after he had complimented me upon my educational propaganda for Cinematography, he expressed a wish that we could get at every school boy and girl who were students of the high schools of the country. He thought that a consensus of opinion from them would be very interesting and give some idea as to the trend of thought regarding the value of Cinematography as an adjunct, or aid, to both teacher and pupil alike. The problem before me was, how could I get such a consensus of opinion? It seems an almost impossible, herculean task, but, not to be discouraged, I made a small beginning, and with a professor friend of mine who has a class in English at one of the prominent high schools in the city (the name of which, perforce, must be suppressed, and also the names of the pupils whom I quote), he asked a class of approximately 56 pupils the question, "What would be the advantages of having moving pictures illustrate our lessons?" Some forty-eight replies came to hand, and out of this batch I selected the following excerpts as indicating the trend of thought among the pupils of this one class. The first selection is from an essay by S—— M——, who wrote: "I think I know a few intelligent reasons why moving pictures ought to be used in school. In the first place, moving pictures are beneficial in almost every subject, as they help to illustrate what one has read or studied. For instance, in biology, a series of large pictures showing the transformation of a frog's egg to a tadpole and eventually to a good-sized frog. Then, again, in studying the human body, certain organs, such as the heart and lungs, could be shown, and also in many cases how they perform their functions. The action of a man's muscles in walking could be illustrated. In physiology, moving pictures would be a great help. The upheaval could be shown directly after an earthquake. The Natural Bridge, the Grand Cañon and many other grandeurs of nature could be illustrated."

A wide-awake miss, H—— S——, wrote: "They will prove a help in all subjects, but I will give the examples in English and biology. Often in studying a book you have no idea of the place. By moving pictures it could be shown very easily. In biology it is often hard to get an idea of the different insects and birds. This could be greatly remedied by pictures and would become stamped upon a person's memory and would prove a help all through life."

A—— M—— wrote: "I wish to state I advocate the movement for using moving pictures in connection with school work for the following reasons: First, by means of these pictures, the subjects taught will be made more interesting and it will become a pleasure to learn them. Secondly, facts will be remembered more easily as the pupils accurately see what they are being taught. Experiments have proven it is a very good method of studying biology and physiology. Scenes described by standard authors could be shown as they accurately are in all their beauties and splendor. . . . Heroic scenes could be depicted and a boy or girl could see before their eyes history in the making. . . . I earnestly believe that moving pictures should be introduced in the schools of our country, and hope the day is not far off when all will be equipped."

M—— B—— grasps the situation very concisely when he said: "Lessons would become pleasanter and more interesting because scenes will be shown as they actually are, and would impress the mind more than things read about and described. Some of the leading moving picture companies have produced some of Shakespeare's plays. I have seen nearly all of these, and do not think any kind of studying could show things so clearly."

H—— P—— M—— remarks: "In the study of English the educational possibilities under such a plan are unlimited. A mountain village like that of Monestier, a trip through the country of the Comisards, a monastery as Stevenson saw it, a voyage down the Oise—all these and other scenes would be printed indelibly upon the minds of the students. In connection with history, in what more effective way could the customs, the home life and the character of a people be shown than by the motion pictures?"

Miss I—— C—— expressed herself in this manner: "In the first place, I think it will be of educational value. For instance, in the book named 'Travels with a Donkey,' it would be very good if the pictures of the different places mentioned could be shown to the class. . . . Science or biology could be very nicely shown in this way instead of just being recited by the teacher that certain facts are so. And then we would be able to write compositions on these subjects more fully."

Miss E—— D—— wants school made all playtime. She said: "I can give several reasons. Firstly, it would amuse the students. Secondly, many pupils dislike the monotony of studying some subject, whereas that subject might become very interesting to the pupil by the help of moving pictures. Thirdly, moving pictures of this kind serve very well for conversational topics."

Miss D—— N—— wrote: "It would arouse a greater interest in the work of the school than there is at present. In history many interesting scenes of ancient times could be thrown on the screen and would give us a better idea of what things were like in those times than even the finest books sometimes convey. One reason for books not conveying as well as desired the facts which are written is that the pupils are not as apt to concentrate upon the book. Many picturesque scenes from 'Merchant of Venice,' 'Travels with a Donkey,' 'Odyssey' and other books could be thrown on the screen. Classes and schools could exchange pictures to save great expense. One of the finest reasons for this way of teaching is that teachers would be saved some long explanations and trying to picture the scenes for the pupils."

L—— D—— argued: "If we had one of these machines installed in this school it would be a great aid in teaching history, biology and other subjects that need the power of imagination. Suppose we had one of these machines in this school, the Board of Education could then obtain pictures that had to do with the various subjects. If a picture of Stevenson's 'Inland Voyage' could be put on a screen before the eyes of the students they would then have the advantage of seing the real places which, when you read, require a great deal of imagination and even then do not obtain such an accurate idea of the places. If moving pictures of this sort were in this school they would not only be enjoyed, but very beneficial for the students' intellects."

All of the letters expressed appreciation and are well put together, and if the manufacturers will take a few hints from these letters I think I shall have accomplished a good purpose. I want to refer to the last letter of the batch, which is the only adverse one of the series, and is written by A—— R——, in which he said: "This is what I think, and I do not know whether the other students agree with me—moving pictures would impress facts and objects in our minds, but we would be interested in them only just as long as they are new to us. As soon as we get used to them we shall not care for them. Moving pictures harm the eyes and, besides, to have us like them, love stories would have to be interspersed between dry historical and germy biological shows, or the moving pictures would lose their charm." This lovelorn pupil can always obtain his fill of the love scenes by visiting the moving picture theatres in his neighborhood. To show them in the schools, especially mixed schools, I am afraid would plant seeds in the minds of the pupils that are best left out during the study of lessons. Nature will augment these feelings in due time and course, without recourse to the love film in the school. Regarding the eyes, this was a canard sprung upon the industry through the newspapers, by some prejudiced person, and the theory is not proven by actual experience.

If I take the above as a criterion, or adopt the method used by politicians, I think the above "straw vote" is proof positive that the aid given by Cinematography to the schoolroom would be an inestimable boon.

Alfred H. Saunders.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

General Headquarters

703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio

OFFICERS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

President, M. A. Neff, Lock Box 15, Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Vice-Presidents, S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; Wm. J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; B. L. Converse, Owassa, Mich.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind.; E. W. Waugh, Huntington, W. Va.; Orene Parker, Covington, Ky.; Geo. H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.; Chas. Rothschild, San Francisco, Calif.; Sidney Asher, New York, N. Y.; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.; L. F. Blumenthal, Jersey City, N. J.; H. C. Farley, Montgomery, Ala.; E. V. Richards, Shreveport, La.; F. W. Young, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; W. H. Wassman, Nashville, Tenn.; Anthony J. Xydias, Houston, Tex.; Carl Gregg, Tulsa, Okla.; Paul LeMarquand, Winnipeg, Can.; M. C. Everstein, Jacksonville, Fla.; Geo. Osborn, St. Paul, Minn.

CLEVELAND LOCAL No. 1 HAS "HOUSE WARMING"

Cleveland Local, No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, having outgrown its old headquarters, has taken new rooms at 711 Columbia Building. In celebration of the event a housewarming was decided on, and although the new quarters are ample for business purposes, it was found that they were inadequate for the program outlined by the committee in charge of the celebration. So the "housewarming" was held Wednesday night at the Elks' Club.

The program was carried out to the satisfaction and delight of all members and their guests, and the Elks' banquet hall made a suitable place for the gathering. Covers were laid for about 250, and full justice was done to the good things provided by the Elk caterers. The tables were tastefully decorated by Emel Meyer, a member of the league, who also is the Penn Square florist.

During the banquet a cabaret entertainment was provided by the National Vaudeville agency, consisting of singing and dancing. The National Theatre orchestra furnished music for the occasion.

After the banquet President Morris, of the league, in the capacity of toastmaster, introduced the speakers of the evening. Councilman Benesch told the merrymakers that he was deputized to express the regret of Mayor Baker on account of his inability to be present. After the eloquent deputy sat down it was the unanimous opinion of those present that the mayor's shoes had been well filled. Among other things, Councilman Benesch said he had been agreeably surprised to find, upon investigation at Judge Addams' court, and also at the office of Probationer Lewis, that notwithstanding the attendance at the one hundred moving picture theatres in the city of all the school children of Cleveland there were no complaints of juvenile misconduct or depravity traceable to the theatres.

Building Inspector Allen spoke of the hearty co-operation which the league exhibitors have always extended to his office by carrying out the strict provisions of the code and by so doing have placed their shows above criticism by their patrons and the public.

City Electrician Sarbinsky was introduced as the "show me" guest. He said the old exhibitors understood him well enough, but that a number of the new ones seemed to regard him as somewhat of an interloper when he asked to be "shown" before giving a theatre permit.

Ernest Schwartz, president of the Erie Amusement Company and attorney for the league, spoke of the great influence of the motion picture as an educational factor and said he regretted the action of misinformed but well-meaning critics who rarely visit the theatres but insist upon creating a false impression by their public statements and actions.

S. M. Hulburt, president of the Operators' Union, told of improved conditions in the trade.

Among others who spoke were President Smith, of the Victor Film Company; Max Schachtel, of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Company; C. M. Christenson, national secretary and traveling organizer of the league, and others.

The committee on arrangements was composed of Messrs. Anthony, S. Lustig, Christenson, Morris, Schwartz, Kohl and Bullock.

EXHIBITORS WILL GO TO LONDON

In March, 1913, there will be held at Olympia, London, a Cinematograph exhibition, which will in all likelihood be the first of its kind ever held. But four months later, July 7, there is to be an exposition of the Moving Picture Trades at the New Grand Central Palace, New York City, which will, to say the least, be some show. A committee of the New York exhibitors have undertaken to make it a success, and that means it surely will be. The committee of exhibitors in charge have already planned having representatives at the London show, who will watch everything worth seeing and plan improvements. Many novel ideas in promoting an exposition of this kind will be demonstrated by the committee, who have already offered fifty ($50) dollars for the best three sheet drawing emblematic of the Moving Picture Trades. Slides announcing the convention and exposition are now being made to send to every moving picture house in this country and abroad.

The details of this large undertaking have already become so great a factor that separate quarters are being arranged for the committee. Letters have been sent to leading exhibitors in foreign countries telling them of the convention and exposition and inviting them to be present.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS TO MEET

The call for the motion picture exhibitors of the state of Massachusetts to meet in Boston on the 18th and 19th of November is meeting with hearty response. President Neff is receiving many letters from Massachusetts and also other states, stating that they will attend the convention and are anxious to affiliate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. All arrangements have been made to entertain the visiting exhibitors and an enjoyable time is anticipated as well as a strictly business session.

PRESIDENT NEFF WILL ATTEND EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE BALL IN NEW YORK

President Neff will leave Cincinnati Saturday night or Sunday morning for New York, where he will attend the annual ball of the Exhibitors' League of New York. It is possible that he will stop on his way at Harrisburg, Pa., also Washington, D. C., arriving in New York on the 12th or 13th, from New York; after the big ball he will go to Boston, arriving there the night of the 17th or the morning of the 18th.

While in the East, President Neff expects to take up several matters in the interest of the motion picture exhibitors and will be pleased to visit any state that desires to organize.

ECLAIR

Eclair's "His Determination Rewarded" is a sort of moral preachment or a resolution stimulator. It tells the old story all over again, all but the end. There is a good strong tension maintained throughout the last scenes which lifts the story above the average. We like the human probability that fits in the tale.

Guy Olliver, as the persecuted husband, gives feeling to his part It sinks into the spectator's heart. John Adolphi is very good and Miss Baring is always good. Nor must we forget to mention Baby Olliver, Guy Olliver's child. She is a darling.

The story concerns the falling into evil ways of a young married man. His associates lead him to gambling. He steals from his employer and is "sent up." But his wife and family stick by him and it is this that causes his "determination" to live straight and "make good" when he is released.

His term expires. His wife welcomes him back as though naught had happened. He secures a position. An old associate finds him out and attempts to persuade him back into the old ways. Failing in this, he informs the employer that he has an ex-convict in his employ. So the husband is discharged. And so he continues with other positions.

Hard pressed for money, he agrees to join a housebreaking expedition. They are about to start when his own child finds him and awakens the old determination to be straight. He surreptitiously gives his child a note of warning to the man whom the gang intend to rob. The child gives the note to the man. He summons the police and they await the coming of the burglarious band and capture them after many thrilling minutes' fighting. Thus is his determination rewarded.

CLEVELAND LOCAL NO. 1 HOUSE WARMING AT ELKS' CLUB

GREAT HISTORICAL PAGEANT IN MOTION PICTURES

By M. I. MacDONALD

Since the advent of the moving picture into the world of education, possibly no more interesting event has been converted into a film production than the historical pageant which took place at the old historical city of Philadelphia, October 7th to October 12, 1912.

Grasping at the opportunity for educational and spectacular film work, a company was formed for the purpose of reproducing in moving pictures the scenes and incidents connected with this wonderful resurrection of the early days of the nation's history, called the Historical Pageant Company, in which H. A. Spanuth, of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, of New York City, is interested, hence the fact that these remarkable films are being handled exclusively by the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, as a strictly states right proposition for the United States, Canada and Europe.

The historical pageant which brings the troublous but nevertheless romantic days of more than one hundred years ago, with their heroes, their heroines, their persistent fight for independence and liberty with vivid realism before the people of to-day, is of more than merely national interest: its interest is of necessity international. The incidents represented therein have most important bearings on the spinal column connecting nation with nation in trade and commerce, and on the financial, political and social conditions of to-day.

This remarkable film, 3,500 feet in all, takes us step by step through the history of the United States, from the landing of the Dutch colonists on the Delaware on August 28, 1609, up to the gathering of the districts in 1854.

The episodes of the pageant are as follows: After a prologue showing the incidents of Exploration and Settlement, come the historical scenes in order of happening: "The Coming of William Penn," "The Granting of the Charter to Pennsylvania." "The Return of the Tea Ship 'Polly'," "Arrival of the Delegates to the Continental Congress," "The Declaration of Independence," "The Battle of Germantown," "The British in Philadelphia," "The Meschianza," "Franklin at the Court of France," "The Federal Procession," "President Washington at Gray's Gardens," "Echoes of the French Revolution," "The War of 1812," "Lafayette's Reception" and "The Gathering of the Districts."

One newspaper speaks thus of the wonderful spectacle: "Months of hard labor and close study by 5,000 actors participating in the Historical Pageant were eloquently though silently rewarded by the vast throng of men, women and children who were thrilled and impressed by the greatness of the production instead of being moved to applause by its spectacular features.

"In honor of what will probably go on record as being the most stupendous historical pageant ever before produced either in this country or in Europe, American flags waved from the windows of thousands of homes and business houses."

PENN'S TREATY WITH THE INDIANS

Nothing more wonderfully inspiring could well be imagined than this recalling of a glorious past to the scenes where actually trod its heroes. It was here in the old city that the brave men, ready to give their lives for their country's good, gathered together and constituted and signed the Declaration of Independence; it was here that the first Congress met; and it was here that many of the tragic as well as the glorifying incidents in connection with the nation's history transpired. No more appropriate spot could have been chosen for the staging of this interesting historical celebration.

One of the noticeable things in connection with the historical pageant was its gorgeous costuming. Dazzling in the extreme was the spectacle presented to the thousands upon thousands of people who witnessed it. The actual cost of production which is to be presented to the public in film is some $100,000. For more than a year and a half the women of Philadelphia labored in the old Independence Hall, constructing the beautiful costumes worn by the actors in what may almost be termed an historical drama. Many of them were copied from original paintings of the historical characters, and all was authentic and strictly true to the people and periods which they were representative of.

INDIAN BATTLE AT THE BLOCK HOUSE

It is estimated that should the actors who took part in this great production have been hired to do the work which they did, and should not so much of the labor been donated, the cost of the historical pageant would have run probably into half a million dollars.

Never before has such an opportunity been given to the United States for the placing before its people, adults and children, of a living picture of the early history of its republic. The educational value of this film production cannot be emphasized too strongly. Every board of education in the country should see to it that the children belonging to the schools under their jurisdiction have the opportunity of benefiting by being allowed to view it.

PARADING OF A TORY

It is a production that should be stored away by schools and colleges for future use. One hundred years from now its usefulness will not have diminished one iota.

As a spectacular production it makes its appeal to theatres. The photographic effects produced in this production are also very fine. The scenic portion is simple and natural, having for its settings the beautiful greensward and forest background of Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

A word for those who are handling this portentous film production may not be out of place here. H. A. Spanuth, president of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, has come to be known not only among the people of our own country, but all over the world, as a man who handles only the best in motion picture films. His Nat C. Goodwin "Oliver Twist" won for him and for his company the highest praise, being one of the first American ventures of the kind put on the market. Then came the Roosevelt films, which were witnessed with such entire satisfaction and interest throughout the country, and now comes perhaps the most remarkable of all, the Historical Pageant, not to speak of several smaller productions that have been sandwiched in between.

A great deal of honor is due to the film men of the world. It is now an acknowledged fact that they are doing more for the education of the people than any other class of men in the commercial field.

It is hoped that exhibitors and educationalists in every part of the globe will grasp the opportunity of exhibiting to those who come their way this remarkable film production of one of the most important chapters of American history—a chapter whose influence has left its impress not alone on the future of this country, but on the future of the entire world.

"THE MIRACLE" AND ITS MUSIC

The New York Film Company's imported film of "The Miracle," which can be truthfully called a masterpiece in film production, from all accounts is also destined to open a new era for the picture theatre in the way of musical portrayal.

We were not at all surprised to learn that only the best numbers from composers such as Mendelssohn, Händel, Tschaikowsky, Grieg, Massenet, Rachmaninoff, Rubinstein and others equally well known would be used in the arrangement, for in witnessing the picture when recently projected one was immediately inspired by the musical possibilities. There will be at least fifteen numbers of the above composers given correct musical interpretations while catering to the picture action, none of them being marred by abrupt cuts or transfiguration and dramatically connected by short compositions by the arranger, giving each reel or act a continuous musical setting, creating a musical program such as is heard in concerts for which the price of admission is one dollar and more.

"The Miracle" in itself creates a heart interest and retains it from beginning to end, and is unlike most feature films for the reason that in following the character "Beatrice" through her worldly experiences each adventure stands out alone and it does not foretell the end in its first few hundred feet of film, as is apparent in so many features.

The music is being arranged by a musician who has had vast experience in adapting musical numbers of worth so as to make their rendition possible by all, and the scores can be played by small combinations as well as orchestras of twenty-five and more men. The New York Film Company has gone to a large expense to make possible the production of "The Miracle" in a manner heretofore unknown in picture projection, and it would be well for exhibitors to keep in touch with it. The producing rights are being sold rapidly and feature men should get in line, for "The Miracle," in addition to its artistic attainments, will have a lasting financial value.

Mr. A. Teitel, secretary of the Hochstetter Utility Company, leaves for the West for the purpose of installing the Hochstetter Cleaning Process in film exchanges throughout the West. The demand is growing so great that it is necessary to establish these plants in different parts of the country. Mr. Teitel will likely install some twenty-five plants before returning to New York.

DON'T FORGET THE EXHIBITORS' BALL NEXT WEEK

Thursday, November 14th, is the date. Already there is a hum of excitement audible among expectant ones. And indeed, from what we hear, the most extravagant anticipation will be rewarded; every preparation has evidently been made for the comfort and entertainment of the guests. It has already been announced that Maurice Costello and Florence Lawrence will lead the grand march, and it has been whispered that King Baggot and Alice Joyce will come second in the ring. All the picture favorites will be there, and many of them will join in the entertainment of the guests. The Screen club will also lend itself to making the program a success.

It will be remembered, especially by those who attended, that the Exhibitors' ball of last year was a tremendous success. In fact, it lives in the memories of many of us as one of the brightest events of last season. The crowd of guests was all that it was expected to be. And still, if reports are true, Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street, near Lexington avenue, will be taxed to its capacity to accommodate the number of guests that the advance sale of tickets predicts will be there on the coming occasion.

A distinguished and much esteemed guest who will be there is M. A. Neff, president of the National Exhibitors League. Mr. Neff will arrive in New York on the 14th to attend the ball, and after spending a day or so here, he will go, in company with Mr. Sydney Ascher, to other Eastern cities to attend to important work of organization.

The funds derived from the sale of tickets for the Exhibitors' ball are to be used to further the success of next summer's convention and exposition, which is to be held in New York City.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE

Atlanta, Ga., October 27, 1912.

The Moving Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—In reading your current issue I find on page 21 an article or story taken from the Wilmington, Del., Journal, of September 24th. Now Atlanta claims the honor of having originated that story; it made the whole city laugh, and made the biggest "hit" of anything ever got off here, but the Journal has missed the whole point of the story, and left the best part off. The first part is all right, and so I give the rest below for your entertainment and information:

> "The doorkeeper hurried in and told the manager.
>
> "The boss didn't want any holes shot through his facade, or that of the house, so he stopped the pictures and made this announcement:
>
> "'To the gentleman who is in here with another man's wife, I'd like to announce that her husband is outside with a gatling gun, and there's likely to be some disorder. We will now turn out the lights for three minutes, and the aforesaid gentleman can retire through the stage door without undue publicity.'
>
> "The lights went out. There was a stir in the audience. The three minutes passed, but the lights went up too soon, for the interested audience discovered twenty-two Atlanta men still fighting to get out that exit!"

I am sure you will agree with me this is much more interesting. The biggest joke of it all was that everyone knew that whether it actually happened or not, it would have happened had those circumstances really been present.

With best wishes for the "News," I am,

Yours very truly,
HELEN STANLEY.

SPECIAL TO LAX SUBSCRIBERS

Lives of poor men oft remind us honest toil doesn't stand a chance; more we work we leave behind us bigger patches on our pants. On our pants once new and glossy now are patches of different hue; all because subscribers linger and won't pay up what is due. Then let all be up and doing; send in your mite be it so small, or when the snows of winter strike us we shall have no pants at all.—Exchange.

MR. PAUL M. PIERSON A PROPELLING FORCE IN THE HOCHSTETTER UTILITY COMPANY

In stepping forth into the commercial field with such astonishing revelations as the Hochstetter Utility Company propose to reveal to the public in the marvelous photographic methods, chemical and mechanical inventions of the young inventor, F. W. Hochstetter, it is necessary to make clear to the public what manner of men they are who countenance and endeavor to push to the front matters of such educational import. It is of one of these especially that we wish to make mention in this issue.

Mr. Paul M. Pierson, a man well and favorably known in financial, educational and horticultural circles, after making a careful survey of moving picture conditions generally, and having satisfied himself that the findings of Mr. Hochstetter, if properly handled, could not fail to revolutionize the business from a mechanical standpoint, concentrated a large amount of his energy in the organizing of the concern now known as the Hochstetter Utility Company.

PAUL M. PIERSON

At the present time Mr. Pierson is president of a number of prominent institutions, among which may be mentioned, the Board of Education of Ossining, the Ossining National Bank, the Klaxton Auto Horn Co., and numerous other enterprises in which his judgment is sought for on the various boards of directors. Also he is prominent in horticultural circles, having brought the American Beauty rose to its present state of perfection.

Besides Mr. Pierson and Mr. Hochstetter, there are connected with the company Mr. Pierson's son, Harold C. Pierson, D. H. Ward and Albert Teitel, all splendidly educated men, Mr. Pierson and Mr. Ward being graduates with high honors, of Cornell University.

Accompanying these remarks we reproduce for the benefit of our readers some interesting cuts from scenes in the film production of "The Life of John Bunyan" which was produced by the Hochstetter Utility Co. in conjunction with "Pilgrim's Progress," under the direction of Francis Powers, whose knowledge of stagecraft was obtained largely through his close associations with that master of dramatic producers, David Belasco.

Never, perhaps, has more care been expended in the choosing of artists than has been expended in the casting of the many difficult roles in this production. In addition to the splendid work of Warner Oland, there is that of the well-known dramatic actor, Clifford Leigh, who played the Christus, and fourteen other characters besides. The production has also the charm of the talented actress, Ethel Clayton, whose portrayal of the character of Elizabeth, the wife of Bunyan, was done with such exceeding grace.

On the afternoon of Nov. 10th, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Hochstetter process will be publicly exhibited for the first time. The subject selected is the "Life of John Bunyan" and "Pilgrim's Progress." The organ and orchestral music accompanying the pictures will be arranged and conducted by Mr. G. Waring Stebbins, well known in Brooklyn musical circles.

Other educational subjects of great interest are soon to be produced by the Hochstetter Utility Company.

"TWO OF A KIND"
Majestic, Nov. 19.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT'S PAGE

A GERMAN concern announces a film on cowless milk. Wonder who is to be the goat?

* * * *

Why not star Joe Wood in a baseball feature? The film would prove a running catch.

* * * *

A scientist says that excessive reading has the same effect as opium eating. Change to moving picture dope.

* * * *

The manager of a moving picture show in Chicago throws this announcement on his screen before the entertainment opens: "You are not visiting the 'movies' but a motion picture theatre." More power to this particular exhibitor!

* * * *

Pictures of the war on Turkey should be universally popular during the Thanksgiving season. They ought to be cheap. There is enough slaughter going on.

* * * *

While we are on the subject of educational films, we suggest one teaching a convincing lesson against pistol-toting. Any fool, crank or lunatic, it seems, finds it easy to obtain a gun when he wants to shoot at somebody.

* * * *

Those Roosevelt pictures stood 'em up in the Middle West.

* * * *

It is claimed that certain moving picture men wanted John Schrank released under heavy bond long enough to take a series of picture films. Cinematography has no place for pictures of Presidential assassins.

* * * *

During the running of the Alaskan-Siberian pictures in St. Louis the other afternoon a little chap was seen to rise in his seat and a moment later, while one of the hunters shown on the screen was killing a polar bear, the boy cried out in his shrill voice, "Bang! Bang." It is a bang-up show.

* * *

Speaking of optical illusions, a basket of turnips always looks good in a picture play.

* * * *

We believe that a picture of John Bunny eating pawpaws would be funny. However, Bunny probably draws the line somewhere.

* * * *

We read in the story of the film releases of "a widow who is young, rich and pretty." But did any such auspicious combination of circumstances ever exist?

* * * *

Exhibitors have been objecting to unmeaning, confusing, misspelled and incorrect titles and subtitles. Appropriate and grammatical titles are all right in their places, but the time is coming when subtitles in picture plays will be few and far between.

* * * *

However, we pause to reflect that we would rather see a good American drama, with one or two misplaced titles, than half a dozen of those foreign mis-named comedies which are occasionally inflicted upon a long-suffering electorate.

* * * *

Again we wish to commend the Kalem Civil War drama. Plot generally weak or overdrawn, but the lively action and correct staging with an eye to convincing detail cause exhibitors to welcome every release. Plenty of "wallop" and rich blood in those pictures.

* * * *

Art for Art's Sake means a whole lot. So we congratulate the Thanhouser Company for inaugurating the innovation of not chopping off a good playlet at the end of one thousand feet. If the picture can be more artistically produced in 1,200 feet, do not sacrifice the art for the commercial purpose.

* * * *

Educational pictures are progressing all right, and, to quote Mr. Saunders, "it will be but a few years until every school room is equipped with a moving picture machine." What is essential, however, is the picture that can supplant the dry text-book. Such films must be educationally correct. True to history, for example.

We have not yet had the pleasure of viewing the Gem "Woman in White" feature picture. From the published synopsis, the picture should conform closely to the details of Wilkie Collins' great plot. Count Fosco is one of the great characters in English literature, in our opinion.

* * * *

"Pilgrim's Progress" is about to be released as a feature production. And this leads us to again remark that a great measure of the burden on the shoulders of Cinematography has been lifted, and the manufacturers have long since escaped the Slough of Despond.

* * * *

The improvement in feature films has been gladly noted. Care in making selections had been deemed advisable, but the various standard manufacturers have been steadfastly improving the feature releases, and the absence of "padding" has been noted with pleasure. Keep up the beneficent work.

* * * *

While in an unusually cheery frame of mind to-day, we picked up a publication and for the 2,448th time noted the article on the subject: "How it Happens Wheels Go Backward in Moving Pictures." We all have our trials, however.

* * * *

Artemus Ward charged a dime to see an eclipse of the sun through an open-top tent. Artemus and some few exhibitors have a great deal in common.

* * * *

After all, there is something nice about being poor and looking forward to the opening of a new nickel theatre.

* * * *

Many were rather inclined to the strike of the Musician's Union, believing that the drum in the moving picture theatres would beat it.

* * * *

The staffs of the film weeklies are becoming so enterprising that we suggest they search Mt. Sinai. W. Cook may have left some brass tubes up there.

* * * *

The Italians and Turks have been shedding a lot of blood in the films.

* * * *

"Thirty-year-old honey found," says a New York headline. But that is nothing; there are some reels in New York nearly that old.

* * * *

"One of my early ambitions," remarked the Man on the Car, "was to drive the bandwagon in a circus parade, but I would be satisfied now with a season as lecturer for moving pictures."

* * * *

A striking illustration of the influence of the ubiquitous cinematograph is reported by the American consulate at Belgrade, according to the Scientific American. American fashions have recently become very popular with the young men of that city; there is an unprecedented demand at the local shops for hats, boots and other wearing apparel similar to that in vogue in the United States, and the American style of hair cutting has come into favor. These innovations are unmistakably the result of the exhibition of moving pictures of American origin.

The obvious moral of all this, as the consul points out, is that the cinematograph might be used to great advantage in advertising all kinds of American products. For instance, pictures of American agricultural machinery in operation would probably create a great demand for the thing itself. This plan offers an economical substitute for the actual exhibition of American products in commercial museums and the like.

* * * *

A couple of clever exhibitors in Ohio gain about a column of free advertising every evening in their home newspapers. How do they do it? Well, these exhibitors believe in advertising and advertise liberally. Then they rewrite the story of their best picture for a particular day and give a dash of local color thereto. They are doing an immense business at the theatres, needless to remark.

Isn't there any surcease from these picture show patrons who persist in conversing audibly during the action of a play to the annoyance of others? Exhibitors find this class of patrons hard to deal with. We believe a bold caution from an usher or proprietor, if continued, would have the desired effect in those theatres where the pest is prevalent—and there are many such theatres.

* * * *

In an Illinois city the other evening half the audience left before the program was completed. The manager had an usher or somebody doing the operating. "Pictures in there hurt my eyes" was the frequent remark of picture show fans. When will some exhibitors learn that it is vitally important to have an efficient and intelligent operator in the booth? All of which tempts us to Silas Wegg:

There is a man in our town, and he is wondrous wise. The pictures he puts on the screen would take you by surprise. They jump and dance and run and prance, the film runs quick, then quicker! The slogan of our hero is this phrase:

"Jest let 'er flicker!"

There are many patrons in our town who like the moving pictures. Scenics, comics, features, all, with them are really fixtures. There's no advance to take a chance, and for a ticket dicker; when the slogan of our hero is this phrase:

"Jest let 'er flicker!"

There are other pictures in our town; they never are unsteady. The reason is not hard to find; the operator's heady. He knows his biz from A to Z; the audience is a sticker; for the slogan of this hero is the phrase:

"Don't let 'er flicker!"

* * * *

This will be about all for this time.

NEW FEATURE MANUFACTURER—BOYS OF LOST RIVER BASIN FIRST FEATURE

A new feature film manufacturing company has entered upon the scene in Chicago. This concern, however, one of the most solidly financed and splendidly conducted, will depart from the original routine by manufacturing Wild West features only. This is because of the long training and experience that the proprietor of this new concern, Walter C. DuBrock has undergone. Mr. DuBrock is a veteran horse raiser and stock breeder of Illinois. His vast prairie holdings near the south hock of Lake Michigan have large herds of cattle and horses grazing upon them. Then, too, the new feature man has his own riding academy in the Windy City, where he has given many of his steeds a high school education, which has made them earnestly sought and often used by the American, Selig and Essanay companies, as well as touring this continent with the Chicago Grand Opera Company and the Girl of the Golden West. The profit Mr. DuBrock derived from this line awakened his interest in the motion picture business and finally resulted in his present venture, the first three-reel production to soon be advertised in these columns, and will be titled the Boys of Lost River Basin.

This feature will contain a daring accomplishment of tiny little children of from four to fourteen years of age, as well as cowboys of acknowledged ability and experience. The horse breeder's four-year-old son, Bud, and eleven-year-old daughter, Melba, will be given prominent roles, so as to display their unusual ability by broncho busting, lariat throwing, target shooting, stream-fording, Roman riding and steer throwing. Little Bud is particularly proficient in this line and can handle an unbridled broncho, throw a bull or hit the bull's eye like an old soldier. For maturer portion of his company, Mr. DuBrock has engaged cowboys direct from Montana and Idaho, selecting the well-known DeWitt C. Gollings for leads.

The whole idea of the Boys of Lost River Basin is a brand new one, never before attempted, and there will unquestionably result a very spirited and vigorous sale of territorial rights for this three-reel prairie feature.

The proprietor insures complete satisfaction by installing his own laboratory and studio at Edgebrook, Ill. Watch for this three-reel Woolly Westerner.

M. G. Watkins, whose name is already familiarly and favorably known in Mid-Western film circles, has been appointed general manager of this new enterprise. Mr. DuBrock has made a wise and judicious selection.

WINDY CITY NOTES

By Oscar J. Hazel

Chicago, Ill., November 4th.

Local No. 2, I. A. T. S. E. Moving Picture Operators will hold their fourth annual ball at the Coliseum Annex, Wednesday night, December 4th, and the committee on arrangements, J. W. Slonaker, chairman; Hal Johnstone, secretary; Morey Cohen, Fred Havill, B. P. White, Arthur Allison, Ben P. Hanneberg, and Frank Spaulding, announce that the affair will be one that will be remembered for all time to come in moving picture circles.

There will be an electrical display from the balcony, entertainers, and appropriate music rendered by Shank's Ten Piece Union Orchestra. The grand march will be led by their Worthy International President, Charles Shay, of New York.

* * * *

Augustus Carney, better known under the sobriquet, Alkali Ike, was out on the southside two nights this week, and has practically taken that end of the town by storm. Monday night found him at The Drexel, where he was introduced by Manager Godshaw, and Tuesday at the President on Garfield Boulevard. He gives a fifteen-minute talk on his part in the producing part of the picture business, among other things telling of his experience while defeating his "rival" in the auto incident, and also tells of the injury to Mr. G. M. Anderson; while riding high up in the Santa Anna Canon, his horse slipped and precipitated Broncho Billy over the cliff, but he was saved by grasping shrubbery growing out from the face of the cliff and was drawn to the top by anxious hands with lariats. He will soon be seen on the screen, and will "win the girl" every week, as Alkali puts it.

He says that the only time that he ever finished a picture with "the girl" was the time he rode the motorcycle, having Sophie on the tandem saddle, but that it ended in the bottom, not the top, of the Santa Clara river. He finished by saying that if the public liked the pictures as well as he and Bronch liked to make them for their enlightenment and humor, they would have to "whistle some." He was greeted by thunderous applause, and one can still hear the youngsters tell about how they shook hands with the real and only "Alkali Ike." He is to appear at the Bismarck Theatre Sunday.

* * * *

The coming of cooler weather brings to life a great many of those inclined to become exhibitors, and numerous are the theatres going up in and around Chicago. Following is a list of persons having secured permits from the building department to erect such structures to date: J. Kral will erect a 300-seat house at 509-11 West Congress street. He is also the contractor. Gus P. Tampray has one planned for 2806 West Chicago avenue, having 296 seats. Wh. Pentecost will build a house containing 300 seats at 4241-7 Irving Park Boulevard. At 600-10 East Fiftieth street, Huberty and Loheinrich will erect a house with seats for 299. Wm. Van Kuren is the architect for the 300-seat house going up at 2136 West Madison street. Anton Wille is the owner of a 546-seat house to be at 1330-32 Morris avenue. At 6736-44 Sheridan road Al Geis will have a house containing 790 seats. Frank Gilmore will have a show at 1622-26 Larabee street. It is to hold 700 seats. A house of 546 seats is going up at 1612-16 W. Chicago avenue. Pete Lopena, also a local operator, is erecting a show house at 9223 Commercial avenue having 299 seats. All is prospering slowly but surely in this man's town.

* * * *

The beautiful Windsor Theatre will open Thursday. This house is located at Fifty-second and Austin avenues, and will hold 300 people. William Bade started out right by installing a complete No. 4 Standard automatic machine, and will soon delight the patrons of this beautiful place with the 1912 style of picture play performance.

* * * *

Joseph Hopp, of the Standard Film Exchange, and C. R. Plough, of the Anti-Trust, paid New York a flying visit Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and were just in time to get in on the charter of the Screen Club; they both availed themselves of this opportunity. It is rumored that Mr. Hopp's mission included an important affiliation, but as yet not ready for publication.

UNIVERSAL FILM COMPANY'S NEW QUARTERS

The tremendous significance of the moving picture trade in the world of commerce was conveyed anew to those who had occasion to call on the Universal Film Company during the past week, at their new quarters on the third floor of the Mecca Building, Forty-eighth street and Broadway, New York City.

The Universal Film Company is now occupying not only a part, but the entire third floor of the said building. As you enter the offices from the elevator, the first thing that greets you is the emblem of the Universal, an immense globe with a belt encircling it, illuminated in a large stained glass panel. Then there is the large reception room. From the reception room to the right are the stenographers' quarters and the exchange offices. The private office of the president of the company, Carl Laemmle, corners on Forty-eighth street and Broadway, and bright and cheery it is. Then coming on backward on the Broadway side are the rooms respectively of W. H. Swanson, secretary; Joe Engel, sales department; Joe Brandt, advertising department; Mark M. Dintenfass, foreign department; Thomas Bedding, Universal Weekly; C. V. Henkel, accounting and auditing department. Then on the Seventh avenue side are David Horsley, treasurer, and P. A. Powers, vice-president. On this side of the building also are the directors' room and the projection room, which has a 55-foot throw. The projection room will be fitted up in comfortable style with lounging chairs, desks, etc. The shipping department is also on the Seventh avenue side of the building, and has a specially constructed vault with a carrying capacity of from 600 to 1,000 prints.

CARL LAEMMLE,
Pres. Universal Film Co.

A large amount of capital is being expended on making the Universal Film Company's business quarters second to none.

GERTRUDE ROBINSON

Through some misunderstanding I had waited a long time at the studio for the appearance of the popular little Reliance leading lady, Gertrude Robinson. But anything, even the long session of waiting, could be forgiven the pretty little study in pink and white, and gray and black that at last appeared before me.

Gertrude Robinson, unlike many stage favorites, is even more charming in real life than in pictures. When she greeted me in the offices of the Reliance Film Company she reminded me of a flower. The pretty black velvet suit and small black velvet hat enhanced the pink and white transparency of her complexion. Her eyes are a soft gray, fringed with heavy black lashes, and with soft dark hair framing the low forehead, you have one of the most charming flesh and blood pictures that you could ever wish to see.

In her manner there is the same fresh charm that attracts you in the pictures. There is also a certain quiet demureness about her that reminds me of the words of a song that I know:

"A cunning little mousey in cranny sat
Munching tiny straws picked from the big door mat."

Gertrude Robinson is exceedingly artistic in temperament. She is fond of the beautiful, and is many times brought to tears when working in a story that particularly appeals to her.

Her first picture work was done with the Biograph Company, after having followed the legitimate stage since she was four years old. She will doubtless be remembered by many through her interpretation of Pippa in Robt. Browning's "Pippa Passes," which was produced by the Biograph some time ago. To this incident she refers with a great deal of pride and pleasure on account of its artistic properties

In speaking of her picture work: "I am very nervous rehearsing," says she, "and when I hear the buzz-buzz of the camera my mouth actually goes dry, but when I get out in front of it and realize that the crucial moment has arrived I forget everything but just what I am doing."

In discussing the difference between the legitimate and the motion picture stage, she said: "On the legitimate your great anxiety is to get the lines over, but in pictures you have to be careful not to get over the lines."

This pretty little picture actress expressed herself quite forcibly on the point of directorship: "I dislike very much the way that some directors have of making you signify with your hand everything that you are going to do. People know by your actions, without so much gesticulations, just what you are doing."

When you see Gertrude Robinson in pictures, you can always think of her as pink and white blossom freshly picked from the meadow in the morning dew.

Cincinnati, O.—A contract has been let to C. C & E. A. Weber for the erection of a new theatre building at Savannah, Ga., for the Montgomery Amusement Co.

"THE GYPSY FLIRT"
Crystal Films.

SOLAX NIGHT AT THE ATLANTIC THEATRE, N. Y. CITY

SOLAX NIGHT IN HARLEM

Louis Kossover, proprietor of the Atlantic Theatre, 116th street and Eighth avenue, New York City, answering the demands of his patrons, featured recently the personal appearance of Lee Beggs and Billy Quirk, two Solax favorites, in conjunction with an all-Solax program.

The crowds divided their attention between Billy and the big poster display. There were the comedy posters showing the circus clown, the dramatic poster showing Dante and Virgil in the lower regions, and posters for the "all-Solax" program; "The Maverick," "The Spry Spinsters," "The Fugitive," and "The Message from Beyond." "The Maverick" poster excited considerable curiosity. A crowd of boys stood around speculating and debating on its symbolic significance. "Aw, come in, then we'll find out what it means." Naturally they found out that the big brutal figure stood for the "confidence men" who try to mislead the innocent lamb, while the knifed hand typifies the Westerner who interferes.

Billy entertained in his inimitable way, and because it was Billy, they didn't object to being told about corsets, lingerie, and about the "Chicken Pa Had Yesterday." Billy made a hit with his philosophy dope, "You'll Never Be Missed," but he couldn't convince them that he'll never be missed.

Lee Beggs got chummy with the folks, but he must have been followed by a jinx. He had prepared some dope about "Si's Surprise Party," the release of October 2, in which he plays the role of the farmer who walks home in an abbreviated costume. This picture was scheduled on the program but at the last minute something happened, and Louis Kossover, the proprietor of the theatre, found he couldn't get it booked. Lee walked around like one possessed when he found he couldn't spring his gag. He prayed fervently for an inspiration. When it came to his turn, the confounded inspiration hadn't "inspirationized," and so Lee was without thunder. He stalled for a time and then the inspiration arrived in the shape of a butcher. Lee cogitated and after he was through with the cogitation, he concluded that the butcher was good "meat," particularly when the sister and the butcher were there in the audience into his confidence; and thereafter the butcher and his sweetheart were in the calcium, while Vinnie, with becoming modesty, sailed under her seat until the storm of curiosity blew over.

Lee also told how Vinnie tore an artery when she fell over the garden wall in the "Spry Sprinters." He would have gotten away with it if he had remembered the dope until the next show—but Lee forgot, and when he repeated the story, he changed it to a "sprained ankle." A number of kids who were glued to their seats for the evening, wondered (out loud) what would have happened to Vinnie if there was another show.

After the show a number of blondes and brunettes asked Billy to deliver a lecture on "How an Honest Working Girl Can Earn an Honest Living by Posing for Moving Pictures," after which lecture said blondes and brunettes promised to apply forthwith at the Solax studio.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. MOVE THEIR OFFICES

The New York Motion Picture Co. have removed their offices from 150 East Fourteenth street, New York City, to the new Long Acre Building, Broadway and Forty-second street, where they have a new and beautiful suite of offices. This change is caused by the large and rapidly increasing business of the company. Messrs. Kessel & Bauman will be glad to welcome old and new friends in their new quarters.

Reading, Pa.—A contract has been let for the erection of a new Lyric Amusement Co. Theatre at Boyestown. George W. Unger, O. W. Sapold, Newton B. Erb and others.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION No. 1 OF NEW YORK

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Financial Secretary—Robert Levy.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.

Office—133 Third Avenue.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 572.

Two letters appeared in print in the issue of Nov. 2, 1912, of the Moving Picture News; one was written to Roht. Goldhlatt, president of Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union No. 1 of New York, hy Mr. Richardson, of the hranch No. 35, and the other was the answer sent to the latter. Mr. Richardson answers the first question, regarding branch members running a spotlight outside of the booth. He mentions technically the operator has no such right, for it is entirely in the jurisdiction of Local No. 35 and the I. A. T. S. E. handed that to them. But No. 35 will allow that much to the hranch. Nevertheless, the hranch men no doubt are very thankful to Local No. 35 for the charitable favor of allowing them, once in a while, to run a spotlight for paying the same amount of dues. Another question is answered that Local No. 35 promises that the branch may not or cannot have their own officers, hut promises that they (Local No. 35) will in the near future give them their own officers with the possihle exception of the president. How kind of them to do this in the future! These promises were given to the branch just like the ones given so often to the former auxiliary, for a direct charter and many other things, and the poor fools waited and waited five years and then when all the promises were demanded by the men and an accounting for all the money paid in for five years, the I. A. T. S. E. executive board and the executive board of Local No. 35 said disband. All the fools are not dead and another fool is born every day in the week. Mr. Richardson states that he suggested to the executive board that it would be inadvisahle to turn the presidency over to the branch until the orderliness of the meeting have become firmly established. Strangely enough, Mr. Richardson went back on the old organization which holds such orderly meetings to join the new hranch, now three months in existence, and they cannot as yet firmly estahlish orderly meetings. I trust they are not so-called riots; and however they are behaving as such, it is only due to the fact that No. 35 will not concede to the hranch men the privilege of governing their own affairs.

* * *

The regular meeting of the M. P. Operators' Union No. 1, which was held last Monday night at Tetunia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York, was largely attended in spite of the fact that it was the night before election. Six new members were obligated under the $5.00 fee, and as many new applications read off and placed before the body for consideration. The fee for new members will he raised to $25.00 very soon, prohably by the first of January. Philip Grill, a member of the new Branch No. 35, has ordered Ralph Knaster, business representative No. 1, to send in his (Grill's) resignation to Local Branch No. 35, and paid his fee to be obligated in the M. P. Operators' Union No. 1 of New York.

Otto Klein had resigned from the hranch of Local No. 35 two months ago to join the new movement, No. 1. He was expelled from the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1 of New York by a unanimous vote of the body at the last meeting; treason.

* * *

Mr. Harry De Veaux, Mr. L. Barry and Mr. Val Tranor, of the Actors' Union, addressed the boys and gave them great credit for the manner in which they conduct their meetings and other business.

Mr. De Veaux told the boys how he organized the first operators' union in New York, in fact the first in this country, and that to this day he has in his possession the first charter issued to the M. P. Operators through the A. F. of L. The speakers were greatly applauded.

Business Representative Knaster had his salary increased the second time in the three months that he is in office, and beyond a doubt will endeavor to do his utmost for the organization. No. 1 appreciates his good work, and has shown its appreciation by paying him a larger salary than any of the former delegates. The salary Knaster receives is $30 a week. This is a credit to Local No. 1, for it proves the prosperity they are enjoying since they have been forced into reorganization.

A committee reported that the Jewish Variety Actors' Union No. 5 held a special meeting Friday, Nov. 1, 1912, for the sole purpose of taking up the matter of co-operating with the M. P. O. Union No. 1. The Variety Actors' Union extends to all members of the Operators' Union No. 1 their heartiest thanks for the good work which was done to win their struggle at the Thalia Music Hall on Broome street. They could find no words to express their gratitude, for whatever was said was not sufficient to show how much they think of the boys that are in the new movement, and that they will at all times assist the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1 in any manner or form that may arise in the future. The meeting closed at 4 a. m., and all the boys hurried home to do their duty at the polls and try to vote hallot No. 1 for their choice.

* * *

IMPORTANT

Don't forget the annual entertainment and hall of the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1, to he held at the Palm Garden, Fifty-eighth street and Lexington avenue, New York, Monday night, February 10, 1913. Get ready for a grand old time, as this affair will be a record breaker.

OPERATORS' QUESTION BOX

By R. J. Kay

Camden, Ohio, October 23, 1912.

Mr. R. J. Kay,
Care of Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth street, New York City.

Dear Mr. Kay:—I notice you now have a "Question Box" for the operators in the News, and I want to say that I think it a very good thing for all operators.

I have been troubled with a very unsteady picture upon the screen, and have tried almost everything I could think of to remedy this. I have enough tension on the film, for when I hold the film tight (as it enters the gate) between my fingers, the picture "jiggles" just the same. I have the star and cam adjusted perfectly, and I have tried making the loops smaller, but the picture will "jiggle." If a thick splice goes through the gate the picture will jump something awful.

I have been told that if the teeth of the intermittent sprocket are worn badly (into hooks) this will make the picture very unsteady. Kindly advise me whether or not this is so, and many thanks. Also, if there is anything else that I have not mentioned that will make the picture "jiggle" please inform me.

Thanking you many times for your kindness, I am,

Very truly yours,

CHAS. L. DOUGLAS.

P. S.—Please explain how worn teeth on the intermittent sprocket will affect the steadiness of the picture if it does so. C. L. D.

Answer to Chas. L. Douglas

Your trouhle with picture dancing or unsteady upon screen may he due to various causes. You state that your tension is O. K., that the star and cam are adjusted properly; you don't mention if your sprocket is loose on the shaft; that would cause an unsteady picture. Also if the perforation of the film is had that would cause the same trouhle. The teeth of the intermittent sprocket heing worn would cause your upper loop to get larger and you would lose the bottom loop in some cases. Your trouhle perhaps may he that your intermittent shaft is hent, causing unsteadiness or jumping of the film; the worn teeth of a sprocket allow too much motion or play in the perforations of the film, also a cause of jumping. I would advise you to have your machine put in thorough order hy having all worn parts renewed by competent mechanics.

* * * *

Why does my film hreak? I am using a regular machine, hut every now and then the sprocket holes break and strip, then the film breaks and I have to cut out four or five feet of film to make a splice. What is the cause of this? D.

In answer to "D," there are various reasons for same. One is that your top magazine is not in line, uneven tension, old brittle stock in manufacture of film, and sprockets not lined up and many other things will cause such troubles.

* * * *

Mr. R. Kay: I am running Association films in my house, and they are all right except the Kalem, which seem to jump quite some, that is, up and down on the screen. Am using an Edison machine and a poor service, as we are not doing a big business. P. H.

To P. H.:

I have taken the matter up with three exchanges, and they all informed me that the Kalem people had some trouhle quite some time ago and that it has since been remedied. I can safely say that you will not have any more trouble when you get their new films.

* * * *

Question Box:

I had my Powers No. 5 to a repair shop a short time ago, and find that it binds. Have taken out the hushing and replaced them with new ones twice, and find it just as bad as ever. Kindly advise me what to do, as I am discouraged. R. M.

To R. M.:

I think that you will find your trouble in the cam pin, as sometimes it is not set accurately and is set a little too high.

* * * *

Cincinnati, O., Oct. 29, 1912.

Mr. Kay,
Dear Sir:

1. What is electricity? 2. What is a watt? 3. What is meant hy equivalent focus? Yours respectfully, R. F.

R. F., Cincinnati, O.:

The questions suhmitted hy you are of quite a diversified nature, and embrace such matters as would compel me to take up too much space.

In reply to your first (1) question, What is electricity? the sages from the dim past till the present time have asked the same question. Electricity is one of the forces of nature of which no man has been able to give a definite solution. We know of its production in different forms, such as frictional, thermal, vitreous, resinous, inductive and magnetic electricity. No method has yet been found to give a definite form for us. See this remarkable force of nature in bulk or substance; and we can only see or feel the results of this force in the various manifestations such as light, heat, power, etc.

Question 2. A watt is an expression of a term meaning a rate of work and is equal to 1/746 horsepower, also a current of electricity flowing at the rate of one ampere per second at 1 volt pressure.

Question 3. Equivalent focus is a term used in optics which denotes the central point of the crossing of the rays of light between the front and back combinations of a lens.

* * * *

Many letters are received hy the editor of the Question Box without names of the senders and such will not be answered.

Notice.—Send in your trouble questions to the Question Box, Moving Picture News, No. 30 West 13th street, New York City.

DON CAESAR DE BAZAN
Reliance release November 20th.

The Louis Becker Company leased for the Riverside Viaduct Realty Company the plot 75 x 100, on the north side of 157th street, 75 feet west of Amsterdam avenue, for twenty-one years to the Palace Theatre, Inc. The owners will build for the lessees a pictureplayhouse. The theatre adjoins the northwest corner of 157th street.

EDGAR JONES

Edgar Jones, one of the Liebler & Company players is now a pictureplay actor. His past experience has included responsible engagements with Henry Miller, Viola Allen, Kyrle Bellew, the Holy City, and other high-class companies in many of which he has been assigned leading roles. He is an exceptionally good rough rider and master of horses. He is now engaged with the Lubin Company of Philadelphia, and making his mark in the silent drama.

PROTEST AT "MOVIES" OF LIFE OF CHRIST

Wide discussion, much of which is condemnatory, is being aroused by the moving picture show of Christ's life, entitled "From the Manger to the Cross," which has had its initial presentation before a private audience, mostly made up of clergymen.

The managers of the enterprise say they spent $100,000 taking the films in Palestine, where the actors were posed. One scene represents living men writhing on crosses. It is said these fellows got a special bonus for their realistic posing.

Appeals to the public censor reveal the fact that he has no jurisdiction over moving picture films. Some of the newspapers make strong editorial protest against what they call "commercializing the Bible," and the issue is to be brought before Parliament.—N. Y. World.

A NEW MEMBER OF THE ECLAIR CO.

HARLEM AND BRONX THEATRE LEASES

Porter & Co. have leased for D. & J. H. Tonjes the corner store in the building at the northwest corner of Eighth avenue and 124th street to a motion picture theatre, for a term of ten years at an aggregate rental of $37,500.

John A. Evans has leased for Lackman & Goldsmith to the Motion Picture Sales & Construction Company the plot 100 by 100 on the east side of Longwood avenue, 167 feet south of Westchester avenue, the Bronx, for twenty-one years at an aggregate rental of $125,000. The lessee will construct a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,000. The same broker has leased for Patrick J. Reville to Harold W. Rosenthal a motion picture theatre on the southeast corner of the Southern Boulevard and 172d street, for a term of ten years, at an aggregate rental of $20,000.

DICK AND DAISY
Majestic release Nov. 12.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

A CAROL FROM CARROLL

AMES CARROLL, Powers prize winner, puts aside his calabash long enough to indict us an epistle. Mr. Carroll, in his letter, says he believes everything possible should be done to guide the unsophisticated amateur from the "pernicious" schools and compliments us for assisting to "elevate the free-lancers from the pit of desuetude we once occupied to our present plane of respectful attention." Thank you, James, for the letter and the communication which follows:

> For the achievement of the perfect script, which makes successful picture plays, there must be confidence between playwright and editors. This calls for ability as well as scrupulous integrity on the part of the playwright. Taking for granted the ability on the part of the playwright to prepare his script in proper form, he should also have a holy horror against "horrowing" in any shape or form any plot from whatever source, fiction stories, copyrighted books, or other picture plays. "Lifting" another's ideas is the height of dishonesty; nor is it conducive to confidence on the editor's part. It is easy to conceive how, after reading a number of scripts of this class, the editor may receive the impression that, "all playwrights are tarred with the same stick," thus condemning the sheep with the goats. Such procedure does not tend to elevate the picture play, to which end, let it be hoped, the great majority of us writers are working. The editor has done his share toward the establishment of the entente cordiale. He welcomes the outside script, and gives it impartial consideration, and if he finds it available sends a check and if not, he returns it in good shape. In only one instance have I ever had a soiled script returned, and fail to see any great justification for the many plaints anent the mishandled manuscripts. If one-half of the energy placed in the concoction of the many wails apropos of one imaginary grievance or another, was dictated toward the betterment of scripts, a long stride would be taken toward the betterment of the outside script. The burden, then, is upon the free-lance writer to make sure that the script is original. It is not fair to expect the editor, in addition to his other duties, to enter into an arduous search in order to assure himself that the submitted script is not a "conveyance," but an original plot. Let us strive, each for himself, to attain such a reputation for honesty that such research may be entirely unnecessary. Having made sure that his plot is original, the writer should let it maturate (fine adjective that) ere weaving his script around it; too many disjointed, disconnected plots are sent hurriedly, perhaps due to the feverish desire for a check. To work more unselfishly, with a desire to uplift rather than with one eye on self and the other on plot, is conducive to the perfect script and success to the playwright. Continuity, originality and neatness are the chief qualifications toward the making of a perfect script. Let us add ability and training. If one has the ability it can be trained rightly by the mastery of Messrs. Wright's and Sargent's works on playwrighting. All the schools in Christendom cannot equip as well—and if the aspirant cannot turn out a good working script by the aid of these text-booklets, and a perusal of their helpful columns, not forgetting our good friend, Letendre and his "Photoplay Author," he or she should gracefully retire and leave the field open to those who are trying to accomplish something. This is not meant to discourage the ambitious writer, but merely refers to a few, who, having failed to "put one over," write "sassy" letters to the editors, etc., and bring odium upon all alike. One sale does not make a picture playwright and far too many enter the field illy equipped.

PLEASE DON'T

Again we caution our readers not to write personal letters to editors when submitting plots. Don't tell the editor that "he or she is the best in the business and that I have long admired your great work, which undoubtedly is the reason the Doorknob Company is turning out plays second to none in the industry." This may sound good to you, but the editor will at once appreciate your insincerity. Let your script speak for itself. Also, do not address scripts personally to the editors. Send them to the proper addresses. Many editors do not relish these attempts at flattery, believe us. We read a letter yesterday that had been sent to an editor in which the picture playwright (a successful one, too,) wrote: "I honestly consider you a second Sir Walter Scott!" It made the editor laugh—and it didn't sell the script.

QUOTING MR. PLIMPTON

A New York "university" for picture playwrights has the nerve to quote Horace G. Plimpton, head of the Edison Production Department, in its circular to prospective students. The circular states that Mr. Plimpton, and nearly every other authority, are tickled to death to read scripts from writers who have taken this particular course because their "merit" can be determined "almost at a glance." Mr. Plimpton recently contributed to this department. His kindly advice to writers has been quoted and misquoted ever since. If you failed to read and digest Mr. Plimpton's statements at the time they were published, send five cents for the back number to this journal. Mr. Plimpton plainly asserted that too many persons, deceived by glittering advertisements, were entering the picture playwright field. He said that the hardest kind of work, accompanied by natural talent, was essential to success in the profession. He did not say that "no education was necessary," that "anyone can do it," or that "fifty dollars weekly could be made" writing picture plays.

BEWARE OF THIS ONE

Beware of the "Association" in Chicago that is advertising a "prize scenario contest" because "we are having difficulty in obtaining good manuscripts desired by manufacturers for picture play production." All contestants are to receive a "text-book free" and "prizes will total $500." The entrance fee is one dollar, of course. Do not enter "prize contests" unless conducted or backed by the legitimate manufacturers or motion picture publications.

NEVER AGAIN!

When we obtained the permission of the Imp Films Company three years ago, through Giles R. Warren, then editor of that company, to use their scenario "Mother Love" in our text-booklet "The Art of Scenario Writing," little did we think that this self-same scenario would be used by two out of every three "schools" and "text-books" which have entered the field since that time. In our work we credit the scenario source. This little matter has been overlooked by the others. Our booklet, first in the field, is well through its second edition. We shall issue a revised edition one of these days, and in it will appear one of our own scripts, produced and then kindly loaned us by a friendly editor.

GOOD PRICES OFFERED

The New York Motion Picture Company, manufacturers of Broncho and Kay-Bee Films, offer $50 as lowest remuneration for good Western two-reel stuff. If the scripts are not worth $50 don't submit them. Scripts should be sent to 1719 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, Cal. Stories must not be commonplace and it will be virtually useless for the beginner to attempt to qualify.

NO SUMMER DOPE

The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year—but not, we hope, for the picture playwright. Prices are again advancing; note New York Motion Picture Co. announcement. The demand of the Eastern companies is now for studio and city street stuff with mostly inside scenes. Companies in the West and South, who experience continuous summer, remain in the market for outside "dope."

THE TIME TO COMPOSE

Environment has a great deal to do with methods of composition. Some writers can only "dope" their stuff behind locked doors in the front parlor. Others work best in the morning, and then again, winter evenings are relished by some successful writers, we know. Then again, certain successful picture playwrights visit the theatres for inspiration, and gain ideas while the play is on. Many of the successful novelists and short story writers work in the early morning while physically and mentally fresh, and then devote the afternoons and evenings to recreation. But what about the writer who has not the reserve finances to adopt this method?—the author who must work all day and can only devote Sundays, holidays and evenings to his literary occupations. There are many such literary toilers in the picture playwright profession. They are handicapped to a certain extent, but difficulties can be overcome. Take the newspaperman's handicap, for instance. All day he grinds out stuff for his newspaper. At night (if he is employed on an afternoon newspaper) he is oftentimes "written out." Nevertheless, there are many successful picture playwrights and playwrights among newspaper men. They have overcome seemingly insurmountable handicaps. Kipling, Phillips, Chester, O. Henry, Whitlock, Eugene Wood, Ade, yes, in fact the majority of the names famous in fun and fiction, come from the ranks of journalism. These men worked after a weary "hack-writing" day or night. They learned to write under any or all circumstances. Personally, we believe the locked room a bad habit for the writer. From our newspaper training we can write stuff in a room like a conversational sounding-board, with the clatter of linotypes and the jingling of 'phone bells as musical accompaniments. Such methods teach concentration and ready thinking. Our best mental work, however, comes when we can induce a friend or relative to play piano selections. Then to the music, all alone, our "thinktank" starts to working rapidly. Try this plan sometime, when your brain seems rusty.

A WORD TO EDITORS

We would appreciate it if the editors would furnish us with the names of those, if any, who are detected in stealing plots from copyrighted stories or novels and submitting them as original scripts. We shall be pleased to print them not only for the benefit of other editorial offices, but also as a check to the alleged practice. Not only will we publish such names, but we will keep the list standing for several weeks in this department.

ENCLOSE STAMPED ENVELOPES

Correspondents will kindly enclose stamped self-addressed envelopes with their inquiries. Also remember that we do not furnish information concerning the personal life or habits of editors, players, directors or writers. These people have some right to privacy, so do not ask personal questions.

NOTES OF THE WEEK

At Ladysmith, Wis., a new use has been made of the moving picture machine. Owners of a mill have installed one with automatic arrangement whereby it can be hung up in a hidden position in any room and set so as to run for any period of thirty minutes during the day or night. By its aid the superintendents of the different departments can determine how the crew has been working in their absence. Its greatest help is to detect what workmen, if any, are smuggling liquor into the building at night. Such employees are more closely watched thereafter, and eventually discharged if necessary.

* * *

A few years ago the Selig Polyscope Company released one of their feature Western pictures under the title of "The Millionaire Cowboy." This film proved to be one of the most popular released of recent years, and many have been the requests on the part of exhibitors to reproduce and release this great comedy. Acceding to these requests, the Selig Company recently produced this subject, elaborating upon the original story and improving it in many particulars. The new production is in two reels and is expected to prove one of the greatest masterpieces ever released by this remarkable institution. It will be booked for release very shortly.

* * *

According to the Boston Herald, articles of incorporation were filed in Dover, Del., at the State Department recently for the Chromo Kinetograph Company of New York City, with a capital stock of $6,000,000, the objects and purposes being to acquire and operate a machine invented by Isador Kitsee of Philadelphia, called a synchromer, being a device for operating a motion picture machine. Incorporators: Thomas R. Maltby, S. O. Coughlan, Joseph F. Curtin, all of New York.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

THE VIRGIN OF THE FIRE
(Reliance Release for November 16)

Of the production of "The Virgin of the Fire," Producer Saint Loup has made for the Reliance Film Company something that is worthy of special mention, something that is artistic in the extreme, a picture that carries with it the atmosphere of its period, as we feel it may have been. The story from which the picture was made is as follows:

During the cave man's period, some 20,000 years ago, Myrh, a virgin of the tribe in charge of the sacred fire, meets Wanah, a young warrior belonging to another tribe. She flees through the woods with Wanah in hot pursuit. He falls down a cliff and is hurt. She, womanlike, annoyed he should have given up the chase so soon, looks down and sees him lying unconscious. She drags him to her cave, where he is attended. During his convalescence, Wanah explores the neighborhood and sees a tribe of snail eaters crawling among the rocks and preparing to attack the small group of women left alone in the caves. He comes to the rescue and is injured.

When he recovers he hears that Myrh was taken by the black men. Regardless of his injuries, he follows, and hiding behind some bushes, he flings his spears at them and frightens them so that they run away, leaving the girl. Wanah is about to make off with her when the black men discover he is alone and return to the fight. He bids the girl run away and decided to sacrifice his life for her. The girl meets her own tribe and urges them to hurry back to Wanah's rescue. There is a fierce battle, after which the tribe of black men is exterminated. Upon the death of the old chief Wanah is elected to his place and he selects Myrh as his bride.

The photographic work in "The Virgin of the Fire" is also worthy of special mention. The effects obtained in the forest scenes are very beautiful. The whole idea has been worked out in the most artistic manner. From the very moment in the opening of the story when the virgin, bending over the stream, playing with the water, finds the young warrior Wanah in pursuit of her, to its close, when after all their vicissitudes they are represented alone and happy in the embrace of love, there is a gracefulness, a weirdness, and a remarkable charm of atmosphere and location that is most satisfying.

Granger, Wash.—Irene Gordon will reopen the Lois Theatre in Grandview.

Hot Springs, Ark.—The New Lyric Theatre will open up in this city.

New York, N. Y.—W. E. D. Stokes will erect a motion picture theatre in this city on the west side of Broadway, south of 100th street.

Des Moines, Ia.—A contract has been let for the erection of a new theatre in this city, to be located at the northeast corner Fifth and Walnut streets.

THE FAITH HEALER
Reliance, Nov. 13.

THE FIRST GLASS

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Powers Release)

IN a shadowy corner of a small café sat an old woman alone. Her dress was faded and worn, but the cloth of which it was made had one day cost many dollars a yard. In the past that was growing dim, the dress had been in the height of fashion. A much worn scarf was over her head and from beneath it straggled thin locks of dull gray hair.

She sat quite still, but for the mechanical movement of her arm as she raised the glass before her to her lips, and with lusterless eyes watched the people going in and out of the café.

The café was small and quiet, and was situated on a side street where it was not likely to be noticed but by those who were seeking it. Its patrons were varied, ranging from handsomely gowned women and well-groomed men facing life, to those who were standing at the bottom of the hill looking back over the path they had descended. The only requirement of the place seemed to be reasonable quiet and the money to pay your bill.

When the hour had grown quite late and the café was almost empty a party of four entered. They were two young men and two girls. The men were of the "good-fellow" type one meets every day, and one of the girls had lost the unmistakable look of innocence from her eyes and her voice had not quite the unconscious ring of youth. But the other girl was different. Her eyes were clear and did not waver; her face had the honest flush of youth and her mouth had the full, sweet curve of a child's.

Old Sarah, at a near-by table, watched the four indifferently when they came in and sat down—almost without seeing them. She heard the younger girl say, "Only vichy lemonade, please," and the other three laugh. One of the men said to a waiter, "Bring four high-balls." The younger girl said nothing.

The old woman watched and listened, but almost without thought, for her senses were dulled.

The four glasses were brought and three of them were raised. The fourth remained on the table.

"Don't be silly, Anna," said the older girl. "It won't hurt you. I can drink a half dozen and never notice them at all."

Anna looked down at her glass and said nothing.

"Why it's half water," said one of the men, "you'll like it if you once taste it."

"Ah, go on," said the other, "Don't be a kill-joy."

Anna flushed and shook her head slightly, at the same time turning her glass around between her finger and thumb.

"Be a sport," whispered the girl at her side, "you're spoiling the evening for the rest of us."

Old Sarah was awakening. The scene before her stirred her memory. Pictures began to take form and the past came back. She looked at the young girl near by and then at herself. Was she really ever as that girl was now? Could the girl become what Old Sarah was? She leaned across the table and watched. Would she take the first drink?

"Go on, girlie, it's all right," one of the men was saying as he leaned very near to her.

For another moment Anna hesitated, then she raised the glass and drank. One sip after another and the glass was half empty.

The girl sat with her eyes down, slowly rubbing her hand up and down the glass.

The blood tingled in her veins and the spirit of recklessness was fast coming upon her.

Old Sarah saw the man next to Anna lean very near to her, putting his hand on her arm and whispering something in her ear. The girl raised her eyes and the prematurely-awakened life looked from them as she leaned closer to the man.

A smothered cry came from the old woman. She staggered toward the table where the four sat. She had seen, and seeing understood.

"No," she cried, "No, don't let her do it, don't let her drink any more."

"Oh, look who's here," exclaimed one man. "What do you want, old woman? Something to buy a drink?"

"Don't let her do it," she repeated, her hand on the back of Anna's chair.

"Here, take this and get away," answered the man, trying to thrust money into her hand.

"No, I don't want your money. I want to save this little girl. Look at me, child," she said, turning to Anna. "Look at me and you will see yourself of the future."

Anna sat with downcast eyes, her heart beating rapidly.

"Don't notice her, she's drunk and doesn't know what she is saying. She'll go away in a minute," whispered the girl at her side.

"Look!" commanded the old woman.

Anna slowly raised her head and looked.

"I was once young and beautiful, too," said Old Sarah. "Come over here and let me tell you my story."

Anna arose almost as in a dream, compelled by the blurred eyes above her. "I will go," she said.

In spite of the protests of her companions, the girl was led across the room to another table.

"People call me an old woman. I am only forty-eight," she began. "Thirty years ago I was young and pretty, just as you are. I lived near the city and had friends here. My parents would let me come in quite frequently to visit. I met young men who seemed to be gentlemen. They drank some, but my friends said 'Oh, all the fellows in the city take a drink when they want it. It's all right. They know when to stop.'"

She paused a moment and pulled her worn shawl closer about her.

"One night I went to the theatre with a young fellow. When we came out he asked me if I didn't want something to eat. I did feel hungry, so we went into a restaurant. Oh, I'll never forget how beautiful it was there! The lights were so bright and the ladies were dressed so fine and the music was playing. I was carried away."

Anna was listening intently, but Old Sarah was gazing into space, unconscious for the moment of the girl's presence.

"We sat at a little table in a corner," she continued. "I remember it now so well. We were away from the crowd and yet seemed in the midst of it. He said, very carelessly, 'What will you have to drink?' and I answered 'Nothing.' Then he said I must have something. He wanted something and he didn't want to take it unless I did. He called my attention to the fact that everybody was drinking something. So at last I asked if I couldn't have something very mild. He said I could and ordered. I don't know what it was."

The old woman sighed and looked at Anna. "I can remember just how those dainty little sandwiches looked that they brought along with the drinks. They were so white and the napkin under them was so white. They make me think of my innocence."

A tear ran down Old Sarah's face and lost itself in a furrow.

"Well, I drank that stuff. At first I didn't like it, but I took sip after sip and the music began to play, and then a feeling so strange and pleasant came over me that I forgot everything else. The young man drank several glasses of something while I was drinking one. He didn't urge me to have any more."

"When we reached my friend's home we stopped in the vestibule. He put his arm around me and kissed me. The blood pounded in my temples and I clung to him for a minute. Then I tore myself free and ran into the house. When I reached my room I threw myself on the bed and burst into tears. A kiss is all right, girlie, but not when it is prompted by wine—never. Trust Old Sarah for she knows."

She sat for a while shaking her head and repeating "she knows, she knows."

"It's getting late. I must finish and let you go home. God knows I hope you've got a home. Have you?"

"Yes," whispered the girl.

"Well," continued the old woman, "I drank again, and then again. Soon I didn't cry when I was kissed and I didn't run away. One night when I started to leave the café I was not steady on my feet. For a minute I didn't know what was the matter with me. The man I was with took me by the arm and steadied me and somehow got me outside without making a scene. 'You can't go up to the house like this,' he said, and I agreed that I couldn't. He said his rooms were close by and we could go there until I was better. I consented, for I didn't care for anything but to lie down.

"I went with him and I didn't leave that night. Oh, little girl, I shall never forget the next day. I was ashamed to go to my friend's and I hadn't any money. The man offered me money and because I didn't know what else to do I took it. I didn't know that I could make the past as nothing if I chose. There was nobody to tell me that but the man and he didn't. I didn't know I could go home to my mother and forget everything. I didn't know that and I wrote my mother a letter that must have broken her heart. I never saw her again."

The old woman buried her dingy, seamed face in her hands.

"Don't, don't," said Anna, softly touching the wrinkled hand. "What can I do for you to make you less miserable?"

"You can do nothing for me but let me believe that my story has helped you. My life is almost ended and yours is just beginning. There is no use to tell you any more. You can see the rest. The man went away and I was without money. I drank more and more, for it made my life less hard, I thought. I took the only course I thought was open to me. I lived my life and now I am old and ugly and broken, and there is no place in the world for me—not even as a common street woman."

Her voice sank to a whisper and her head dropped to her breast. Anna sat very quiet, trying to choke back the tears.

Old Sarah raised her hand. "Sometimes I had money," she said, "plenty of it. And sometimes I hadn't food to eat. I'm not saying that your story would be like mine if you followed the first drink with another. But I do say that your heart would ache and your soul be seared."

She reached across the table and took the young girl's hand between hers, shaking and soiled.

"You are young and fair," she said, looking intently into the girl's face. "You have a right now to a husband who loves you and reverences you, and to children who can look up to you with respect and faith. Don't, don't throw away that chance, don't. Oh, if I could save one girl who has turned her face in the wrong direction I could feel that my life had not been utterly wasted."

The gray head fell upon the table and sobs shook the bent shoulders.

Anna arose and leaned over her. "It has not been wasted," she said. "I see now, even much more than you have told me. I give you my word that I shall never drink another drop of anything intoxicating."

She put her hand in her bag. "Here. This is small thanks for what you have done, but won't you take it?"

"No," answered the old woman, lifting her head. "I don't want money. Go home now, child. Good-bye."

"Good-bye."

Anna returned to her companions. "I am sorry to have spoiled your evening," she said, "but I shall never spoil another one. I should like to go home now."

Old Sarah sat watching the girl as she left the café. "Thank God," she said, and calling to a waiter, "Bring me some whiskey."

The W. E. D. Stokes property at 2631 to 2635 Broadway, New York City, near 100th street, has been leased by the Quincy Amusement Company for twenty-one years at an aggregate rental of $300,000. A handsome theatre will be erected on this property, planned for moving pictures and vaudeville.

Frederick Becklenberg has leased to Solomon Stone, Max Schwartz and George Paul the theatre in the rear of the building at the northeast corner of Fifty-fifth and Halsted streets, Chicago, including an entrance on both streets as well as the lobby, for a moving picture theatre. The lease is for ten years from January 1, 1913, at a total rental of $65,500, payable at the rate of $500 per month for the first two years, $541 for the following three years and $583 for the remaining five years.

WM. H. MECK, AUTHOR OF THE "ACTOR'S SCHEME," "The Wild Man in the Scene."

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY OPENS NEW OFFICES

The new offices of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company at 30 East Twenty-third street are now about ready for the reception of visitors.

Mr. Fred A. Clark, the general manager, will be found ready and willing to fully demonstrate the Motiograph machine of which he has on display a full and complete line of the several equipments which comprise the 1913 line.

C. LANG COBB, JR., LEAVES CARLTON MOTION PICTURE LABORATORIES

The resignation of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., has been received at the Carlton motion picture laboratories with a great deal of regret.

In order to show their appreciation of his efforts in their behalf during the one year that he has been in their employ, a splendid letter of commendation was presented to Mr. Cobb on his departure, signed by J. V. Ritchey, treasurer and manager of the company.

FILM RENEWED

Under the Hochstetter Process, better than new.
Write or wire for particulars.

HOCHSTETTER UTILITY CO.
40 East 12th Street New York City

PICTURE MUSIC

By ERNST LUZ

It is very necessary, for a successful picture player, that you equip yourself with a repertoire of music, familiarize yourself with it not only as to its technique and phrasing, but be familiar with it as to its temperamental value. We have all known music to bring tears as well as allay them. It is a peculiar fact that in the average picture theatre you will hear a superabundance of numbers used which are on the professional free list of the publishers, or, where orchestra is used, numbers sent to the dollar-a-year club members. Because this music costs nothing does not necessarily mean that it cannot be good, but the very fact that it is given away promiscuously cheapens it and six months is a fair time for it to be considered repertoire, when it happens to be good. The fact that the picture player so cheapens his work, together with his continual faking, and improvising has placed the picture player in ill repute even with these generous publishers, who have a tendency to call us "cheap grafters," which, I am sorry to say, I was in argument compelled to admit its truth in many quarters. Whether this cheapness be the outcome of salaries at present paid, I will not discuss, but every picture player should digest the following thought, viz.: As long as the exhibitor can engage amateurs and students and obtain as good and very often better picture results than with the more advanced musician; until then, there will be no signs of financial relief to the musician.

The remedy of all this is covered by the word repertoire. You must have a "picture repertoire" of music to effectively play the picture, and note that I say "picture repertoire," for many musical publications have no value whatsoever in picture playing, for the picture demands temperament more than phrasing or technique. Mr. Musician, in repertoire lies your salvation, for it is only fair to suppose that the advanced player cannot only use a larger repertoire to better advantage than the amateur or student, but he can also render it more effectively, and this alone will bring him into demand. Positively no one can hope to render satisfactory musical setting for a picture by the sole means of what some would like to call improvising and which I know to be faking pure and simple. Improvising, as it is practiced in professional circles, is an art of simplifying or adapting to one's own methods numbers in which the chord settings are difficult and is very necessary to the pianist who is a sight reader, and is acquired by him not necessarily from a study of harmony but by familiarizing himself with chord formation which is naturally attained by much playing and especially induced by sight reading. Improvisation is then only practical when it is done to shade or otherwise work out a given theme, and so we come to the derivation of the word, which is "Improvisatori," an Italian term designating poets who recite verse without preparation on a given theme, or sometimes sing them, accompanied by musical instruments. We are also told that in modern Europe this talent has been almost entirely confined to Italy.

Were improvisation (such as we are led to believe is practical for picture playing) a talent that could be acquired by either practice or study of any known course, why, then, does not the picture music improve, for it is a known fact that the picture as well as the theatre has shown great improvement in the last few years, while with the exception of a few exhibitors who insist upon certain known musical settings the music in the picture theatre lies dormant and to-day is the theatre's greatest drawback. After we have thoughtfully and truthfully discussed this among ourselves we must of necessity admit that in music, as in any other vocation in life, it is impossible to get something from nothing, consequently to improve the picture music it is essential that we locate the something, which is no less than a musical "repertoire."

It is not a requirement of the picture show that you use numbers more difficult than Grade 3, higher graded numbers being discretional with the player; but care should be taken so that the numbers selected for your repertoire are suitable for the portrayal of certain series of scenes and picture action, and when the time arrives that the picture players, through the medium of trade journals, inform their fellow-players that certain numbers published by ———— have been tried and found good to accompany love scenes or hurried action in court intrigue dramas, etc., then we will see picture music improve.

By observing the following you will find some assistance in the selecting of a suitable repertoire:

In marches or two-steps you will find five distinct temperaments: the 4/4 grand march or processional, which is also good for scenes in court or ancient dramas during which there are heavy entrances of numerous male characters as well as in processionals. The military march, used for parades and in military dramas at all times when soldiers or officers are collectively on the screen, not in battle. The good military march is known by its marked and accentuated tempo and is always in 2/4 or 4/4 cut time. The 6/8 march is excellent for scenes in which male characters predominate, and leading up to heavy dramatic action, and also is an excellent closing for a picture with a very happy (not sentimental) ending after a series of pathetic or sentimental scenes. The 2/4 or cut time marches for hurried effects can easily be located. They must be of simple technique and allow for hurrying; you will find many can be played in galop tempo when necessary. Among the 2/4 you will find many that open in minor keys; these are specially good for hurried effects. The Intermezzo two-step, being of light temperament, can be well used for descriptive scenes in all pictures containing little action regardless of characters participating, while the other march numbers are more effective when accompanying scenes in which male character interest predominates.

The march number is very essential in the creating of a temperamental variety of music for a picture, it being usually the pivot to which and from which you find variety of tempos possible, for after all it is more essential to change your tempos in creating variety during 18 or 20 minutes the picture runs than changing the keys. In placing your march tempos to follow male character predominance you will find all pictures to suggest other movements and tempos. With the exception of the first mentioned no marches are good for dramas of ancient classics or court intrigue, they usually being of more advanced thought and should receive a higher classed musical setting.

Characteristic numbers of above temperament should only be used when picture setting is of country requiring such characteristics.

(To be continued)

MUSICAL PLOTS

By Ernest Luz.

A few rules governing their use.

The cues given will allow for natural ending of strains, unless "Leader" cue, in which case a quick seque should be made unless otherwise stated. Avoid Overtures and Potpourris in their entirety; each picture creates its own selection or potpourri. The cues are so stated as to give you both a prompt and direct cue. You are safe in making seque as soon as you are positive of your prompt cue. Avoid introductions to numbers unless otherwise stated. Avoid the shading of numbers as printed, an even mezzo forte being the best. From this you can get both pp and ff shadings with effect according to the demands of picture action. When shading is positively essential you will find words "Tone to action." Avoid the use of books. They are not practical for setting-up. In playing numbers following a certain line of action drop to pp in case there is a cut-in of flash scenes. For playing recopy plots legibly on large paper and fasten by clasp to right of music stand or piano. Read the Film Stories in this magazine as it will familiarize you with the cues. Studio projection would allow for material improvement in set-ups. We are always ready to hear from you and explain any difficulties you may have with these plots or otherwise. If personal reply is requested enclose stamped envelope.

THE SUBSTITUTE HEIRESS

Lubin. Released Nov. 5.

Set-Up.

1. Intermezzo 2/4.
2. Waltz.
3. Caprice.
4. Wedding March.
5. 6/8 March or Two-step.
6. Waltz. (Sentimental)

Cues.

Play 1 until leader "Arthur Johnson arrives."
Play 2 until maid drops head on table in heiress's boudoir. (Tone)
Play 3 until leader "To make his misery complete Johnson attends the wedding."
Play 4 until leader "Surely you remember Mr. Johnson."
Play 5 until Johnson embraces maid.
Play 6 until end.

THE DYNAMITERS

Selig. Released Nov. 5

Set-Up.

1. Waltz.
2. March 6/8.
3. Dramatic Hurry. (Struggle)
4. Waltz.
5. Dramatic Agitato.
6. Caprice.
7. Heavy octave unison bass roll. (Explosion)
8. Dramatic Agitato.
9. March 2/4. (Hurried)
10. Dramatic Agitato.
11. March 6/8. (Lively)
12. Galop.
13. Mysterioso.
14. Waltz.

